"How to Multiply by Long Division" was the title given to the hilarious Kappa Delta skit. Under the direction of Betty Ward, the Kappa Delta's won the skit cup for the fifth year in a row. The apartment rule was the centerpoint of the skit, and the complication arose when the "administration" built a Berlin Wall dividing the boys (West Sextor) from the girls (East Sextor). However, Silent Sam saved the day, shot down the wall and the Carolina sexes are reunited.

The ATO's calypso group, directed by song leader George Evans sang "Island in the Sun," and "Hosanna" to win the men's sing division. Instrumental accompaniment included Britt Gordon, bongo drum; Danny Shepherd, banjo; John Fuller, flute; and Pat Tone, Mike Godfrey and Ty Betty, guitars. Other members of the group of ten were Ernie Oare, Bo Edwards and Roger Greenleaf. This is the second year in a row that ATO has won the Sing division.

Delta Upsilon's "East Side Story" had all the laughs and characteristics of "West Side Story" minus professionalism and politics. Of course, when they tried to marry Eleanor Roosevelt with hairy legs to a skinny Nikita Khrushchev to various familiar tunes, who could help but laugh. The skit was under the direction of Peter Hawes and the cup was won from Joyner Dorm.

Phi Mu Alpha presented a singing group accompanied by a piano, a bass viol and a guitar, which won the special division award.

Canada Head May Attempt Minority Gov.

OTTAWA (UPI)—Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, under pressure to give up the reins of government following his election defeat, said Tuesday he would return to the capital Wednesday and decide whether to fight to stay in control.

Diefenbaker, whose record 1958 victory shrank to a shaky minority last June, lost even that narrow margin in Monday's 26th national elections in which Lester B. Pearson's Liberal party emerged the winner. Political observers considered it a rebuke for Diefenbaker's anti-American campaign and refusal to arm Canadian military forces with nuclear weapons as part of the North American defense system.

The lion's share of the seats, 128 of them, went to the Liberal party although it still was five short of the number necessary to form a majority government.

The results gave Pearson, who promised to put nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, a solid 31-seat edge over his chief opponents in the new 26th parliament.

Canadian newspapers urged Diefenbaker to resign.

Boycott Effect On Cafe Still Not Certain

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Pat Cuisck, chairman of the UNC chapter of the Student Peace Union (SPU) said yesterday that "it is too early to tell" if the boycott and picketing of the College Cafe is successful.

M. H. Yarbrough, co-proprietor of the Cafe said that business is not suffering from the boycott established by the SPU.

The picket line was established at the Cafe Friday and Yarbrough said that all the food on hand was sold, and business for that day was the best for a single day in the Cafe's history.

"We just weren't prepared for last Friday's rush of business," Yarbrough said. He said that he hadn't noticed "too much difference" in business since then, "but of course business always fluctuates," he added.

There have been no incidents of physical violence, Cusick said, "but some of the picketers have been spat on by students."

He said that on the first day of picketing, several students "were cursing under their breath" at the picketers. There is a town ordinance against by-standers using foul language directed at the picketers, Cusick said.

Cusick said that plans were indefinite on continuation of the pickets, "depending on circumstances and negotiations with the manager." Cusick said that no negotiations were being carried on right now, but they hoped to resume them soon.

He said that the stipulation would be discussed further at tonight's meeting of the SPU.

Peace Team Heading For Laos Fighting

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — A three-man international truce team will go to the Plain of Jars Wednesday to try to stop fighting in which Communist forces have driven Neutralist troops from three strategic points in an offensive that threatens a new civil war in Laos.

Indications Tuesday were that the situation was calm in Central Laos. Military sources said the Communist Pathet Lao had accomplished most of their primary objectives in driving their former Neutralist allies out of Xieng Khounang, Khang Khay and Phonesaitan.

Neutralist Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma conferred at length with India's Avtar Singh, chairman of the International Control Commission ICC, on the situation.

Authoritative sources in New Delhi said Souvanna told Singh that Communist North Vietnamese elements are actively supporting the pro-Communist Laotian forces in flagrant violation of the Geneva agreement on Laos. They said India has promptly relayed its "grave concern" over the situation to the Soviet Union and Britain, co-chairmen of the Geneva Conference on Laos.

Senate Okeys Wilderness Act

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate passed overwhelmingly Tuesday a bill to preserve millions of acres of scenic public lands in their natural beauty as a national wilderness system.

The bill, approved by a vote of 73 to 12, now goes to the House where it faces a much more uncertain fate. The Senate passed a similar bill in 1961 by an even larger margin — 78-8 — only to see it die in the House.

The Senate action followed two days of debate during which all efforts to substantially alter the administration — backed proposal were rejected.

Supporters of the bill said it would set aside primitive areas in their natural state for the enjoyment of generations of future Americans.

Opponents contend it would lock up enormous areas of public lands for the benefit of only 2 per cent of the American people who enjoy viewing scenic areas from horseback. They also said it amounted to a delegation of congressional powers to the executive branch.

Under the bill, about 36 million acres of federal lands would be brought under a national wilderness preservation system. An additional 28 million acres would be blanketed into the system unless congress vetoed the transfer.

Freshman Sen. Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., led the Senate opposition to the bill. He contended supporters were "bulldozing through a bill that changes the boundaries of the national parks and wildlife refuges."

GOP Revere Panal Riding To Carolina

Three modern-day Paul Reveres will visit UNC on April 18 to "alert the people to what is happening to the Federal Government and the New Frontier in Washington." Their appearance here will be sponsored by the UNC YR Club.

They are members of a GOP Congressional Paul Revere Panel consisting of more than 30 Republican Congressmen who are touring the nation to warn their countrymen of impending dangers.

Chairman of the panel coming to Chapel Hill will be Congressman John Anderson of Illinois. He will be accompanied by Congressmen Robert Dole of Kansas and Sherman Lloyd of Utah.

Among the subjects discussed will be news management, Cuba, taxes, and the state of the economy with its rising unemployment."

Panel members will also discuss other topics after which questions will be accepted from the audience.

One Last Volley: The University's Needs

Some students have complained this year that the Tar Heel editorials were too radical, or too negative, or too violent, or too much "griping." There is a touch of truth in all these complaints. We feel there are some things wrong — wrong with the University, wrong with athletics, wrong with student government. We believe these things cannot be righted by refusing to recognize their existence — the arguments against them must be said and repeated and repeated, until the wrongs are no more.

After a year of radical, negative, violent editorials, we are still griping.

Student government still has failed to assume the responsibilities for governing the students, rather than itself, and for providing leadership for legitimate student goals. But there are signs of improvement, particularly within the student judiciary, where intelligent, progressive leadership has harvested an Honor Code more respected and a Campus Code more realistic.

The administration still, by and large, seems to complicate and make difficult the affairs of both faculty and students, which could be better off it left alone. The apartment rule controversy which proceeded from the attempt by the dean of women to impose her desires over the unusually united wishes of the women's honor council, WRC and women students, is a shamefully frivolous argument— not worth the congesting efforts of South Building.

The students still are saddled with the outmoded three R's, rules, regulations and restrictions. Women's hours, the apartment rule, and the Campus Code are remnants of the past — and deserve to be revised or scrapped altogether.

The athletic program is in a bad way. Either UNC must stop playing "big-time" teams, such as Michigan State and Ohio State, or we must become a full-fledged sports factory and enter the class of Bear Bryant and Paul Dietzel.

The University is in a squeeze, between tight-fisted legislators and the urgent demands of increasing enrollment and a greater need for greater knowledge. As with all state universities, the battle pits administrators vs. administrators in a frantic ring-around-the-University, often asking for money for imaginary needs and ignoring the fundamental educational crises, running around and around, until they all turn to butter. And the problems grow bigger and more insoluble, and those with most at stake — the faculty and the students are listened to the least.

These — and the other 1,000 things that make us angry and impatient — are part and parcel of the age, but no less urgent for that reason. The problems are a facet of the overall struggle for control between administrators and the administrated, which unhappily, the organization-wise administrators probably will win. (JC)

Responsibility Of Freedom

For the benefit of the new editors of the Daily Tar Heel, and for those luckless souls who in future years will hold the position, let us state: the editorship is unlike anything else going on this campus. It is a harrowing experience guaranteed to add wrinkles to your face, reduce your life expectancy and lower your Q.P. average.

Yet every year someone wants the job. Why?

The editorship has to do with power and responsibility; with the pursuit of learning and with the rites of stupidity, both individual and organizational . . . the editor comes into contact with parts of the campus no one else sees, and he sees the campus as no one sees it — with all its delights and mysteries, all its high-minded souls and all its nuts, all the organizers and the organized.

There is something strangely perverse about the method by which an editor is elected. A person campaigns — is elected by the popular will — but elected to what? The only institutionally-unpopular position on campus. There seems, then, an almost sadistic fervor with which people campaign for and elect an editor — so they can spend the next year taunting him upon his editorial throne, pushing and pulling him, laughing at him, calling him names . . . But this is all part of the game — every editor knows his name will become a swear word in every living unit on campus. No matter, he is still editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

What makes the editorship unique is a little more than this . . . It is more than the power you temporarily wield, the freedom you boldly exercise, or the newspaper produced by the power, the freedom and your effort. It is that individual responsibility, which springs from the individual freedom granted the editor.

MUHAMMAD'S DURHAM TEMPLE — Carefully guarded by a cadre of young followers of Muslim Prophet Elizah Muhammad, Durham's Black Muslim Temple lies in the heart of the city's Negro district on E. Pettigrew Street. Although the Durham Movement has not had spectacular success, its continued existence may eventually prove a bar to integration. One of the Muslim's tenets urges followers not to "try to force their way into places where (they) are not wanted."

SAMUEL X — Dedicated and firmly convinced of the rightness of Elizah Muhammad's curious mixture of mysticism and race hatred, this young Negro has forsaken his "slave name" to assume the "X" designation of the follower of the Lost-Found Nation of Islam. Sworn to secrecy and non-contact with the white world, Samuel X seeks a new community composed entirely of his own race.

Durham's Black Muslims

Ten days ago in a dimly-lighted Protestant Negro church on the outskirts of Durham, an expensively-dressed, articulate figure in his early fifties walked to the makeshift pulpit and began his talk.

Immediately he was flanked by two muscular, darkly dressed young Negroes who periodically barked approval as the speaker denounced Christianity as a contrivance of the white man and passionately urged his listeners to embrace Allah as the only true God of the black man.

"The white man has murdered us at will, stripped us of our wealth and kept us ignorant of the truth.

THE STAR AND CRESCENT— Symbols of Elizah Muhammad's version of the Moslem faith grace the temple window and appear on the Black Muslim flag. Members also wear a ring bearing the insignia.

But now it is known and Allah will deliver us from the world of the dead."

The speaker was Isaiah Karriem, known to his followers as Isaiah X, delivering the standard recruiting speech of the Lost-Found Nation of Islam in North America, popularly known as the Black Muslims.

The appearance of the widely-known Baltimore Black Muslim minister in Durham signaled what appears to be an accelerated recruiting campaign in that city. Later this month, his remarks will be underscored by those of the sleek and dynamic Malcolm X, who is second only to prophet Elizah Muhammud himself in the hierarchy of the rapidly expanding Black nationalist movement.

For more than a year now, the Durham Mosque of Islam has vied with the NAACP and other racial protest groups, as well as Christian churches, for the allegiance of the city's nearly 30,000 Negroes. During that period the temple has attracted some 125 converts, according to an informant.

Squashed tightly into the row of squalid storefronts and cafes that comprise the main street of Durham's Negro section, the Black Muslim Mosque conducts services three times weekly.

Minister for the Durham temple is a young former Baltimore resident named Kenneth Murray. Murray, probably served as a protege of Isaiah Karriem, minister of the Baltimore temple and a figure close to the top of the movement.

Directly subordinate to Murray in the Durham Temple is a cadre of mentally and physically conditioned followers who make up a group called the Fruit of Islam (FOI) a close-knit, secretive elite whose duties include protection, security and discipline.

The Durham temple appears to have six or seven members in its FOI "section." Although Elizah Muhammad's teaching urges restraint from violence unless attacked, any follower is expected to "lay down his life, if necessary, for the Black Nation."

Members of the FOI are asked to remain in top physical condition. The extent to which the Durham chapter adheres to Muhammad's policy of training the FOI in the use of weapons and judo, is a well-kept secret.

FOI members are chiefly responsible for keeping the veil of secrecy tightly drawn about the temple. No whites are allowed to enter and are usually turned away politely but firmly with the information that, as this reporter was told, "the temple meetings are for those of dark skin only."

Among the Durham FOI is a tall, muscular youth of about 25 who calls himself Samuel X. The exchange of the last name for a variant of "X" symbolizes both brotherhood and renunciation of the name given to the Negro by his slave master.

Aloof and wary, Samuel X met questions about the temple and its leader, Kenneth X, with polite silence or evasion. He repeatedly reported the temple leader was "out of town," "unavailable" or "impossible to reach," although on at least one occasion he was nearby.

Murray originally negotiated the rental of ithe present temple building. The owner of the building, a rental of the present temple buildham, said he rented the building to Murray without being aware of the nature of the organization's aim and only knew it "was some kind of church." He said he rented the building, without a written lease, on a week-to-week basis. He reported last week that he had experienced some difficulty in collecting the $15 per week rental and that the temple was now four weeks behind in payments.

BLACK GHETTO AREAS — Throughout the United States, the Black Muslim movement finds most of its support in areas where economic deprivation and racial discrimination joins Negroes in a psychological as well as a practical bond. Elizah Muhammad teaches his followers to seek good housing before luxuries. Thriftness, moderation education — these practical considerations are basic to Black Muslim teaching. But even more basic is the belief that the Negroe's plight is solely the fault of the white man.

The building, along with others in the same area, is slated to be razed sometime in the near future to make way for an Urban Renewal project.

Some of Durham's Negro leadership attempted to stifle the establishment of a temple there by refusing to rent to the group.

A few blocks up the street from the Muslim Temple is the office of the Carolina Times, a crusading Negro newspaper edited by Louis Austin, a former president of the N. C. NAACP. Austin, whose paper has been instrumental in effecting race reforms in the city, said that "most of the responsible Negro leadership in Durham opposes the separatist views of the Muslims." Austin himself refuses to carry accounts of temple operations in the hope that "it will wither away from lack of public attention.

Durham NAACP membership currently numbers somewhat over 1,000 out of a Negro population of close to 30,000. According to Austin, the Muslims draw most of their support from what he called "the lower class element."

"They get the bitter ones, most of them young; the ones that feel they're beaten before they start. The majority of Negroes who are old enough to remember the times when things were so much worse than they are now can see the progress that's been made — not that it's been made fast enough to suit any of us — but it has been made on a formula of integration of the races, not separation."

Austin said the Muslims have had surprising success in rehabilitating some Negroes who otherwise were headed for trouble. "They get them off the streets, help them find jobs and give them some self respect. Many of them have never had that before."

In their extensive recruiting efforts in Durham the Muslims play heavily on accounts of maltreatment by whites. Potential members are reminded in graphic detail of police brutality, lynchings and mob riots. They are told the first humans were black men infinitely superior to the whites in intelligence, physical beauty and morality.

"But the white man tricked us into servitude and bondage," Isaiah X explained in his recent recruiting speech, "and now the Almighty Allah is ready to restore us to our rightful place."

The Muslims teach that the Christian Bible, although useful if "properly interpreted" is chiefly an invention of the white man to keep the black from his true religion, Islam. Now that it is being returned to him by Elizah Muhammad, the 'dead world" of the white man will pass away.

Strict separation of the black man from the white "devil" is a necessary first step, according to Isaiah. Economics play a dominant role in Muslim thinking and Durham followers are taught to obtain and hold a steady job, giving up gambling, smoking, drinking, overeating or other indulgences. Pork is particularly taboo, and "was introduced by the white man to keep the black man constantly ill," according to Kenneth.

Muslims are urged to buy only from other Negroes, whenever possible from some enterprise operated by the temple. A small car wash and income tax service near the Muslin temple appears to be connected with the movement financially.

At public meetings featuring appearances by Temple speakers, whites are particularly singled out and plied for contributions "a partial payment for the years of free slave labor."

Durham attorney Floyd McKissick, the first Negro to attend the University of North Carolina after successfully fighting his own court battle for entrance, feels the Muslim movement poses a threat to Negro progress:

"An organization which has racial separation as its basis can do a lot of harm to what has already been accomplished."

McKissick, who acts himself as legal counsel for the Durham Muslims as well as for the NAACP and CORE, will meet Malcolm X in a debate when the Muslim minister puts in an appearance this month.

McKissick said he feels the Muslim movement will continue to grow unless whites "make a more conscienious effort to meet the reasonable demands of more peaceful Negro protest groups."

Durham law enforcement officials are not altogether pleased with the existence of the Muslin group in the city. Investigations have been conducted, but no basis for arrests found.

Other sources disclosed that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has run routine checks on the organization.

The Durham Muslims, like most racist cults, feeds off the bitterness bred by social and economic underprivilege. The temple is located in one of the worst slum areas in the state. Huddled around the Negro business district there are clusters of substandard frame dwellings, many of them already slated for slum clearance. Rents in the district average from $10 to $11 per week.

Although the Muslim movement in Durham is not flourishing in comparison to those in other American cities with large Negro populations, some believe it is only a matter of time before the crash program of recruiting, which takes the Muslims into churches, pool rooms, and even jails, will begin to bring startling results.

MUSLIM MEMBERS are urged to get a steady job and spend their money among themselves. This car wash station, although the Muslims do not consider it a temple enterprise, affords employment for their membership and may be financially affiliated with the movement.

Becoming Quite A Tourist Attraction

Speedy UNC Brain Has Already Paid Way

Univac 1105, four-year-old child prodigy of the UNC campus, cost $2.4 million when it was installed here in 1959.

Today it has paid its way as a valuable data processing system for the State, the University and the nation, and as a round-the-clock tourist attraction.

The Univac 1105 was manufactured by the Univac Division of Sperry Rand Corporation which gave a fifty per cent reduction in the cost of the computing system. The other half was paid for by the Census Bureau and the National Science Foundation.

The value of Univac is that it saves time, manpower and money. It can do 30,000 additions per second. It has a vocabulary of 41,000 words. Information is stored up in large cabinets containing "memory elements." The speed and accuracy of Univac makes it superior in a way to the human brain —when speed and accuracy are the basic requirements.

James W. Hanson, director of the Computation Center, revealed recently that 32 schools and departments at the University have programmed and run projects on Univac.

Fifteen agencies at N. C. State College in Raleigh and five departments at Woman's College in Greensboro have obtained "time" on the Computer.

Other educational institutions running programs here have been Duke University, Johns Hopkins, Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem and the George Washington University Biometric Laboratory.

A contract was also negotiated between the State of North Carolina and the Bureau of the Census in Washington, D. C. whereby the Bureau of the Census would use the computer 80 hours per week through December 31, 1962 and would have an option on using the facilities 40 hours per week for the period January 1, 1963 to May 31, 1968. In consideration, the Bureau of the Census agreed to pay UNC $700,000 to be applied towards the initial purchase of the equipment and also agreed to pay its proportionate share of the operating costs of the computer system.

The National Science Foundation of Washington, D. C. granted $500,000 towards the activation and operation cost of the Computation Center.

Space for the computer system was provided in the basement of the new addition to Phillips Hall. In addition to providing the funds for the construction of this area, the State of North Carolina provided $225,000 for activating and operating expenses for the period Jnuary 1, 1959 to June 30, 1961.

Other users of Univac 1105 in specific projects include the Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., Research Triangle Institute, A. C. Nielson Corporation (TV Ratings) Ancel Corporation of Asheville, Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N. J., the Quebec North Shore Paper Company, the Veterans Administration, the National Aeronautical and Space Administration, U. S. Army Engineer Mathematical Center and the U. S. Army Chemical Center at Edgewood, Maryland.

MATH

As might be expected the greatest number of hours used by a single department in the University was registered by the Department of Mathematics. Mathematicians here are credited with over 500 hours to date. Kenan Professor of Mathematics William M. Whyburn is the man whose efforts are largely responsible for Univac's being established here. Professor John Carr III, a member of the mathematics department, was the first director of the Univac. He now devotes his time to teaching and to special projects in relation to electronic computers.

After mathematics, the prime academic users at Chapel Hill are the Physics Department and the School of Public Health's Department of Biostatistics. Other departments who have taken more than a hundred hours in time over the first three years are Business Administration, the Institute for Research in Social Science and the Psychometic Laboratory.

Six departments in the School of Medicine have found Univac valuable in research projects and other findings. Psychiatrists have asked for the machines more than other departments of the Medical School.

The titles of research projects in the files at the Computation Center give an idea of the broad variety of things for which the giant "brain" is called upon to give rapid assistance. Some of these topics are:

1. "Regression Analysis of Stock Returns"—Business School.
2. "Employment as a Factor in the Marital Adjustment of Middle and Working Class Wives" — Sociology.
3. "Computing Least-Cost Feed Mixtures for Poultry and Livestock, N. C. State College's School of Agriculture.
4. "Role of the Middle-Aged Married Woman During the Launching State of the Family Life Cycle"—Home Economics Department at Woman's College, Greensboro.
5. "Investigation of Relationships Between Creative Ability and Personality Traits" — UNC School of Education.
6. "Choice of Specialities in Medicine"—UNC School of Public Health.
7. "Normative Control and Social Use of Alcohol"—Sociology at Chapel Hill.

HOW IT IS DONE

The last-named project is illustrative of the way faculty members and others prepare material that is fed into the machine in such a manner that useful facts and conclusions are obtained. Professor Ernest Q. Campbell of the Department of Sociology Anthropology directed the study. High school seniors were interviewed about the extent to which they used alcohol. Information was secured from both students and their parents. The same students were interviewed later, after going to college, and changes in drinking habits were determined. Dr. Campbell and his colleagues administered questionnaires to seniors in over 60 high schools of the state of North Carolina.

Questionnaires also were answered by freshmen in 21 N. C. colleges at the time the freshmen registered in the Fall. The same students were interviewed again in the Spring, after a year at college. The sociologists sought not only the actual incidence of social drinking, but changes in the attitude of students toward drinking.

For each of the 5,000 high school seniors involved in the study, there were five data cards to be filled out. The mother of each student supplied enough information to fill out three cards; the father, two cards.

The magnitude of the task can be seen by the large amount of information represented on the punch cards that were inserted into Univac's mechanism.

The total time involved in preparing the questionnaires, interviewing, getting material ready, waiting several months before additional interviews, and working with programmers to prepare the materials for Univac has been spread over two years so far, and may involve many additional months. However, the actual time Dr. Campbell will actually use the Univac will be a matter of only a few hours.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

Guess who offered me an executive position with a leading organization, where I'll get good pay, further my education, and enjoy world travel?

My uncle.

In this case, nepotism's a pretty good idea. And the best way to get it is through Air Force ROTC—because the Air Force prefers to commission its officers directly upon graduation. But if you couldn't fit AFROTC into your schedule, you can still apply for Air Force Officer Training School.

OTS offers college men and women an opportunity to assume great responsibility. When you complete the three-month course, you'll be commissioned a second lieutenant, and become a part of a vital aspect of our defense effort. As an Air Force officer, you'll be a leader on the Aerospace Team.

We welcome your application for OTS now—but the same may not be true next year. So if you're within 210 days of graduation, get full information from the Professor of Air Science.

NOW YOU CAN BE YOUNGER THAN SHE IS

It is a scientific fact that girls reach emotional maturity earlier than boys. For this reason freshman girls are reluctant to make romantic alliances with freshman boys, but instead choose men from the upper classes.

Thus the freshman boys are left dateless, and many is the night the entire freshman dorm sobs itself to sleep. An equally moist situation exists among upper-class girls. With upper-class men being snapped up by freshman girls, the poor ladies of the upper class are reduced to dreary, manless evenings of Monopoly and home permanents.

It pleasures me to report there is a solution for this morbid situation—indeed, a very simple solution. Why don't the two great have-not groups—the freshman boys and the upper-class girls—find solace with each other?

True, there is something of an age differential, but that need not matter. Take, for example, the case of Albert Payson Sigafoos and Eustacia Vye.

Albert Payson, a freshman in sand and gravel at Vanderbilt University, was walking across the campus one day, weeping softly in his loneliness. Blinded by tears, he stumbled upon the supine form of Eustacia Vye, a senior in wicker and raffia, who was collapsed in a wretched heap on the turf.

"Why don't you watch where you're going, you minor pustule?" said Eustacia peevishly.

"I'm sorry, lady," said Albert Payson and started to move on. But suddenly he stopped, struck by an inspiration. "Lady," he said, tugging his forelock, "don't think me forward, but I know why you're miserable. It's because you can't get a date. Well, neither can I. So why don't we date each other?"

"Surely you jest!" cried Eustacia, looking with scorn upon his tiny head and body.

"Oh, I know I'm younger than you are," said Albert Payson, "but that doesn't mean we can't find lots of fun things to do together."

"Like what?" she asked.

"Well," said Albert Payson, "we could build a Snowman!"

"Bah!" said Eustacia, grinding her teeth.

"All right then," said Albert Payson, "we could go down to the pond and catch some frogs."

"Ugh!" said Eustacia, shuddering her entire length.

"How about some Run-Sheep-Run?" suggested Albert Payson.

"You are callow, green, and immature," said Eustacia, "and I will thank you to remove your undamaged presence from mine eyes."

Sighing, Albert Payson lighted a cigarette and started away.

"Stay!" cried Eustacia.

He stayed.

"Was that a Marlboro Cigarette you just lighted?" she asked.

"What else?" said Albert Payson.

"Then you are not immature!" she exclaimed, clasping him to her clavicle. "For to smoke Marlboros is the very essence of wisdom, the height of American know-how, the incontrovertible proof that you can tell gold from dross, right from wrong, fine aged tobaccos from pale, pathetic substitutes. Albert Payson, if you will still have me, I am yours!"

"I will," he said, and did, and today they are married and run the second biggest wicker and raffia establishment in Duluth, Minnesota.

Miss Steber To Sing At Ball

Plans for the 1963 North Carolina Symphony Ball to be held in the Executive Mansion in Raleigh on May 10 have been given an important boost with word that Eleanor Steber, internationally famed American soprano, will again be the guest artist during the evening's lavish entertainment.

The announcement was made by the co-chairmen for the annual benefit affair, Mrs. Deryl Hart, wife of the president of Duke University, and Mrs. Howard Holderness of Greensboro.

Initial planning for the Symphony Ball, highlight of the North Carolina social season, has been underway since early February. Proceeds of the $100 a couple benefit each year go to the symphony's Endowment Fund.

Present plans call for Governor and Mrs. Terry Sanford to greet the guests in the Mansion early in the evening while a group of 25-30 musicians from the symphony orchestra provide incidental music prior to the main entertainment which will feature the singing of the renowned soloist.

A native of Wheeling, W. Va., her 41 leading roles at New York's Metropolitan Opera House is a record, as is also her distinction of having sung more "first performances" of operatic roles in the famous Golden Horseshoe of the Met than any other singer, American or Foreign-born.

Miss Steber charmed last year's Symphony patrons with her gracious artistry and personality. She will return for this year's gala benefit by popular demand of the devotees of the Symphony and the various committees on arrangements.

Planners are suggesting that Miss Steber be costumed in Colonial dress and that her songs include some of the arias and melodies which were popular at the time of the granting of the Carolina Charter in 1663 — the Tercentenary Celebration which is now underway in the Tar Heel State.

Dr. Benjamin F. Swalin is the conductor of the Symphony — the first state-supported professional orchestra in the nation.

Physicist, Wife Visit This Week

A distinguished Canadian physicist and his wife, a descendant of Flora McDonald, will be visitors in North Carolina through Easter.

They are Dr. and Mrs. J. H. L. Johnstone of Halifax, Nova Scotia. He is former Dean of Graduate Studies at Dalhousie University in Halifax. She is the kinswoman of Mr. and Mrs. S. Davis Flinn of Greenwood Road in Chapel Hill. Mrs. Flinn and Mrs. Johnstone are descendants of Flora McDonald. They will visit St. Andrews College in Laurinburg while in North Carolina — formerly Flora McDonald College.

Dr. Johnstone is a well known international physicist. He is credited with saving the lives of thousands of sailors during World War II. It was he who developed the deguassing of ships, to combat the danger of the magnetic sea mines. He pioneered the first naval research station in Halifax. He served in both world wars and won the O. B. E.

She was born in Picton, Nova Scotia, in 1858, when siege was laid to Lucknow in India, and the first message was relayed across the Atlantic on the newly laid underwater cable. Her life has spanned the reign of six monarchs, more than a hundred years of fast paced development, and inventions. The family has had a close association with the Royal family of Britain, and, each year she receives birthday greetings from the Queen.

Study Shows Racial Shift By Urbanites

Most large Southern urban communities are becoming "white," while just the reverse is true for the rest of the country.

This was revealed in a study of "Racial Changes in Metropolitan Areas" in the March issue of the journal "Social Forces" published at the University here.

Written by Leo F. Schnore and Harry Sharpe, the article compares the racial compositions of the largest metropolitan areas in the United States from 1950 to 1960.

In every one of the 50 largest cities, the percentage of nonwhites increased during those ten years. But a similar study of 203 urban communities including their surrounding suburbs revealed a sharp difference between the South and the rest of the nation.

In the Northeast, North Central and Western states 115 out of 126 urban communities had an increase proportion of nonwhites over the last ten years. In the South 50 out of 77 had a decreased proportion. The greatest loss of Negroes was found in the less heavily populated Southern communities.

This tendency for Southern communities to lose nonwhites was confirmed by an examination of 24 United States suburbs. The article points out that four out of the 24 were losing Negroes, and three of these—Bessemer, Ala., Fairfield, Ala., and Gretna, La. —were Southern. The other is Inkster, Mich., a highly segregated community.

"Suburbs outside the South are showing rapid gains in proportions that are nonwhite, whereas Southern suburbs are tending to lose nonwhites," the article concludes.

North Carolina Attempts To Update Juvenile Crime Law

North Carolina is trying to catch up with its juvenile delinquency problem.

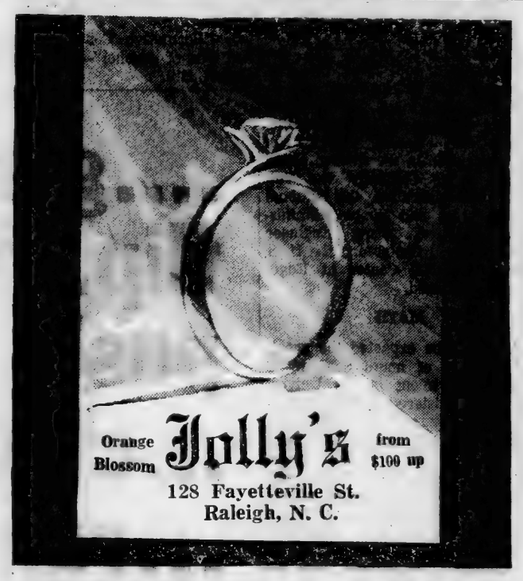
There's a lot of catching up to do, according to Mason Thomas, Judge of Wake County Domestic Relations and Juvenile Court. "The juvenile laws that were established in the state 40 years ago are still not applied in practice," he said. The key problem is that there aren't enough trained people to deal correctly with all the state's juvenile offenders.

The University is fighting the problem through the recently established Training Center on Delinquency and Youth Crime at the Institute of Government. Here the people who work with delinquents — the policemen who arrest them, the probation officers who investigate and supervise them, and the judges who decide on their treatment — receive specialized training.

New Approach

The approach to juvenile problems is a drastic departure from traditional criminal law philosophy that "the punishment should fit the crime," said Judge Mason, a consultant to the Center. "North Carolina has a separate set of laws and procedures for those under 16. We need more personnel trained in these procedures."

Most important is the training given to law enforcement officers. Because he is usually the first person in authority to deal with a delinquent, the policeman can pave the way for a helpful relationship between the child and the law.

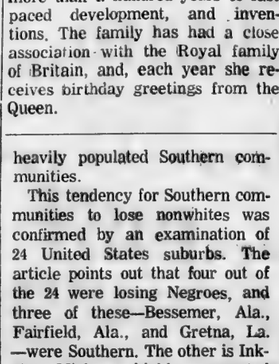


"If he catches a child in the act of a crime," said Judge Mason, "he may flash a badge, take him to the police department for questioning, perhaps detaining him overnight, maybe fingerprinting and photographing him. By that time it may be too late for the court to be effective in rehabilitating him." The correct procedure, Judge Mason said, is to take the child home and consult with his family, and then refer him to juvenile court. The training sessions for law enforcement officers at the Center emphasize this difference in approach between adult and juvenile legal procedure.

Special Training

Juvenile probation officers also receive special training at the Center. These workers represent the study and treatment arm of the court—they investigate the child's background and submit to the judge a report of their findings and recommendations prior to the final court hearing.

The judges themselves also come to the Center for a series of weekend institutes where they hear experts in the fields of law, psychiatry and child welfare. The emphasis, said Judge Mason, is on "individualized justice;" the goal of a juvenile court is not punishment, but treatment of the needs of the child. Through these training sessions the Center hopes to create a better understanding between the police and the court, and greater cooperation between all members of the community who work with children.



The Center on Delinquency and Youth Crime was established last fall under a three-year grant from the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare totaling $153,744.

Editors Out At Midwestern Colleges After Controversy

By THE COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE

CHICAGO — Two Wheaton college students have joined the list of students to fall before school boards of publications, after they had published an off-campus magazine previously discouraged by school officials.

Jack Hommes, editor of the campus newspaper, the Record, was removed from his job by a 17-1 vote of the Wheaten College Publications Board, and Philip McInay, Hommes' partner in publishing the magazine, Critique, was given a one-year enforced leave of absence from the college.

The Board said it removed Hommes for a "breach of faith." McInay, who is not responsible to the Board, was ejected from the school in a closed session of the Faculty Committee on Student Affairs for "disregard for the spirit of the college." Hommes' status in school is pending.

Critique, a literary magazine, had been denied official recognition by the Publications Board earlier in the semester. It was privately financed and circulated through the mail.

The content of Critique was not a factor in the dismissal of Hommes, a college spokesman said. McInay charged, however, that the college has been sensitive to student publication, hoping to avoid adverse publicity for the evangelical protestant college.

The Student Council had passed a resolution March 4 advising Hommes and McInay not to publish the magazine, and the Council voted 7-4, upholding the Publications Board's action on Hommes.

* * *

In the same week as the Wheaton incident, three editors of a University of Notre Dame student magazine resigned, charging the university administration with censorship. One of their faculty advisers withdrew fro mthe advisory post in sympathy.

The magazine and its editorial board have been the center of controversy since an editorial urging replacement of Notre Dame's president was published on Feb. 22.

The editorial criticized the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh for spending too much time away from the campus and suggested the appointment of a layman as president with Father Hesburgh as chancellor.

The editors resigned in a dispute involving the content of the magazine's March 29 issue. Scholastic was published as usual but without three articles originally scheduled.

One of the mwas a "deciaration of rights and grievances" by the Student Senate, asking for more liberal dormitory rules. Also canceled were a satire on spring campus riots — "an incitement to student riots," according to a campus spokesman.

UNC Geologists To Present Papers

Members of the Department of Geology at the University will be participating in the Southeastern Section of the Geological Society of America which meets at Roanoke, Va., tomorrow through Saturday.

Associate Prof. Walter H. Wheeler and Assistant Prof. James R. Butler will present papers at the meeting. Three graduate students in the department will also present papers on four different titles.

Prof. Wheeler will present a paper entitled "Structural and Stratigraphic Relationships Along the Northwestern Border of the Wadesboro Triassic Basin of North Carolina." Prof. Wheeler co-authored this paper with Win Swe, a UNC graduate student from Burma.

Graduate student H. D. Wagener of Kent Village, Md., is the co-author of a paper with Assistant Prof. Paul C. Ragland. Mr. Wagener will present the paper for Prof. Ragland who will be participating in a symposium at Rice University at the time of the Geological Society's meeting. The paper is entitled "Critique of Trend Surface Analysis as Applied to Compositional Variations Within an Igneous Complex."

Mr. Wagener will also present a paper on "Compositional Variations Within the Farrington Igneous Complex, Chatham and Orange Counties, N. C."

Demon Deacons Spank Tar Heels By 13-1

Bill Brown's Homer Is Only UNC Score

By LOU ROSENTHAL

WINSTON-SALEM — Wake Forest's Demon Deacons won their second straight Atlantic Coast Conference baseball game yesterday by crushing North Carolina, 13-1.

The defending league champs broke up a tight ball game with a five-run seventh inning and added five more insurance runs in the eighth.

Carolina's lone score came on Bill Brown's 380-foot home run in the second inning.

The home team increased its lead to 3-1, after Brown's homer, when Bob Worrell singled and Danny Loftin tripled in the fourth frame.

The back-breaking seventh saw the Baptists stretch their lead to 8-1 on only three hits. UNC's starter, Larry Jenkins, had been pulled for a pinchhitter in the top of the inning and Jerry Davis came in to relieve him.

Davis walked Noell and gave up singles to Scripture and Martin. Bobby Cox replaced him with the bases loaded. A Cox pitch got by catcher Bernie Isgett, but the Tar Heels caught Noell sliding into home. Cox then walked Mike Budd intentionally, again filling the bases. The Tar Heel reliever issued a free pass to Jim Israel, scoring Scripture, and Coach Walt Rabb lifted Cox in favor of sophomore Bill Danneman.

Bob Worrell greeted Danneman with a single scoring Martin and Budd. Israel scored the fifth run of the inning on Danneman's wild pitch.

In the eighth Danneman loaded the bases on a single, hit batsman and another single. Another soph hurler, Joe White of Winston-Salem, came in and walked Budd to force in Dave Miller. Bill Scripture scored on White's wild pitch, then Israel walked to again fill the bases. Worrell's single drove in two more runs. Loftin's grounder forced out Worrell at second, but drove in Israel with run number 13.

Wake's Jerry Pardue limited the Tar Heels to six hits. Buddy Tilden singled twice, Tommy Wright tripled, and Dick Prindle and Isgett singled, in addition to Brown's homer.

Pardue won his fourth straight victory of the season as the Deacs stretched their overall record to 9-1. Carolina is now 5-3 and 0-2 in ACC play.

WF Track Meet Is Postponed; Maryland Next

Coach Dale Ranson said yesterday that he will carry his biggest delegation of trackmen to Maryland for the clash with the Terrapins in College Park on April 20.

He also announced that no date has been set for meeting Wake Forest. The meet which was scheduled with the Deacons for yesterday had to be called off because of the condition of the track after the rain.

"We will be readying from now until Friday week for the Maryland meet," said the veteran mentor. "But the vacation layoff and having to travel to Maryland so soon after the boys return to Chapel Hill will not do us any good."

Ranson said he felt the postponement of the Wake Forest meet was bad. "We needed the competition," he said.

REPRESENTED UNC

Rebecca Dianne Monroe, a sophomore from Rockingham, officially represented UNC at the Azalea Festival held in Wilmington last weekend.

WASHINGTON — June graduates with degrees in physical education or recreation will find ample opportunities to use their skills and training in Peace Corps service. Requests for Volunteers with experience in these fields have doubled for 1963 as emerging nations look to the Peace Corps to supply persons with this specialized knowledge.

Ten countries, India, Sierra Leone, Morocco, Guatemala, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Cameroon, Ethiopia and Barbados have appealed to the Peace Corps for sports educators. They will serve as teachers and coaches in elementary and secondary schools, on the university level and some will also work in general athletic programs.

Specifically, the Volunteers will be assigned to develop physical education curricula, supervise and administer sports programs and organize teams to participate in local, regional or international competitions.

A total of 200 men and women with the necessary backgrounds and qualifications will go into training this summer for these projects.

At present, the Peace Corps has nearly 100 Volunteers actively engaged in physical education and recreation projects in seven countries. Coaches are involved in athletic training in Thailand, the Ivory Coast and Senegal; teachers of physical education are giving classroom instruction in Tunisia and Colombia; recreation workers are organizing youth groups in Venezuela and a new group of Volunteers are now in training for assignment to Indonesia.

"These projects will enable teachers and recreation leaders to gain invaluable experience overseas," Jules Pagano, Director of the Peace Corps' Professional and Technical Division, has stated. "The opportunities are both usual and challenging and provide a real training ground for dedicated Americans who wish to share their skills while learning from others."

Pagano listed these opportunities for potential Volunteers:

—Opportunities to develop physical education and recreation programs from fundamentals to highly detailed programs.

—Opportunities to work with people who are eager for instruction and want to be helped and guided.

—Opportunities to do research that may lead to a Master's Degree in the chosen field.

—Opportunities to demonstrate the principles and philosophy of American sports through the establishment of well-rounded, well-organized and well-administered physical education or recreation programs.

—Opportunities to learn about other countries, the people, the language and culture and to show them how Americans think, work and learn.

—Opportunities to work with Olympic teams in some of these countries.

—Opportunities to achieve solid experience which will be of great value to the Volunteer as he plans his future career.

To qualify for any of these Peace Corps projects you should have a degree in physical education or recreation. Teachers with degrees in other academic majors, but who have worked in recreation or physical education are also eligible. Experience in physical education, either through coaching or organizing team competition is highly desirable.

"Persons with sports training who do not have college degrees would be eligible for some of these projects," Pagano said. "We can use people who have worked with "Little Leagues", participated in high school or college athletics or developed recreation activities at YMCAs, YWCAs, YMHAs, or other community associations. As long as they know their field and can teach it, there is plenty of room for all kinds of Volunteers with sports and recreation backgrounds."

Volunteers must be American citizens over 18. There is no maximum age limit. Married couples are eligible if both can do needed jobs. They may have no dependents under 18.

He also receives allowances to cover food, housing, clothing and incidentals. Transportation and medical care are provided.

All Volunteers go through a training program in the United States which prepares them for their jobs. They study the history, culture and language of their host country; technical courses in their special areas of concentration; American history and world affairs; health education and physical fitness and preventive medicine.

Additional information and Volunteer Questionnaires are available by writing to Mr. Pagano, Professional and Technical Division, Peace Corps, Washington 25, D. C.

BOWERS ON LEAVE

Wayne A. Bowers, UNC professor of physics, will be spending the academic year 1963-64 at Cambridge University in England.

Prof. Bowers has been awarded a National Science Foundation Fellowship for research in the area of theoretical solid state physics. He will be taking a leave of absence from his duties here.

In the spring of 1956, Prof. Bowers was awarded a Kenan leave from UNC. He spent that spring at Cambridge University doing research in theoretical and solid state physics.

A member of the American Physical Society, the American Association of Physics Teachers, Sigma Xi, and Phi Beta Kappa, Prof. Bowers was educated at Oberlin College and Cornell University. He served as a physicist in the Theoretical Physics Division of Los Alamos Laboratories from 1944 to 1946 and as a research associate in physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology from 1946-1947. He joined the UNC faculty in 1947.

RAGLAND TO ATTEND SYMPOSIUM

Paul C. Ragland, assistant professor of geology will be participating in an International Symposium on "The Natural Radiation Environment" at Rice University, Houston, Texas, April 11-13.

Knox 'Saved Day' For Alumni Gridders

By BOB QUINCY

Confession is good or the soul. The Alumni should feel cleansed, but the Varsity still gives 'em dirty looks.

It happened here last Saturday afternoon after the old grads had come from behind to manage a 6-6 deadlock with Coach Jim Hickey's vastly improved Tar Heels. The game, played in typhoon weather, wound up spring grid drills.

One of the exciting moments came on the final play. The Alumni, going for broke, attempted a long pass. It was intercepted by an alert halfback Roger Smith and for a few moments it looked as if he would go all the way.

A jarring tackle by George Knox of the Alumni, who seemingly came from nowhere to provide defensive heroics, stopped Smith after a 29-yard return. There the game ended—but not the climax.

* * *

WHATTA MAN!: "Got a confession to make," said Knox after everyone had showered down and become friendly. "That last tackle—well, I sort of cheated a little."

The admission by Knox: He had been on the bench and noted that Smith might sprint into pay dirt. He couldn't contain himself. He roared onto the playing field without being detected and saved the day for his teammates.

"Quick thinking there, Knox," grinned George Barclay, who served as tutor for the oldtimers. "That's what a good bench can do for a coach."

* * *

GREAT TIME: Everyone had a sparkling time, despite the weather.

At one point in the second half, Quarterback Junior Edge attempted to hit Bob Lacey, the stickout end, with a pass. It overshot him and landed among some spectators huddled under black parasols.

* * *

OOPS, MISTAKE: There were others who 'fessed up among the Alumni.

Rabe Walton is directly responsible for the Alumni's longest gain—a 15-yard penalty markoff—although he was the guilty party.

Rabe got over zealous on a running play and clipped a Varsity lad near the Carolina bench. He got up shaking his head.

"I'm sorry fellows," he apologized to the bench. "All that effort and all I do is throw a clip."

Somehow the official who threw the flag got his signals crossed. He marked off the penalty against the Varsity, despite their protests.

It plunged the Alumni deep into Varsity territory—and they went on to score.

* * *

BIG LADS: The Alumni, almost to a man, complimented Coach Hickey on the aggressiveness of his 1963 squad.

"They hit much harder than they did last year," said returning vets like Jeff Newton, Phil Blazer, John Schroeder and Rip Hawkins.

Hawkins, a massive athlete of 240 pounds, was easily the outstanding player for the Alumni. He made All-America mention here in 1960 and is considered one of the National Football League's most vicious linebackers. He plays for the Minnesota Vikings. During off season, Rip resides in Georgia.

* * *

Red, ex-Wake Forest, Chicago Bears and Montreal star, is general manager of the Ottawa Rough Riders of the Canadian Football League. He wanted a look at end Lacey of the Tar Heels.

"Lacey (who caught six passes) and John Hammett (who nabbed seven) both looked good," commented O'Quinn. "Another fellow who caught my eye is your quarterback, Edge.

"He throws with a good wrist snap and he handles himself well. I have a feeling that if he continues to improve, there are several pro teams who definitely will be interested in talking with him."

REPORT ON THE CO-OP --I

Student Discount Service Hasn't Been Successful

This is the first in a series of special reports by DTH Investigative Reporter Bill Waumett. It examines the reasons behind the failure of UNC's Student Services Discount Club, the closest Carolina has come in recent years to a student cooperative. Subsequent articles will deal with the present state of Co-op planning and the possibility of one being formed here.

By BILL WUAMETT
Staff Reporter

In September the UNC Student Services Discount Club was "hailed by supporters as a boon to bargain - hunting students," and as the "first step toward establishing a student cooperative at UNC."

The boon soon passed, and the first step toward a cooperative was at best a faltering one. But plans continue toward a cooperative, and these plans will be partly based on an examination of the failure of the Discount Club and retention of its good features.

Basic to both the Discount Club and a student cooperative is the idea of enabling students to buy retail merchandise at a discount. Also applying to both is a North Carolina law called the Umstead Act which prohibits tax-supported organizations from competing with private enterprise.

The Discount Club was thus a private company, organized by two students who bore all expenses and received all profits.

The Club attempted last fall to arrange discounts for students at downtown retail stores. Ten merchants were contacted to grant 10 per cent discounts to members of the club. The participating merchants hoped to make up this discount by increasing their volume of sales.

In return, Club organizers William Bates and Tally Eddings agreed to sell 2500 memberships in the Club at the price of $5 apiece. The merchants did not share in the proceeds from membership sales.

The students buying memberships were entitled to discounts upon presentation of their Club cards. The ten shares handled different types of merchandise and did not compete with one another. Most merchants established maximum limits amounts students could buy.

At the time of organization, Bates said he believed students could save an average of $85 during a year by using the card to its "fullest" with the ten merchants.

The plan ran into difficulties when the organizers failed to approach the membership goal of 2500. Only 400-500 cards were sold.

At this point, a Student Legislature committee headed by Bob Spearman proposed taking the management of the Club, with student government officials serving as directors. These students would have acted in a private capacity and not as officials of Student Government.

These students, organized as the Carolina Development Board, planned a membership drive in University living facilities and obtained permission from the Dean of Men for such a campaign. The original organizers were to be paid $900 if more than 1000 memebrships were sold, or 30 per cent of the gross sales of less than 1000 memberships.

Other proceeds above expenses were to be used as capital for the establishment of a true cooperative.

This plan failed, however, for two reasons: some merchants ceased honoring the cards when the original 2500 cards were not sold by an October 15 deadline; and Stevens-Shepherd, the participating clothing store, went out of business and no other clothing store would join the Club.

But the reasons for the failure of the Club go deeper than insufficient membership.

The original ten merchants were selected because they offered a wide range of merchandise at medium prices. None of these sold pharmaceutical supplies or books, which meant that two large areas of student purchases were not included.

A further liability was that none of the "name" clothing stores or eating establishments were included in the Club.

Kemp Nye, whose record store was a participant, says he now doubts if any discount club established on this basis can succeed in Chapel Hill.

Nye said the benefits to his business of belonging to the Club were insignificant. He also believes that too few merchants were included in the Club for it to have wide appeal.

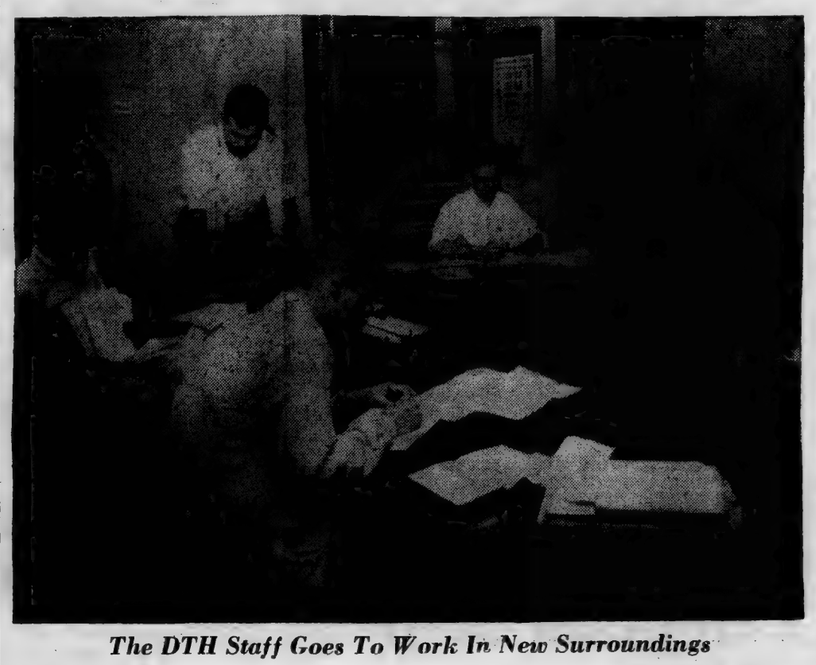
Tar Heel Undergoes Face-lifting

New DTH co-editors Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge yesterday announced completion of the main part of their DTH face-lifting operation and the appointment of new staff members.

The face-lifting, carried out over Easter vacation, includes reorganization of the newspaper, renovation of its offices including the addition of new telephones and telephone numbers, and the tentative addition of a women's page for coeds and student wives called "Feminine Flair."



The new telephone numbers are 942-2138 for business and ads and 942-3112 for the newsroom.

"We have made changes which we think are long overdue," the co-editors explained. "We were able to do this because of the quality of the staff we have recruited and the general campus desire for a vastly-improved newspaper.

"We still need weekly columnists, so if you are interested bring a sample column up to the DTH office," they said. "We need people who can write — and there's no closed corporation here."

The co-editors had special praise for Howard Henry director of Graham Memorial, and the University's Building Department, which arranged to tear down two temporary walls to make room for an expanded news office. The business, circulation and ad offices have been moved to the old news and editor's offices.

"Our only remaining problem is to get some sorely-needed equipment and supplies, like typewriters," they said. "We think that they can be worked out with Student Government. We know they're anxious as everyone else to have a better paper."

World News In Brief

NFL Suspends Pair For Grid Gambling

NEW YORK (UPI) — Paul Hornung of the Green Bay Packers and Alex Karras of the Detroit Lions, two of the National Football League's brightest stars, were suspended indefinitely Wednesday for betting on games in the league's biggest scandal since 1946.

Pete Rozelle, the 36-year-old NFL commissioner, meted out the harsh penalties with expressed regret following an intensive investigation that took more than 10 months and included 52 interviews related to players and officials connected with eight clubs.

"It was the most difficult decision I've ever had to make in my life," said Rozelle, in explaining that Hornung and Karras' cases could not possibly be reviewed before 1964 and that they are now "legally free" to play in any other league if they like.

However, both the American Football League and the Canadian League said the players would not be permitted to play.

British Say China Stirs Laos Trouble

LONDON (UPI) — Britain accused the Chinese Communists Wednesday of stirring up trouble in Laos and trying to cover it up with false charges of American interference.

The Foreign Office issued the statement in reply to a note from Peking Tuesday. It urged that the three-nation international control commission India-Canada-Poland be allowed to do its peace-keeping work.

"The Chinese accusation of American interference in Laos looks to us like a smoke screen put out because they are worried that accustations of North Vietnamese interference may now well be brought home," said a British Foreign Office spokesman.

"We have absolutely no evidence to suggest that the Chinese accusations are true and we are sure that they are not."

Khrushchev Turns 69

MOSCOW (UP) — Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev quietly marked his 69th birthday Wednesday with a look forward to new Soviet achievements in space and diplomacy.

The nation officially ignored the occasion although the newspaper Pravda printed a review of some of his collected speeches. It praised him for boosting farm production and eliminating abuses of the Stalin era.

It was announced earlier that Cuban Premier Fidel Castro will visit the Soviet Union. Informed sources said he may come as early as May or June and may stay a month.

Voter Drive Begins

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Negroes opened a voter registration campaign yesterday in their 15-day-old desegregation drive and police quickly arrested the first 15 who attempted to march on the county courthouse.

A group of Negroes walked from a church and turned toward the courthouse but 13 reversed their course. The other 15 were stopped less than a block away after an officer told them: "Let's stop it right there."

"You are in violation of a city ordinance," the officer said. "Are you aware an injunction has been issued to prohibit parades or demonstrations."

Chinese Excluded

MOSCOW (UPI) — Representatives from the Moscow-led east European Communist bloc and Mongolia met here Wednesday to draw their nations into a closer union-without Communist China or Albania.

The meeting of deputy premiers technically with the fifth session of the executive committee for the Council of Mutual Exonomic Assistance (COME-CON).

Its officially announced aim was to "discuss important questions of the further widening of cooperation" between the member nations.

Phelps Sues DTH For Libel; Mock Trial To Decide Case

(Editor's Note: the following release is run in conjunction with the upcoming mock trial conducted by the UNC School of Law)

Larry Phelps, a UNC undergraduate, has filed a suit against the Daily Tar Heel for libel. Phelps will bring legal action against the paper, claiming that he has been libeled by an editorial written by David Ethridge in the April 12, 1963, issue of the DTH.

The editorial in question said that Larry Phelps "is nothing more than an 'agent' for Communist Russia, a tool of Soviet Imperialism." On the day the editorial appeared, Phelps has stated, he notified the defendant in writing of his intention to bring action for libel but that Ethridge "expressly refused to print an apology or retraction."

Phelps is currently the president of the Progressive Labor Club, a local political organization that espouses a philosophy of "Marxism-Leninism." Ethridge charged in his editorial that the organization had, under the direction of Phelps, "instigated racial agitation and has disseminated extremist views at this University."

The trial will take place in the Law School Courtroom on Friday evening, April 19, 1963, at 8 p.m. Judge Malcolm Seawell, the N. C. Attorney-General under the administration of Gov. Hodges, will preside.

An attorney for the plaintiff, Joe Roberts, said yesterday that "this is another case of labeling an individual who has unpopular views as a 'communist.' The DTH has gone too far in this case." The other attorney for the plaintiff is Joe Friedberg.

Charley Katzenstien spoke for the defense yesterday when he said, "the Daily Tar Heel is only guilty of printing the truth about Larry Phelps. We are pleased with this chance to help Mr. Phelps further discredit both himself and his views." Katzenstien, Marshall Woodall and Cary Whitaker are the counsels for the defense.

The jury will be chosen Friday night at the Law School Courtroom. All interested people have been invited to attend who would be interested in serving on the jury or view the proceedings.

"In the past it has been the policy of the editors of this newspaper to endorse certain liberal movements on this campus. I do not feel that this sanction should extend to the activities of Larry Phelps. Under the guise of liberalism he has avowed Marxist-Leninist organization, has instigated racial agitation and has disseminated extremist views at this University. Larry Phelps is nothing more than an 'agent' for Communist Russia, a tool of Soviet imperialism."

DTH managing editor Wayne King charged that "this whole thing is just part of an attempt by that shyster lawyer Friedberg to discredit the DTH. Friedberg's reputation as a legalistic con-man is enough in itself to get him barred from any courtroom in America. The sooner that's done, the better."

"Friedberg's smart," King continued, "but he's obviously a crook. I think he should be run out of town on a rail, complete with a new spring outfit of good old North Carolina tar and some fluffy Rhode Island Red chicken feathers."

Staff Positions Assigned, Defined

Staff appointments to the Daily Tar Heel announced yesterday, together with their areas of responsibility, are:

Managing Editor, Wayne King, a former Tar Heel editor who is a senior from Hickory, N. C. Assistant Managing Editors are Mike Putzel, a junior from New Haven, Conn., and Sam Himes, a junior from W. Palm Beach, Fla. They will have charge of the office and supervise news - gathering operations.

Investigative Reporter, Bill Waumett, a senior from Cleveland, N. C. He will write in-depth reports on special projects assigned by the editors.

Administration Reporter, Mickey Blackwell, a junior from Gastonia, N. C. He will cover South Building, President William C. Friday's office and town government.

Student Government Reporter, Joel Bulkley, a freshman from Southport, Conn. He will cover Student Legislature, Presidential Press Conferences and Student Government council and committee news.

Campus Affairs Reporter, Vance Barron, a sophomore from Chapel Hill. He will cover campus meetings and speeches, plus dormitory, fraternity, and faculty news.

Science Reporter, Mat Friedman, a junior from New York, N. Y. He will cover science news, including everything from Memorial Hospital to the Math, Physics, and Chemistry Depts.

Feature Editors, Ginny Carnes, a junior from Atlanta, and Chris Farran, a junior from Winston-Salem. They will write feature stories and interviews and supervise the work of students who are available only a limited time each week.

Exchange Editor, Rick Edwards, a sophomore from Auburn, Ala. He will check newspapers from other colleges and universities for news of interest to UNC students and set up newspaper swaps with more schools.

Leaders To Discuss Student Discipline

By Joel Bulkley

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson Jr. announced last week that he was in agreement with a proposal calling for a joint student, faculty and administration meeting to discuss "both general and specific concerns in the area of student conduct."

The meeting, as proposed by student body president-elect Mike Lawler, will take place Tuesday afternoon, April 23.

Student leaders participating will be Diane Blanton, chairman of the WRC; Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council; Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council; Bob Spearman, newly-elected vice-president of the student body and Lawler. Also expected to attend are members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, Dean of Women, Katherine Carmichael; Dean of Men, William Long and Dean Henderson.

Lawler suggested, in a letter April 10 to Dean Henderson, that an informal meeting be held to establish a more constructive direction toward the solution of certain problems in the area of student discipline, particularly a substantive clarification of "morals cases" and the procedures of adjudicating such "cases."

In announcing that the meeting would be held next week Dean Henderson noted "that in order to proceed in an orderly fashion, I suggest that the floor be given first to the students, then to the administration and finally to the faculty. After this we might engage in general discussion."

In a joint statement released yesterday Lawler and Spearman commented that "We are looking forward to a positive discussion which will be the best chance so far to clear away any doubts and misunderstanding which have occurred, due to lack of communication. We believe that both the faculty and students realize the seriousness of the problem at hand, in regard to student conduct and student discipline."

Muslim Malcolm X Is Durham Speaker

A nationally known minister of the Black Muslims will appear in Durham tomorrow in a public discussion of the Negro's problem, Durham Attorney Floyd McKissick confirmed today.

Malcolm X, who has received nationwide publicity as the most articulate spokesman for the militant Negro organization, will present the Muslim approach to solving the Negro problem through separation of the races.

He will share the podium with McKissick, who said yesterday he would try to show how groups such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), are helping to advance the Negro's position through integration.

The discussion will take place at 7:30 p.m. in Hill Recreation Center in Durham, and is open to the public.

The Black Muslims, properly known as the Lost-Found Nation of Islam in North America, first began to receive national attention a few years ago when their leader, a 65-year-old Negro who calls himself Elizah Muhammad, began making public statements concerning Muslim aims.

Most controversial of these was his insistence that the federal government cede to the Negro population "several states" for the establishment of a Black Nation.

The movement was started in the early thirties by an obscure Negro who identified himself most often as W. D. Fard, but assumed the title of Farad Muhammad.

Fard mysteriously disappeared a few years later, to be succeeded by Georgia Negro named Elizah Poole. Poole adopted the designation of Elizah Muhammad, prophet of Allah.

Muslim teaching, which has been described as a "mixture of orthodox Islam, race hatred and the personal perjudices of Elizah Poole," advocates separation of the white and non-white races, elevation of the non-white's status and a strict personal regimen of hard work, total abstinence, thrift and moral consciousness.

Estimates of Black Muslim membership range from 50,000 to 200,000.

Much controversy has centered around charges that Muslims are taught violence and the use of arms against the whites.

In press interviews, Malcolm X has stated that the Muslims do not teach violence, but merely advocate protection if attacked.

Women's Club Hears Author

Richard McKenna, the Chapel Hill novelist whose recent book, "The Sand Pebbles," won the $10,000 Harper Award, will speak at the annual luncheon of the University Woman's Club today at 12:30 p.m. in the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

McKenna will talk about his experiences in becoming a professional novelist and some conclusions he has drawn from them. Mrs. Paul Guthrie will introduce McKenna.

Tickets at $2 are available to members of the University Women's Club only. Reservations are made through Mrs. Frank Schwentker at 1100 Sourwood Circle. They must be made by Monday, April 15.

"The Sand Pebbles," which was Mr. McKenna's first novel, was an immediate success. In addition to winning the Harper Prize, it was a quick movie sale for $400,000, was picked as a Book-of-the-Month selection, was serialized in the Saturday Evening Post and rose to No. 2 on the best-seller list for fiction.

Statistics Touch All Sides Of Life

By MAT FRIEDMAN
DTH Science Editor

They spend hours poring over complicated formulas, but their work may help prevent an epidemic or improve the quality of your television.

People in the UNC Statistics Department study such far out things as "sequential analysis" and "renewal theory" but they affect our everyday life more than most of us realize.

The eight faculty members divide their time about equally between research and teaching, and work closely with the sister department at State. The department's world-wide reputation is illustrated by the NATO-sponsored research program it is now undertaking with the Universities of Paris and Rome. It is also under permanent contract with the Air Force and Navy, but members are completely on their own in deciding what to work on.

Most of the students go into teaching, industry, or government work. There is a general shortage and so they are in great demand. "The military services tend to grab all our students, leaving very few to teach statistics," says Dr. Smith. He adds that starting salaries are among the highest, usually around $8 or $9 thousand dollars a year.

"Statistics may help discern at any possible moment the arrival of an epidemic," says Dr. Harold Hotelling, founder of the department. Public health officials use them to decide when to sound the alarm. Statistics are being used to study the typhoid epidemic in Switzerland right now.

"There's a great amount of statistics backing medical work," he says, "but you never hear about it."

"I don't think there is anyone in the department who applies his work directly," says Dr. Walter Smith. "We make the tools and hand to other people to use. "But," adds Dr. Hotelling, "we do have practical problems about students who do badly in examinations."

Dr. Smith has made some tools which may help remove congestion in supermarket lines, speed up the landing of planes, or even get out your telegrams faster. He also studies renewal theory, which helps a manufacturer to decide, for example, how many light bulbs to buy so he will have enough on hand for a year.

Dr. W. J. Hall, whose specialty is sequential analysis, helps find out which medicines are most effective for their patients. If a doctor has a new drug, for example, and he doesn't know whether it is more effective than the old remedy, he assigns both to different patients in random ways. Then, with the help of statisticians' formulas, he can figure out what the results mean.

Sequential analysis may also be applied to "quality control" work in industry. "If a radio manufacturer wants to know whether his product is good," says Dr. Hall, "he can't test all of them, so he uses a sampling plan. If one out of 50 is bad, can he say the batch is good? We try to describe a rule for discontinuing one sample. But I don't work with physicians or industrialists, only on theoretical problems."

"Studying human population is one of the oldest applications of statistics," says Dr. Hotelling. "King David took the first census just before a pestilence. So when George Washington wanted to take one, he met opposition. The pestilence was a warning to Americans not have a census. But we have overcome this since."

"Almost anything you name, if it involves research, gets into statistics. Psychology and education have given it its biggest play. Colleges must decide what combination of entrance exams to use.

"Psychologists use tests to work out the constitution of the mind. Inferences from these tests are applied to criminals and other groups that can't escape tests. A population that finds them inescapable can give you quite an accurate result."

Dr. G. E. Nicholson, present head of the department, points out that statistics may be used to predict hereditary characteristics such as hair color, whether it's going to be a boy or a girl, or what American League records meant last season. But, he adds, the department's faculty members are concerned only with mathematical formulas, not with practical applications.

Evaluation Of Teachers Being Tried

THE JOHNSONIAN
Winthrop College
Rock Hill, S. C.

A northwestern college is presently engaged in plans for a program which should stimulate its distant southern relatives to take notice.

One of Washington State University's colleges will be experimenting soon with a student evaluation system wherein the student body will be asked to determine the success of the professors' teaching methods. Appropriate forms, solely for this particular evaluation, will be distributed to every student by the administration at the close of each semester when a student's grade could not be influenced. Instructors will not aid in any way, nor will the student be asked to sign the form.

Dean George F. Fischer, according to an announcement, commented: "This proposition has two specific objectives: first, to stimulate the highest level of quality of instruction possible; second, to provide tangible evidence of teacher performance comparable to that available for evaluating research performance. Student evaluation of instruction is designed to aid the teacher by helping him define his weaknesses so he may strive to improve in those areas."

We think Washington University, along with several other schools conducting such a program, is realizing a very important part of higher education: that students do deserve a voice about classroom views of teaching techniques.

As one advocate of Washington's faculty so aptly stated when interviewed in a faculty opinion poll, "The majority of students are just as concerned about the effectiveness of their education as we supposedly more mature adults. They are also concerned to an important degree, about the improvement of the educational process. Therefore, I think they should be asked for judgment on their instructors . . ."

Many and various things occur in a classroom which affect learning. One educator on our campus has remarked, "A teacher's method is everything he or she does in the class room." This includes not only techniques of presentation of material and examinations, but other factors which affect a teacher's action such as his attitude, disposition, interest, enthusiasm and inspiration. All directly influence the success of a teacher's "method" and, in turn, the success of student learning.

We are not suggesting the kind which merely sorts the good and the "favorite" from the bad and "disliked." A thorough, well-planned, and skillfully devised questionnaire is our idea.

This program, approached seriously and maturely, would be a progressive step in the advancement of education and would give those most directly concerned—the students—an opportunity to express opinions on the education they are receiving.

The Daily Tar Heel

THE DAILY TAR HEEL is published by the Publications Board of the University of North Carolina, and is issued daily except Mondays, examination periods and vacations.

Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester; $8 per year.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL is a subscriber to United Press International and utilizes the services of the University News Bureau.

For The Record: No Great Change

As the Dogwoods blossom and the breeze carries the scent of wisteria and honeysuckle, spirits seem to lift and hope again springs for better things.

As with seasons, so with Tar Heel editors.

The old editors deserve a rest and the new are anxious to assume the task. Their new ideas and plans, as yet untried by the steady clash of simply getting out a paper everyday, promise a better and brighter Tar Heel.

Despite past differences, however, the old and new editors agree on several essential points:

First and foremost, the Daily Tar Heel is an institution with a proud past and a bright future. It will be as good as the people who create it daily from the huge rolls of blank newsprint.

Second, a prime responsibility of the Tar Heel, besides informing, is to act as a campus bulldog . . . biting into things and holding on, shaking fiercely so the dust of habit is cast off and the status quo is held up to inspection to see if it still suffices.

Here responsibility is the most important thing. We intend to bite only after we have honed our editorial teeth on facts.

The Tar Heel will also serve another function as a campus newspaper. That is to provide aspiring writers of every variety with the opportunity to gain experience in translating people, events, feelings and opinions into words on paper.

The difficulty lies i balancing these purposes so that the best interests of boh reader and writer are served. Such a balance is what we will be striving for in the coming year.

Our editorials will not be signed except on rare, and presently unforeseen, occasions.

Letters to the editors will be as welcome as ever, on any subject. But each letter should bear the name, present address and class of its author.

The door will always be open to talent, suggestions and requests of whatever nature. We invite you to use it. The best time is between 2 and 5 p.m. any day but Sunday.

So, to the old editors, thanks. We intend to try our best to outdo you.

A year from now when spring again promises so much, we too will be able to look back and see how much of that promise we have fulfilled.

A Hopeful Step

It appears that the communications barrier that has previously existed between the administration, the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline and Student Government is about to be bridged.

At the suggestion of student body President Mike Lawler, Dean Charles Henderson has called a meeting of all the members of The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline plus Dean Carmichael, Dean Long and representatives of the Student Government to discuss problems in the area of student discipline, particularly pertaining to morals cases.

This seems to be the best chance so far to clear the air of the obvious misunderstandings and misinterpretations that have prevailed in this area in the past.

We can only hope that all parties will meet and act in good faith and that some difinitive policy can be arrived at for handling the cases in question.

This meeting, if effective, could also serve as a precedent for additional student-administration-faculty exchanges in other areas. At present, it is sorely needed.

The students have at least won the opportunity to approach the administration and faculty as young — but equal — adults. Now it is their turn to prove that they can accept and uphold the responsibility which logically follows that privilege.

If the students on this campus are adults, as we believe they are, then they should decide all matters of student conduct — not just those which the administration and faculty don't wish to bother with.

But on the other hand, if the students do handle all student conduct outside the class room will they remember the Doug Moe case, or the question of Ann Carter's guilt? We can only wait, wonder, and hope.

Imperative

One of the imperatives in education today is the realization that all modern learning — general as well as specialized — humanist as well as scientific — will have to be continuing and self-feeding as never before. The old image of the liberal arts colleges' product reminds me of the ripened apple — lovely and finished. I should like to think of the college product of tomorrow more as of a tough plant, with roots sunk deep, able to continue to grow independently in a tough world.

The second imperative is that education must be taken with literally deadly seriousness. The days of college as a romantic luxury are as surely past as are the years when a child's interest in Eskimos was considered as valuable as his competence in reading. We may never know whether this is cause for grief or rejoicing.

We know it is a fact.

We know that, whatever the continuing value of the well-rounded man, sharpened minds will be the cutting edge of survival.

An Example

Before her class of petrified students, Mrs. Rose Zimbardo (English) and her husband revealed a small personal drama which nearly erupted into a tragedy.

During her lecture on Teatro del Grotesque to her late-afternoon English class, a member of the faculty came in and quietly told her something. "But I can't. I have a class now," she replied.

"But he's been waiting for half an hour," he said.

"Well, he'll just have to come back another time."

Her colleague departed and the lecture continued. Just as Mrs. Zimbardo was describing the techniques of this type of drama, a man carrying a baby wrapped in a blanket entered the class.

"Come on, we have to go," the bearded man sternly ordered.

"Please leave; I have a class now. I can't;" Mrs. Zimbardo was obviously embarrassed, and tried to control the situation.

"Wait outside," she pleaded.

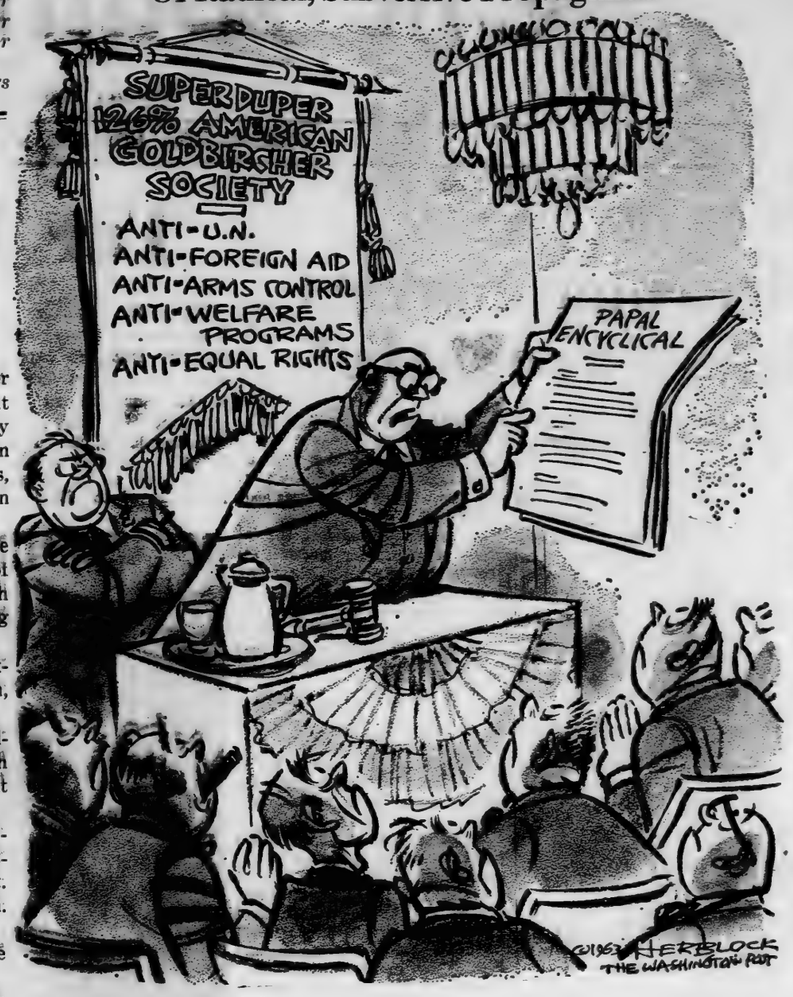
A student in the class who knew Mr. and Mrs. Zimbardo jumped out of his seat and yelled across the room, "John, what are you doing?"

The man paid no attention. He gripped the teacher by the arm, threw her against her desk and commanded again, "Get your books and let's go!"

The student yelled again and the dumbfounded class turned to see the student draw a gun and point it at the man. "You bastard," he cursed. The gun clicked but didnt go off.



The man dropped the baby and ran from the room.

The baby was really a stuffed monkey, and the gun was fake.

"And that," stated Mrs. Zimbardo coolly, "is an example of the techniques of the Teatro del Grotesque."

Letters to the Daily Tar Heel—

Birth Control Question: Morals Are Not Relative

To the Editors:

Dr. Joseph Fletcher's position in his lecture on "Lovemaking and Babymaking: a Moral Tension," as reported in The Daily Tar Heel of April 6, is a conspicuous example of the tendency on the part of many contemporary "Christian" theologians to reduce morality to an arbitrary mass of completely relative notions, justified only by reference to the intellect of man, "the measure of all things." In such a system — if one can speak of a system in a context of radical situational morality — God becomes, almost by definition, nothing more than a personification of the decisions of man to which one appeals in hypocritical self-justification. Such a position is in direct contradiction to the Christianity which Dr. Fletcher purports to represent.

No end can justify the use of a means which is intrinsically wrong. Dr. Fletcher would probably deny the existence of any intrinsic evil, but the only logically possible conclusion of such a denial is the rejection of all moral law. Therefore, since Dr. Fletcher's arguments are based upon a premise which is unacceptable in any truly Christian framework, and since he is speaking expressly as a Christian, I must deny the validity of his entire position which involves patent contradiction.

Furthermore, the reducing of a human problem to such a crude form as "Love-making and Baby-making" vitiates the entire question. Such procedure is equivalent to debating the relative merits of Communism and grasping, greedy, oppressive Capitalism. Nothing is more unfair than to express the opinion of an opponent in terms which are repugnant even to him and which contain within themselves the refutation of what the opponent would never maintain.

Finally, Dr. Fletcher's comments on the position of the Roman Catholic Church on "naturalism in the birth rate" seem to indicate a gross misunderstanding of the concept of natural law. Natural law is a term with a quite specific and restricted meaning in properly philosophical contexts and is simply not equivalent to "naturalism." It is customary to attack the position of one's adversary, not one's misunderstanding of it.

To the Editors:

Have we a student on campus from Birmingham, Alabama, who is proud when he sees the police of his city turn snarling dogs on peaceful citizens seeking only social justice? If we have such a student here, I have words for him.

Mr. Birmingham Student, your city is loathsome to me, for I am an American and hate to stand idly by while the democracy that I love is thwarted. Your police disgust me, because I am a citizen of a civilized country where we are wont to see our problems solved by human understanding rather than animal cunning. Proud Birmingham Alabama Student, when you write to your proud parents back home in your proud city, tell them about me—the student with quaint notions about your town—who would pass an outsiders judgment on your city from so far away. Tell them how I try to avoid buying anything from your city, and hope that other people, tired of your snarling dogs, snarling police, and snarling public officials will join me, for while I know that you find most American things most distasteful, to be sure, I have no doubt that y'all love that ole Yankee dolla' even more than chasing niggers with police dogs.

Notice of Letters

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

Good Poetry Featured In Quarterly

By JOE WILLIMAN
DTH Review Staff

The last issue of the Carolina Quarterly was greeted by a complaint that the majority of the fiction centered around childhood characters and situations. The chances are very good that the writer of that review would choose the same easy tack and say that this issue was an attempt to write only about 'country' characters and situations, but on reading this issue it is obvious that not only is this tack begging the question but is also unjustified.

It is chiefly unjustified in view of this year's Quarterlies having a consistently high grade of lyric poetry, almost to the point of overshadowing the fiction and criticism alike. The poetry in this issue is, in my opinion, especially outstandstanding, chiefly for a cluster of gem-like images entitled Persian Suite by Lucien Stryk. These poems, somewhat like the poems in an Algerian setting in the last issue, are notable for their acute sensual imagery and their self-containment.

They are clearly a result of a carefully worked lapidary style, and probably are worth the whole price of the issue. A set of poems by David Cornel DeJong are also included, these having a sense of American daily living that is much more reminiscent of William Carlos Williams than (thankfully) Norman Rockwell.

DeJong's approach is most appealing through his wry and familiar treatment of meaning-filled gestures and quotidian practices that achieve significance through their humanity. Two poems by Lyman Andrews, "From Icarus" and "On San Francisco" are also in a sense a return to natively American themes and visions, the latter having the virtues of concision and dramatic tension.

Other poems in this issue, by John Engels, Paul B. Newman, and Marden Dahlstedt are likewise unusually fine pieces, and all seem to show not only the craftsmanship that one can expect from a good literary magazine, but also, to my mind, a strong trace of the Japanese sense of the lucky moment of poetry. Dahlstedt's "Lucid Interval" is especially strong in this sense. The remaining poems, "Five Poems from a Shakespeare Notebook," by John Tagliabue, are reflections on Love's Labors Lost and have the enviable power of evoking the character for a person's mind, which many English teachers would give much to have.

The fiction in this issue of the Quarterly is probably not as strong in some places as was that of the last issue, but the long short story by Leon Rooke, "Not Far from the Shores of the Indian Ocean" does much to make up for the comparison. It is a sensitive story about an apparently unsensitive character who reveals himself to us unwillingly in his observations and reactions, like the hero of Notes from the Underground.

In the end it is the reader who profits from this technique, being given a remarkable evocation of a growing love which manages to save itself from most of the cliches possible.

"The McKittrick Boy," by Merrill Clute, is a theme dealt with by Hemingway in various places, but which is here given a power from its connection with the home-roots of the protagonist which Hemingway did not attempt. The wounded soldier of the story is acutely a country character in the sense that many of Wolfe's were, and this is certainly no pejorative sense. This story is a very promising one for the author, who is now working on his first novel.

A strange fragment by William O'Connor called "The Disposition" is so much like a dream that it must be reread before anything can be understood of it. It seems allegorical of many things that Kafka and Jung found problematic, and must be left to the individual reader to be judged.

The other two stories, "The Resurrection," by Iam T. MacMillan and "Comeback" by William Rintoul are not quite up to the other stories in this issue, and this seems due for the most part because they attempt too much in the evocation of moods and states of mind. Possibly the two authors attempted too much to follow Hemingway's dictum about an author being able to leave out things that the author knows thoroughly, and certainly a Hemingway influence in subject and treatment is noticeable in the latter story.

The other, "The Resurrection," is more in the vein of J. D. Saling-and that it was further hurt by competition from the UNC Book Exchange.

But perhaps even more important in the Club's failure is the nature of the Carolina students themselves. The stores participating offered little snob appeal in their reputations, a factor which must be recognized in any study of the buying habits of students.

The requirement that membership cards be presented at the time of purchase presented an inconvenience that made many students doubt whether the Club was worth the $5 committment.

The idea of a discount club at Carolina is now pretty solidly dead. The first failure has made some of the former participants leery of joining a second club, while other merchants fear they will become known as discount stores and lose their reputation for carrying high quality merchandise.

But there are lessons to be learned from its failure that should help a cooperative avoid the mistakes of the discount club. These lessons and the additional problems of a cooperative will be examined in subsequent articles.

—Statistics—

There are presently 38 graduate students studying statistics here, most working towards their Ph.D. "Statistics is highly international," says Dr. Hotelling. "I think we have more foreign than American students."

Students come from England, France, Italy, Canada, Japan, Egypt, India and many other places. "In 1939," he said, "the Indian Statistical Institute invited me to go around and help solve their problems. I had an exceedingly interesting time traveling around India talking to statisticians and government officials, including the present Prime Minister Nehru. I wrote them a letter in 1946 when the present department was being organized and received a strong, enthusiastic reply."

Summer European Flights Applications Due May 3

The deadline for joining UNC flights to Europe is rapidly drawing near. Graham Memorial is arranging three flights to Europe on a non-profit basis for UNC students and faculty members. The flights will mean considerable savings to European Europe - bound travelers, but deposits for ticket reservations will soon be due, according to Howard Henry, director of GM.

The first flight which will leave New York on June 11 for London. The return trip will depart from London on September 10. The cost of this flight, to be made by Pan American jet, will be $310. This compares with the normal cost of $513 for the same flight.

The second flight will leave New York on June 10 and return from London on August 12, arriving in Washington, D. C. on the same day. The cost for this flight will be $326.40. The third flight will leave New York on the 24th of July and return to New York from London on September 11. The cost is the same as for the first.

For each flight a deposit of $50 is required to reserve a ticket. These must be turned in to Graham Memorial by the following dates: May 3 for flight No. 1; May 2 for flight No. 2; June 11 for flight No. 3.

According to Mr. Henry, the first flight is already more than half filled. The other two flights have plenty of room.

Revere Panel Here Today

Three Republican Congressmen will visit UNC today as part of a nation-wide party effort to "tell the story of what is happening to the Federal Government and the New Frontier in Washington."

Members of the panel visiting UNC are: Rep. John Anderson, Illinois; Rep. Sherman Lloyd, Utah; and Rep. Robert Dole, Kansas.

Pointing out that April 18th is the anniversary of Paul Revere's Ride, Congressman Anderson, chairman of the panel, said, "It is altogether fitting that 188 years later the people of America should be told of the true situation that faces their country at home and abroad. While our transportation differs, our mission is as important today to the future of our nation as was Revere's message to the colonists in 1775."

Among the subjects to be discussed by the congressmen are: managed news, Cuba, taxes, and the state of the economy with its rising employment. After a brief talk by each of the panelists, questions will be taken from the floor.

The meeting will be held at Gerrard Hall from 3:30-4:30 p.m. and is sponsored by the UNC Young Republican Club. The meeting is open to the public.

er and his 'but you know all about that' New Yorkerese. Still, if the Quarterly is to continue to be an incubator for some of the better creative writers, these cannot be ignored or easily dismissed.

The criticism in this issue reveals the basic prejudice of the magazine itself, that is, toward contemporary creative (and unpublicized) writing. Both of the books reviewed are written by former (and current) contributors to the magazine, one reviewed by the editor of the tiny staff and the other by Dudley Carroll, whose poetry has appeared in the Quarterly. Both are done well and show promise for the Quarterly ending the previous critical silence of years gone by.

All told, the Quarterly is showing a great deal of new avenues available to Chapel Hill audiences, to say nothing of larger bodies of readers who are aware of the small magazine and its literary importance.

Parapsychology Adviser To Speak

The UNC Parapsychology Discussion Group will hear an informal lecture this evening in 105 Hanes by Charlie Tart, advisor to the new campus group, on the findings of the Roundtable Foundation in Telepathy.

Tart is a graduate student in psychology and U. S. Public Health Service Research Fellow at UNC. He is a member of the Parapsychological Association, a professional organization, and is past president of the M.I.T. Society for Psychical Research.

"The Foundation's work is of interest and possibly great importance," Tart said. "The talk will provide more facts for those people on campus interested in this area."

The meeting is open to the public.

Creative Arts Meet Slated At Princeton

A conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Creative Arts" will be held at Princeton University April 19-21.

The conference will feature noted persons in the literary and mass communication fields.

Among those participating will be novelist Robert Penn Warren; Newton Minow, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission; Alistair Cooke, Manchester Guardian correspondent.

Anybody interested in attending the conference should contact Mike Lawler in the Student Government offices on the second floor of Graham Memorial between 1 and 4 this afternoon, or should call him at 942-2088.

Self-Government Now A Reality

Duke Students Gain Freedom

By MIKE McMANUS
The Durham Herald

Duke students have pleaded for years for more freedom to govern their own affairs—and now they are getting it.

But not without a good deal of hard-headed planning on the part of the students and university officials.

Drinking rules were relaxed last year, compulsory class attendance was virtually eliminated this year, and later hours for the closing of East Campus dormitories have been approved.

Increased freedoms have meant increased responsibilities. Students have had to both express a willingness to assume the responsibilities, and demonstrate a workable plan by which responsible action will be forthcoming, in order to make progress.

In the past, progress was blocked by a dim awareness on the part of students of this fact. The evolution of the drinking policy is a case in point.

Until last year the drinking of any alcoholic beverage either on the campus, or at off-campus functions of the university was strictly prohibited. Four years ago, the student government formally requested that the university either enforce its restrictions, or that it change its policy. The request cited flagrant violations of the rule, particularly at off-campus parties.

No plan was offered to assure a mature handling of the requested freedom. The administration refused to accede to students' demands.

Last year, the various student governments presented a more moderate stand. They asked that only off-campus drinking be legalized, and offered to set up student committees to assist the chaperones in maintaining the party's decorum—groups which would be responsible for any mishaps.

Students also agreed to conduct a campus-wide referendum in which students would agree to maintaining the prohibition of drinking on campus. These plans were worked out in secret by the student organizations with the assistance of some members of the deans' staff.

Thomas H. Forsyth III, president of the Interfraternity Council for the past year, and John M. Markas, president of the Men's Student Government for the same period, have praised the way students have accepted the new responsibility.

The most recent extension of freedom to the student body is the granting of voluntary class attendance, given for the first time this semester by the Undergraduate Faculty Council.

In the past, a complex set of penalties, which could lead to automatic failure of courses, was in effect for students who missed a prescribed number of classes in a given course.

Three years ago the policy was relaxed. Dean's list upperclassmen (those with a B average or better) could take an unlimited number of cuts.

The rising caliber of the student body, coupled with repeated requests by student leaders, prompted the Undergraduate Faculty Council to grant a campus-wide voluntary class attendance policy this semester. The only restrictions are that a student must attend the first and last classes of the semester, and classes immediately before and after vacations.

Unfortunately many students have taken advantage of the policy and are cutting to an excess. No one knows what effect this will have on the number of people flunking out—but faculty and administrative personnel, as well as students, are predicting a higher drop-out rate than usual.

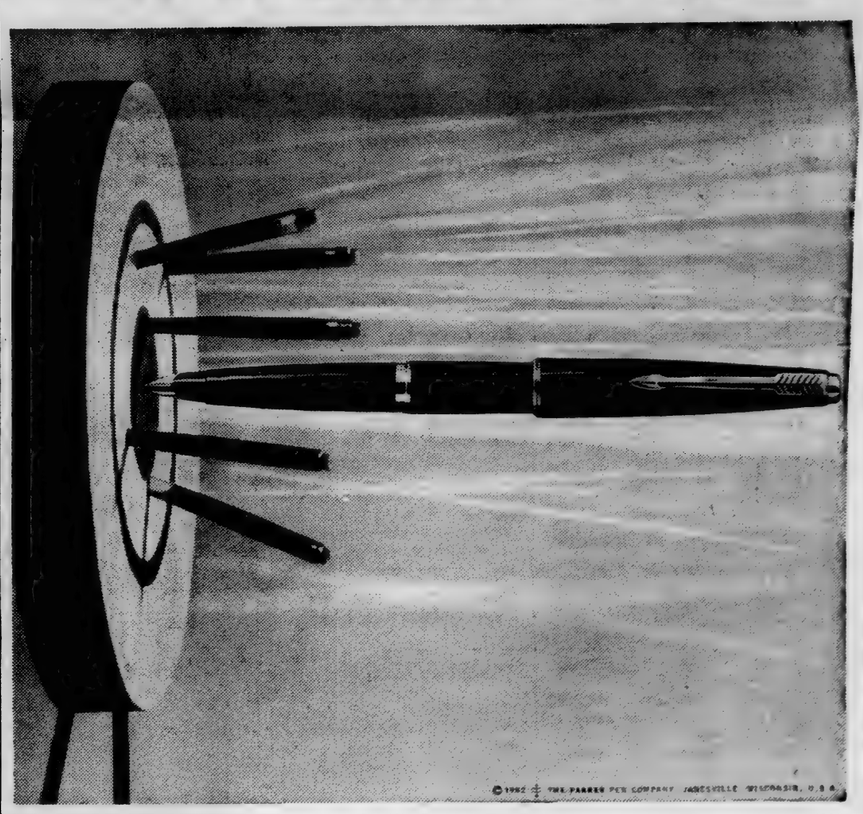
YACHTING SUMMER POSITIONS

The Wetherill Company, a crew placement intermediary with yacht listings on the East Coast, West coast, Gulf area and the Great Lakes is soliciting for crew members. Due to the preference of most yachtsmen, we are accepting applications from college students and graduates as crew on motor cruisers and sailboats. Positions for experienced as well as inexperienced men and women are available. Experience with cooking or child care is helpful.

Each application will be sent to over 3000 large yacht owners in April. Crewing affords an opportunity to acquire or sharpen boating skills, visit new places here and abroad while earning a good salary in pleasant outdoor surroundings.



To apply, send us a short resume using the following form along with $5.00 processing fee.

(1) Name, address, Phone No. (2) Age, school (3) Available from to in i.e. Northeast, Great Lakes, East and South, etc. (4) Previous boating and relevant work experience (5) two references (6) Preference i.e. Racing, sailboat cruising, motorboating, none, etc. (7) Other pertinent facts. Two applicants wishing to work together, state this preference. Every applicant will receive a finished resume.

New PARKER ARROW

This pen can save you important money on cartridges. Ours are BIGGER and last longer (each is good for 8 or 9 thousand words). But, even if you didn't save a dime, this pen would be worth the extra price. It's a Parker.

And only Parker gives you a solid 14K gold point tipped with plathenium—one of the hardest, smoothest alloys ever developed. It should last you for years no matter how much you use it.

The pen won't leak the way the cheap ones do. It has a built-in safety reservoir, and it must meet most of the tough specifications we set for our $10 pens.

If you have trouble saying it, say it with a Parker. If you're a little shy and have difficulty saying "I love you" or even "I like you very much"—say it with a Parker.

The new Parker Arrow makes a beautifully expressive gift and looks as if you paid a small fortune for it.

Cadets Work On Project In Survival

A class project developed by UNC Air Force ROTC cadets could mean survival for thousands of Chapel Hill-Carrboro residents in the event of nuclear attack.

Third-year students in the program here have presented recommendations for an operational survival plan to Chapel Hill-Carrboro Civil Defense director Dr. George Spooner. The plan was developed by the radets in an Air Science seminar, putting to work problem-solving techniques which they had learned earlier in the classroom.

The suggestion to initiate the study was made by a cadet to Capt. James R. Milligan, instructor of the junior-level Air Science Leadership Seminar. Capt. Milligan later selected the topic for the seminar exercise in the "Leadership Problem - Solving" block of the curriculum.

Two Sections

The class members were organized into a "double-deputy" command, dividing the class into two sections. The "double deputies," Alfred T. Taylor Jr. of Garner, and Sherman E. Crites Jr. of Raleigh, commanded the two sections. Most of the study was worked out on an even smaller group level. Specific tasks were assigned to sub-sections of four students each, while cadets Crites and Taylor and their command elements dealt with leadership and coordination of the entire task group.

The basic report examines an over-all plan formulated with this area's role as a "shelter area" in mind. Shelter facilities on the University campus are included in the plan, which assumes that Chapel Hill and Carrboro would not be in a direct-hit area, but would be exposed to radiation and minor thermal damage in case of a nuclear attack.

Specific Factors

Sixteen annexes to the basic plan include specific factors brought out in the problem-solving sessions. Topics such as organization, shelter facilities, warning, and communications are treated in the annexes. Specific recommendations in the annexed material call for an expanded organization in order to limit panic, disorder, and control of people in shelters; a siren warning system for the area; and rescue units organized for emergencies.

Three operational rescue teams have been organized in the AFROTC Cadet Group as a result of the plan. The teams, under the supervision of Chapel Hill Fire Chief James Stewart, will be trained to operate in many types of emergencies as a community service.

Dr. Spooner said the cadets' work would "greatly supplement" the local plan, which was approved by the state organization recently. "They have gone into much more detail than we had," he said. "We think it's most valuable to have a group of people sit down and critically look at our plan."

Education Fraternity Inducts 14 Members

The Beta Theta chapter of Phi Delta Kappa, national honorary fraternity for men in education, inducted 14 new members Wednesday evening, April 10.

Phi Delta Kappa was established at UNC in 1944 to carry out the objectives of service, leadership and research in education. The organization now has over 350 active members in the University and the surrounding school systems.

Costs Here Still Rising -- Housing Fees Up The Most

By CLYDE WILSON

The price of a year's education at the University has increased by $400 in the postwar years.

The typical undergraduate resident of North Carolina who could get by on a little less than $700 in 1946-47 will pay out over $1,100 next year.

The University estimates expenses for incoming freshmen: food, $500; room rent, $193; tuition, $175; fees, $109.50; laundry, $40; and books, $90.

This is a rock-bottom estimate. At least $200 could be added for clothes, linen, dry cleaning, travel and entertainment. The estimates for food and laundry are probably low.

Most of the increase has come since 1952. The biggest single increase is in room rent which has risen from $68 to $193 a year.

Room rent costs are approaching the limit where "you price yourself out of the market as far as what students can afford to pay," according to University Business Manager J. A. Branch.

Main cause of rise in rent has been the requirement for funds tod service the debt acquired in building new dormitories for the expanding enrollment.

With an expected enrollment of 13,000 to 14,000 in 1970, the University is going to have to find new ways to build dormitories, preferably with state appropriations or gifts, Mr. Branch believes.

Rising operating costs, especially wages, have also played a part in the dormitory rent increase.

The University houses about 50 per cent of the students on campus. Since there appears to be a limit to the number of students the Town can absorb, new dormitories will be a definite requirement with the increased enrollment.

Mr. Branch believes room rent costs are in line with charges at other public universities in this region. They are lower than at the Universities of Georgia and Virginia.

He thinks the University has "a very fine, very efficient food operation" and has kept student food costs remarkably low.

In the same postwar period tuition has risen from $81 (at $27 a quarter) to $175 annually; fees from $84 to $109; food (estimated) from $405 to $500; laundry from $30 to $40; and books from $25 to $90.

The University is aware that continually rising charges may put attendance out of the range of those for whom a public university is primarily designed.

Any upper limits on the rise of costs will depend primarily on the eventual limits placed on the size of enrollment, which is related to the fate of the community colleges, according to Mr. Branch.

A student can earn his costs by working two hours per day at Lenoir Hall. There are many jobs, loans and scholarships (including out-of-state tuition waiver). These are easier to acquire after the student has been in the University than before he enters.

The following are estimates of the annual costs of attending the University for the years ending: 1947, $693; 1948, $698; 1949-51, $773; 1952, $780; 1953, $813; 1954, $870; 1955, $883; 1956-57, $913; 1958, $953; 1959-60, $975; 1961, $1016; 1962-63, $1080; and 1964, $1105.

Where Can You Go Cheaply? Compare Texas A&M, $655

To get a good college education as inexpensively as possible today, best bet is to be a male resident of Texas or a female resident of Oklahoma.

A male undergraduate resident can live on campus at Texas A & M for $655 a year. A female resident of Oklahoma will find that $800 covers the cost of room and board, tuition and fees at the University of Oklahoma. She'll need $804, however, to do it at Oklahoma State University.

From there on the cost goes up—as high as Pennsylvania State University's annual costs of $1,320 to residents who live on campus; Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey's annual costs of $1,226; the University of Michigan's total of $1,146. Then there's the University of Alaska, where as a resident, it would cost $1,251 to live on campus — but a whopping $726 of that would go for board charges.

Students attending a predominantly Negro school in their home state would pay even less than residents of Oklahoma and Texas. At Mississippi's Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, for example, $529 will take care of annual tuition and fees, room and board costs. At Prairie View Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas the total would be $564.

Figures were compiled by the U. S. Office of Education for the Joint Office of Institutional Research and cover 94 state universities and land grant institutions. Figures for out-of-state students attending any of these institutions would, of course, be higher, as would costs at most private colleges and universities.

Education-Aid Group Plans Conference

Plans for a National Student Federal Aid to Education (FATE) Conference to be held in Washington, D. C. on April 25, 26, have been announced today by the 17 members Steering Committee for the Conference.

Conference co-chairmen, Tim Ryles of Troy State College, Troy, Ala., and Pat Clary, American University, Washington, D. C., estimated that 500-1,000 students from all over the United States would attend the conference. "The 17 organizations sponsoring the FATE Conference," Ryles and Clary declared, "include most of the outstanding student organizations in the country. This Conference will draw together student opinion already expressed by many of the sponsoring organizations concerning the great problems of financing education today and the role that the Federal Government should play. It is completely non-partisan," they stressed, "and both Young Democrats and Young Republicans have been invited to participate."

The Conference will begin on Thursday night, April 25, and continue through Friday night, April 26. The schedule will include three workshop sessions, addresses by prominent educators, Congressional leaders, and HEW officials. Student attending will also be given a chance to visit with their Senators and Congressmen and express their views on Federal Aid to Education and other issues of concern to them as students.

Bowles Talk Scheduled

Chester Bowles, U. S. Ambassador-designate to India and current Special Assistant to the President, will speak in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Monday, April 29, under the auspices of the Carolina Forum.

A former Democratic Governor of Connecticut and member of the House of Representatives, Bowles served a previous term as U. S. Indian Ambassador in the early 1950's.

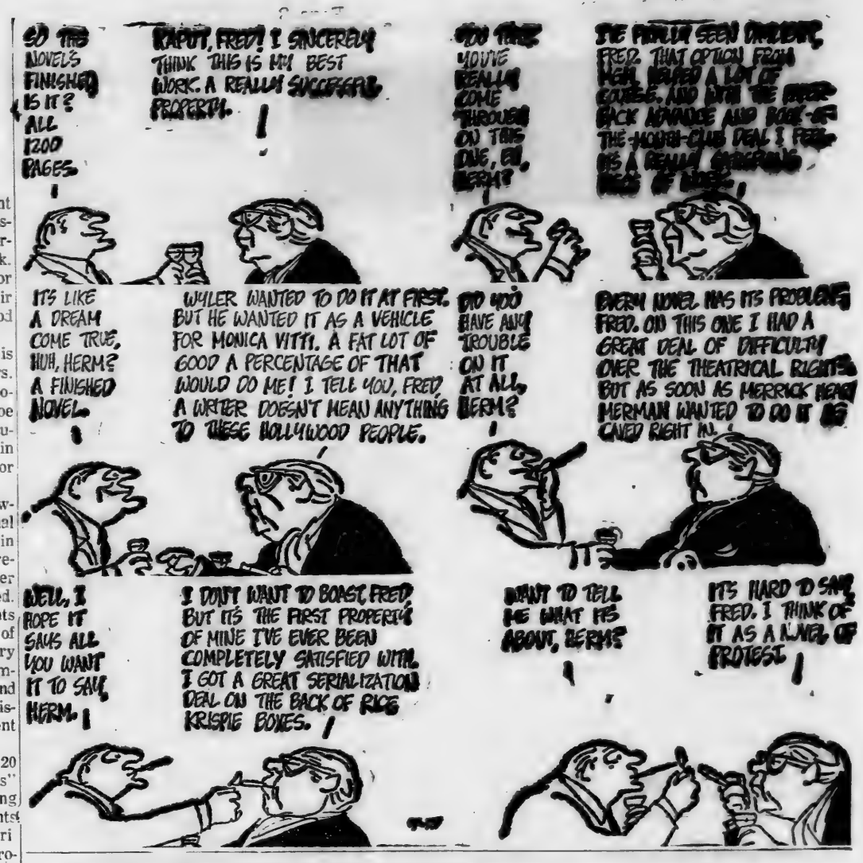
He was chairman of the 1960 Democratic Convention Platform Committee and is a noted writer and lecturer on American political theory.

Grant Will Encourage Ph.D. Work

A new kind of experimental grant has been awarded to the University of North Carolina by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The grant is to encourage superior graduate students to achieve their Ph.D. degrees in a minimal period of time.

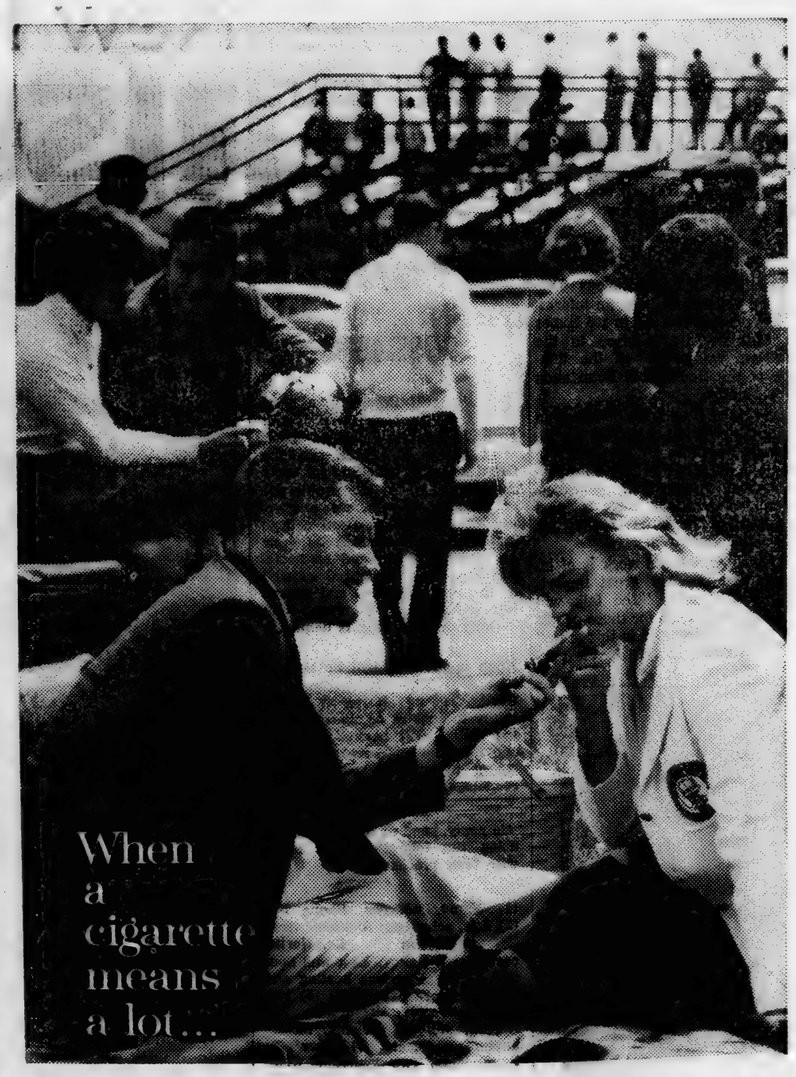
The amount of the award is $180,000 for a period of five years. This award will provide for so-called "incentive fellowships" to be awarded to UNC graduate students. The fellowships will be in the amount of $2,400 per year for for three years.

A portion of each year's fellowship stipend will be conditional upon the fulfillment of certain steps, such as foreign language requirements, by a given date, after which the sum would be forfeited.



Foreign language requirements must be completed by the end of the first year; the preliminary oral examination must be completed by the end of the second year; and completion of the dissertation will be the requirement for the third year.

The University will award 20 Carnegie "incentive fellowships" this year, five to students entering the University, and 15 to students already in residence and at various stages of their degree program. The fellowships will be awarded to students in any UNC departments offering the Ph.D. degree.



The new program will be administered by a committee of the UNC Graduate School of which Graduate School Dean Hugh Holman is the chairman.

"The Graduate School regards this grant from the Carnegie Corporation as not only an opportunity to help some of the best graduate students to complete their doctoral program but also as a serious and important experiment in the use of awards as incentives in graduate study," said Dean Holman.

The recipients of the first Carnegie "incentive fellowships" will be announced toward the end of the month.

Same Story Again-- But 26 Years Later

The following editorial appeared in the Daily Tar Heel on March 31, 1937.

True, the coeds have their Woman's Association with their own little set of officers to compare with our Student Council, but in the matter of regular University classes they — over one-tenth our total enrollment — are included unconditionally with the men students.

They are serving on men activities, men executive committees, they are members of the men junior and senior classes. Their bid now for representation on the roster of the class officers is entirely justified, in the light of their number and in the light of our progress toward a normal campus situation, coed and eds working together, unsegregated.—DAILY TAR HEEL EDITORIAL: March 31, 1937

Gladys Allison To Be Guest Editor For 'Mademoiselle'

Gladys Allison, UNC class of 1964, has been named a Guest Editor of Mademoiselle magazine. She is one of twenty winners of the magazine's annual College Board Competition. The winners were selected from more than 1,000 undergraduate members of Mademoiselle's College Board at colleges and universities across the country.

As a Guest Editor, she will be brought to New York for the month of June to work on August, 1963, Mademoiselle and to be photographed for the issue. She will receive round-trip transportation to New York and will be paid a salary for the month she spends with the magazine.

Each Guest Editor is assigned to a staff position best suited to her individual interests and aptitudes and will work directly with one of the magazine's regular editors. As well as helping to edit the August College issue, these young publishing executives will interview well-known artists, writers, and designers, and will visit advertising agencies, publishing houses, and the fashion market. They will also be introduced in Mademoiselle's College fashion show for 2,000 retail executives and will be entertained at parties in their honor.

The Guest Editors won their appointments on the basis of entries submitted during the school year that showed their aptitude for magazine work. These entries ranged from reports on campus fashions, classroom studies, and extra curricular activities, to samples of magazine illustration, layout, merchandising, and promotional planning.

Other young college women who wish to compete for the honor of being future Guest Editors for Mademoiselle will find information about next year's College Board Competition in the June and August issues or, they can write to the magazine.

10 Entered In Beauty Race Here

Ten hopefuls will seek the title of Miss Orange County Friday evening, May 3, at the first annual county-wide beauty pageant to be staged here.

The Jaycee-sponsored event, local elimination for the annual Miss America selection, is successor to the Miss Chapel Hill competition held for the previous 12 years. Entrants had been limited to Chapel Hill residents and University coeds. This year they represent every section of the County.

Master of ceremonies will be Ty Boyd of Station WBT in Charlotte, former local radio and television personality. The Jim Crisp combo will play.

Winner of the title will be provided $250 as a college scholarship, a wardrobe for the Miss North Carolina pageant in Greensboro next summer, and an official Miss America preliminary trophy. The two runners-up and the entrant chosen "Miss Congenialty" by the other entrants will also be given official trophies.

Tickets to the pageant are on sale in downtown stores and through Chapel Hill Jaycees members.

The Women's Page has a weekly deadline at 5:00 Tuesday afternoon. Any announcements and stories that appear before this deadline will be printed in the Thursday edition.

Students Express Opinions On Apartment Rule

By DONA FAGG

In the aftermath the controversy that reached a peak during elections still rages. The "apartment rule" has not only separated the men from the women but also the Dean of Women's office from the Women's Residence Council.

The rule as recently altered has deleted the "two couple" clause from the rule for all but freshmen women which reads:

"Women students may visit in men's apartments or trailers only if there are a minimum of 2 couples present."

Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael hastened to correct the impression that the rule as stated in the 1962-63 handbook was voided by the WRC's action. The question is: where does the power lie? This question is yet to be answered, but investigation into the validity of the rule change has revealed varying opinions.

One coed vehemently stated, "I believe in student rights. For people to demonstrate their responsibility they must be trusted. Twenty-one year old students either have morals or they don't. The rules aren't going to make that much difference."

A junior who lives in an apartment off campus disagreed. "I think this whole mess is a farce," she said. "People make such a big deal out of something so small. Taking away the apartment rule is holding up the apple of temptation to young couples who are going to experiment anyway."

A sophomore coed said, "A lot of people think a girl lowers herself when she enters a man's apartment. That's just ridiculous. What if your date says, 'Just a minute. Come in with me while I get my jacket.' Are you supposed to say, 'No, no, with the apartment rule there must be 2 couples present.'?"

"I think it's up to the girl to chose with discretion what man's apartment she goes into," said a senior girl.

"Dean Carmichael is right!" was another junior male's opinion. "What the parents think is important. They don't like to think that their daughters are running wild all over Chapel Hill."

Agreement with this view was expressed by a junior coed. "The apartment rule," she said, "is one of the last rules that Carolina has and it should be maintained. However, I don't think a rule is going to make that much difference in morals."

"We're old enough to make some decisions on our own," said another woman. "I'm glad for the WRC's stand on the change."

"I can see that the rule would be good for freshmen girls and maybe for first semester junior transfers," said a sophomore, "but for the rest of us—no!"

"There are some really ridiculous situations that can arise with the apartment rule. What about eating dinner in a fraternity house and being the only girl present? Are the other 29 boys sufficient chaperones?" queried one girl.

"What about the apartment rule?" asked one male senior. "I didn't know that it was enforced. I live off-campus and from all I know it's not enforced."

A woman graduate student living in a dormitory said, "I never knew they had an apartment rule."

"The apartment rule? I feel that we ought to have more apartments and less rules!" quipped a senior.

Perhaps the discussion surrounding the rule is a passing phase in the rule's evolution. In early rule books 1926-27, the rule as stated leads one to believe that the Roaring Twenties didn't roar so loudly on the Carolina campus.

"Riding with men in automobiles after 8 p.m.," for example, was only permitted with a chaperone.

In 1930 a woman student could only visit a man's apartment with a chaperone approved by the Advisor to Women.

In 1945, visiting men's living quarters was permitted with the approval of the Dean of Women.

In 1946 there was a change so that coeds could attend organize parties in apartments and other off campus living quarters.

By 1953 a three couple clause was put into the apartment rule. The rule was altered to a six person minimum in 1955.

The present rule was put into effect in 1956.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

IT IS THE TIME of year again when the sovereign states of Florida and Arizona— and their included oases of Palm Beach and Apache Junction— thank God and Abner Doubleday for major league baseball.

They are all gone now, but in their wake the flashy rookies, the balloon-bellied coaches and managers and the profane pinch-hitting veterans have left upwards of $10,000,000 in the dusty vaults and eager arms of the smiling city fathers.

Not all, but certainly most of these sun-kissed communities thrive if not live off the strange, glamorous and solely American institution called spring training.

Yes, spring training is over now, but its memories live on— and on and on. And it happens every year.

Training A Bit Strenuous

A STAR PITCHER got caught sneaking into quarters at the crack of dawn. "I was just on my way to early Mass and I didn't want to disturb the fellows," he lied. The manager fined him when he offered to accompany him to church and the pitcher didn't know which way it was.

A rookie "phenom" was hailed as "another DiMaggio" until they began throwing curves when he suddenly became another gas station attendant.

"Every job on this club is wide open," a manager said and it'll be true. By July, his job will be open.

A $30,000 bonus pitcher got a bad case of wildness and confessed to the front office that he can't pitch before crowds. They tried to swing a trade with Washington, where they don't use turnstiles, they just take roll call.

Casey Stengel held a two-hour press conference and only got as far as 1915 before it was time to break up.

A utility infielder who leads the team only in steaks and girls had his whole summer ruined when an injury to a regular meant he couldn't nap in the dugout every night any more.

Veterans, Kids Live It Up

DON DRYSDALE FINALLY got to pitch that game they were saving him for in last year's playoff and he won it, justifying the manager's judgment.

The kid everybody said "can't miss" did. Albie Pearson got turned away at an adult movie.

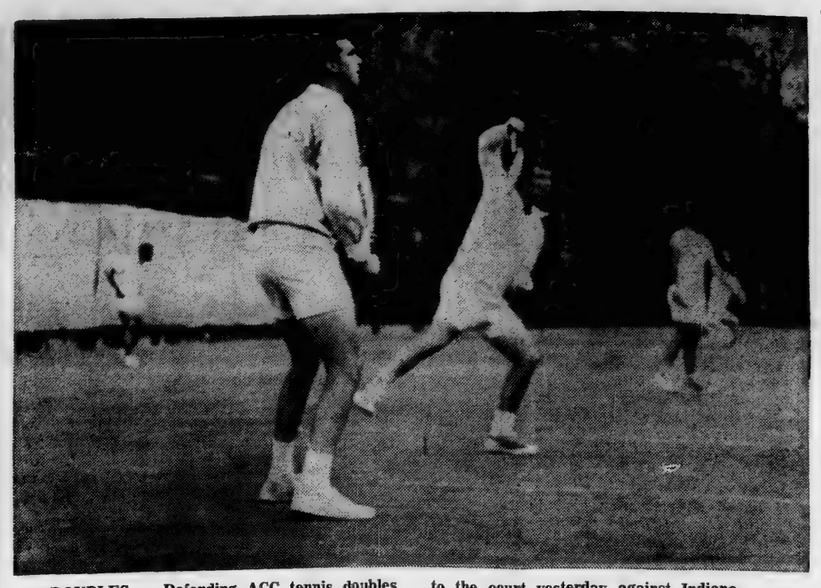
Ralph Houk told the press, "There's four or five teams that could win in our league," and he didn't fall down laughing till after they left.

Al Lopez told the press, "The Yankees can be had. We have a good chance this year," and they didn't fall down laughing till after HE left.

A relief catcher, zero for 32 in intrasquad games, finally got a hit— on a cop's chin at four o'clock in the morning. The manager calmly announced, "I have every faith in him," then quietly phoned every bar in town and said, "Serve him one more time and I'll put your joint off limits for good."



Talk Sometimes Misleading

"THERE'S NO DISSENSION on this club," the press agent insisted, but the cocky young second baseman trying to take away the popular old pro's job thought he was tagging broken bottles when the regulars started to hit the dirt against him.

When a release said the old-timers were cheerfully working on youngsters' weaknesses, it meant their weakness for filling inside straights, over-bidding or not checkin the dice.

But not all the proclamations were false, and some ball clubs went North with a few polished gems. It is now agreed that the names of Davalillo, Martinez, Ward; of Harper, Oliver and Bailey will, in time, become household words.

They better. As for the Pirates' Bailey, the guy must be good because you don't give a kid 175 Grand for signing his name to a piece of paper unless he's got more than just a matinee idol's face.

Netters Bounce Back After Loss At Miami

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina's Tar Heel netters returned to their winning ways yesterday as they defeated Indiana, 7-2, on the Varsity Courts.

The win marked the first for Coach Don Skakle's crew since their loss at Miami last Saturday. The Tar Heels' record for the season stands now at 9-1.

Indiana came to Chapel Hill with a perfect 8-0 mark, but the Hoosiers left with their first setback of the year.

George Sokol, Charlie Shaffer, Bitsy Harrison, O. H. Parrish and Keith Stoneman all won impressively in the single matches. Ted Hoehn, Carolina's number three man still recovering from his pre-vacation operation, was the only Tar Heel to suffer defeat.

For all practical purposes, the match was over before the doubles got under way. Sokol defeated Rod McNerney 6-4, 6-0 and Shaffer, the Tar Heels' No. two netter, stopped Gary Baxter by 7-5 and 6-4. Sokol and McNerney played excellent tennis, each having a turn at making fantastic shots. But once past the first set, Sokol had little trouble finishing off the visitor.

Shaffer, big service and all, finally subdued Baxter—but not without a tremendous effort.

Parrish, the No. five man, made the best comeback of the day. He lost the first set 3-6 to the Hoosiers' Jim Binkley and was behind 2-5 in the second set at match point. But Parrish rallied brilliantly to win the set and eventually the match.

Big Four To Stage Mural Sports Day

Top intramural participants from UNC, Duke, State and Wake Forest will take part in the 17th annual Big Four Sports Day at Duke April 30.

UNC will be shooting for its seventh title since the event was organized in 1947. State has won five times, Duke twice and Wake once.

Last year State won over UNC 32-26. Wake was third with 21, Duke fourth at 20. Scoring was on a 5-3-2-1 basis according to finishes in each of the nine events.

Both State and Carolina won three events but fourth place finishes in golf, softball and volleyball ruined the Tar Heels's chances for the title.

For UNC this year "organization men" have been assigned to each of the events to see that Carolina's participants are fully organized.

Golf, Win Bilisoly, needs experienced players.

Handball, Means Davis, needs experienced players. One wall instead of three wall handball will be played.

Horseshoes, Mike Traynor, needs experienced players.

Table tennis, Larry Edwards, all set.

Tennis, Sam Applegate, all set.

Volleyball, Gene Barrier, all set.

Badminton, Jack Rugheimer, all set.

Bowling, Joe Garner, needs experienced bowlers.

A practice day for all participants has been set for Tuesday, April 23. Softball and tennis will practice at 4 p.m. All other activities will practice at 7:30.

LACROSSE

Coach Connie Steele's stickmen have defeated Randolph-Macon 15-4 while towing to Amherstin a tense 10-7 overtime struggle so far this year. Amherst routed Duke 14-4.

Kruer, Wright Add Big Bats As Heels Win Four Straight

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Coach Walt Rabb took his baseball team to Georgia for the spring holidays, searching for happier hunting grounds. Successive wallopings by Duke and Wake Forest had dropped UNC into the ACC cellar, run production was approaching a minimum, and something had to be done.

Something was done. Rabb's diamond crew not only picked up four wins out of the five games, but they "discovered" a catcher and a third baseman in the process.

The backstop is Merle Kruer, a lefthand-hitting soph from Louisville, Ky., and the third sacker is Tom Wright, a righty swinger from Shelby.

Kruer hit at a .467 clip on the trip and is now given the nod over light-hitting Bernie Leggett behind the plate. Starting for the first time in the game with Mercer, Kruer responded with a double and two singles. In the next game, against Georgia, he slammed out a homer and two singles.

Wright, a junior, pounded the ball for a .409 average. His big day came against Georgia Tech, when he rapped out four safeties including a game-tying homer in the eighth. Carolina went on to win this one in 13 innings, 6-3, behid the sharp relief work of Bobby Cox and Bill Haywood.

Wright socked another round-tripper in the finale, an 11-0 rout of Furman. Haywood went all the way in this one, scattering nine singles while collecting two himself.

The trip started on a sour note, a 4-2 loss to Georgia Southern. Haywood handcuffed the hosts for seven innings, only to have them errupt for four tallies in the eighth.

Rabb's men pulled themselves together after this heartbreaker, their third straight setback, and reeled off four wins of their own. First came the 13-inning struggle with Tech, followed by a 9-5 win over Mercer. Next, Jim Speight and Kruer put their bats to work against Georgia, 10-6. And finally, the shut-out romp over Furman.

UNC now stands 9-4 overall, 0-2 in the ACC. The Tar Heels leave by bus this afternoon for weekend games at South Carolina (Friday) and Clemson (Saturday).

Novelist Knowles Accepts Invitation For Residence

Author John Knowles has accepted UNC's invitation to be its first formal Writer - In - Residence, but the proram is not yet completed, Gil Stallings reported yesterday.

Stallings, chairman of the campus committee which has been investigating the possibility of a Writer-In-Residence program here since last fall, noted that he had received a letter from Knowles this week accepting Carolina's offer. He added, however, that no formal contract has been drawn up or mailed out and therefore the program is not yet final. He continued that he expected all plans to be completed within the next few weeks.

George Harper, chairman of the English department, said yesterday that the contract must be approved by the University Board of Trustees before it can be sent to Knowles.

Knowles has written two novels, "A Separate Peace," published in 1958, and "Morning at Antibes," which was released last summer.

An informal committee of students and faculty has been working since last fall to establish a writer-in-residence program. The program has received wholehearted encouragement from the University Board of Trustees, a favorable resolution from Student Legislature, the blessings of academic departments concerned with the teaching of writing, and most important, full financial support of the project from Chancellor William B. Aycock.

As the proposal has evolved over a period of months, it will be something very different from the normal writer's residency which has become a fixture at colleges all over the land, and promises to be a boon both to students and the writer himself.

The idea of importing a writer to live in a university or college community is nothing new. Woman's College at Greensboro has had a succession of authors and poets, the most notable of whom, Randall Jarrell, still teaches there.

At various times Peter Taylor and Mary Lee Settle have augmented him, and Robert Watson, rising young poet, now teaches English there. Duke University presently has novelist Reynolds Price on its English faculty; East Carolina employs Ovid Williams Pierce and Mac Hyman; Elon College imports Manly Wade Wellman to teach a course. Chapel Hill has now and has had publishing authors on the rolls to teach writing, but none of these will have enjoyed the informality and freedom being indicated for UNC's first formal writer-in-residence.

May Lecture

He may be called upon to give one or two open lectures during the time he is here, a few talks to classes, but he will teach no creative writing courses as such. The bulk of his time will go toward talking with students who want to write, or are in the process of learning. He will be attached loosely to one of the departments which offer writing courses—English, Dramatic Arts, or Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

His salary will come directly from Chancellor Aycock, and his schedule, such as it is, will be regulated by a student-faculty committee which will screen requests for his services and consult with him on what he needs in the way of time to pursue his own writing.

One significant difference between the proposed UNC setup and similar programs at other institutions is that a maximum freedom to write will be permitted the author.

Another is that the idea for the project was student-originated, and that students have purchased it assiduously to its apparent success. The idea first cropped up in a student government election campaign several years ago as one of the major planks in the Student Party platform of 1962.

Not much came of the original proposal until last fall, when Mike Lawler sponsored a resolution adopted by the Student Legislature. At that time, money for the program was expected to come from student funds, and for that reason alone might have died aborning.

As it happened, Stallings, thin intent young man and former president of the YMCA, decided on a bit of personal diplomacy.

Plan Gained Easy Approval

Pushing the plan before the the Board of Visitors' Visiting Committee last November, he and his committee found warm approval. From Chancellor Aycock came the offer to pay for the program out of his discretionary fund, provided there was evidence of student interest. From various members of

134 Viet Cong Men Reported Killed

SIAGON, Viet Nam (UPI)—South Vietnamese soldiers caught a band of marauding Viet Cong guerrillas in Quant Ngai Province and killed 134 of them, an American military spokesman said Thursday.

Another 11 were captured and the government forces sized a number of carbines, submachine guns, rifles, pistols and mines.

The spokesman said Vietnamese forces suffered 19 killed and 43 wounded and lost some weapons themselves.

Red Troops Advance

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI)—Pro-Comunist troops advancing in central Laos in defiance of a cease-fire accord, battled besieged neutralist forces at the strategic base of Phone Savan Thursday and Premier Souvanna Phouma said the situation was "grave."

Phone Savan is the spot where the premier met with Gen. Kong Le, commander of Laotian neutralist forces, and the commander of the rival pro-Communist Pathet Lao, Gen. Singkapo, last Sunday to reach a shaky cease-fire that was promptly violated by leftist troops.

Protests Continue

BIRMINGHAM, Ala (UPI) Negoes protesting segregation focused their attention on lunch counters again Thursday the voter registration office was closed.

The voter drive—lastest phase of the local desegreration effort—was started Wednesday and 16 Negroes were immediately arrested when they attempted to march en masse to the county courthouse to register. No additional marches were attempted Thursday since registrar's office is open only Monday through Wednesday.

Instead, the Negroes attempted a new round of lunch counter sitins—a form of protest that has resulted in the arrest of over 300 demonstrators since Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta kicked off the current desegregation drive 16 days ago. King has been jailed for participating in one of the demonstrations.

Trouble Revealed

PORSTMOUTH, N. H. (UPI) — A veteran submarine officer who missed the USS Thresher's last cruise told a Navy court of inquiry Thursday the vessel had continuous trouble with the vital high pressure air system used for surfacing.

Lt. j.g. Raymond J. McCoole, 33, who was not aboard the Thresher only because his wife had a minor home accident and he was granted a temporary leave, also testified about numerous other mechanical malfunctions aboard the submarine.

Durham Hall Denied To Malcolm X

By WAYNE KING
Managing Editor

Black Muslim leader Malcolm X yesterday predicted that "the wrath of God would be called down upon the city of Durham for withholding the truth from the Negro people."

The articulate disciple of Elizah Muhammad's "Lost-Found Nation of Islam in North America" made the statement when Durham recreation officials refused to allow him to speak in a city recreation hall.

In a telephone interview with the DTH, the polite and personable Muslim minister quoted passages from the Bible in support of his contention that "the same God Who chastized the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah would chastize the city of Durham."

Malcolm X will speak at Carolina tonight at 8, probably in Carroll Hall, in debate with Floyd McKissick, Durham attorney.

He said he would "speak in the streets if necessary," and at press time planned to hold forth in open air in front of the Hill Recreation hall in Durham, where the meeting was originally planned.

Durham City Manager Harding Hughes said he "fully supported the action of the City Recreation Department in denying use of a community recreation center by the Black Muslims."

Hughes said his information was that the Black Muslims "are strongly opposed by the vast majority of responsible Negro leadership in America."

He added that "the Black Muslims are a violently segregationist group promoting a goal of racial supremacy for blacks over whites."

For this reason he said the City of Durham would not allow them to use a community recreation center as their forum.

Malcolm X charged that the action was taken against his appearance because "they don't want me telling the truth to Negroes."

In Columbia, S. C., yesterday the Muslim leader called down "all the disease and disaster in the world" on the heads of "white and Negro 'Uncle Toms,' the press" and some Negro leadership.

In that city, the virulent Muslim minister also put a hex on the State Law Enforcement Division.

Asked by the DTH if the God he referred to as bringing destruction to the city of Durham was the God of the Christian Bible, the sleek Muslim minister replied that it was.

"You call him God, we call him Allah," he said. "Other religions and other peoples in other parts of the world call him by other names. He is the same one that

Panel Rakes Spending Of New Frontier

Republicans Blast Liberal Policy

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Three Republican Congressmen visited the UNC Campus yesterday, "sounding the alarm" to the "ordeal of the New Frontier."

Sponsored by the UNC Young Republican Club, the Congressmen spoke in Gerrard Hall on the 188th anniversary of the famous ride of Paul Revere.

Representatives John Anderson, Ill., Robert Dole, Kan., and Sherman Lloyd, Utah, are making a two and one-half day tour of the state, on the Easter recess of Congress.

At a press conference before their talk, the Congressmen called the Kennedy Administration the "spendingest ever." Anderson said that they were "less than frank and candid in some cases," and pointed out the Cuban crisis as the most blatant example .

When asked about the chances for New York Governor Nelson Rockefeller's chances for the nomination in 1964, Rep. Anderson replied, "At a breakfast in Washington last week, the Governor said that he didn't care one way or another about the nomination. A similar breakfast is planned for Senator Barry Goldwater on May 15, according to Congressman Dole, the chairman of the breakfast committee."

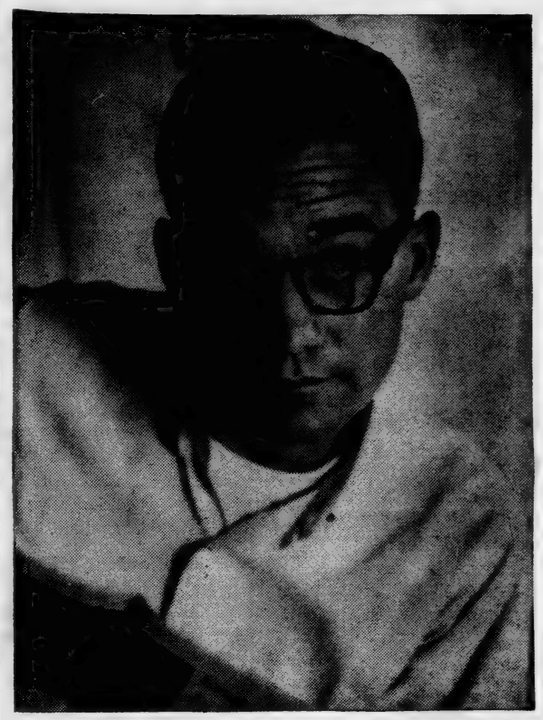
The Illinois representative stated that the present Congress was "slow to organize, due to a lack of leadership by the Administration."

Each Congressman spoke for about ten minutes in Gerrard Hall, followed by a question and answer period.

Anderson, the chairman of the panel, claimed a "real future for the Republican Party in the South. There is also a need for the Republicans to state their case to the nation, as we are trying to do with this series of talks."

He called down the administration in "twisting the right to lie in the event of possible nuclear disaster, to lying for political reasons."

The administration's proposed Youth Conservation Corps was also a target for Republican ammunition. "The administration proposal is a relic of the past," declared Anderson. "It would place a conservation program under the Secretry of Labor, where it does not belong, and it would fail miserably to equip young men with modern skills. The . . . proposal is wasteful, preponderous, misdirected, and excessively costly."



Dole commented on the agricultural program of Secretary Orville Freeman, and the drop of gold reserves in the past few years.

"We have $24 billion public debt more than all other nations of the world combined."

Lloyd, a freshman congressman from Utah, said that the "new frontiermen are spenders and taxers." He called their programs "a black jungle with no chartered course. They are creating an insatiable hunger for Federal handouts."

Lloyd said afterward that his impressions of Congress have changed in the three months he has served. "There is much greater talent and ability and integrity than I had been led to believe. It is a much faster league than I knew in the Utah state legislature. I am extremely impressed with the hard working men in the Congress."

Motion To Rename N. C. State Killed

By MICKEY BLACKWELL
DTH Staff Reporter

RALEIGH—North Carolina's higher education package bill received unanimous approval in its second stage reading yesterday, but only after a proposed amendment involved a new name for N. C. State College was defeated 34-12.

The amendment, introduced by Sen. Leroy Simmons of Duplin Co., would have renamed N. C. State College, "North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina."

A long and bitter emotional bebate preceded the final vote on the amendment. Advocates of the amendment, including Senators Henry Shelton of Edgcomb, W. D. James of Richmond and Simmons said the proposed new name for State College, "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh," was the worst combination of words and punctuation ever hung round an institution in lieu of a name.

"I can change my name, you can change yours, but if I go ahead and change your name, you're going to raise sand about it," Shelton said.

Sen. Ralph Scott of Alamance Co. "representing the rougher elements on the Higher Education Committee" opposed the amendment saying there could be only one greater University and not a University within a University such as Simmons proposed.

Scott said his committee was desired "to achieve full University status" for N. C. State and in turn to "award liberal arts degrees."

The bill will be read for a third and final time today, and most Senators agree that this will be simply a routine matter and passage is virtually assured.

After Senate action today, the bill will be sent to the House where it is tentatively set for its first reading Tuesday. Originally many people thought the House would present another version of the measure or might try to water down the Senate's; but one Senator said he understood the House bill was "almost identical" to the Senate's.

"The House bill is right in line with ours," the Senator said. He said today's vote on the education bill would pass without any trouble and he indicated there would be no major obstacles in the House.

Sen. Robert Lee Humber, sponsor would make the Consolidated University the primary educational state institution authorized to award the doctor's degree. It further states that North Carolina shall have only one greater University.

The second point of the bill boosts Charlotte, Wilmington and Asheville junior colleges to full four-year colleges. There is also a provision for any of these institutions to become a part of the greater University at a later date.

The third point of the bill establishes the framework for a statewide system of comprehensive community colleges. These colleges would be established under the State Board of Education rather than the Board of Higher Education as they are now.

Humber said this bill includes almost all the recommendations from the Carlyle Commission, which spent most of last year studying ways to revamp North Carolina's educational system.

Seawell To Judge Mock Libel Trial

By HUGH STEVENS

The UNC Law School anounced yesterday that the jury for the Ethridge-Phelps libel trial will be selected this afternoon. All persons interested in serving as jurors are urged to be at 204 Manning Hall at 1:30 p.m. for interviews.

The trial will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in the Law School Courtroom, with former N. C. Attorney General Malcolm Seawell on the bench.

Larry Phelps, president of the UNC Progressive Labor Club, has brought suit against the Daily Tar Heel editor, charging libel in an April 12 DTH editorial. In the suit, Phelps charged that Tar Heel editor Dave Ethridge labeled him a "communist" and then refused to print an apology or retraction.

Ethridge has contended that the information printed about Phelps was neither false or damaging to Phelps. In a statement to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday, he said "I wrote the editorial in order to provide a basis on which every student could rationally judge Phelps and his dangerous communist philosophy. I refuse to retract the statement that I thought it was the editor's duty to inform the students of the danger Larry Phelps poses to this campus."

Phelps yesterday replied to the Daily Tar Heel's claim that it printed only the truth in the editorial. "I would like to know," Phelps said, "when the Tar Heel began to interpret the truth as mudslinging and maligning the character of students."

DTH managing editor Wayne King stated yesterday that "Phelps wouldn't know the truth if it bit him on the leg."

Attorneys for the defense in tonight's trial will be Charley Katzenstien, Marshall Woodall, and Cary Whitaker. Representing the plaintiff will be Joe Roberts and Joe Friedberg.

The tral will be open to the public.

The following chairmanships are open: Co-op; Communications; Orientation; Academic Affairs; University Abroad; Orientation Reform; National Merit Scholarship; International Students' Board; Consolidated University Student Council; State Affairs; Honor System Commission; Elections Board; Student Credit Commission and Editors' Roundtable (for dorm newspaper editors).

Those studnts interested in being interviewed should visit SG offices in GM either Tuesday or Wednesday, from 1-3:30 p.m., or Wednesday and Friday, from 2:3:30 p.m., Dick Ellis reported yesterday.

Classic Bill Comes Before Senate Today

RALEIGH—A resolution urging Consolidated University President William Friday and N. C. State College Chancellor John Caldwell "to give serious consideration to the reinstatement of the annual Dixie Classic basketball tournament" will be presented on the floor of the Senate today.

One week ago yesterday the House passed a similar but completely separate resolution asking Friday and Caldwell to study the desirability and feasibility of reinstating the Dixie Classic and after doing so to report their finding back to the House.

The House resolution was introduced by Rep. Sam Whitehurst of Craven County, a State College graduate, a trustee of the Consoli-

Council To Uphold WRC Rule Change

By MIKE PUTZEL
Asst. Managing Editor

Women's Council Chairman Bev Haynes yesterday issued a statement to the Dean of Women's Office saying that the council would uphold the WRC's rule change of March 19, abolishing the Apartment Rule for all women students except freshmen.

Miss Haynes said she issued the statement in response to a "request for clarification" by the dean's office. The statement says that the Women's Council enforces the rules set up by the Women's Residence Council and that it recognizes the rules as changed by the WRC.

The WRC, on March 19, changed the Apartment Rule, which said that no woman student may enter a man's apartment or trailer unless a minimum of two couples are present, to read that the rule will apply only to freshmen.

Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael stated after the original rule change that she did not recognize it, because no rules could be changed in the middle of the year. However, according to Miss Haynes' statement, the Women's Council will not try any Apartment Rule cases. This would mean, in effect, that if Dean Carmichael plans to enforce the old rule, she will have to do it administratively without the aid of the student judiciary. She was not available for comment.

"The Women's Council is authorized to have original jurisdiction in disciplinary matters involving women students. The Council is obligated to enforce the rules which are legislated by the Women's Residence Council.

"The Women's Council is, at present, enforcing the rules as passed by the Women's Residence Council on March 19, 1963.

"We believe that the action taken by the Women's Residence Council was in keeping with the established precedent and consistent with the principles of justice.

"Therefore, pending further action, the Women's Council will continue to maintain its jurisdiction over conduct of the women students of the University of North Carolnai as prescribed by the Women's Residence Council."

GM To Salute Spring With Jubilee

3 Singing Groups, 5 Combo Parties To Feature Campus Weekend

By VANCE BARRON

Graham Memorial Activities Board is planning a "salute to spring," an all-campus weekend that will feature three singing groups, two jazz bands, the UNC Men's Glee Club and five combo parties. The dates for the jubilee are April 26-28.

The program will be called "Jubilee" and, according to Bob Reardon, chairman of GMAB, "it will be a weekend of top-flight, good entertainment for the campus that will be free to all Carolina students and their dates."

Heading the three-day program will be "The Four Preps." The quartet will appear at a lawn concert on Friday evening, April 26. "The Four Preps" are famous for such recordings as their million-selling "26 Miles" and "The Things We Did Last Summer." After the concert there will be a combo party on the lawn.

Rearden said yesterday that a special bandstand would be erected at the corner of Graham Memorial facing South Building. It is hoped, he said, that the structure will be available for use in future years for similiar programs. All lawn concerts during the weekend will take place there.

The program for Saturday, April 27, will begin with a lawn concert in front of GM at 2 p.m. Here "The Migrants," "The Duke Ambassadors," "The Harlequins," and the UNC Men's Glee Club will entertain the audience under the trees for three hours. "All you need is a blanket and a date," said Reardon.

"The Migrants" are a local folksingings group composed of Carolina students. The Duke Ambassadors nationally known for their brand of "big-band" jazz. The Harlequins, whose style is reminiscent of the four freshmen —although there are eight of them —hail from Duke also.

Also appearing will be the UNC Men's Glee Club.

That same evening there will be five combo parties at spots scattered over the campus. Groups such as "The Delmonicos," "The Catalinas" and "The Trojans" will be playing in front of GM, in the Planetarium parking lot, in the Steel Hall Parking lot, in Y-Court and in the paved lot by Ackland Museum.

On Sunday afternoon there will be special carillon concert at the Bell Tower by Jack Hill. At 2:30 "The Chad Mitchell Trio" will be featured at another lawn concert in front of Graham Memorial. The Trio is said to be "a highly musical group that combines the finest folksongs of the past with pungent musical comments on the world of today."

The weekend will conclude with a Petite Musicale presentation at 5:00 p.m. in the GM Lounge. Iain Hamilton, a Scottish pianist and composer who is a visiting professor of music at Duke University, will give a talk Sunday entitled "A Matter of Choice" supplemented with recordings of some of his own compositions.

In addition to these attractions two academy award-winning films will be shown as "Free Flicks." Elizabeth Taylor will be seen in the movie "Butterfield 8" in Carroll Hall at 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30 on Friday night.

Saturday night at 6:30 and 9:30, Yul Brynner will star in "The Buccaneers."

Sunday night Sophia Loren will be seen in the role which won her the academy award last year in the picture "Two Women" at 7:30 and 9:30.

In the event of rain all lawn concerts will be held in Memorial Hall.

Classic Resolution

After three months of legislative constipation, the North Carolina House of Representatives has passed the following gem:

"Resolution:

"WHEREAS, the annual Dixie Classic Basketball Tournament was for many years a major athletic tournament in this State; and

"WHEREAS, this tournament annually attracted many thousands to the campus of North Carolina State College; and

"WHEREAS, many citizens who did not otherwise have an opportunity to be spectators at basketball games played by State-supported institutions and teams from throughout the nation were by virtue of such annual tournament afforded an opportunity to visit the campus and see various basketball teams throughout the nation in action: and

"WHEREAS, the holding of such an annual tournament was recently discontinued; and

"WHEREAS, there has been a widespread interest on the part of the citizens of this State in the reinstatement of this tournament, which had achieved national recognition; and

"WHEREAS, the reinstatement of such annual tournament would serve a number of worthy purposes; and

"WHEREAS, the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina has given the President of the University and the Chancellor of North Carolina State College power, authority and control over the athletic programs of North Carolina State College; NOW, THEREFORE, Be it resolved by the House of Representatives:

"Section 1. The General Assembly requests the President of the University of North Carolina and the Chancellor of North Carolina State College to restudy the entire situation and give serious consideration to the feasibility and desirability of reinstating the annual basketball tournament know as the Dixie Classic, and report their findings to the North Carolina House of Representatives by May 10, 1963.

It is interesting to note that the report is due the 10th of May. This is before the appropriations bill for the University comes up in the legislature this year.

From the wording of the resolution, it is obvious what kind of report the representatives want. It looks like pure backmail if anything ever was.

In passing the resolution the representatives have overlooked several rather important factors.

First, the primary function of the Consolidated University is not to sponsor big athletic events, but to educate the some 19,000 students presently enrolled on its three campuses. This itself is quite a job.

Second, the Dixie Classic was killed for good and obvious reasons.

The return of big time basketball could only serve to re-spawn the conditions which caused its death in the first place. The reasons for killing the Classic are still valid arguments for keeping it dead.

Lastly, it occurs to us that the State House is a strange place for basketball. Control over the athletic programs of North Carolina State College was wisely left up to the President of the University and the Chancellor of State. The interest of the Consolidated University is best served by leaving that control where it is.

The representatives have obviously overstepped their bounds.

This resolution comes up before the Senate this morning. We can only hope that they are able to recognize the fact that the Dixie Classic is University business, and that it is much better off dead. The House was unable to, to their enduring discredit.

Mock Trial

Pi Alpha Delta Law fraternity is sponsoring a Mock Trial tonight at 7:45 in the Law School courtroom. Larry Phelps, head of the New Left Club on campus, has brought suit for libel against the Daily Tar Heel and its editors, claiming that an editorial in the paper falsely accused him of being an agent of Soviet Russia.

This trial has significant overtones considering the current trend to label all those with whom we disagree as pinkos, communist dupes, sympathizers and the like.

The trial will be neither an exercise in red-baiting nor a platform for the expression of Phelps' philosophy, and should prove of interest to all students.

The presence of Judge Malcolm Seawell, ex-State Attorney General, presiding over the mock trial will assure that it stays strictly within the bounds of legal procedure, and could teach us all some law.

Thieves Have Wrong Ideas Of Property

The Salisbury Evening Post

You can fill a hall easily in this country if the topic is combating communism.

Americans abhor communism as a doctrine and a system of life. Nevertheless, in a curious way a lot of this nation's citizenry seems to be drawn, consciously or unconsciously, to certain communal notions about property.

The flagrant thievery of the avowed criminal is one thing. Quite another is the taking of property which the taker, somehow, persuades himself is less than theft.

We have become great "borrowers," often glossing over the fact that the borrowing is done without that essential ingredient — permission of the lender.

For long years, many have convinced themselves that "souvenir collecting" justified lifting all kinds of objects from hotels, motels and similar establishments serving the public.

The new justification, evidently, is that these public establishments "can afford it." There is no feeling, it seems, that an individual is being robbed — only that some impersonal thing, a faceless management, is being "taken."

One of the worst signs of the "your property is mine" philosophy is the depletion of college and public libraries by theft. An eastern school reports it loses some 2,000 books a year this way, not to mention other losses through multilation (the party ruthlessly slices up a book to get those parts he wants.)

Here, plainly, the losers are all the honest students who need to use the books but cannot. The selfish thieves believe their private requirements are superior to the general need.

All of this, of course, adds to "something for nothing" and "the world owes me a living."

But hasn't this kind of comforting self-intoxication gone much too far? The "something" has to be taken from "somebody." The "world" turns out to be one or more persons.

Taking from them, whether it be an ash tray or a television set, is theievery. No amount of shiny paint can make it anything else.

Coed Dorm Gets Miami Trial

The Miami Hurricane

A recent decision by the administration has evoked endless amazement and debate. Plans have been announced for a coed dormitory during summer sessions and regulations proposed to handle this novel situation.

At the time of the announcement the committee working on this proposal had not reached any decisions but expressed the hope that restrictions might be limited to the bare necessities. This was enough to trigger a score of rumors and dreams.

The Committee on Coed Residence has now completed its study. The resulting report is extensive but a few excerpts will serve to dispel false rumors.

The Committee has decided to employ this opportunity to conduct an experiment in student self-discipline. No restrictions on student activity has or will be imposed by the administration, but a council composed of dormitory residents, male and female, will be formed to decide all matters concerning the operation of the building.

This plan is intended to develop the students' sense of respect for the rules which may eventually be set up by their classmates. The administration will deal with the student council as mature and responsible members of the academic community and will give them full control over their own activities.

No Women's Curfew

In fact, the Committee has gone so far as to draw up an extremely liberal code of conduct from which the counil might adopt certain points.

Curfew will be dropped for women as well as men. Rather than restrict students, the summer rules will ask that they sign out in the evening by indicating where they plan to go. This will be used only to account for students who are out unusually late, and those who do not desire to submit to this requirement will be excused.

Students expecting to remain out overnight will, likewise, be asked to provide a number at which they may be reached in case of emergency. This rule may be upheld more strictly to avoid legal complications but the number of a close friend or relative can be used.

Similarly, there will be no restrictions on dress, movement within the building or other activities. The Committee hopes that this will lead to positive programs such as a Bermuda Day or Muu-Muu Weekend. This freedom should not develop sloppiness or misconduct, but might lend itself to many interesting and enjoyable affairs, such as an informal barbeque, inter-floor breakfasts, midnight snack mixer, and sundeck parties.

The Committee on Coed Residence strongly has emphasized the experimental nature of this proposal and urges students engaged in the project to conduct themselves with discretion and maturity. The results of this summer will most certainly affect the university's plans for the future.

'Enough Of This Chit-Chat . . . We Have More Important Things To Discuss'

He's Not Pleasant To Hear, But Don't Ignore Malcolm

Malcolm X, the black Muslim leader who came to New Haven two evenings ago, deserves more than disdain or laughter. His message is not pleasing, but it is the understandable response of a people in anguish.

White America has perpetrated one of the most brutal rapes history knows upon its Negro citizens. To the Negro, the American dream is a preposterous lie.

The Negro did not come to this "land of opportunity" voluntarily. He was dragged from a culture grossly unlike the one he was to find in America. He made his transit under the horrible conditions of the slave trade, in which literally millions of Negroes died. In America he was forced into an abominably dehumanizing process, whose unique contribution to the institution of slavery was that it separated men on the basis of color. He was defined in the Constitution as only three-fifths of a man.

In time, the Negro was formally emancipated and his humanity recognized. Yet he found that his freedom was not really freedom. He was subjected to no less brutal forms of oppression. At almost every turn, American society was closed to him; it told him he was inferior. From the post Civil War period until World War I, approximately one Negro was lynched in this country every week.

A Step Closer

The New Deal brought the Negro a step closer to the American mainstream. His participation in World War I seemed to indicate that he deserved more from this country than he was receiving. The Supreme Court desegregation decision of 1954 along with the other decisions and successful protests which followed, have brought a new spirit of progress to the Negro's cause. Active support of civil rights has become customary and expected national policy. Yet there is little cause for contentment. These things which have been accomplished thus far are a mere drop in a very large bucket.

In most areas of the South, the Negro faces a society which is largely closed to him. He finds, among other inequities, that men are not always equal before the law. From the South, he comes, — uneducated, unprepared — to join the great ghettoized, maltreated and malcontent, urban Negro masses of the North and West. The openings usually do not come. Rather than run what seems to be a futile race, the Negro withdraws. He woefully lacks identity and pride in himself.

With this history and current set of circumstances, in mind, it should not be difficult for the white American to understand why many Negroes are listening to, and excited by, Malcolm X and the Muslims. He is giving them the pride, identity, and self-respect they need and deserve. Perhaps the most important factor is that the Muslims are working with the type of urban Negro whose existence has been almost totally untouched by the accomplishments of other civil rights groups, especially the great legal achievements of the NAACP.

Fighting With Hate

To the extent that the Muslims are a black supremist group, they are wrong. To fight racism and hate with racism and hate is to err miserably. But recently there has been a definite trend among the Muslims from supremism to separatism. Their newspaper Muhammad Speaks has been increasingly less anti-white and more pro-Negro. We do not fear the extreme racist-supremist side of the Muslims, because, as Miss Eleanor Holmes of the Law School recently told the NEWS, "The Negro is sold on America. He's convinced that he is ultimately going to be part of society, that he's going to be accepted."

The white American would do well to note the Negro's response to the message of Malcolm, and take it as indication of the collective guilt he must bear and the great strides that still must be taken before America can say it has fulfilled its promise to all men.

HUAC Is Not Justifying Existence

By JAMES TEASDALE
Oregon Daily Emerald

The idea of un-American, conspirational plots against the constitutional integrity of our government is a phenomenon that is rooted in our history and a product of the heterogeneous forces that have played upon American politics. The catalog of hate campaigns from the "No Knowings" and the Ku Klux Klan to the "red scares" of the 1920s testify to the solid tradition of Americans in upholding their patriotism against dissent groups within the society.

There are, however, conditions particularly conducive to the post Second World War era that have assisted the House Un-American Activities Committee with its popularity in the press and its longevity in the Congress. The increasing frustration and tension resulting from the diplomacy of the cold war, the revolution in China, war in Korea, and the domestic controversy that ensued after the discovery of Russian agents holding top posts in Washington led an anxious American public to accept the idea of a "Communist conspiracy." Communists became the favorite professional pastime of politicians on the make like Nixon and McCarthy. The McCarran Internal Security Act of 1950 was mainly the result of this public feeling.

THAT, HOWEVER, was nearly 14 years ago and times have changed; the heyday of the "Communist conspiracy" and the dramatic expose have long since past. Yet HUAC remains, the anachonistic remainder of a frightened America. Every two years HUAC comes before the Congress and obtains unjustified sums of money to continue its investigations. But what in fact does HUAC investigate? Does HUAC perform the public service it is given credit for?

I would contend that in point of fact HUAC has no substantive or legislative function to perform. That its basic assumption of a widespread and dangerous threat to our government from the Communist Party within our boundaries does not exist. It is a myth; a perpetrated distortion of the facts. The American Communist party has about as much political efficacy as an anti-Castro movement in Cuba or an anti-Kennedy group in Massachusetts. A recent article from "The Nation" written by a former agent of the FBI indicates that the Party has declined to about 8500 members, and about a fifth of that number are FBI informers!

MYTHS, HOWEVER, are potent forces on the public mind, not easily dispelled. But as a permanent committee of Congress, as an investigating body mandated to interpret "un-American propaganda," the most visible threat the Committee poses is in the precedents it has set in its matter of operation. It should be noted that congressional committees are formed primarily to investigate the need for new or reformed legislation.

When we review HUAC's legislative accomplishments, the justification for its yearly appropriations seem somewhat shaky. In its 18-year history as a permanent committee, it has processed but one law, the Internal Security act of 1950: and the constitutionality of this law has yet to be decided. Of the total number of bills referred to committees from 1951 to 1960, out of 41,776 HUAC was responsible for only 31; it has handled only about one-sixth of the anti-subversive bills before Congress.

However, the most striking and significant precedent of the Committee has been its infringements on the Anglo-American traditions of justice. Throughout all of its investigations the committee has demonstrated a common contempt for impartiality. In effect, the Committee has formed an extra-legal court, usurping the right of unbiased judge and jury, and right of council, favorable witnesses and cross examination. The individual brought before the Committee is placed instead in the "court of public opinfon." As a result of the emphasis on exposure, rather than investigating, publicity and dramatic statements, rather than impartiality, innocent people have suffered.

AT ONE point in his famous speech, "The Dragon Slayers," James Roosevelt stated, ". . . despite the existence of the police and prosecuting agencies of the United States and their effectiveness, the Committee has undertaken to constitute itself as a roving police force and prosecuting

Yesterday's Answer

Y-Group Plans For Freshmen

By HUGH STEVENS

Bruce Cooper, YMCA President, announced yesterday that a new committee has been formed to define and plan a comprehensive freshman program for next year that will be concerned chiefly with enabling entering students to make an easier and more productive adjustment to college life.

Marshall Bellovin, a sophomore from Lynbrook, N. Y., has been chosen to head the program.

"This program represents an important step in continuing the work of the orientation program," Bellovin said. "It will give freshmen an early opportunity to do constructive work in management of their own class operations."

Some possible facets of the program include a tutoring service, a freshman social program under YMCA sponsorship, and a "course book" containing a list and evaluation of many general college courses. A continuation of the present Freshman Forum is also planned.

Interviews for the committee will be held Monday through Wednesday of next week from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Those interested, both male and female, should come by Tom Davis' office in the YMCA building.

chastized Sodom and Gomorrah."

McKissick, the first Negro to gain entrance to UNC, was to debate the Muslim leader on which path the Negro should follow to gain his rights, integration or separation.

McKissick had said earlier that he would attempt to show that integration groups—notably the NAACP and CORE — had been and would continue to elevate the Negro's position through a formula of integration.

Recruiting

The following companies will recruit on campus next week:

the faculty came advice and suggestions, and the committee began looking for a writer.

An initial invitation to novelist John Updike, author of "Rabbit Run" and the more recent "The Centaur," was declined regretfully, and the search led elsewhere.

From the list, a culling process began to narrow down to someone whose special attributes the committee felt were best suited to the program here.

"What we want is somebody younger, with a good bit of his career ahead of him, who would be less inaccessible than most established writers. The bigger, firmly established ones tend to scare people away," Ralph Dennis, instructor in the Department of Radio, TV and Motion Pictures and one of the principal backers of the project said in a recent interview in the Chapel Hill Weekly.

Young Writer

Stallings and the students seem also to favor youth over eminence, not only because he would be more approachable by students, but because the residency would provide r younger writer a certain margin of financial security to pursue his work.

"We are not after the best known writer around," says Stallings. "We want a relatively young person, just coming to terms with his art form, with what he sees in society and wants to say about it, not someone terribly prestigious, but who may become an important writer."

They seem to have a better than even chance, considering the support they have drawn. The project is clearly expected to produce dividends beyond those to fledgling writers here.

"Artistic endeavor is and always has been an integral part of culture, reflective of the finest offerings of the human mind and spirit. In the context of the above aims of education, a dialogue between students and practicing artist would do much to further the total education of the individual. Many segments of the University community have expressed support of an artist-in-residence who would continue his creative endeavors and teach undergraduate courses in the Humanities department," read a recent trustees report on the project.

It is generally agreed that the 1963 writer will be attached loosely to the Department of English, but not formally a member of its faculty.

The idea should fulfill more than adequately a student resolution that "if creative talents are to flourish they should be recognized in a suitable manner by the academic community."

agency to haul persons and groups before it, accuse them and force them either to answer under oath or claim their constitutional protections.

Yet it acts with the aid of immunities and powers we would not dream of granting our police and public prosecutors."

It might be said that what is needed is reform of the Committee's abuses rather than its abolition. Yet given the assumption of its operation the abuses seems inherent to its existence.

The very mandate of investigating "un American" activities seems absurd and contradictory to our constitutional guarantees. If internal security is the problem, if danger of espionage and treason exist this is a matter for a police force, not a political body.

The House Un-American Activities Committee acts as a repugnant reminder that our rights of free speech, political organization, and judicial traditions can be actively threatened, its abuses cannot be reformed without essentially changing the very nature of the Committee's reason for existence. The Committee should and must be abolished by Congress.

SO NOW THE triple threat has become a quadruple threat—so much so that he can't play pall next year; and the hulking lineman has turned from making tackles to making book.

When Pete Rozelle said "Thou Shalt Not Bet," he meant it. Paul Hornung and Alex Karras found out the hard way.

SO WHAT, YOU SAY, if a few ballplayers place some bets on the side? So what, you say, just as long as they don't throw games or bet against themselves?

There is the point of ethics, of course. But it is not the main one here. Rozelle himself said he found no evidence that any player bet against his own club, sold information to gamblers, shaved points or ever gave less than his best in playing any game.

The commissioner did, however find "clear" evidence that some NFL players knowingly associated with undesirables, bet on their own clubs to win, bet on their own clubs to win, bet on other pro games and had been too free in giving information about their teams to friends.

Whether these practices are moral is not the point Rozelle ruled on. They are direct violations of the players' contracts and the constitution and bylaws of the league.

John Gordy, Gary Lowe, Joe Schmidt, Wayne Walker and Sam Williams—all of the Detroit Lions—will also have a hefty chunk cut from their 1963 contracts. The $50 each won on last year's title game is small consolation for the $2,000 deficit which faces them now.

Commissioner Rozelle has said the future conduct and behavior of the two would have a bearing on their reinstatement. This bodes well for the future, but Karras is not looking ahead.

Here is a 250-pound tackle that came from Iowa and after a few unspectacular years, established himself as one of the most feared linesmen in the league.

It seems to me, however, that the guy's a little short on brains. If he keeps his mouth shut, he'll be okay; if he continues to make useless protests and threats, he's going to be sorry.

Not only has Karras failed to show any regret for his actions, but it seems he would do it all over again. This, as I said, may not be ethically wrong, but it is against the rules.

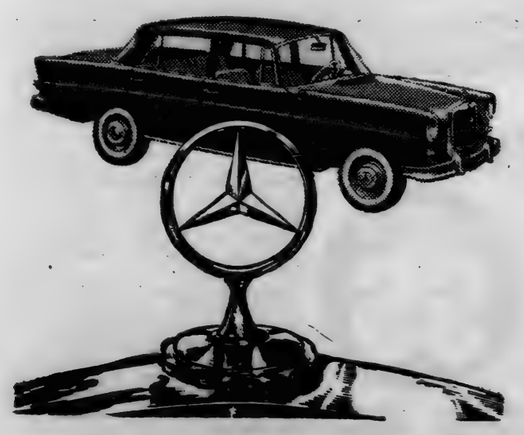
AS FOR HORNUNG, it makes you wonder.

This is the "Golden Boy" that came out of Notre Dame in 1957 with blond hair, blue eyes and a Heisman Trophy. The guy had more movie offers than Marcello Mastroianni and more girlfriends than Fabian. But he decided the road was shorter to Green Bay han to Hollywood, and signed with the Packers for better or worse.

It was worse. Hornung didn't like Green Bay, and he played that way. Shifted from quarterback to fullback to halfback, he was rescued in 1959 not by Otto Preminger but by Vince Lombardi.

THE GUY SUDDENLY RAN, threw, caught and kicked better than anyone ever had, and he won three scoring championships in addition to a pair of MVP awards.

Here is the most glamorous football star of the decade—the idol of millions of little boys . . . and big girls—and yet you wake up one morning and read: "HORNUNG SUSPENDED." I, for one, am disappointed.



What does it mean? It means Jantzen, Admiral and Marlboro lose a valuable client. It means Daryl Zanuck may gain a valuable halfback. And it means still another blemish on the face of American Sport.

Welterweights Sign To Fight In New York

Their scheduled 15-rounder will be televised nationally by ABC.

Their Los Angeles 15-rounder was the star bout of a triple-title fight show which drew $62,452 despite a five-day postponement.

Although the June fight will be their second title tilt, it also will be their third and "rubber" meeting because Griffith had outpointed Rodriguez in a 10-round non-title bout at New York Dec. 17, 1960.

New York City was the only city upon which Rodriguez, Griffith and their handlers could agree.

Golfers Edge Devils, Deacs In 2nd Round

By HUGH STEVENS

Carolina's golfers edged out Duke and Wake Forest here Wednesday in the second round of a 54-hole stroke play tournament involving the three teams, but the Deacons maintained a 16-stroke margin after the completion of 36 holes.

UNC's total team score of 531 yesterday enabled the Tar Heels to pick up six shots on both Duke and Wake Forest, who finished with identical 537 scores. The Tar Heels now trail Wake Forest by 19 strokes and Duke by only three.

Medalist honors in Wednesday's match went to Carolina's Abe Andes with a three-under-par 69. He was followed by George Smith of Duke, who fired a two-under-par 70. Skip Tucker of UNC had the only other sub-par round, a 71. Low man for Wake Forest was Donnie Hedrick with even par 72.

Other Carolina scores included: Harvey Hill 74, Les Fleisher 76, George Reams 79, Tom Arnold 79, and Mike Dore 83.

* * *

UNC's golfers also did well for themselves on the southern vacation tour. The team finished second in the Miami University Invitational Tournament as Abe Andes lost the individual crown by a single stroke.

The host team won the event with 1,181 total points while UNC came in with 1,189. Rollins with 1,197 and Michigan with 1,209 followed the Tar Heels.

Carolina had three of the top six finishers, but Miami's Jerry Potter won the title with a 284 for the 72 holes. UNC's Tom Arnold and Leslie Fleisher finished fifth and sixth, respectively.

THE SUMMARY

Potter (Miami)	284
Andes (UNC)	285
Vangerbig (Rollins)	288
Rowe (Miami)	291
Arnold (UNC)	298
Fleisher (UNC)	300
Reagan (Rollins)	300

Jenkins Hurls Today As Heels Visit USC

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Senior southpaw Larry Jenkins goes in search of his second victory this afternoon at Columbia, S. C., when North Carolina takes on the Gamecocks from South Carolina.

In his last outing the Mount Holly product evened his record at 1-1, getting credit for the win in UNC's 10-6 triumph over Georgia on Monday. In 22 innings he has fashioned a nifty 2.86 earned run average, but has had difficulty in going the distance.

"Larry is real strong for seven innings, but then he tires and we have to relieve him," said cigar-puffing coach Walt Rabb. "We plan to have Spence Willard ready in the bull-pen against South Carolina."

Rabb, obviously pleased with his team's four straight victories over spring vacation, leaned back in his swivel chair yesterday before leaving for South Carolina, and talked freely of his team's chances in the ACC race.

"That trip through Georgia did wonders for us. It helps a team to be kept together for almost a week — to travel together. Our ball club is playing as a unit now."

Rabb predicted a real scramble for the ACC flag. "If we can get a couple of wins real quick, we'll be right in there." He was obviously thinking about a victory today against the Gamecocks and one tomorrow against always-tough Clemson.

"Wake Forest has the strongest team at the moment, but all the other teams have at least one pitcher who can beat anybody in the league. (Stan) Crisson for Duke is as good as any in the South. (Bob) Johnson for State is another real good one."

On his own staff Rabb has the fire-balling Bill Haywood, who will get the call tomorrow against Clemson. The 25-year-old graduate of Wilmington Junior College has been Rabb's workhorse so far this year. Appearing in six games, Haywood has worked 32 innings and yielded only three earned runs for a spectacular 0.85 E.R.A.

"His only bad game was against Duke," said Rabb, "and errors got him into a lot of trouble in that one."

Haywood lost that one and dropped a 4-2 decision to Georgia Southern, but has defeated Southern Illinois, Georgia Tech and Furman, the latter on a nine-hit shutout.

Rabb tentatively plans to rotate three starters—Haywood, Jenkins, and Spence Willard—the rest of the year, with Bobby Cox and Bill Danneman getting most of the relief calls. But, he added that both Cox and Danneman, along with Joe White and Jerry Davis, may get chances to start.

DIAMOND DUST — The Tar Heels will keep busy next week. They play at home against Florida State and again on Wednesday against Georgia Southern. Sandwiched in between is the big one—a Tuesday encounter with Duke at Durham. . . . Then on Thursday Rabb's men travel to College Park for a Friday game with Maryland. It's back to Charlottesville on Saturday for a game with Virginia. . . .

The big league scouts have their eyes on Ken Willard and Gary Black, but are willing to wait until graduation time. Most frequent visitors are the Red Sox and the Colt .45s. The Bosox can already see Willard at work on that short left field fence at Fenway. . . . The recently rained-out game with NC State at Raleigh has been re-set for Monday, May 6 over there. It might be a night game.

Lacrosse Club Wastes Duke; Parker Stars In 10-2 Rout

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Shooting everything at the goal except its helmets, the UNC lacrosse team smothered Duke 10-2 yesterday before a fine sun-baked gathering at Navy Field.

Taking command right from the opening whistle, the Tar Heels scored first at 1:06 when midfielder John Emory stole a pass near his own goal and took it the length of the field. Carolina scored again at 4:30 when Tim Thayer put in a pass from fellow Baltimorian Bud Adams. The Baltimore combinations continued when brilliant Jeff Parker fed Adams at eight minutes. Jim Light made it 4-0 45 seconds later.

The barrage continued in the second period with four more scores, two by Parker, one by Emory, and one by Ted Gans. On the rare occasions when Duke did manage to get within scoring range, its shots were blocked either by the tight Carolina defense or by goalie Harvey Stanley who turned in sparkling saves.

Both of Duke's goals came in the final period, the first by Duane Heyman at 2:45 and then Jerry Byrd at 4:55, when most of Carolina's first stringers were on the bench.

Parker, a tower of strength all afternoon, added his third goal at 11:15 and finished the day with three goals and two assists. Adams made it 10-2 twenty seconds later.

The Tar Heels made 16 saves to 15 for Duke.

The turnout for the game was very encouraging, with many students seated along the sidelines on the warm afternoon. Coach Connie Steele's charges lifted their record to two and one. Duke is 0-3.

Report On The Co-op – II

Failure Of Discount Club Teaches Valuable Lessons

By BILL WUAMETT

The failure of the Student Services Discount Club should teach a number of lessons that will facilitate the establishment of a student cooperative at Carolina.

More precisely, its failure clarifies the questions that must be answered before the cooperative is actually established.

Among these questions are the amount of membership fees, restrictions on membership, the quality and variety of merchandise to be sold, and the manner in which savings are passed on to the members.

Student - operated cooperatives do prosper at other schools, both publicly and privately supported. Over 40 schools have cooperatives with the largest having annual sales of close to $3 million.

The Yale Co-op last year returned 12½ per cent of the retail merchandise sales to members, a sum of over $200,000. The University Book Store at the University of Washington now has tangible assets of over $1 million which it has built from $50 capital in 1900.

The managers of the U. of Washington and Harvard cooperatives have stated they do not believe it possible to operate a book cooperative alone, as was first proposed here. The markup on books, they say, is not sufficient to yield a return large enough to interest many students. Other merchandise would also be needed to even out sales between the peak book sale periods in September and February.

"I assure you," the Harvard manager wrote, "that this type of venture will depend greatly upon the potential product mix in merchandise . . . if location permits you to carry wearing apparel, gifts and higher mark-up merchandise than required student supplies there could be a chance for success."

Long-time Chapel Hill merchant Kemp Nye concurs in their opinion. He believes, however, that a cooperative with widely varied stock would not only succeed, but force other Chapel Hill merchants to lower their prices to stay competitive.

Nye also agrees with the co-op managers on the need for a full-time professional manager, not only because of greater experience and competance, but also to provide continuity in the operating policies of the store.

Nye said a cooperative operated by veterans after WW II failed largely because of disagreement among its student managers. "The problems stemming from student turnover and immaturity could largely be solved," Nye said, "with a professional manager.

Other schools with professionally run, large volume cooperatives have varied membership policies. Yale charges a $1 fee, and gives rebates only to students, faculty and alumni. The U. of Washington requires only university identification for membership, but gives only an 8 per cent rebate compared to Yale's rate of 13½ per cent on cash sales.

Sales are not restricted to students at any of these places, however, but only the rebates on sales. Yale says it does a large business with non-members on which it keeps the full profit margin.

All of these factors and opinions seem to indicate that a cooperative could succeed with a student body such as Carolina's. It would, however, have to carry a widely varied stock of quality merchandise at competitive prices, and would have to offer a rebate to students large enough to arouse psychological and financial interest in membership.

In starting a cooperative at Carolina, the psychological element would be a great factor in its initial success.

The store in its initial stages might have to re-invest most of its earnings in inventory and operating capital, while also providing for expansion.

As the Harvard manager stated, sufficient interest would have to be aroused to cause students to put up capital which might not yield a large return while they remain in school.

As a spur for student enthusiasm, though, there exists the ever-present opinion among students that they are the victims of a monopoly situation in which there is no vigorous competition among merchants. Most of these merchants, students feel, would not exist if the University were not here, and they feel some gratitude should be shown in the form of lower prices.

Before a cooperative such as the one described above can be established, however, there exist other financial and legal problems which must be solved. These problems and possible solutions will be examined in a subsequent issue.

World News In Brief

Nuclear Force Said Necessary To NATO

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States told the 17-nation disarmament conference Friday that development of a multi-national NATO nuclear force is necessary to protect the West from aggression and prevent the burgeoning of independent atomic powers.

U. S. Ambassador Charles Stelle made the statement in reply to a sharp attack by Soviet negotiator Semyon K. Tsarapkin on West Germany's military buildup.

"We hear all too frequently that the Federal Republic of West Germany faces potential aggression of all dimension including nuclear attack," Stelle said.

Cardinal Reports

VIENNA (UPI) — Franziskus Cardinal Koenig relayed to the Vatican Friday a report on his four-hour conference with Jozsef Cardinal Mindszenty at the U. S. legation in Budapest. One report said it was almost certain the Hungarian primate would leave his homeland.

Cardinal Koenig, archbishop of Vienna, presumably passed his report along through Papal Nuncio Opilio Rossi with whom he had a long talk at noon today.

In Rome, Vatican sources said the report had not been received there. They added, however, that it is "almost certain" Cardinal Mindszenty will leave Hungary, although perhaps not for several weeks or even months.

Editors Hear JFK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Highlights of President Kennedy's address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors:

CUBA

In part as the result of last October's events, there is today more widespread assurance that both peace and freedom can prevail.

NEW PROPOSALS

The federal government is not so remote and our new legislative proposals are not so radical. Nor is the domestic budget, as sometimes pictured, a catalogue of bureaucratic waste.

BUDGET CUTS

A $15 billion cut not only would cripple our defenses and make us permanently second best in space—it would virtually turn the clock back in every American community . . . As the nation grows larger, so does the budget—but non-defense budget expenditures are lower now in relation to our gross national product—roughly 7 per cent—than they were 25 years ago.

FEDERAL SPENDING

We all praise tax reduction because it "releases" money into the private sector — but so do federal expenditures; through contracts, salaries, purchases, pensions, grants-in-aid, loans and all the rest. . . . Had federal purchases last year been kept on a plateau — as some have suggested for this year, and as was true in 1958—a recession could not have been avoided, just as it was not avoided in 1958.

ECONOMY DRIVE

A cut of $5 billion now from the proposed federal budget, as many have suggested, would cause 1 million fewer jobs by the end of the fiscal year. It would offset all the benefits which the tax cut would have brought by then.

Halt Asked In Laos

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — Premier Souvanna Phouma Friday bluntly ordered his pro-Communist half-brother, Prince Souphanouvang, to halt an offensive by his leftist troops on the Plain of Jars. He also appealed directly to Britain and the Soviet Union to intervene to stop the bitter fighting in Laos.

Reports reaching Vientiane said the troops of Souphanouvang's pro-Communist Pathet Lao were shelling the vital airfield of Phong Savan in an all-out bid to drive beleaguered, outnumbered neutralist forces of Gen. Kong Le out of their last big stronghold on the plain.

Police Seek Assaulter Of Picket

Chapel Hill police said Thursday that they are still looking for Roy Lee Merritt of Carrboro, who was charged with assault last week after a Student Peace Union picketer was accosted in front of the College Cafe on Franklin Street.

Merritt is thought to be out of town, police said.

A warrant was issued for the youth Thursday of last week after Merritt escaped after being arrested by Police Lt. C. E. King in front of the cafe.

Chief W. D. Blake of the local police said King saw Merritt walk up to Paul Hutzler, one of the two pickets on duty, and strike at him. Hutzler is a UNC student from Georgia.

Hutzler avoided the blow, Chief Blake said, and Merritt hit Hutzler's sign. Neither of the pair was injured.

Lt. King arrested Merritt and was walking him to the police station when he "broke and ran" when passing the Hub Clothing store, the Chief said.

Merritt is in his early 20's and has a record of misdemeanors, according to the local police.

The SPU began picketing the College Cafe two weeks ago. The establishment is the first on the SPU's list of 13 businesses in Chapel Hill which do not serve Negroes.

The SPU said it plans to picket or negotiate with each business in turn until all are desegregated.

Shoplifter Suspended By Council

One student was placed on definite suspension for a violation of the Honor Code, two were officially reprimanded, and one other was found not guilty of Campus Code violations in cases tried by the Men's Council Thursday night.

In the first case, a student pled guilty to a charge of shoplifting at two Chapel Hill stores. He was placed on definite suspension until next September. This was the second time in four years that a sentence of definite suspension had been reduced due to extenuating circumstances. Normally suspension is for one full academic year.

In the second case, two students were given official reprimands for their parts in a recent panty raid attempt. One student was an active participant in the demonstration while the other was allegedly uncooperative with officials who were trying to halt the disturbance. A third student was found not guilty of alleged ungentlemanly conduct as a spectator at the demonstration outside a dormitory.

Green Plans To Go Back To Writing

Is Now Completing Movie Script

Pulitzer Prize winning playwright Paul Green, an instructor in the RTVMP and creative writing departments at UNC, has returned to screenwriting. Green is now putting the finishing touches on the script for a movie based on the book "Black Like Me."

The book, a narrative by a Texas white man who changed his skin to black with drugs and made a journey among the South's Negroes, "taught me a lot," Green reported yesterday.

"It's a powerful story that made the statistics seem dead," he added. "I'm putting a lot of my bellyache in this script, too."

"I thought the President would take a stronger stand on this than he has and I've been very disappointed," Green said. "I put some of that into this script, but I don't know if we'll be able to keep it. It just made me feel better to write it anyway."

The movie will be produced by Film Features Inc. Julius Tannenbaum, one of the partners, will be producer and cinematographer. The other partner, Carl Lerner, will be director and film editor.

Their's is a new venture and "Black Like Me" will be their first production. Three more films will follow in the next 18 months.

The partners say they are interested in making modest budget productions "with provocative and timely subjects which will affect people in all parts of the world market."

Green said he and the two partners "are getting along very well" in their interpretations of the book for the screen.

Green said he will omit the place names used in the book, "because I don't want to make one place seem worse or better than any other place."

15 Colleges At Democrat State Meet

The Federation of College Young Democrats of N. C. opened its third state-wide conference of the year last night in Durham, at the new Holiday Inn West.

The general theme for the weekend meeting is Federal Aid to Education and its effect on the Sounth. Congressman Frank Thompson of New Jersey, an outstanding and active supporter of the President's Education bill, is slated to give the main address at a noon luncheon at the motel and all UNC students are cordially invited to attend and hear Congressman Thompson.

Delegates from over 15 N. C. colleges and universities were in attendance to hear Al House, UNC Law School graduate, YDC National Committeeman and recent US delegate to the NATO conference in Bonn, West Germany.

House spoke on the European youth political organizations and European attitudes towards US foreign policy.

Last night, many informal discussions with the Congressman were held in addition to workshops and state-committee meetings.

Today's program will start at 9:30 with the opening session of the business meeting at which new clubs charters will be presented to the new college club members of the Federation.

The Federation, conceived by UNC YDC members a year ago, now boasts over 25 colleges and universities in its ranks and serves as the student voice to the senior Democratic Party. Fred Ricci, a UNC student, now serves as the State Chairman.

The 1963 Tri Delta Scholarship Competition began Friday. Two scholarships are to be awarded, one for $100, the other for $150. The deadline for application is May 10.

The sorority's scholarship program is an international service, irrespective of fraternity affiliation. All UNC women students are eligible to apply for the scholarships. Application blanks may be obtained fro mthe Dean of Women's office.

Senate Tables Resolution Asking For Classic Probe

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH—The N. C. Senate voted yesterday to table a resolution asking Consolidated University President William Friday and N. C. State Chancellor John Caldwell to look into the possibility of reinstating the Dixie Classic basketball tournament held annually in Raleigh over the Christmas holidays.

In voting, in effect, to kill the Dixie Classic resolution, the Senate took the opposite point of view that the House took last week when they voted to ask Friday and Caldwell to consider reinstating the tournament. The House also asked that Friday and Caldwell report back to them on their findings.

President Friday declined comment on the Senate action but he did say that "Chancellor Caldwell and I will continue to respond to the resolution that the House passed last week." He said that they would report their findings on or before May 10 "as directed by the House."

The Senate resolution received its death blow when Sen. Thomas White of Lenoir moved to table the motion saying, "I do not think the resolution presents an appropriate subject for legislation by this body."

Other opposition came from Sen. Ray Walton of Brunswick who said, "If all we've got to do is worry about the Dixie Classic, we might as well go home." Walton mentioned past basketball scandals in voicing his opposition to the resolution.

A voice vote was taken and the proposed resolution was tabled.

The resolution was presented by Sen. LeRoy Simmons of Duplin Co. who said the resolution was merely a request and not a demand for study on the matter.

On Thursday, Simmons proposed an amendment to the Higher Education Bill asking that N. C. State College be renamed, "North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina" instead of the Education committee proposal of "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh." Simmons's amendment was voted down 34-12.

The Senate went on to unanimously pass the bill on its second reading and yesterday they gave final unanimous approval to the Education bill and sent it to the House for tentative presentation Tuesday.

President Friday said he was greatly encouraged by the Senate's action yesterday. He said the Senate move showed "substantial progress for higher education in our state." Friday said he planned to be in Raleigh next Tuesday when the bill comes before the House for its first reading.

ESP Secrecy Questioned By Speaker

By HUBERT HAWKINS

"If their research is valid then why don't they publish it?" was the criticism of Dick Sanders, graduate student in psychology, at a meeting Thursday of the UNC Parapsychological Discussion Group.

"Some of the most vocal scientists in the field," Sanders said, "have contributed to people's suspicion of parapsychology. They have written on anything but a scholarly level, and in some cases have even used unfounded data."

He attacked the claims of the Roundtable Foundation in Telepathy, reported on by Charlie Tart, adviser to the group.

The Roundtable Foundation experimented over a period of years at Glen Cove, Maine, with psychically gifted persons in so-called Faraday cages. The cages were electrically charged, copper-covered closets which shielded the subjects from all electromagnetic waves.

The Foundation achieved startling results in telepathy by varying the construction and electrical charge of the Faraday cage. The experimenters found that they could either greatly enhance or completely eliminate the subjects' abilities at will.

Tart described the methods of the Foundation as highly empirical and cited extensive controls on the experiments. Probabilities against chance explanations ranged in the billions-to-one.

The UNC group called into question certain probability factors, but the main objection was that of non-publication.

Tart agreed that parapsychological experimentation has often been carried out in an overly secretive or timid manner. He said better records of the studies are needed.

"Therefore we must regard tonight's report almost as intimations of what might be," he said, "rather than as conclusively proved fact."

FEDERAL AID

To take needs of the individual family and community out of the federal budget will only cast them on state and local governments. In fact, were it not for federal aid to hard-pressed state and local governments, the federal cash budget today would be in balance.

Malcolm Asks For Plague On Whites

By BILL DOWELL

Malcolm X said Thursday night that the refusal by the Durham Recreation Department to allow him to speak in Hill Recreation Hall shows that the whites do not think Negroes are capable of thinking for themselves.

"The city of Durham cannot allow any racial group, whether colored or white, to hold meetings in any of their parks or facilities," said Harold Moses, Head of the Durham's Parks and Recreations department.

"Because the Black Muslins signed up for the hall under the nomenclature 'Mosque' for the purpose of hearing a 'lecture,' the fact that it was actually a Black Muslin meeting was overlooked until the last minute.

"Our action in canceling the function has nothing to do with racial discrimination," he continued. "It involves discrimination between the purpose of a comparatively peaceful organization and one whose peaceful motives are doubtful."

The "unity" meeting between the Black Muslim leader and Negro attorney Floyd McKissick was held in Page Auditorium on Roxboro Street. About 150 people attended.

X said that the Muslins want separation not segregation. Separation, he said, would mean controling everything in their own communities. The Muslims, he said, believe that the story of the hand writing on the wall in the Bible is a smybolic prophesy of the present.

The whites are going to be destroyed, he said, we don't want to be around when it happens.

In a calm, low voice, he prayed for droughts and plagues to fall on the whites and for future white generations to be born moronic and malformed. The prayer, he said was a religious one the same kind that Moses had prayed against the Pharo.

The Muslims, X said, would join any group or picket line they thought would help the Negroes. "But," he added, "if we are marching on a picket line and some beast mistreats us, you know we won't turn the other cheek."

The Muslims, X said, would defend what was their's including their women. "If one of you married a white woman, they'd take you out and hang you on a tree," he said. "Well, I would probably do the same, but if one of them mistreats one of our women, then we will kill him. That's not violence that's self defense."

X said the Muslims were not for integration, because integration is something which a superior race forces on an inferior one.

He said that as soon as Whites knew that you honestly wanted to be separate from them they would respect you for it.

The only time the U. S. had ever made a move for integration, he said, was when it felt that foreign opinion called for it or there was some other ulterior motive. Whenever integration was argued for, as an honest moral goal, he said, it was looked down on. If the motive is bad, he said, how can the result help but be bad?

X went on to say that even if the whites did want to have integration, they couldn't have the kind the Negro wants.

The dumbest Negro, he said isn't cumb enough to think that sending one or two Negroes to college means that the colleges are integrated

Bill Would Make Cheating Crime Against State

Cheating may become a crime against the state if Senator John Jordan's bill introduced in the General Assembly last week becomes law.

The bill written by the senator from Wake County would make it a misdemeanor to cheat or to help others cheat on educational examinations.

He said his bill was aimed at "the practice of peddling exams, term papers, and answers to college test and mail order study courses."

The bill, Jordan explained, "is broad enough to include all kinds of cheating, since it makes it unlawful to obtain any type of educational degree or certificate by fraudulent means."

Jordan said the bill was prompted in part by scandals involving "answer factories" in other states.

State Board Gets Request For Grad Aid

Health Affairs Plans Presented

The Sate Board of Higher Education met Thursday with members of the University Administration in the Morehead Building. This meeting was the annual visit of the Board to the University as required by law.

Members of the Administration presented reports on the programs of the University to the Board for their examination and answered questions of the Board. Reports given concerned undergraduate and graduate education and the Health Affairs program.

Dr. Hugh Holman, dean of the Graduate School, told the Board that the University needed more non-service grants to attract entering graduate students.

It was brought out that the state provides for only 26 teaching fellowships and that these were only for second or third-year graduate students.

Dr. Holman said that the search for top-rate graduate students was highly competitive and that the number and kinds of non-service and limited service fellowships available are very important in recruiting outstanding students.

One of the Board members raised the question of whether the proposed PhD in Genetics at UNC was a duplication of an already existing program at State College. Dr. Holman explained that the genetics program at State College deals mainly with plant genetics.

He said also that genetics is rapidly being recognized as an important concern in many diverse disciplines such as psychology, the natural sciences, and medicine. Thus there was a great desire held by many faculty members for the establishment of such a program.

Dr. Henry Clark, director of he Division of Health Affairs, presented the proposed plans for the expansion of the Division of Health Affairs and commented on them to the Board.

Dean Carlyle Sitterson, of the College of Arts and Sciences, presented a report on undergraduate education stating that the academic qualifications of entering freshmen were improving. This was borne out by the rising average of College Board scores, by the increasing number of students receiving credit for college courses by means of advanced placement exams and by the number of students who received fellowships and grants after graduation.

The report also cited enriched educational advantages in recent years through the expansion of the Honors Program, the inauguration of "A" sections and the offering of new education programs such as the International Studies Program and major expansions in Asian studies.

The Board will meet again today in Raleigh.

Distortion Chamber

We received an interesting letter from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce yesterday telling us about all the evils of the proposed $1.2 billion federal aid to education program.

The good C. of C. tells us that this country is building 70,000 classrooms a year and that in a decade we will have 100,000 more classrooms than are needed.

They go on to say that 70 per cent of American youths finish high school and that half of these go to college, and that most graduate.

The Chamber tells us that we are doing just fine and that things should be left as they are.

Since the figures given were a little vague, we decided to check and find out exactly how we stood as far as our education programs go. The findings don't paint nearly the rosy picture that the civic minded chamber does.

Item: Within the last decade the school age population has increased 50 per cent, an increase of 11 million elementary and high school students. By the end of this decade enrollment will rise another 8 million, increasing at a rate of better than a million a year.

Item: College enrollment, now 3.8 million, will be up to 7 million by 1970.

Item: 40 percent of those students now entering colleges do not graduate. Current federal student loan programs are restricted to roughly only 5 per cent of the students currently enrolled in participating colleges.

Item: 21 million students now in grade school will enter the labor market in the 1960's without a college degree.

Item: Recent research has shown some 40 per cent of the nation's economic growth and productivity in recent years is a direct result of investments in education.

We like getting letters from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and we accept the fact that most of their material is carefully filtered through their conservative philosophy, but it does appear to us that an organization professedly civic minded should not stoop to distorting facts on issues so vital as education.

Conference Dividends

Conferences are wonderful things. Students from all over get together, exchange ideas, and everyone comes away with a higher degree of knowledge and understanding than they formerly had.

But too often the most important part of any conference is left undone in the haste of simply getting there, doing what's expected of you plus all the things you want to do, then getting back to school and catching up on work missed.

We are referring to the responsibility conference participants have to share their new knowledge and understanding when they return. This also applies to students involved in exchanges.

That responsibility exists to a certain degree even when the participant pays his own way. But it most certainly exists when student government funds have been used to defray expenses.

This is why we ask that from now on all selections of students to conferences and exchanges, involving the use of student government money, be made with an eye to sending people who can come back and report on their experiences, or, in the case of exchange students, that they be obligated to make regular reports to the Tar Heel.

The campus in general profits very little — if at all — from having one or two students simply represent it at conferences and exchanges.

But the campus should profit greatly — thus justifying the expenses involved — if students sent to represent us come back and tell us what went on.

Conferences and exchanges involving student government funds are an investment. From here on out we hope for a return on that investment in the form of a report to the Tar Heel, thus giving all students an opportunity to share the experience.

Spring

Ah Spring. Ain't it grand?

Days of using textbooks to shield the eyes from a blazing sun, while flaked out on the grass.

Nights of Horseshoes-Under-The-Lights outside the Tin Can, of strolling through the Arboretum wondering what Cary Grant or Audrey Hepburn would do in your situation.

Days of spring-cleaning.

Days of deadline for term papers and research projects.

Of having to start boning up in preparation for final exams.

Of your ice cream cone melting all over your arm . . .

Bah. Spring.

College May Put Limits On Skirts

By MARY HALE
Southwest Texas College Star

There was a rumor going around campus Monday afternoon that had quite a few coeds, myself included, down on their knees.

After hearing that a rule was going to be made, stating that a girl's skirt had to be long enough to touch the floor when in a kneeling position, I immediately proceeded to get on my knees to see how I would check out.

Since I was wearing one of my longer dresses that day I thought surely it would reach the floor. Much to my surprise, however, it lacked about an inch.

I began taking notice of other skirt lengths on campus and it seems that the coeds whose skirts would meet the rumored requirements are few and far between.

The female students all seemed to be on a rampage, ready to start petitions and rebel to the point of making skirts even shorter. Already the coeds were complaining about having to put ruffles on their skirts and letting hems out.

Soon after I heard the rumor I asked a head resident about it, because the rumor had it that there would be dorm meetings in all the women's dorms Monday night to lay the law down. She knew nothing of it but seemed pleased the thought of steps being taken in that direction.

According to Marjorie Stewart, dean of women students, one of the main complaints against the way the coeds are dressing is the wearing of coulettes, or divided skirts.

Miss Stewart also pointed out that the fact that this campus is situated on a hill brings another problem with short skirts. When a girl goes up a hill or up any of the numerous flights of stairs on campus quite a bit of her legs are displayed to anyone following her.

At the National Intercollegiate Association of Women Students convention in Oklahoma little more than a week ago, Miss Stewart discovered that the majority of the girls from other campuses are following the trend dictated by the fashion authorities last fall. According to the experts, skirts should be one inch below the knee, which is much lower than the coeds on this campus are wearing them.

The rumor concerning the checking method, kneeling on the floor, got its beginning when one of the head residents of a women's dorm asked Miss Stewart how it would be determined just how short is too short.

There is no rule here which would require coeds to bow down before being allowed to sign out of the dorms. These steps were primarily to ward off any skirts which are so short as to be considered indecent and as a word to the wise.

Good Judgment

The North Carolina Senate yesterday showed great good sense, unlike their junior partner, and voted to kill the Dixie Classic Resolution which had been passed earlier by the House of Representatives.

We would like to thank Senator Thomas White for returning sanity and good judgment to the legislature by moving to table the motion.

We wholeheartedly subscribe to his feeling that the Dixie Classic resolution is not "an appropriate subject for legislation" before the Senate.

Apologia

You stand and press me so—why do you gaze
In horror and dismay? Pause, let me speak.
You see, his life has flown, and here I stand,
The slayer. But the crime was his, not mine.
I have but done my duty—there he lies,
Stone dead. Not yet; his lips still move: a prayer,
A dying curse? Or both? I do not know,
I must not wonder.
Crime against the state
Is crime against the people—and you know,
The state proclaims it death to mount that Wall,
Here raised for your protection, to confine
The Fascist agents who would else abscond,
And give our secrets to the moneyed camp,
Or bring back sabotage in false disguise.
His lips no longer move. My comrades draw
Upon us, to remove the crude debris,
This enemy of all the people, now
Our enemy no more.
Move swiftly, Karl;
And you who stare in hatred—to your homes!
This man would work your doom, were he alive.
You, sir, you speak to me? This boy, you say?
His age eighteen? But if a boy, yet still
His aim was evil, and I struck him down.
So now they all disperse.
No, Ernst, come here;
I would not be alone for now; my heart
Lies heavy in me. Law must be obeyed,
And we who must enforce it suffer sore,
And this you know — to take their lives is hard,
Though they be enemies against the state.
I'd kill my brother if he tried to scale
The Wall that we are here to watch and guard;
A duty is a duty. Come along.

"This Guerrilla Stuff Is A Different Type War"

Muslims Could Make Real Contributions To Society

By CLYDE WILSON

Listen carefully. These may be the strangest words you ever hear a confessed conservative Southerner say:

The development of what is called the Black Muslim movement among American Negroes may bear just a trace of a few potentially good ideas.

Anyone who has ever sat in on a meeting of one of those civic bodies known as a Human Relations Committee, set up in the more "progressive" Southern communities as a forum of discussion and advice on racial problems (meaning the problem of white resistance to integration), cannot fail to have been struck by the unabashed "gimme, gimme" approach of the Negro leadership.

It is always: "What kind of public recreation programs are you going to set up for us? What kind of public housing are you going to build for us? What kind of welfare programs are you going to make for us? What kind of special laws are you going to pass for our benefit?"

Never is it, "What can we as Negroes do on our own initiative to better our own lot and make ourselves worthier citizens?"

Encourage Industry

According to no less an authority than Wayne King, the Black Muslims encourage their followers to hold a steady job, to value decent living quarters over luxuries, to give up gambling, smoking and drinking, and to support Negro businesses. They have rehabilitated boys who were headed for trouble.

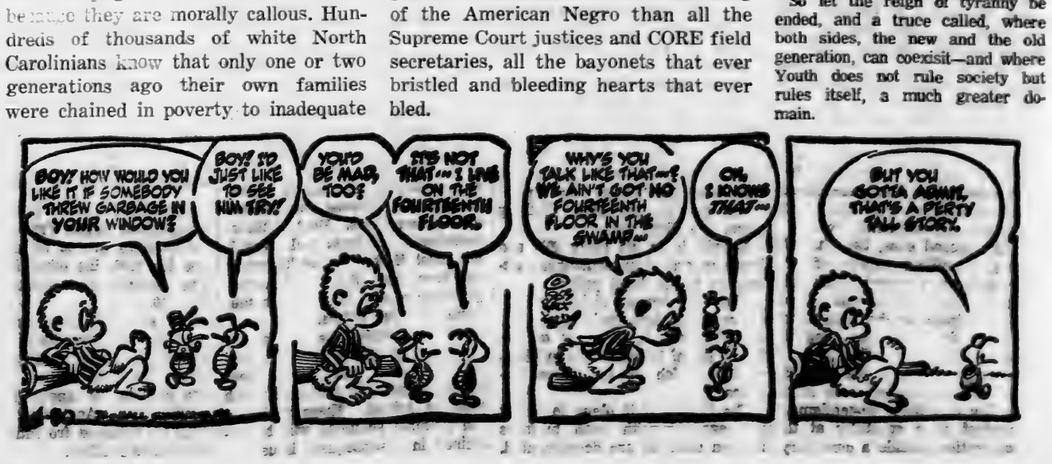
There is an encouraging note of old-fashioned self-reliance here. Heretofore Negroes have been the only underprivileged American group which has used its poverty and ignorance as an excuse to do nothing about its poverty and ignorance.

If Southerners show little concern over the plight of the Negro, it is not because they are morally callous. Hundreds of thousands of white North Carolinians know that only one or two generations ago their own families were chained in poverty to inadequate farms or segregated contemptuously into mill villages.

They also know that they have what they have today, not because some government agency enforced their acceptance or anyone subsidized their education, but simply because their parents had character and intelligence enough to perservere and provide their children with more opportunities than they had.

Poverty Wasn't Barrier

They know that those parents and grandparents maintained an amazing degree of self-reliance and moral uprightness despite poverty and ignorance as severe as any the Negro suffers under today. They did not collapse into immorality or go on the welfare rolls. They worked.



Furthermore, any North Carolinian with a rural background knows that there were Negroes who faced the same situation and prevailed. Of this a short drive through a better Negro neighborhood in any prosperous Southern city should convince anyone.

Any Negro in North Carolina today who has the character and intelligence can secure a college education (perhaps more easily than an underprivileged white) and a good job. (Not any job, Lord knows, but a good one.)

The Black Muslims are likely to persist in the quite human reaction of blaming others for conditions that are at least partly a result of their own shortcomings of character.

But if they can succeed in helping the Negro to channel his often-just resentments into constructive steps toward his own material well-being instead of pointless acts of vengeance against society.

And if the hatred of the white and corrupted religion which they preach shall prove to be no more than harmless ceremonial mumbo-jumbo, then the Black Muslims will have made a more genuine contribution to the well-being of the American Negro than all the Supreme Court justices and CORE field secretaries, all the bayonets that ever bristled and bleeding hearts that ever bled.

Tyrannical Teenagers Analyzed

A Review
By JIM CLOTFELTER

TEENAGE TYRANNY by Grace and Fred Hechinger. William Morrow and Co. 243 pp. $4.50

The Hechingers are "bugged."

They are bugged by those twentieth century autocrats, the American teenagers, who supposedly control all mass media, dictate the production efforts of many American industries, and generally lord it over their luckless parents.

Teenage Tyranny is speaking to the parent worried about the increasing materialistic goals of his children and observing with horror and wonderment the generation's increasing immorality in everything from sex to illegal acquisitiveness. The book is unique in one respect: the parents and "society" are not the solitary scapegoats for all the evils youth complains of, but only the scapegoats insofar as they gullibly let the teenagers convince them they are "to blame."

The book has several themes, repeated and substantiated throughout its pages:

(1) That adults have abdicated their rights and privileges to make room for the irrational omnipresence of the teenage lobby—in the movies, in the schools, and most importantly, in the home. The result is an America society "growing down rather than growing up."

(2) That sixteen-year-olds are being given the freedom and the material possessions once reserved for the college student; that "steady dating" begins in junior high school, where it was once reserved for high school and college; that sex begins earlier, that cars and clothes begin earlier, that teenagers are making for themselves a half-baked maturity out of the celluloid-created world of unlimited affluence and star-studded love.

(3) That the combination of these two factors leads to a society where the whole range of production, from Elvis Presley to teenage bras, is geared to younger, and increasingly immature desires——and that this trend is ridiculous, in the Hechinger's view, and should stop.

The first of their suggestion is worth the book. In instance after instance the authors heap criticism upon the meek parents who are led around by the nose by their twisting perfumed-undergarmented-and lipsticked twelve-year-old daughters. Because the younger generation is given more freedom than preceding generations (which is "good"), does not mean that the adults should give up a proportionate amount of their freedom to satisfy the demands of their teenagers, who yearn for the semblance if not the reality of maturity.

The Hechinger's second main theme (not articulated by them as such but repeated throughout the book) is less serious, and somewhat irrelevant. The age-limit for everything is going down—true. But the Hechingers admit, simultaneously, that nothing is really changing —or more accurately, that the more things change the more they stay the same. Their charge is so broad (lamenting pre-college sex experiences and conducting dancing classes and other social activity for junior high schoolers) that the charge's validity seems to rest in a context of massive unimportance. Yes, things are happening younger, but, in most cases, the sixteen-year-old is handling his affairs no more stupidly than the seventeen-year-old did twenty years ago. And what has this charge to do with the basic one—that adults have abandoned their naturally and rationally superior position, abandoned it for the self-defeating role of "pal."

Teenage Tyranny, if nothing else, is a useful anthology of the failures of American society in its attempt to raise a new generation less materialistic and security-conscious than its predecessor—an attempt which has produced only Satisfied Clingers-To-What-We-Have. And the book is useful, also, because it tells the adults to act like men and women and not the servants of Youth.

Youth is deserving of admiration and love, but when awarded the Cadillaced images of admiration and love, without earning the real thing, Youth becomes cynical and thus unyouthful, and thus undeserving of its admiration and love.

So let the reign of tyranny be ended, and a truce called, where both sides, the new and the old generation, can coexisit—and where Youth does not rule society but rules itself, a much greater domain.

South Africa Editor Here In Leader Exchange Course

During the past week Dr. and Mrs. Andries Blignault of Capetown, South Africa, have been visiting the campus as leader exchangees of the United States-South Africa Leader Exchange Program.

Dr. Blignault, Editor of the official journals of the Medical Association of South Africa, attended lectures and seminars in the Medical School and in the Department of Psychiatry.

Particularly impressed by the staff facilities at UNC, Dr. Blignault commented that there is good contact between the students and faculty. He also praised the high level of teaching here.

Mrs. Blignault, a well-known Afrikaans essayist and journalist, attended creative writing classes.

Because South African schools do not offer courses in creative writing, but in practical criticism, Mrs. Blignault enjoyed listening to young writers read and discuss their own work.

She found the students lively, aware, and well-read. "Literature," Mrs. Blignaul noted, "is a unifying interest, a bond between people despite the distance between them."

The United States-South Africa Leader Exchange Program, a private non-governmental program, was established in 1958 to strengthen the lines of intellectual communication between South African and American professional, business, and civic leaders. As leader exchangees Dr. and Mrs. Blignault are among the twelve persons who are in the U. S. for the short term, three month program. Others will stay from six months to a year. Their purpose is to gain an insight into the American way of life and to meet persons in their professional fields, just as Americans in South Africa are learning about the South African way of life and problems.

From April 25 to May 2 the Blignaults will be in Chicago conferring with the officers of the American Medical Society. They will then participate in the meetings of the American Psychoanalytic and Psychiatric Associations in St. Louis from May 3 to 10 and conclude their tour with a visit to the West Coast.

Of all the places that the South African couple have seen they think that Chapel Hill is "the most beautiful," particularly because they have come in spring. Perhaps one of the reasons that they feel "perfectly at home" here is that it is a university town just like Stellenbosch, with tree-lined streets and an atmosphere of intellectual activity.

Thomas Fears No Dangers

By MAT FRIEDMAN

There was probably little radioactive waste aboard the nuclear submarine Thresher when it disappeared last week, a University of North Carolina professor said yesterday.

Dr. Henry Thomas, head of the University's Radioisotope Committee, said "the presumption is that the uranium supply had just been replaced."

He added that little harm could have been done if any radioactive waste did spill into the ocean during the Thresher's tragedy.

Chief radioactive by-products of the ship's reactor would be Strontium 90 and Cesium 137, which are very harmful in concentration, he said.

The United States has made no statement on the amount of radioactive material on the Thresher, which was lost in 8500 feet of water off the Massachusetts coast last week.

Thomas said that any waste material accumulated during the sub's cruise prior to drydocking for repairs and improvements nine months ago probably was removed before the vessel began its fatal dive.

He compared its nuclear reactor to a steam engine. Fission of atomic material turns water into steam which turns the giant turbines of the vessel.

"The British deliberately dump their waste into the Irish Sea," he said. "They say its safe."

He added that the U. S. National Science Foundation has concluded that small deposits in the ocean don't appear to be damaging.

Janet Feagans To Lead Group In Tang'yika

A UNC graduate student has been selected by Operation Crossroads Africa as a Group Leader for this summer's work project in Tanganyika.

She is Miss Janet Feagans, a graduate student in the Department of Political Science, and Research Assistant at the University's Institute of Government.

Operation Crossroads is a private, voluntary organization located in New York City. Since 1958 it has sent more than 760 young North Americans into Africa to participate in summer work projects with the cooperation of African governments and people.

Crossroads, often considered a pilot project for the Peace Corps and a 'people to people' diplomatic effort, was conceived by Dr. James H. Robinson, former minister of the Church of the Master, New York City. In 1958 he took a pilot group of 60 students to West Africa; this year's group will include over 320 participants in 27 different work projects through-out Africa.

Miss Feagans is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Harry D. Robinson, Jr. of Mount Vernon, New. She received her B.A. degree from the University of Florida in 1958.

Pitchers Sharp As UNC Rips South Carolina

by

Bob Bettis

DON SKAKLE SETTLED back in his office chair and began to speak in his characteristic slow and soft manner.

"Overall we had a good trip, considering that we traveled 2,200 miles."

The amicable Tar Heel tennis coach was referring to Carolina's vacation journey to Florida last week. The netters picked up two victories (over Rollins and tough Michigan), but suffered a startling defeat at the hands of powerful Miami. It was the first setback on the UNC slate, and Skakle now was reviewing each match.

The Rollins engagement was played at Winter Park, Fla., and Carolina triumphed by 8-1. Skakle commented:

"Rollins has a better than average team. Our boys were a little tired from the long trip (700 miles). But they played well, and we just took 'em one by one. We tried not to think about Michigan and Miami."

The netters then traveled to Coral Gables, where they edged Michigan, 5-4. Said Skakle:

"Michigan is a better team than Rollins. Their first three men are Canadians, and they're excellent players. We split the singles matches 3-3. We lost the top three, won the bottom three and won two doubles matches to clinch the thing."

The closeness of this match, however, was probably attributed more to the weather than to Michigan's talent. "The sun now really started to beat us," Skakle explained. "Gosh, the temperature must have been 90-95 degrees. And three of our boys became nauseated from the sun."

Still, the Michigan challenge was checked.

Skakle Wanted Miami Match

THUS THE STAGE was set for Saturday's clash with Miami. This was the big one. Both teams entered the tilt with undefeated marks, and the Tar Heels were eager to avenge last year's only loss — a 3-6 stumbling to this same Miami team. This was the one match both Skakle and the players wanted most.

Skakle, though disappointed, continued to praise his netmen. "The fellows gave 100 per cent effort," he said as he leaned forward in his chair. "I couldn't have asked for more."

What, then, were the main reasons for losing?

Coach Skakle again referred to the weather. "I'm not making excuses, but the sun was what beat us. It was hot!" The coach knew what he was talking about, because the thermometer at Miami registered a sizzling 98 degrees.

"But I think several of the matches could have gone either way," emphasized Skakle. As an example he pointed to Ted Hoehn's 3-0 lead before slowing down. "Just one or two breaks, and the final score could have been different."

The Tar Heel coach then settled back in his chair and gazed through the window at a blue sky. "I honestly believe that if we had played them a month later and on a neutral site, we might win." He meant it.

For a team that traveled 2,200 miles and had to play matches on three successive sweltering days, North Carolina indeed had a good trip.

Sigmon, Smith Captain Grids

Tackle Gene Sigmon and wingback Roger Smith were chosen this week to co-captain next year's edition of the North Carolina football team. Sigmon, from Newton, and Smith, of Albemarle, will lead the Tar Heels through a 10-game schedule which opens here Sept. 21 against Virginia.

* * *

The word is out that next year's team will be outfitted with a complete new uniform. Special emphasis will be placed in making jersey numbers easily identified.

Jerry Cabe, UNC's wrestling captain-elect, spent several days at Davidson College during the Easter vacation period working out with the Pan-American grappling team. Praised Jerry: "Those boys were plenty good. I think we can expect a fine showing from them in Brazil."

Ken Willard, Brown Smash For Distance

COLUMBIA, S. C. — Ken Willard powered a three-run home run over the left field fence here yesterday as North Carolina's streaking Tar Heels smacked South Carolina, 8-3.

It was the fifth straight win and the first in ACC play for coach Walt Rabb's forces, who bombed USC starter Jerry Johnson for three runs in the first and four more in the second. Gamecock ace John Coleman relieved in the second and afterwards held the Heels to one run, a solo homer by Bill Brown in the seventh. But the damage had been done.

Lefty Larry Jenkins started for UNC and picked up his second victory of the season, though he needed help from Spence Willard. Willard came on with two out in the sixth and limited the Gamecocks to one single the rest of the way.

Dickie Prindle's single pushed across two runs to start the scoring in the first. A walk to Tom Wright had loaded the bases, and Prindle's hit scored Garry Black and Willard, who was on on an error. Moments later, Wright tallied when Brown's grounder was booted.

In the second, Jenkins was safe on still another Gamecock miscue, Buddy Tilden singled, and Jim Speight followed with another single, scoring Jenkins. Willard then blasted his third home run of the season to sew it up for UNC.

Brown also cleared the left field fence with a 360-foot seventh-inning drive that completed the Tar Heel assault. It was his second round-tripper of the year.

UNC's Jenkins was touched for a two-run single by Jack McCathern in the third and a run-scoring double by Dick Mosely in the sixth. The slender southpaw gave up four hits in all.

UNC Cindermen Visit Strong Terps

By FRED HOBSON

Carolina's track team, fresh from a good showing in the Furman Relays, will take on a strong Maryland squad at College Park this afternoon.

Coach Dale Ransom says it'll take "a high-quality performance" to defeat the perennial ACC champion Terps. He added, "The events should be close, but the score doesn't always indicate the closeness."

The highlight of the meet will probably be the high jump pitting Carolina's Tommy Clark, holder of a record-breaking 6'9½" leap, and Joe Huffman against the Terps' talented twosome of Jim Bland and George Leonard.

Carmine Lunetta and Art Maillet provide Carolina strength in the 2-mile run. Jim Brown, in the 120 high hurdles and 330 intermediate hurdles, and Bob Hart, in the 440, are other Tar Heel standouts.

"We've got a good team this year and hope they'll come up to their capabilities," Coach Ransom said. "We expect to be stronger later in the year when some footballers can help us out.

"It's difficult to tell just how ready we are for this meet," the veteran mentor added. "The boys have just returned from vacation and haven't had much practice time."

The Tar Heel cindermen hold wins over State and Clemson in dual meets, and were runners-up in the Florida Relays. They finished in the top three in the South Carolina and Furman Relays.

Clark's prolific jump, best in the Furman event, beat his previous high of 6'8" set in the National Indoor Games.

How Ford economy won for Tiny Lund at Daytona

The Daytona 500 is one of America's toughest stock car events. It measures the toughness, stability, over-all performance and economy characteristics of the cars that take up its challenge—in a way that compresses years of driving punishment into 500 blazing miles. This year mechanical failures claimed over 50 per cent of the cars that entered. That's why Tiny Lund's victory in a Ford (with four other Fords right behind him) is a remarkable testimony to sheer engineering excellence.

Lund attributed his victory in part to the "missing pit stop." He made one less pit stop for fuel than his competition—proving that Ford economy can pay off in some fairly unlikely situations!

Economy and the winner of the Daytona 500 might sound like odd bedfellows at first. Yet economy is basic in every car we make . . . yes, even the Thunderbird is an economy car in its own way. Here's what we mean . . .

Economy is the measure of service and satisfaction the customer receives in relation to the price he pays for it. It does not mean, however, austerity . . . you have taught us this. Americans want—and we try hard to give them—cars that are comfortable to ride in, fun to drive, and powerful enough to get out of their own way. Not many Americans want to settle for basic transportation. You see this in our sales figures—more than half of our 1963 sales are coming from the top of each model line. We're selling convertibles, hardtops, the jazzy cars . . . the bucket-seat, high-performance, luxury editions are going like hot cakes.

Yet for all the fun that people are demanding in their cars, they still are very conscious of the element of thrift—of avoiding unnecessary expense. This is the kind of economy we build into every car from the compact Falcon to the luxurious Thunderbird.

There's a special economy, for instance, in Ford's freedom from service. Every car and virtually every wagon can travel 36,000 miles before it needs a major chassis lubrication. Other routine service has been reduced, too—because these Fords are simply built better—and of better materials—than ever before.

In its own elegant way, even the Thunderbird gives you economy. It will travel 100,000 miles or 3 years before you have to lubricate the chassis. Thunderbirds have a way of becoming classics—as a look at their remarkably high resale value will quickly tell you. This, too, is economy.

Once, long ago—before the arrival of the Income Tax—a wealthy lady was asked to comment on the solid gold plumbing of her latest villa at Newport. "So thrifty, my dear," said the dowager . . . "it will never, ever rust."

Economy then, is many things to many people. Whatever economy means to you, you're pretty sure to find it in a Ford.

America's liveliest, most care-free cars!

Mock Trial Jury Rules 'No Case' In Phelps Libel Suit

By LOU ROSENTHAL

A favorable verdict for the Daily Tar Heel was returned Friday night at the Law School Mock Trial, when the 12-man jury found for the DTH in a civil libel suit brought by Larry Phelps.

The jury deliberated for almost an hour before returning its 10-2 decision.

The trial, under sponsorship of Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity, was based upon an allegedly libelous editorial appearing in the DTH, calling Phelps no more than an 'agent' of Communist Russia.

Phelps' attorneys, Joel Friedberg and Joe Roberts, called down the editorial, and its author, DTH Co-editor David Ethridge, saying the editorial was libelous and damaging, and asked $55,000 in total damages—$5,000 for actual damages and $50,000 for punitive damages.

Presiding Judge Malcolm B. Seawell, N. C. Attorney General under Governor Luther Hodges, and a former Raleigh Superior Court Judge, commented that the trial was "much better by having a civil action for libel, than the usual murder trial.

"All did a grand job," said the Chapel Hill resident at the end of the trial. "Loyalty is to the government and the law. I went to the USSR last year, and I have never seen more pitiful people than those on the farms. The collective farmers are poverty-stricken."

Judge Seawell announced at the start of the trial that "I am Malcolm B., not Malcolm X," in reference to the speech of the Black Muslim leader on the campus Friday night.

The verdict of the jury was not unanimous, but the attorneys for both sides had agreed that a majority decision would be accepted to prevent a mistrial.

The first witness was the complainant, Phelps. Examined by Roberts, Phelps said that he came from a small town, and had held an appointment to West Point from former Rep. Carl Durham.

When asked about his leanings to Marxist-Leninist feelings, he replied that until he had entered UNC, he had no such feelings, but then traced his evolution as a Marxist-Leninist to his appearance in court. "This has helped me feel my position as a United States citizen, and what is happening in the U. S., and better advance U. S. civilization in general. My action is conscious thought of what is good for humanity and the U. S."

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Charles Katzenstein, Phelps called himself a Communist, "with qualifications." The defendant's counsel referred to his "qualified communism" throughout the trial.

Phelps said that he didn't believe in God, and that "we all know that truth is relative at certain times to men, judged in terms of man, and his existence while he lives.

"Capitalism is nothing more than 20th century slavery," he replied when queried about his racial opinions.

The plaintiff said he attempted to go to Cuba in December, 1962, but was foiled by the State Department. A document was shown to him that was identified as distributed by the Progressive Labor Movement, of which Phelps is co-chairman, and was later read to the court.

The only other witness for Phelps was his academic advisor Clifford M. Foust, a professor in the UNC History Department. Professor Foust acted as Phelps' "expert witness," and testified as to Phelps' possible connection with the Soviet Union, either as a "witting or unwitting agent."

Their questioning brought to light the dispute over the word "agent," whether it meant a paid representative of the Soviet Union, or an unwitting disciple of the USSR's aims.

Ethridge said he meant it as "furthering the aims of the USSR, and not a paid agent." Blanchard felt that "it was possible that a better choice of words might have been used, but the staff felt that agent—in quotes—was the best word. In no sense were we implying that he was a paid agent."

When Blanchard was asked if he had ever seen Phelps arm himself, the DTH Co-editor replied, "Well, I have seen him carrying a tray full of knives in Lenoir Hall."

While Ethridge was on the witness stand, Friedberg read to the court a DTH article in which Managing Editor Wayne King called the attorney a "shyster lawyer . . . con-man . . . crook. He should be run out of town on a rail . . . tarred . . . and feathered."

The DTH attorneys then presented their "expert witness," James Roberts, a graduate student in Political Science, specializing in Soviet government, Communist theory, and fluent in Russian.

Katzenstein read the Progressive Labor movement's documents to the court. The document called for opposition to "Kennedy's War Policy against Cuba," and asked for readers to rise against President Kennedy and "link arms with our Cuban brothers to preserve peace."

"Mr. Phelps," he said, "is a consistent Marxist-Leninist and under certain circumstances would carry out his ideas to a logical conclusion.

"If necessary, violent action would be taken. The Progressive Labor movement is more militant than the Communist Party. The national leadership is composed of ex-communists who have been disenchanted with the rightism of the American Communist Party. It is conceivable that he (Phelps) would take action against the United States."

The DTH's last witness was James Carson, a UNC law student. Carson testified that he and a group of law students went to a meeting of the New Left, a leftist organization, last October, to hear a seminar on disarmament.

"Mr. Phelps expressed the view that the USSR was justified in crushing the Hugarian uprising; and that the USSR, and not the U. S., was to be trusted in test ban talks," Carson testified.

In cross-examination by Friedberg, Carson was asked if the purpose of the law students going to the meeting was not to "break up that commie meeting." (Friedberg was one of the students who attended.)

Carson answered it was not the purpose, and when questioned why the chief of campus security force was present, the law student said, "Mr. Beaumont was sitting in a window, but I understand he goes to all their meetings."

In his argument to the jury, Katzenstein said that the defense had "established beyond a shadow of a doubt, the truth of the editorial.

"He (Phelps) is dedicated to bringing communism to the United States. If anything, the DTH understated its description of the defendant. Phelps couldn't help answering questonings by justification of the Party Line."

Friedberg said that Phelps didn't agree with the Cuban document in its entirety, and that Phelps' views are to forward America. "The defendant has not tried

Richard Hesse Named To Lead '64 Symposium

National Security Chosen As Topic

"National security and its impact on American Culture" will be the general topic of the 1964 Carolina Symposium, it was decided by the symposium committee this week.

Richard Hesse, a sophomore from Metairie, La., has been appointed as Symposium chairman, and Bev Haynes, a junior from Washington, D. C., has been named secretary.

Terry Bond, a sophomore from Batavia, Ill., is the vice-chairman and chairman of the program committee. Dr. David T. Lapkin, Professor of Economics, is the faculty advisor to the committee.

The definite title for next year's symposium has not been announced, and no committee chairmen have been appointed. Miss Haynes said that "sometime in the next ten days, we will iron these things out.

The 1964 Symposium has a proposed $10,000 budget, $2,000 more than any previous symposium. Only $2,000 of this will come from the Student Legislature, the rest coming from grants and donations.

The dates announced for next year's program are April 5 thru 8. The committee hopes to have discussion groups on symposium subjects in campus living residences starting this spring. This has been done before according to Miss Haynes, and proved very successful in the past.

The symposium will consider American culture and the control of information as related to national security. The committee hopes to have an analysis of literature, tracing the cold war through the American novel.

Another proposed topic for seminars and symposiums speakers is the value of the individual: Whether being psychologically prepared for peace will interfere with the ability to cope with warfare.

The final idea that will be discussed is what has happened to the standards that control our society.

Malcolm X Speaks Here

'X' Says Negroes Will Pass Whites

By BILL DOWELL

"The difference between liberals and conservatives is that the liberals have developed the art of using the Negro," Malcolm X said Friday night.

"The white liberal is foxy," the Muslim leader said, "where the white conservative is usually honest and lets the Negro know what he thinks of him."

The meeting between Malcolm X and Negro Attorney Floyd McKissick of Durham was moved to Memorial Hall after the Howell Hall audience overflowed. About 1600 people attended.

Malcolm X said that the Muslims have no desire to be equal to the whites because that would limit them to the level of the whites.

The whites, he said, claimed that the Negroes couldn't have equal rights because they were always fighting or getting drunk or being immoral and then, when the Black Muslims came along and didn't operate that way, the whites didn't like that either.

The Muslims, Malcolm X continued, placed heavy emphasis on education and morality. No drinking is allowed and prayers are said five times a day.

"What the Honorable Elijah Mohammed has done," he said, "is to clear up what four hundred years of slavery at the hands of your forefathers did. That is what all the organizations in Washington can't do."

"There was a Buddhist world, a Jewish world, and a Christian world," he said. "Negroes come from the Islam world. We feel we can better solve our own problems in our own way."

Islam, which means submission to God, could be followed by anyone who is willing to submit to the will of Allah, X said. The complexion of a man's skin is not important as it is in the Christian church where color is a bar. Later, however, X said that white people are not allowed into Muslim Mosques because of the sins which the American whites committed during slavery. Whites who might come from Europe, he continued, take advantage of the benefits gained by the original masters and are therefore subject to the same penalty.

Referring to the refusal on the part of city officials in Columbia, S. C. and Durham to allow him to use city -owned speaking facilities on the grounds that the Muslims were not not a religious group, Malcolm X quoted the part of the Bible in which Christ tells his followers to shake the dust from their feet where they are not wanted and the dust will become a curse to those who would not let them speak.

McKissick said he believes that the Muslim movement "has grown out of the frustration of the American Negro."

Aid-To-Education Bill Will Reach House Tuesday

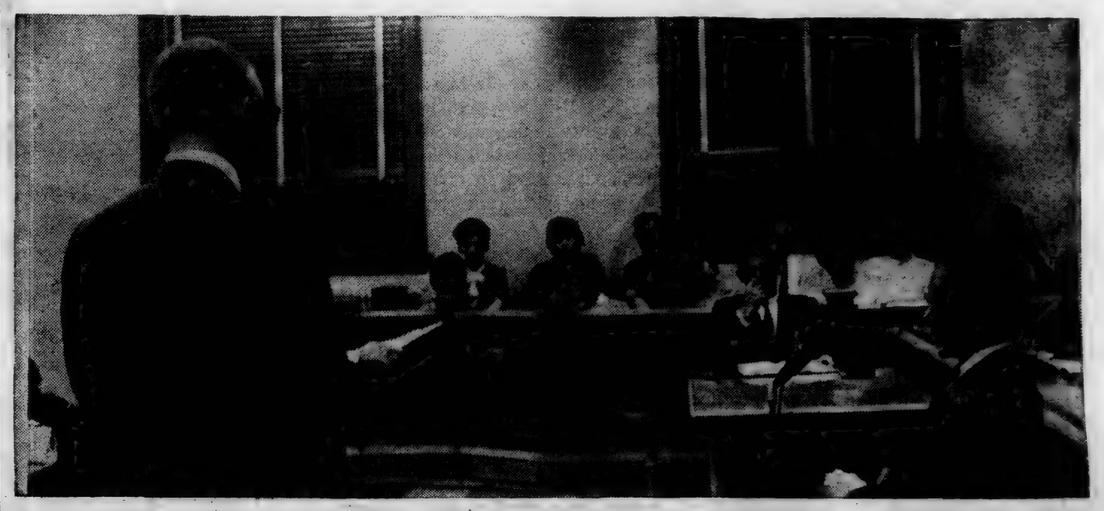
$237 Million Would Aid Health Schools

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The first educational bill of the season will be considered by the House next week amid grumblings of dissatisfaction from some traditional friends of school aid.

Up for consideration on Tuesday is a $237 million measure to assist in the construction of schools of medicine, denistry and other "health professions." Also included are provisions for loans to medical, dental and osteopathic students.

Opposition to the legislation is negligible. What is bothering advocates of federal aid to schools is the timing and the form in which the bill is arriving on the floor.

May Hurt Chances



Rep. Edith Green, D—Ore., chairmon of the House education subcommittee, has been battling for a general college aid bill and feels that action now on the medical school measure may hurt the chances of her legislation.

Mrs. Green and other members of the House Education and Labor Committee—both Republican and Democratic—wanted the medical school bill either tied to the general college aid measure or at least considered after her $2.7 billion proposal was considered. Aid to medical schools was approved by the House Commerce Committee, which oversees the U. S. Public Health Service, the agency responsible for carrying out the program. Supporters of substantial federal aid to colleges are worried that a vote for the medical school bill will diminish enthusiasm of many members for voting in favor of a second school aid bill.

Rep. Albert Quie, Minn., a Republican member of the Education and Labor Committee, went before the House Rules Committee two weeks ago in an effort to stall action on the medical bill until the general bill was considered.

Team Player

Mrs. Green did not ask the committee to hold up the medical aid measure. Nor did she urge the members to clear it. She labeled herself a "team player" and implied that she was ready to go along with a White House decision to sidetrack the general bill in favor of the medical school measure.

Duke Report Calls End To Segregation

Duke University has ended 125 years of racial segregation in its undergraduate colleges with the admission of several Negoes to the Class of 1967, according to a Duke Chronicle report.

The Administration had no comment on the report. Official announcement from the University is pending acceptance of admission by May 1, the Chronicle learned.

Graduate and professional schools were desegregated in March, 1961, by order of the Trustees, and four Negroes were admitted the following September.

The Chronicle source indicated the Negroes would receive financial aid and that notifications of scholarships and grants-in-aid will be mailed Tuesday.

Mariam Makeba, an African folksinger who performed on the Duke campus last week, donated her fee to establish a scholarship fund for a Negro student from Ghana.

Nixon Raps Cuba Policies Of JFK

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Richard M. Nixon charged Saturday that "with American acquiesence" the Soviet position in Cuba is firmer now than it was a year ago.

The former vice president, addressing the American Society of Newspaper Editors from the same platform where President Kennedy spoke Friday, said the Cuban venture has been "a net gain, not a loss" for Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

"We must no longer postpone making a command decision to do WHATEVER IS NECESSARY TO FORCE the removal of the Soviet beachhead," Nixon said. "The United States cannot tolerate the continued existence of a Soviet military and subversive base 90 miles from our shore."

His speech to the country's leading newspaper editors was a sharp attack on the foreign policies of the man who defeated him in the 1960 presidential election, and who before the same forum Friday argued that the United States must use "restraint and a sense of responsibility" in dealing with Cuba.

Neutralist Routed

VIENTIANE, Laos UPI—Communist Pathet Lao troops have driven neutralist Gen. Kong Le from his airport stronghold on the Plain of Jars and are in position to crush him completely, military sources reported Saturday.

The sources said Kong Le's men withdrew to the village of Man Phanh, about six miles northwest of the airport, and began digging in for a possible new attack by the Pathet Lao. However, the Pathet Lao did not immediately follow up their advantage, the reports said.

Fighting also was reported to have flared at Vang Vieng, an important road junction only 50 miles north of Vientiane. The Village on the main road from Vientiane to the royal capital of Luang Prabang, has been held jointly by neutralist and Pathet Lao forces.

Wall Reinforced

BERLIN (UPI) — Communist border guards Saturday rein-forced tank traps along the Berlin wall to prevent any more escapes like the one last Wednesday when an East Berlin mechanic crashed through in an armored car.

West Berlin police said the Communists used a dredge to widen an anti-tank trench started Friday across the street where the mechanic fled.

The mechanic, 19-year-old Wolfgang Engels, was recovering in a West Berlin hospital from bullet wounds received when he jumped from the armored car to make the final dash to freedom. He was struck by a bullet in the back and grazed on the arm when the Communist guards fired a dozen bursts.

King Out Of Jail

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI)—Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.—sporting an eight day growth of beard—was freed from the Birmingham jail on bond Saturday and promptly vowed to continue the desegregation drive he kicked off here 18 days ago.

King said he decided to post the $300 bond so he would be free this weekend to discuss strategy for a court appearance Monday, when he is to answer charges of contempt.

The charges were brought when King ignored a court order banning further racial demonstrations in this steel city.

Candidates In Village Announced

Victory Villagers will elect 10 members to the Board of Aldermen by mail-in ballots distributed Tuesday at the homes of the Village's 500 voters, Lawerence Posey, present chairman, has announced. The ballots will be counted Monday, April 29.

The Board of Aldermen, the governing body for Victory Village, receives funds from Student Legislature. The Board operates a day care center for children, handles disputes, promotes recreational activities, and deals with other matters concerning Village residents.

This year, Posey said, much revamping of the housing situation had been done. Married students are now placed on request lists and attempts are being made to satisfy grievances arising over placement.

Recreational improvements are being carried out. New equipment is being provided for the Village playground. Funds have been made available for basketball goals, shuffleboards, volleyball and badminton courts.

15 Chairmanships Open For Next Year

Students interested in being interviewed for one of the 15 student Government committee chairmanships open for next year must fill out application blanks prior to their interviews, Student Body President-elect Mike Lawler announced yesterday. These forms are now available at the Informations Desk in GM.

Interviews will be held by Lawler, Tuesday-Friday of next week in the SG offices in GM. Interviews will last approximately ten minutes each and will be held Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, from 1-3:30, and Wednesday and Friday, from 2-3:30.

The following chairmanships are open: Campus Affairs, Communications; Orientation; Academic Affairs; National Merit; Carolina Forum; Campus Committee of National Student Association; International Students Board; Consolidated University Student Council; State Affairs; Honor System Commission; Elections Board and Student Credit Commission.

Three new executive sub-committees have been established for which chairmanship interviews will also be held. These include the Co-op, University Abroad and Orientation Reform Committees.

Dormitory newspaper editors are also requested to interview for chairmanship of the Editors Roundtable.

Lawler Meets Press Wednesday Afternoon

Student body president-elect Mike Lawler announced yesterday that he will hold the first of his weekly press conferences Wednesday afternoon in Graham Memorial.

Lawler said that he would report and comment upon the outcome of Tuesday's meeting with the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline and officials of the University Administration. "Both general and specific concerns in the area of student conduct will be discussed at this meeting," he said.

DTH co-editor Gary Blanchard yesterday requested all students who have questions for the newly-elected student government leader to direct them to the Daily Tar Heel office in GM by Tuesday afternoon.

Education Called National Problem

By PETE WALES

"Education is a national problem and must be treated as such by the federal government," Rep. Frank Thompson (D-New Jersey) said at a luncheon at the Holiday Inn in Durham yesterday.

Thompson's address closed out a two-day conference of the North Carolina chapter of the Federation of College Young Democrats to rally support for President Kennedy's National Education Improvement Act.

Many of the delegates were preparing for the National Student Federal Aid to Education Conference to be held in Washington, D. C. April 25-26.

"Despite the comparative greatness and wealth of this country, we have a surprisingly low education standard," Thompson said.

Thompson, a Wake Forest graduate from Trenton, N. J., feels that the aid to education bill should be passed on a need basis. The poorer states would receive the majority of the aid at the expense of the richer ones.

He cited states rights as being a major issue blocking all aid to education bills in the past several years. States-righters feel that the federal government would have undue influence over schools of it were to supply their funds.

"The federal government has given aid to education since the Northwest Ordinance in 1787," Thompson said. "Yet it has never interfered with schools or tried to pressure them in any way."

Infirmary

Guatemala Student Group Visits Here

The students are participants in the Special Exchanges Program of the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the U. S. Department of State. Their program has been arranged by the National Social Welfare Assembly.

Miss Anne Queen, is hostess for the Guatemalan students' visit. While on the UNC campus, the Guatemalans will visit with UNC students, student government officials, and members of the Chapel Hill community.

Tonight, the Guatemalans will meet with the Student Peace Union and tomorrow they will lunch with the student NAACP chapter. They will dine at UNC sorority houses tomorrow night.

The visiting Guatemalan students range from 17 to 27 years of age. They are representing the Youth Association of the Guatemalan-American Binational Center in Guatemala City. This association aims at promoting cultural and social exchange with local and American institutions to further strengthen understanding and friendship between the United States and Guatemala and promoting the bilingual status of the organization by providing activities which encourage the practice of both English and Spanish.

The Chapel Hill-Raleigh-Durham area is the second stop on the Guatemalan students' visit. They arrived here from New Orleans and before leaving the United States on May 14, will visit Pittsburgh, Pa., New York City, Boston, Mass., Washington, D. C., and Miami, Fla.

Mock Trial Jury Rules 'No Case' In Phelps Libel Suit

By LOU ROSENTHAL

A favorable verdict for the Daily Tar Heel was returned Friday night at the Law School Mock Trial, when the 12-man jury found for the DTH in a civil libel suit brought by Larry Phelps.

The jury deliberated for almost an hour before returning its 10-2 decision.

The trial, under sponsorship of Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity, was based upon an allegedly libelous editorial appearing in the DTH, calling Phelps no more than an 'agent' of Communist Russia.

Phelps' attorneys, Joel Friedberg and Joe Roberts, called down the editorial, and its author, DTH Co-editor David Ethridge, saying the editorial was libelous and damaging, and asked $55,000 in total damages—$5,000 for actual damages and $50,000 for punitive damages.

Presiding Judge Malcolm B. Seawell, N. C. Attorney General under Governor Luther Hodges, and a former Raleigh Superior Court Judge, commented that the trial was "much better by having a civil action for libel, than the usual murder trial.

"All did a grand job," said the Chapel Hill resident at the end of the trial. "Loyalty is to the government and the law. I went to the USSR last year, and I have never seen more pitiful people than those on the farms. The collective farmers are poverty-stricken."

Judge Seawell announced at the start of the trial that "I am Malcolm B., not Malcolm X," in reference to the speech of the Black Muslim leader on the campus Friday night.

The verdict of the jury was not unanimous, but the attorneys for both sides had agreed that a majority decision would be accepted to prevent a mistrial.

The first witness was the complainant, Phelps. Examined by Roberts, Phelps said that he came from a small town, and had held an appointment to West Point from former Rep. Carl Durham.

When asked about his leanings to Marxist-Leninist feelings, he replied that until he had entered UNC, he had no such feelings, but then traced his evolution as a Marxist-Leninist to his appearance in court. "This has helped me feel my position as a United States citizen, and what is happening in the U. S., and better advance U. S. civilization in general. My action is conscious thought of what is good for humanity and the U. S."

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Charles Katzenstein, Phelps called himself a Communist, "with qualifications." The defendant's counsel referred to his "qualified communism" throughout the trial.

Phelps said that he didn't believe in God, and that "we all know that truth is relative at certain times to men, judged in terms of man, and his existence while he lives.

"Capitalism is nothing more than 20th century slavery," he replied when queried about his racial opinions.

The plaintiff said he attempted to go to Cuba in December, 1962, but was foiled by the State Department. A document was shown to him that was identified as distributed by the Progressive Labor Movement, of which Phelps is co-chairman, and was later read to the court.

The only other witness for Phelps was his academic advisor Clifford M. Foust, a professor in the UNC History Department. Professor Foust acted as Phelps' "expert witness," and testified as to Phelps' possible connection with the Soviet Union, either as a "witting or unwitting agent."

Their questioning brought to light the dispute over the word "agent," whether it meant a paid representative of the Soviet Union, or an unwitting disciple of the USSR's aims.

Ethridge said he meant it as "furthering the aims of the USSR, and not a paid agent." Blanchard felt that "it was possible that a better choice of words might have been used, but the staff felt that agent—in quotes—was the best word. In no sense were we implying that he was a paid agent."

When Blanchard was asked if he had ever seen Phelps arm himself, the DTH Co-editor replied, "Well, I have seen him carrying a tray full of knives in Lenoir Hall."

While Ethridge was on the witness stand, Friedberg read to the court a DTH article in which Managing Editor Wayne King called the attorney a "shyster lawyer . . . con-man . . . crook. He should be run out of town on a rail . . . tarred . . . and feathered."

The DTH attorneys then presented their "expert witness," James Rcberts, a graduate student in Political Science, specializing in Soviet government, Communist theory, and fluent in Russian.

Katzenstein read the Progressive Labor movement's documents to the court. The document called for opposition to "Kennedy's War Policy against Cuba," and asked for readers to rise against President Kennedy and "link arms with our Cuban brothers to preserve peace."

"Mr. Phelps," he said, "is a consistent Marxist-Leninist and under certain circumstances would carry out his ideas to a logical conclusion.

"If necessary, violent action would be taken. The Progressive Labor movement is more militant than the Communist Party. The national leadership is composed of ex-communists who have been disenchanted with the rightism of the American Communist Party. It is conceivable that he (Phelps) would take action against the United States."

The DTH's last witness was James Carson, a UNC law student. Carson testified that he and a group of law students went to a meeting of the New Left, a leftist organization, last October, to hear a seminar on disarmament.

"Mr. Phelps expressed the view that the USSR was justified in crushing the Hugarian uprising; and that the USSR, and not the U. S., was to be trusted in test ban talks," Carson testified.

In cross-examination by Friedberg, Carson was asked if the purpose of the law students going to the meeting was not to "break up that commie meeting." (Friedberg was one of the students who attended.)

Carson answered it was not the purpose, and when questioned why the chief of campus security force was present, the law student said, "Mr. Beaumont was sitting in a window, but I understand he goes to all their meetings."

In his argument to the jury, Katzenstein said that the defense had "established beyond a shadow of a doubt, the truth of the editorial.

"He (Phelps) is dedicated to bringing communism to the United States. If anything, the DTH understated its description of the defendant. Phelps couldn't help answering questonings by justification of the Party Line."

Friedberg said that Phelps didn't agree with the Cuban document in its entirety, and that Phelps' views are to forward America. "The defendant has not tried

Richard Hesse Named To Lead '64 Symposium

National Security Chosen As Topic

"National security and its impact on American Culture" will be the general topic of the 1964 Carolina Symposium, it was decided by the symposium committee this week.

Richard Hesse, a sophomore from Metairie, La., has been appointed as Symposium chairman, and Bev Haynes, a junior from Washington, D. C., has been named secretary.

Terry Bond, a sophomore from Batavia, Ill., is the vice-chairman and chairman of the program committee. Dr. David T. Lapkin, Professor of Economics, is the faculty advisor to the committee.

The definite title for next year's symposium has not been announced, and no committee chairmen have been appointed. Miss Haynes said that "sometime in the next ten days, we will iron these things out."

The 1964 Symposium has a proposed $10,000 budget, $2,000 more than any previous symposium. Only $2,000 of this will come from the Student Legislature, the rest coming from grants and donations.

The dates announced for next year's program are April 5 thru 9. The committee hopes to have discussion groups on symposium subjects in campus living residences starting this spring. This has been done before according to Miss Haynes, and proved very successful in the past.

The symposium will consider American culture and the control of information as related to national security. The committee hopes to have an analysis of literature, tracing the cold war through the American novel.

Another proposed topic for seminars and symposiums speakers is the value of the individual: Whether being psychologically prepared for peace will interfere with the ability to cope with warfare.

The final idea that will be discussed is what has happened to the standards that control our society.

Malcolm X Speaks Here

'X' Says Negroes Will Pass Whites

By BILL DOWELL

"The difference between liberals and conservatives is that the liberals have developed the art of using the Negro," Malcolm X said Friday night.

"The white liberal is foxy," the Muslim leader said, "where the white conservative is usually honest and lets the Negro know what he thinks of him."

The meeting between Malcolm X and Negro Attorney Floyd McKissick of Durham was moved to Memorial Hall after the Howell Hall audience overflowed. About 1600 people attended.

Malcolm X said that the Muslims have no desire to be equal to the whites because that would limit them to the level of the whites.

The whites, he said, claimed that the Negroes couldn't have equal rights because they were always fighting or getting drunk or being immoral and then, when the Black Muslims came along and didn't operate that way, the whites didn't like that either.

The Muslims, Malcolm X continued, placed heavy emphasis on education and morality. No drinking is allowed and prayers are said five times a day.

"What the Honorable Elijah Mohammed has done," he said, "is to clear up what four hundred years of slavery at the hands of your forefathers did. That is what all the organizations in Washington can't do."

"There was a Buddhist world, a Jewish world, and a Christian world," he said. "Negroes come from the Islam world. We feel we can better solve our own problems in our own way."

Islam, which means submission to God, could be followed by anyone who is willing to submit to the will of Allah, X said. The complexion of a man's skin is not important as it is in the Christian church where color is a bar. Later, however, X said that white people are not allowed into Muslim Mosques because of the sins which the American whites committed during slavery. Whites who might come from Europe, he continued, take advantage of the benefits gained by the original masters and are therefore subject to the same penalty.

Referring to the refusal on the part of city officials in Columbia, S. C. and Durham to allow him to use city -owned speaking facilities on the grounds that the Muslims were not not a religious group, Malcolm X quoted the part of the Bible in which Christ tells his followers to shake the dust from their feet where they are not wanted and the dust will become a curse to those who would not let them speak.

McKissick said he believes that the Muslim movement "has grown out of the frustration of the American Negro."

Aid-To-Education Bill Will Reach House Tuesday

$237 Million Would Aid Health Schools

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The first educational bill of the season will be considered by the House next week amid grumblings of dissatisfaction from some traditional friends of school aid.

Up for consideration on Tuesday is a $237 million measure to assist in the construction of schools of medicine, denistry and other "health professions." Also included are provisions for loans to medical, dental and osteopathic students.

Opposition to the legislation is negligible. What is bothering advocates of federal aid to schools is the timing and the form in which the bill is arriving on the floor.

May Hurt Chances

Rep. Edith Green, D—Ore., chairmon of the House education subcommittee, has been battling for a general college aid bill and feels that action now on the medical school measure may hurt the chances of her legislation.

Mrs. Green and other members of the House Education and Labor Committee—both Republican and Democratic—wanted the medical school bill either tied to the general college aid measure or at least considered after her $2.7 billion proposal was considered. Aid to medical schools was approved by the House Commerce Committee, which oversees the U. S. Public Health Service, the agency responsible for carrying out the program. Supporters of substantial federal aid to colleges are worried that a vote for the medical school bill will diminish enthusiasm of many members for voting in favor of a second school aid bill.

Rep. Albert Quie, Minn., a Republican member of the Education and Labor Committee, went before the House Rules Committee two weeks ago in an effort to stall action on the medical bill until the general bill was considered.

Team Player

Mrs. Green did not ask the committee to hold up the medical aid measure. Nor did she urge the members to clear it. She labeled herself a "team player" and implied that she was ready to go along with a White House decision to sidetrack the general bill in favor of the medical school measure.

Duke Report Calls End To Segregation

Duke University has ended 125 years of racial segregation in its undergraduate colleges with the admission of several Negoes to the Class of 1967, according to a Duke Chronicle report.

The Administration had no comment on the report. Official announcement from the University is pending acceptance of admission by May 1, the Chronicle learned.

Graduate and professional schools were desegregated in March, 1961, by order of the Trustees, and four Negroes were admitted the following September.

The Chronicle source indicated the Negroes would receive financial aid and that notifications of scholarships and grants-in-aid will be mailed Tuesday.

Mariam Makeba, an African folk-singer who performed on the Duke campus last week, donated her fee to establish a scholarship fund for a Negro student from Ghana.

Magazine In Distress

Friday afternoon there was an informal meeting between Robert V. N. Brown, editor-publisher of Reflections magazine, several student legislators, the President and Vice-President of the student body and other interested parties. The purpose of the meeting was to try to find a way to save Reflections Magazine from going under.

The magazine is in serious financial trouble and needs money if it is to continue to publish.

The possibility of a grant from Student Government was discussed and another meeting called for next Saturday. The grant is apparently constitutionally possible, and there is a strong case to be made for it.

As brought out in the meeting, Reflections does enhance the creative framework of Chapel Hill, and thus adds to the reputation of the University. It also provides an excellent outlet for aspiring writers of real talent, and therefore provides another service to the University.

A committee called Reflections Fund has also been started in Chapel Hill and is attempting to raise money to salvage the magazine.. They have asked only token control of the fiscal policies of the magazine in return for their fund raising. They want no control of content, editorial policy or format.

It seems to us that the interests of the University and the town could both be served by saving the publication and that the logical step for Student Government to take would be to make a grant to the Reflections Fund, thus serving the same end, but not saddling itself with the job of overseeing the finances of the publication.

Mr. Brown's editorial judgment is unquestionably good, and Reflections has received national recognition, but his business sense seems a little vague.

This is no condemnation. A man that can put out a publication of the consistently high quality of Reflections need not be worried about balancing books, but someone must.

Reflections Fund is ready to assume this job, and it seems to us that this is a quite fitting way for Student Government to spend some of the $162,000 we were so often told about during the recent campaign.

Efficiency Minus Fanfare

The more we learn about the University's many and varied functions, which go on day after day without fanfare and with at least reasonable efficiency, the more amazed we become that everything doesn't come tumbling down at the first sight of a high wind.

It is a massive job, keeping this educational plant of some 11,000 students, faculty members, administrators and employees going. True there are boo-boos now and then but their real significance lies in the rarity of their ocucrence.

An institution called Lenoir Hall does this and does it well. True, one sometimes finds a piece of eggshell in his scrambled yolks, and occasionally a plate or piece of silverware is less than spotless. But any assembly-line operation slips up now and then, and on the whole Lenoir does an outstanding job.

Especially those women in blue, standing behind the steam tables for hours on end. How they bear up so well, day after day, is as much a mystery as how UNC keeps going with a minimum of goofs.

Mr. Phipps Goes To Raleigh

It is a good thing that the people of Raleigh can take a joke, because Orange County sent them one in the person of representative L. J. Phipps Jr.

Aside from signing the House resolution concerning the Dixie Classic and introducing a bill requiring a compulsory American Government course in all state high schools (which the editorially schizophrenic Durham Herald and the muddle-minded News of Orange County has subscribed to), Representative Phipps last Thursday nominated Representative John H. Kerr for a position on the Board of Trustees of the University,

The foolishness of this latest move can be seen by looking at Representative Kerr's participation so far on the Board.

State law provides that any trustee missing two successive years of Board meetings loses his seat on the Board. This is the manner in which Rep. Kerr's seat became vacant. He didn't attend a meeting of the Board of Trustees for two years. Now Mr. Phipps has nominated him for another eight year term.

In light of the last two years, this is bewildering. The Board of Trustees of the University is no place for a man who has so thoroughly demonstrated his lack of interest and unwillingness to work with the Board.

Postal Cuts

Postmaster General J. Edward Day says his department may be forced to curtail some deliveries if the Senate doesn't restore a House cut of $8,343,150 in the department's request for a supplemental appropriation over the current year's costs.

If the money is not restored, Day says, "we must consider the other alternatives available to us, by either curtailing present services, postponing warranted service extensions, or crippling some other appropriation by transfer of funds."

Just in case the cut isn't restored, we hope one of the curtailments of service involves suspension of congressional franking privileges for the duration of the fiscal crisis.

That alone should cut down the delivery load considerably. And it probably would affect the least number of people in any serious way.

Cafe Pickets Waste Steps, Wellman Says

By WADE WELLMAN

The seemingly futile picketing of the College Cafe still shows no signs of giving up. People never like to admit they are defeated, still less that their efforts have produced just the opposite of the desired effect. This is why the mildly humorous picket line still minces back and forth before the stubborn restaurant, which happens, incidentally, to be a pretty good one, and would probably serve a free meal to the pickets in gratitude for the recent increase of business. It is true that some people avoid the Cafe because of those signs, but for every one that stays away there must be several who now eat at the College Cafe merely to show their contempt for the pseudo-moralists.

Nowadays it is most unfashionable to call oneself a segregationist, but the fashions that come and go in this country seldom express the deep inner feelings of a human being. The crusade for integration now sweeping the United States is largely hypocritical and squares very imperfectly with the private lives of many of its loudest advocates. Hence we are bored to the point of stupor by the trite reiteration: "What's the color of the skin?"—a piece of rhetoric which no intelligent integrationist really believes, and which some now openly admit to be false. Personally, I know two members of the N.A.A.C.P. who frequent a tavern long banned by the organization. No doubt the College Cafe has had many such customers and will have them again when the signs fold up and perish.

I do not for one moment suggest that all integrationists are stupid or hypocritical. On this campus there are some—Jim Clotfelter, for instance—who are not only sincere but intelligent and persuasive. Yet the integrationist arguments, however persuasive they may become, are also wrong. This conclusion is proven by the fact that wherever the movement has achieved its purposes the results have been heartbreaking. The situation now prevalent in the Washington District schools has never stirred anything but revulsion in a sensible observer.

Our national press generally maintains silence on this point, but the massive exodus of white residents from the District surely speaks for itself.

Eventually, I think, the clamor for race-mixing will lose steam and fade away. The entire country has grown weary of it and a strong public reaction against the movement is not unlikely in the near future. No one has been morally uplifted by all of this hypocrisy and can; simply, the nation has been gravely weakened by disunity at the very time when it most needs to be strong. The crusaders for integration will ultimately tire of their useless battle and give it up as a sorry task. Meanwhile, the best thing to do with these people is simply to ignore them—and not let a meaningless picket sign scare us away from a restaurant.

Persistant Posters Irk Dorm Man

To the Editors:

With the end of the campaigning for the various student government offices most of the posters and slogans were taken down. However, one of the campus parties, the University Party, has not removed several large rocks and trees in the area between Teague and Ehringhaus, painted reminders that we should vote for its candidates. Such defacement of the beauty of our campus is certainly a sign of poor taste.

These eyesores should be removed immediately. I believe that most of the boys who walk from Ehringhaus and Craige every morning agree with me. If these painted campaign slogans are not removed, I will surely think twice before supporting the University Party.

Hope Needs Help In Critic's Choice

By LOUIS LEGUM

"Critic's Choice" (at the Varsity through Wednesday) ought to thank God for Bob Hope. Without him, this all too predictable Broadway refugee would be a chilling exercise in how not to make a movie. But fortunately Hope is in it, and when the picture lets him shift into high gear, the whole film gets off the ground with at least a snicker of success.

For good measure Lucille Ball, Marilyn Maxwell, Rip Torn and Jesse Royce Landis have their sometime chaotic moments, too, but essentially "Critic's Choice" is all Bob Hope. When it isn't, things often get embarrassing.

The trick to seeing "Critic's Choice" is to pretend that there's not any plot. Actually, however, there's not much pretending to do, since Jack Sher's script (adapted from the Ira Levin play) doesn't leave too much to the imagination. It's a bunch of nonsense about a famed Broadway critic (Hope) who manages to brush the thesonce-time wife (Ball). Complicatpian stardust from the eyes of his ing matters is Torn as a Don Juan version of Joshua Logan who slithers back and forth across the screen "method-seducing" his feminine playwright. As is to be expected, Hope wisecracks Torn into an ignoble retreat, and at the finale all is well, happily ever after, and whatever other cliches you wish to toss in.

But it really isn't as bad as it sounds. How can it be with Hope swinging from a balcony by his heels, but not quite drunk enough to lose his knack for writing up his wife's play as an Armaggedon wedded to a Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm. In one breath he calls her play sweet enough to give people tooth decay for twelve miles around; and in another, he banishes Torn by admonishing him that his head is probably too big to fit into his compact car.

"Critic's Choice" does have its funny moments, made even funnier because nobody in show business today can beat Hope at delivering a cut or a dig with such detached dryness. Despite what the picture started out to be, at its best it's nothing more than one of Hope's TV monologues, which isn't too bad at all. Go see "Critic's Choice" if you like Bob Hope as much as I do. Otherwise, unless you really enjoy popcorn that much, wait to see "Love is a Ball" next week, because the previews looked great.

Religious Life Is Not Given Encouragement By University

By CLYDE WILSON

Conspicuously close to the front of the current University catalogue you will find, under the title "Religious Interests and Activities", the following inspiring information:

"The interest of the University in the religious life of its students is expressed in the encouragement and support which it extends to the University YMCA and YWCA. These associations are campus-centered groups which seek to meet the religious interests and needs of the student body . . . Just as important to the religious life of the students are the various foundations . . . The churches of Chapel Hill also provide an effective ministry of worship and religious education to the University Community."

Who is kidding whom?

Obviously the University is trying to kid the parents, the trustees and the good people of North Carolina who put up the gold for this institution.

All the religious influence exerted on the average Carolina undergraduate by the Y, the foundations and the churches of Chapel Hill put together probably does not equal the net influence of what he reads on the walls of the dormitory head.

2 Trips

The total collegiate religious career of most students consists of two Sunday morning trips to church somewhere near the beginning of the freshman year.

A few ideas are possibly promoted by the Y, but none of them have anything to do with religion.

If there are any faculty members with religious commitments outside the Religion Department (and how many students ever get around to taking a religion course) they are keeping a well-guarded secret. The atheists and scoffers are less modest.

Obviously there are limits to the emphasis that can be placed on religion at a public university. Moreover anyone who undertakes a college education without reassessment of his beliefs and some thought about the nature of Man and the Universe might as well have stayed home and washed cars.

But the atmosphere of Carolina does not promote the intellectual consideration of beliefs. It promotes merely indifference to them; not the formation of standards but the deterioration of standards.

I can see it now, re-enacted in a 100 towns from Manteo to Murphey. The Carolina student, home for the weekend, is cornered by the devout little old lady who wants to know, "Do those boys really drink and carry on like they say down there at Chapel Hill?"

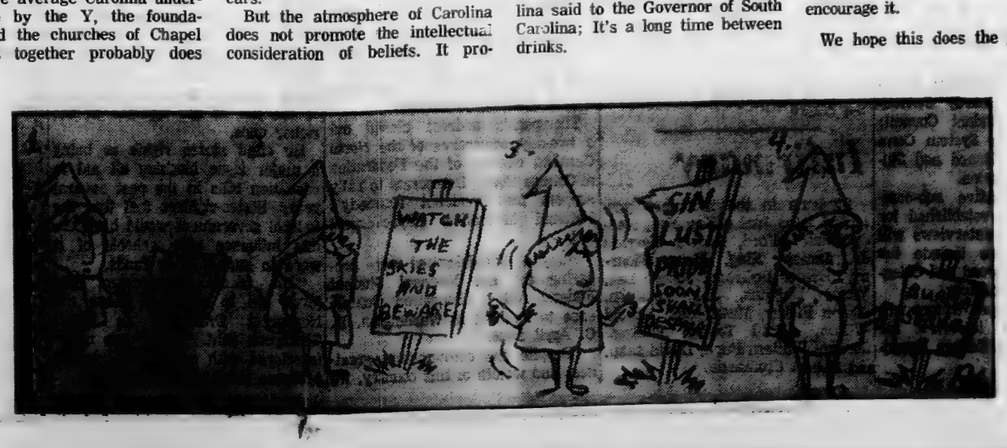
"Well, uh, yes ma'am, some uh of them do. But we boys that study hard try not to let it bother us," you lie.

No Confession

Then there are the parents who want to know if you go to church: "Well, uh, yes Mom, I go to church whenever I can. No I can't seem to remember the preacher's name uh I'll think of it in a minute."

There may possibly be students who keep up a religious life here. If they do they are perserverent souls and worthy of admiration. Their numbers are approximately equal to the number of bullfrogs who whistle through their teeth.

As the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina; It's a long time between drinks.



On Strip Below: Others Invited

This is to introduce the work of Ray Kass, a freshman from Baldwin, N. Y., who is beginning what we hope will be a regular association with the Tar Heel.

This, also, is to invite others of similar talents to bring their work by. We have felt that the Tar Heel could stand more locally-produced art, from editorial cartoons to campus sketches and cartoon strips.

And we have been fairly-well convinced that somewhere among the more than 9,000 students on this campus a good bit of talent exists. The problem is to bring it out and encourage it.

We hope this does the job.

Coed Room Visiting Is Needed

By CHUCK NEELY

We noted in the April 13, 1963, edition of the New York Herald Tribune that Columbia University has established women's visiting hours in men's dormitories. The story pointed out that Barnard College, a women's college closely associated with Columbia, has had men's visiting hours in women's dorms for the past two years.

The article brought to mind the action taken several months ago by the Di-Phi in passing a resolution supporting women's visiting hours in men's dorms. This step has recently been followed by the IDC in recommending a study of the Di-Phi plan, and by the Student Party.

The opening of men's dorm rooms to women guests is a logical step to following the WRC apartment ruling. The idea is a feasible one and would go far towards improving the miserable social facilities available to dormitory residents.

Anyone who has ever lived in a dorm can testify to the great inadequacy of dorm social facilities, Few and far between are the dorm residents who would care to take a date into the smoky haze occupied by a dozen pairs of bloodshot eyes staring at an oft-as-not broken TV.

Graham Memorial is limited in size and just cannot afford much to the date-mined student. One glance at the Rendezvous Room on a weekend night can easily prove that statement. GM does a terrific job with its Free Flicks and its entertainers and occasional dances. But these are not enough.

Without a car, and without any place to go, the average dorm resident is caught in a bind from which there is seemingly no escape. Compounding the situation on this "coed" campus is the men to women ratio of 7-2. The situation is even worse for underclassmen with the vast majority of women being juniors or seniors.

Even with all of these difficulties, the problem is not insoluble. Many of the unsatisfactory conditions could be greatly eased by permitting women in men's rooms during specified hours. With a stereo or hi-fi, small parties could be held for four or five couples. A sign-in and sign-out book could be provided to keep tabs on who is in the dorm.

This plan is not impractical or impossible. Just as it has been implemented elsewhere, so can it also be done here. A little research revealed over forty schools having plans allowing some form of visiting arrangements. These schools including most of the leaders in education in the country, were Ivy League schools, Big Ten universities, far western universities and colleges spread all over the nation. One leader, the University of North Carolina, was not among these schools.

Why?

Are students at Carolina any less mature than students elsewhere? Is the Honor System valid? Is student autonomy a farce? Are the intolerable social conditions now in existence on this campus to be allowed to continue to exist?

These are questions which only you the students, and the student government your representatives, and the school administration can answer.

The Di-Phi has pointed the way. The Student Party and the IDC have made gestures of support. Now is the time for action. Is student government effectual or is it a barren instrument devoted to ego inflation? Another, more recent, Di-Phi resolution charged that student government was useless. Now is the time for student government to refute that charge or stand damned as a farce.

– Jury Rules No Case For Phelps –

to prove it (the editorial) true, but tried to overlook it. Phelps' actions took place under Freedom of Speech, and he has the right to convince everyone that leftist policies are best."

Judge Seawell said the editorial was libelous perse, which entitles it to go to the jury. "The burden is on the defense, and if this has not been done, you must fairly compensate for the injuries suffered."

The jury retired to the jury room. After six ballots produced no unanimous verdict, they returned to the courtroom with the judgment for the DTH.

Phelps commented after the trial that "I am sorry to say that the jury made a grave mistake, not seeing the obvious distinctions in the case. I hope that everyone came away with a better understanding of the situation, and will see its gravity."

Attorney Katzenstein, obviously elated, said he "was pleased that the duty of the DTH to comment intelligently on campus affairs and individuals seems to be well understood."

FILLING A WELL-NEEDED GAP

Although my son is a college freshman, I am glad to say that he is still not too old to climb up on my lap and have a heart-to-heart talk when things are troubling him. My boy is enrolled at Harvard where he is studying to be a fireman. From the time he was a little tiny baby he always said he wanted to be a fireman. Of course, my wife and I believed that he would eventually grow out of it, but no sir, the little chap never wavered in his ambition for one minute!

So here he is at Harvard today taking courses in net holding, mouth-to-mouth breathing, carbon tetrachloride, and Dalmatian dogs. It is a full schedule for the young man, and that, in fact, is exactly what we talked about when last he climbed upon my lap.

He complained that every bit of his time is taken up with his major requirements. He doesn't have so much as one hour a week to sample any of the fascinating courses outside his major—history, literature, language, science, or any of the thousand and one things that appeal to his keen young mind.

I am sure that many of you find yourselves in the same scholastic bind; you are taking so many requirements that you can't find time for some appealing electives. Therefore, in today's column I will forego levity and give you a brief survey in a subject that is probably not included in your curriculum,

He's Still not Too Old

I have asked the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes whether I might employ this column—normally a vehicle for innocent merriment—to pursue this serious end. "Of course you may, crazy kid," they replied kindlily, their grey eyes crinkling at the corners, their manly mouths twisted in funny little grins. If you are a Marlboro smoker—and what intelligent human person is not?—you would expect the makers of Marlboro to be fine men. And so they are—wonderful guys, every man-jack of them—good, generous, understanding, wise. They are each dipped with a pure white filter and come in soft pack or Flip-Top box.

But I digress. We were going to take up a topic you are probably unable to cover in your busy academic life. Let us start with the most basic topic of all—anthropology, the study of man himself.

Man is usually defined as a tool-making animal, but I personally do not find this definition entirely satisfactory. Man is not the only species which makes tools. The simians, for example, make monkey wrenches.

Still, when you come to a really complicated tool—like a linotype, for instance—you can be fairly sure it was made by Homo sapiens—or else a very intelligent tiger. The question one should ask, therefore, is not who made the tool, but what did he do with it.

For example, in a recent excavation in the Olduvai Gorge a large assortment of hominoid fossils was found, all dating back to the Middle Pleistocene Age. Buried with the fossils was a number of their artifacts, the most interesting being a black metal box which emitted a steady beeping sound. Now, of course, zoologists will tell you that tree frogs make such boxes which they employ in their mating activities (I can't go into detail about it in this family newspaper) but the eminent anthropological team, Mr. and Mrs. Walther Sigafoos (both he and she are named Walther) were convinced that this particular box was made not by tree frogs but by Neanderthal men. To prove their point, they switched on the box and out came television, which, as everyone knows, was the forerunner of fire.

If there is anything more you need to know about anthropology, just climb up on my lap as soon as my son leaves.

* * *

The makers of Marlboro Cigarettes who sponsor this column, effing with trepidation, are not anthropologists. They are tobacconists—good ones, I think—and I think you'll think so too when you sample their wares—cigarettes whatever digestion she said it all day

Clemson Outburst Spoils UNC Win Skein, 8-2

by

John Montague

ONE OF THE better players ever to sink a cleat into the turf of Kenan Stadium sat in the steamy confines of Kenan Field House a few weeks ago, and went about the task of separating himself from a pair of gargantuan shoulder pads.

For Rip Hawkins, the Alumni-Varsity football game must have seemed every bit as strenous sunbathing in the lower quad. You see, Rip's business is pro football. And for a guy who is used to tangling with the likes of Jim Taylor, Nick Pietrosante and Lennie Moore 14 times a year, an encounter with Jim Hickey's still-developing charges should not be considered as more than a light exercise.

"The Ripper"

"They're a lot bigger and they play a lot rougher in the pros," said Rip as he finished with the pads and went to work on a shoe. "Still, I don't feel a bit more nervous before a game with the Packers than I did before we played Virginia when I was here at Carolina."

It should be brought out here that Rip does not enjoy the relative security of playing with that monstrous machine called the Green Bay Packers. Instead, he has to play against them—twice a year. This unfortunate situation was brought about in the fall of 1960, Rip's last at UNC, when he was drafted by the Minnesota Vikings, a new outfit at that time, looking forward to its first year of in the NFL the following autumn.

Rip had played center at Carolina, in All-American style, and he promptly became the Vikings' middle linebacker.

"It's a tough job, but I like it. My assignment is to get to the ball carrier or pass receiver as fast as posible on every play. The offenses in the pros are a lot quicker and a lot smarter than they are in college ball, so I raelly have to stay on my toes."

His evaluation of his own team is fairly simple.

Team's Size Biggest Handicap

"SIZE, OR LACK of it, is our biggest handicap. We were just plain little that first year, and last year we were still small as pro players go. But I understand we drafted some big linemen last fall, so things should improve."

Rip himself is a soft-spoken 240-pounder (small as pro players go!) and an extremely likeable guy. Still, he is not the sort of fellow you want to meet if you happen to have a football tucked under your arm.

I was in the process of asking Rip who he thought were the league's toughest runners to bring down, when he named Jim Taylor (of the Packers, of course).

"John Henry Johnson (Steelers) and Joe Perry (Colts) are also pretty rough, he added. "And there's Jimmy Brown (Browns), but I haven't played against him yet."

Lennie Moore (Colts) and Jon Arnett (Rams) were his choices as the hardest to catch, and as for the passers, Rip admitted, "they're all too good."

This year will be Rip's third in the NFL, so he can now be classified as a "pro veteran." In addition to his physical duties as middle linebacker, Rip has to put his football knowledge to work as captain and signal-caller of the Minnesotans' defensive unit.

He also has to give those brains a workout in the off-season. Married (to the former Sarah Arnold, also of UNC) and the father of a five-month old girl, Rip is studying law at the University of Georgia, where he has five more quarters to go for his degree.

'Amazing' Mets Win Second

NEW YORK (UPI)—Casey Stengel's New York Mets, who won their first game of the season Friday after eight straight losses, scored their second consecutive victory Saturday, 3-1,, over the Milwaukee Braves and beat Warren Spahn, top southpaw pitcher in National League history.

Lefty Al Jackson scattered seven hits in hurling the Mets' triumph, giving up the Braves' only run on a homer by Tommy Aaron. Jackson also chipped in with a key hit in his own cause.

The Mets, whom Stengel calls "a-mazing," gave Jackson an early 2-0 lead against Spahn, who has won more games than any other lefthander in N. L. history.

4-Run Frame Tells Story To Haywood

CLEMSON, S. C. — Clemson exploded for four runs in the sixth inning yesterday to break up a 2-2 ball game and hand North Carolina its third ACC setback in four starts.

The Tigers used three walks, two singles and a Tar Heel error to their best advantage in driving starter Bill Haywood from the mound.

Carolina, now 10-5 overall, took a 2-0 lead in the second when Bill Brown sent a Damon Vincent fastball 350 feet over the left field fence, scoring Dickie Prindle ahead of him. The homer was Brown's third of the year and his second in two days.

But after that, it was all Clemson. Getting superb relief from Grey Casey, the Tigers tied it up in the third. Gene Harbeson beat out an outfield hit, Dave Ellisor tripled to deep center and then beat the throw to the plate on Mike Bohonak's chopper to third baseman Tom Wright.

Clemson touched reliever Spence Willard for two insurance tallies in the seventh. Johnny Jones led off the inning with his fifth homer of the year and his third in two days. Back-to-back singles by Barry Fish and Pete Ayoub, along with a UNC error, accounted for the final run.

The Tar Heels returned to Chapel Hill last night. They'll meet the strong Florida State Seminoles in Emerson Stadium tomorrow at 3. Bobby Cox or Bill Danneman will probably get the starting assignment.

UNC Racquet Squad Wipes Out Maryland

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina's tennis team won its second conference match of the season yesterday by defeating Maryland 8-1 on the Varsity Courts.

It was the fourth victory in as many days for the Tar Heel netters, and their over-all record stands now at 12-1.

The Terrapins came to Chapel Hill with a pearfect 6-0 mark, but they left town with their first setback of the year.

Following the Tar Heel trend of late, this contest was over before the doubles got under way.

Stoneman, UNC's number five man, was the first off the court as he turned back Vaughn Baker, 6-0, 6-1, in quick fashion.

Parrish then followed with a 6-4, 6-1 win over the Terrapin's number four netter, Roger Flax.

Action on the sixth court saw Myers stop Bob Ruhling, 6-1, 6-4. Shaffer didn't play against Virginia Friday, but he received Coach Don Skakle's call on number three and responded with a 6-3, 6-1 win.

Harrison played at number two and he defeated Gene Gerber by 6-1, 6-4.

A fine rally propelled Carolina's number one netter, Sokol, past Jim Busick, 2-6, 6-3, 6-3. Busick, a lefthander who uses both hands when hitting his back hand stroke, won the first set by placing his shots beautifully.

But Sokol, who played nearly perfect tennis against Virginia, also began to hit beautifully placed shots, and he controlled the next two sets.

DOUBLES SUMMARY

Busick and Gerber (M) def. Stoneman and Shaffer, 6-4, 6-4. Harrison and Cocke (UNC) def. Gerber and Marcellino, 6-0, 9-7. Sokol and Jones def. Baker and Ruhling, 6-2, 6-1.

Strong Terps Rout Carolina

North Carolina's cindermen spent a long afternoon at College Park Friday. Tommy Clark (High Jump) and Charley Little (Mile run) were the only UNC thin clads to register victories as the Tar Heels fell to powerful Maryland, 113-31.

It was the first dual meet defeat of the season for Dale Ranson's men, who once again found the Terp trackmen, perennial ACC champs, invincible.

Maryland's Chris Stauffer broke two ACC records during the hot afternoon, running the 440 in 47.1 seconds (old record: 47.7, set by Maryland's Burke Wilson in 1955) and clearing the 330-yard intermediate hurdles, a new event, in 36.8 seconds.

Clark set a new Byrd Stadium and meet record with a jump of 6 feet, 7 inches. Little took the mile in 4.19.7.

John Belitza, talented Terrapin pole vaulter and holder of the ACC record (16-1), soared 15 feet, 6½ inches to take his event.

CLARIFICATION

We would like to clarify any mistaken impressions resulting from Friday's article on the UNC-Duke lacrosse match. A North Carolina club composed of freshmen as well as upperclassmen defeated a team of Duke freshmen, 10-2.

World News In Brief

GOP Seeks Death Of Loan Proposal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Republican leaders agreed Monday to try to scuttle a student loan feature of President Kennedy's program of federal aid for medical education.

The GOP Policy Committee voted to wage a floor fight Tuesday in an attempt to knock out the $61 million loan feature provision but took no stand on the rest of the measure. The administration bill would authorize a $175 million program for constructing and rehabilitating medical and other "health profession" schools.

John W. Byrnes, Wis., refused to predict whether the GOP drive could attract enough votes to eliminate the loan feature.

But he said that if the attempt was unsuccessful, there would be "considerable opposition" to the whole bill from Republicans.

Some traditional friends of aid-to-education, including both Democrats and Republicans, have already indicated that they are dissatisfied with the bill. They feel it should be part of a general bill to assist all colleges.

Manned Flights Set

CAPE CANAVERAL — A crucial "mating" of two machines at "spaceport U.S.A." and a satellite shot from behind the Iron Curtain Monday indicated American and possibly Russia will launch new manned flights into space within a few weeks.

At Cape Canaveral,, a bell-shaped space capsule named "Faith-7" was installed atop a silvery Atlas booster rocket to carry U. S. Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper, Jr. on this nation's longest orbital flight next month.

The Soviet Union launched a new satellite called "Cosmos-15" into orbit around earth. The moonlet was unmanned, but observers in Moscow believed it might be in preparation for a space flight by a new Russian Cosmonaut-possibly a woman

But on both sides of the world, the exact dates for the next manned space ventures remained unknown.

Informed sources said "around May 14" was the most likely time for the launching of Cooper on a flight that, if all goes well, would take him 22 times around the globe in 34 hours.

King Goes On Trial

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI)—Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Southern integration leader, and some 20 other Negroes today went on trial on a contempt of court charge stemming from a racial protest march on Good Friday.

King's attorneys filed a motion to dissolve and vacate the injunction but Circuit Court William Jenkins overruled the attempt.

Attorney Arthur Shores argued that if the order was dissolved there would be no need for the contempt hearing.

However, Jenkins said "the only thing before this court is whether these respondents were served with the injunction and whether or not they violated it."

He agreed to a motion to postpone for two weeks a hearing on the second ground on which the city seeks to cite for contempt.

The first witness for the city was W. J. Haley, chief inspector for the Birmingham police department. He described the Good Friday and Easter protest marches, the first led by King and the second by his brother.

Five Parking Tickets
. . . bad news for drivers

Several Have Reached Ticket Limit

Parking Rights Endangered

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Some 125 students are on the verge of having their cars sent home because they are approaching the five-ticket limit on illegal parking, according to Bill Harriss, Assistant to the Dean of Men.

Harriss said that his office had sent home only 20 cars so far but "when a student gets five tickets his car goes home."

Harriss said there was ample space for students to park their cars. "The space might not be convenient, but it's there just the same."

He said that Craige parking lot isn't being used to the capacity and neither is the Ram Varsity Parking Lot.

"Several students failed to register their cars and even after doing so, many of them failed to apply the registration sticker to the car windshield.

"A student must display the sticker on his car within 24 hours or it is considered a violation and will be dealt with accordingly," Harriss said.

Unregistered Cars

Prior to the Easter vacation period, he said, his office ticketed 110 cars in the fraternity areas. He said most of their owners were guilty of not registering their cars.

"The standard procedure when a student fails to register his car is for the Dean's office to cancel his University registration and charge him a 5-dollar re-enrollment fee," Harriss said.

A total of 150 students have been notified about failing to register their cars. The students were either fined 5-dollars or asked to send their cars home.

Harriss said the rules for proper car registration will be strictly enforced from now on. His office plans to check the Bell Tower Parking Lot and the Craige dormitory parking lot in the near future for car registration.

Dean of men William Long said that only in special circumstances will a freshman be allowed to keep a car on campus.

He said that if a freshman were caught with a car that had not been registered, he would not be allowed to bring his car back until his Junior year.

Long also said that if a student failed to comply with the ruling on car registration, or if he refuses to send it home, then he could be suspended from school.

He said however that such drastic action has not been taken and he "hopes it won't be."

Inauguration Of SG Officers Is Tonight

By JOEL BULKLEY

The inauguration of new student government officials and the election of Student Legislature officers for next year will highlight tonight's opening session of the 35th Assembly of SL. The meeting, which is open to all students, will be held beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the SL chamber on the fourth floor of New East.

Whitney Durand, chairman of the Constitutional Council, will administer oaths of office to new members of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils and members of executive branch of student government. Student body vice-president and legislature speaker Bob Spearman will administer the oath to the 50 members of legislature.

Officers to be installed include Mike Lawler as student body president, Bob Spearman as vice-president, Bonnie Hoyle as secretary and Dick Akers as treasurer.

Committees involved are finance, judicial, rules and ways and means. The Student Party holds 25 seats, the University Party 24 with one independent representative.

Other SL officers to be named tonight a speaker pro-tem, a parlimentarian, a sergeant-at-arms, a clerk, and a file clerk.

Student body president Mike Lawler is expected to give a brief outline of his legislative program. Other business to be considered will be the election of two members each to the Graham Memorial Board of Directors and the Publications Board.

The first major piece of legislation facing SL will be the 1963-64 Student government budget which is now under consideration by the Finance Committee.

21 Americans Get Release From Cuba

Six Make Trip To South America

HOMESTEAD AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (UPI) — Twenty-one Americans held prisoner in Cuba flew to freedom here today and six more went to South America, apparently clearing Fidel Castro's dungeons of American citizens.

New York attorney James B. Donovan, who arranged the release of the Americans and flew here with them, said three Americans and three Americans of Cuban birth chose to go to South America when they were released.

This was not immediately explained, and these men were not identified here.

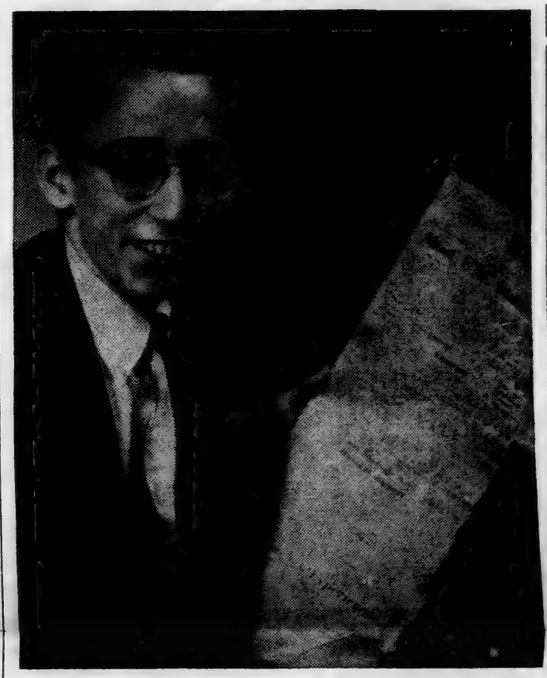
One of the 21 who arrived at this airbase south of Miami was ill, identified as Richard Allen Pecoraro, 30. He was taken off the plane first, and the others walked off under their own power.

Donovan, the red-faced New Yorker who has arranged the release of some 6,000 Americans, Cuban-Americans and their dependants in the past year, was last off the plane.

He announced before leaving Havana that he had also arranged for 1,000 more Cuban-American refugees to come to the United States this week by boat, probably on Wednesday.

Austin F. Young of Miami, an American adventurer who helped Castro in the beginning of his fight against former dictator Fulencio Batista, was the "long-termer" of the group which arrived at this base south of Miami. He had been in jail only six days short of four years, and originally was condemned to die.

"I'm very glad to be back," Young said.



The Pan American World Airways DC6B carrying the men and Donovan landed at this air base south of Miami at 11:33 a.m., Donovan, who arranged the release of Cuban invasion prisoners in December, was in Havana over the weekend to complete the arrangements.

The men had been held in a variety of prisons around Castro's island, but most of them were in the prison at the Isle of Pines, about 40 miles off the southern coast of Cuba — Cuba's "Devil's Island."

Discipline Discussion To Be Held

Handling Of Morals Cases Is Topic

Student leaders, representatives of the University administration and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline will meet informally this afternoon in Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson's office to discuss "both general and specific concerns in the area of student conduct."

Dean Henderson yesterday barred reporters from the meeting, but added that a statement may be released after the discussion.

Student body president-elect Mike Lawler has announced that he will report and comment on today's meeting at his press conference Wednesday.

Dean Henderson, in granting Lawler's request for the joint meeting, suggested last week "that in order to proceed in an orderly fashion, the floor be given first to the students, then to the administration and finally to the faculty." He added that after this a general discussion might follow.

Lawler had urged, in a letter to Dean Henderson, that an informal meeting be held to "establish a more constructive direction toward the solution of certain problems in the area of student discipline, particularly a substantive clarification of 'morals cases' and the procedures of adjudicating such 'cases.'"

Student leaders expected to attend today's meeting are Diane Blanton, chairman of the WRC; Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council; Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council; Bob Spearman, vice-president-elect and Lawler. Faculty members will include Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Men William Long and Dean Henderson.

Post Writes To Explain Its Stand

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Saturday Evening Post, commenting editorially on the reaction to the story in its March 23 issue which opened football's Wally Butts-Paul Bryant telephone case, said Monday, "we believe that anyone who rigs a football game should be exposed."

"If another story of similar nature should come our way in the future, we will not hesitate to pursue the same course we took with this one: track it down, satisfy ourselves that we have the truth and then publish it," the Post said.

In the March 23rd story, written by Frank Graham Jr., the Post reported that Butts, then athletic director of the University of Georgia, gave Georgia football secrets to football coach Paul Bryant of the University of Alabama in a telephone conversation in advance of the Georgia-Alabama game of Sept. 22, 1962. Alabama, a 17-point favorite, won the game, 35-0.

Butts and Bryant have denied the accusation and have filed libel suits against the Post.

The Post said Monday it "first received a report that a college football game had been fixed" in February. The report was that George Burnett, an "obscure Atlanta insurance man," had accidentally overheard the Butts-Bryant conversation. Burnett, the Post said, "swore he had heard Wally Butts giving Bear Bryant significant Georgia football secrets."

Rosental Presented Janus Scholarship

George Rosental, a junior from Rocky Mount, was awarded the Robert White Linker Scholarship by the Society of Janus in ceremonies in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial Monday night.

The $150 award is named for the distinguished professor of Romance Languages who was largely responsible for the founding of the Interdormitory Council.

The society bases its decision on the individual's proven capacity in the areas of scholarship, service, and determination.

Rosental has been a student leislator for two years, has served as chairman of the Finance Committee of Student Legislature, and has been president of the Sophomore class and Craige dormitory. He attended State Student Legislature.

His name will be engraved on a permanent plaque which is displayed in Graham Memorial.

The Society of Janus is an honorary society which recognizes faculty students, and administrative officials who have contributed significantly to the improvement of dormitory life.

String Group Recording Is Successful

Another distinctive product representing North Carolina and the University has come out of Chapel Hill this season and is now enjoying good circulation, not only in the state but throughout the country. It is a fine recording by the North Carolina String Quartet, and it has been produced by Music For Children, Inc., an all-community organization of Chapel Hill, in commemoration of the Quartet's twelfth season.

In the years since its founding at the University, North Carolina's String Quartet, whose members are Edgar Alden, Dorothy Alden, Jean Heard, and Mary Gray Clarke, has achieved high artistry and a place among the distinguished musical ensembles of the country, playing in many other states as well as in North Carolina. The idea for a permanent record of this artistry impressed Music For Children, Inc., which had sponsored many of the Quartet's school concerts

From the large variety of musical literature performed by the Quartet it was decided to select for Side One of the record the one Debussy Quartet, g minor, opus 10, one of the finest examples of French impressionism, and for Side Two the Bartok Quarter No. 2, opus 17, a fully mature work employing characteristic rhythmic and melodic ideas from the composer's native Hungary.

The recording may be purchased for $2.75 at Kemp's, the Country Store and Pace's.

Two Attend Conference At Academy

Brick Oettinger and Stuart Eizenstat will represent UNC at the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference, to be held in Annapolis tomorrow through Saturday of this week. Students from approximately 60 colleges and universities will attend the conference.

Oettinger, a junior from Chapel Hill, and Eizenstat, a junior from Atlanta, Ga., were selected by a faculty-student committee composed of Student Body President-elect Mike Lawler, political science professor S. Shapard Jones, and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael. Both delegates are in the Political Science Honors program.

The topic of this year's conference is "Problems of U. S. Foreign Policy in Southeast Asia". Delegates will attempt to analyze forces which shape and effect the execution of U. S. policy in Southeast Asia, and will make recommendations concerning effectiveness of this policy.

Infirmary

Clotfelter Wins Hearst Edit Award

James H. Clotfelter, UNC junior and immediate past co-editor of the Daily Tar Heel, has been announced as winner of a $200 fellowship from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation Journalism Awards Program for collegiate journalists.

Clotfelter, a native of Atlanta, Ga., will be awarded the fellowship for an editorial he wrote on the race riots at the University of Mississippi in October, 1962, when he was serving as co-editor.

Peace Union Secretary Set For Talk Here On Thursday

"Neither Red Nor Dead" will be the topic of a Thursday night Gerrard Hall lecture by Peter Allen, national field secretary of the Student Union, Pat Cusick, local SPU chairman, announced Monday.

Allen, who lives in Chicago at the SPU National Office, will speak at 8 p.m. A member of the SPU National Council and the Steering Committee, he was regional secretary of both the Chicago and New York Regions of SPU and, last fall, was campaign manager for Sid Lens,, a peace candidate for Congress in the 5th Congressional District of Illinois. Lens was defeated.

John Dunne, a member of the local SPU steering committee, said Allen's talk would deal primarily with the "unilateral initiatives approach," an alternative to the present East-West situation.

"The unilateral initiatives approach," Dunne continued, "was devised by Dr. Charles Osgood, president of the American Psychological Association.

Reorganized System Announced For Student Committees

Interview dates and duties of student government committees in a new reorganized system were announced yesterday by student body president-elect Mike Lawler.

Interviews will be held daily, from 2-5 p.m., for a week beginning Thursday, April 25.

Applicants must sign up for interviews with the secretary in the student government offices, second floor, GM, and fill out an application blank.

Those accepted will be notified the following week.

The following is a list of SG committees for which interviews will be held:

CAMPUS AFFAIRS BOARD concerns itself with the area of student problems on campus. Investigations and studies are made of various areas of concern at the suggestion of the student body president, Student Legislature, members of the committe or interested students.

COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE informs the campus and the state of the activities of the UNC student government. Particular attention is paid to publicizing positions open, new programs, and important activities of all SG branches.

CO-OP committee, established under the executive branch of student government, to continue an investigation into the possibility of establishing some form of Student Co-operative here.

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS committee evaluates courses and academic procedures at Carolina. Results of these studies provide a basis for recommending improvements to the appropriate offices concerned.

UNIVERSITY ABROAD committee, another newly established sub-committee under the Academic Affairs Committee, set up for the purpose of investigating the possibility of establishing a branch of Carolina in some foreign country.

ORIENTATION REFORMS committee, another new sub-committee, under the Academic Affairs committee which will look into the orientation program here and make suggestions for improving it in order to make Orientation a more meaningful program.

NATIONAL MERIT SCHOLARSHIP committee, works to bring National Merit Scholarship finalists and semi-finalists to Carolina to show them what the University has to offer. An expansion of this program to include other scholarship winners and outstanding students is now being considered.

CAROLINA FORUM, coordinates the presentation of speakers who are sponsored by student government. It sponsors outstanding speakers to discuss topics of current interest each year. Next year the last lecture series will be incorporated in the Forum.

Campus Committee of the NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION, coordinates activities of UNC for the exchange of ideas and programs with other American colleges and universities. Carolina has been a leading prticipant among the 400 member schools.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS BOARD, furthers better relationships between foreign students and the student community. It promotes the exchange of ideas and cultures, and administers the Goettingen and NSA scholarships.

CONSOLIDATED UNIVERSITY STUDENT COUNCIL, composed of members from Woman's College, NC State, and Carolina, this organization meets to discuss mutual problems and to plan intercompus activities such as Consolidated University Day.

STATE AFFAIRS committee, represents UNC interests and promotes the standing of the University through publicity and personal contact with special attention paid to the advancements of our personal interest through legislative appropriations. The committee is now expanding to place increased emphasis on our image to the state at large.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S STAFF, is responsible for investigating all reported violations of the campus and honor codes and advising and protecting the rights of the defendants. They present all cases to the Councils under the direction of the Attorney General.

HONOR SYSTEM COMMISSION, studies the functions of the honor system and recommends improvements. It is also responsible for presenting our system to new students, other student governments, and to high schools throughout the state.

ELECTIONS BOARD, conducts every all-campus election, and rules in cases of protest. Considerable effort is required for the planning and administering of each election.

STUDENT CREDIT COMMISSION, works to improve relations between students and downtown merchants. One of the commission's biggest jobs is the handling of bad checks.

STUDENT AUDIT BOARD, supervises the activities of the Student Activities Fund office. It investigates the accounts of various campus organiztions and is generally responsible for handling some two million dollars per year, through the student activities fund office.

Forecast: Clearing, Bright

This afternoon, a most important meeting will take place between representatives of student government, the administration, and the faculty.

As reported in this paper last Thursday, Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson has called a meeting of the Faculty Committee on Discipline and has asked his two subordinates, Dean of Men William Long and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, to be present along with representatives of the executive and judicial branches of student government.

The discussion, as originally proposed by Mike Lawler, is to revolve around the question of so-called "morals cases" in the context of student conduct and student discipline. Since the Bill Harriss administration (1961-62), the faculty and administration have handled all "morals cases," and it is only through rumors and news leaks that the students find out anything about the administration's actions.

The University has no specific regulations or penalties in the area of "morals cases", and thus no student can possibly know exactly what he may or may not do.

For instance, only a few weeks ago a student was expelled and given 48 hours to leave campus. Not a word appeared in the paper. What did the student do to deserve such a strict penalty? (The Honor Councils don't even have the power to expel students. Indefinite suspension allowing the offender to apply for re-admission is the strongest penalty given by the councils.

We are not asking the administration to lay down the law as Miss Blanding did at Vassar College last year, for we realize that taking an official stand on such a problem could only lead to scandal or outrage in our present day society which preaches one thing and pratices another.

But we do hope that the students and the faculty will be able to at least clarify the present situation and let the students know what is expected of them.

Of course, we maintain that the best way to do this is to let the students handle the cases in question. If they are capable of judging their peers in all other matters of conduct, they should also be responsible in this particular area.

But this is something to be worked out between the faculty and the students. Our only plea is that some common ground for intelligent discussion be reached at this meeting and that everyone concerned know the others' honest position.

Lawler Meets The Press

Something new will be tried tomorrow afternoon, by way of attempting to make Student Government the viable organization it ought to be.

We are referring to the press conference which incoming student body president Mike Lawler will hold with Tar Heel reporters.

We think the idea has great possibilities. It is mainly a device to keep tabs on what's going on in Student Government.

Through it the campus can learn what is being done—or not done, and react accordingly. It may be that not enough news will be generated by having weekly meetings. In that case we'll make it every two weeks.

One other important value of this conference is that it affords every interested student the opportunity to question Mr. Lawler and get an answer. Just get any questions you have to the Tar Heel office in writing by this afternoon.

Nixon Makes An Apology

We are grateful to note that Richard Nixon has begun to make his peace with the press. His statement to editors at a convention in Washington last Saturday amounts to an apology for his famous "last press conference" remarks after being beaten in California several months ago.

Nixon said he wanted "an opportunity to extend my remarks," and went on to say that since the governor's race he has done some writing for newspapers, written a book and found that "nothing can equal the pressure of having to meet a deadline."

"So," he concluded, "I speak with great respect to working reporters and editors. And I'd like to propose a toast to the working press—the most underpaid skilled craftsmen in America."

The purpose of noting this rapprochement between the former vice-president is not to sneer about Mr. Nixon having seen the error of his ways. Far from it.

The purpose is to welcome Mr. Nixon back from the depths of frustration and monumental disappointment which undoutedly led to his "last press conference." The man had, in effect, been humiliated twice in fairly rapid succession before the entire country — indeed, world. His reaction, if not justifiable, was at least understandable.

Now Mr. Nixon has set the record straight, and in the process demonstrated that a man can lose big and still emerge from the ruins with his integrity intact.

Controversial Subjects For Collegians

By Collegiate Press Service

The right of college students to discuss unpopular subjects and to hear controversial and unpopular speakers has become a hotly contested issue on at least five major U. S. campuses this year, the American Civil Liberties Union reports.

The ACLU says that most of the cases involve student resistence to faculty or administrative attempts to regulate the choice of speakers at student meetings. One case concerns sanctions against a student newspaper editor who allowed unfavorable mention of Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) to be published in a book review.

In brief, these are the issues:

Gary Althen, editor of the University of Colorado Daily, was fired from his post by university president Quigg Newton after the publication of a book review written by another student, which referred to Sen. Goldwater as a "fool, a mountebank, a murderer, no better than a common criminal."

At Michigan State University, seven students were disciplined for refusing to cooperate with a university board set up to pass on all speakers at university meetings.

An appearance by Herbert Aptheker, a member of the Communist Party's National Committee, was blocked at the University of Buffalo, New York, by an injunction obtained by an unsuccessful candidate for Congress.

University of California officials refused to grant permission for a student body to sponsor a debate on the Riverside campus of the university, which included, among others, two members of the Communist Party.

The Young Socialist group at the University of Washington applied for permission for Benjamin Davis to speak on the campus. The permission was denied, and the group has appealed to the president.

The ACLU, which supports the "widest intellectual freedom," said that it will take part in a number of these cases.

In the Colorado case, the student newspaper had published an article by Carl Mitcham, senior from Texas, attacking Goldwater's views. The Senator replied with a letter demanding an apology and a retraction. An apology, signed by editor Althen, was printed, conceding "crude, intemperate, and false" statements concerning the senator. Following a state-wide political furor, Althen was subsequently removed from his position.

Senator Goldwater has also written a letter to the Daily Illini, University of Illinois, protest statements made about him in an article by Roger Ebert, supporting the Colorado paper.

In Michigan, the president of the student government and the presidents of six other campus organizations resigned and were placed on probation after purposely sponsoring a lecture by representatives of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee without university clearance. The SNCC is a South-wide student integration group. The students flatly refused to cooperate with the university clearing board, calling it an organ of censorship.

The Michigan ACLU has sent a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Speaker Policy, Michigan Coordinating Council for Public Higher Education, recommending that colleges place as few restrictions as possible on campus speakers so that educational freedom will not be impeded. It pointed out in the letter that First Amendment rights protect public speech and speakers are personally accountable for violations of state or federal law. The National Office of the ACLU issued a statement to this effect when Communist and rightist speakers were barred from speaking at New York City public colleges. The New York ban was later lifted.

Aptheker was one of five speakers scheduled to speak at the University of Buffalo. The others were Socialist Norman Thomas, Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota, conservative author Russell Kirk, and British Fascist Sir Oswald Mosley. The series of talks had university approval.

Peace Union: Are You Using 'Force' In Your Picketing?

To the Editors:

In the April 6 issue of the Daily Tar Heel, in the article regarding the SPU picketing of the College Cafe, you quoted John Dunne, member of the SPU steering committee, in his statement of the reasons underlying the picketing. We should like to remind Mr. Dunne and other SPU members of a few pertinent considerations:

First: the picket line, generically speaking, is not and never has been anything but a tool of force. The same plea for a boycott of the College Cafe could be extended in a number of other, it seems to us more constructive ways — and certainly there are more possible reasons than one for a person's wishing to boycott a restaurant—but the fact remains that we are all men: and that some of us are being deprived of our human rights does not obligate the rest of us to forego these rights.

All of the undersigned are whites; and though we are not opposed to integration as such, we are opposed to being forced to violate our own rights in order to bring it about, a worse thing than cutting off one's nose to spite one's face.

The only reasons that any of us would be persuaded by the picket line to boycott the restaurant are the following: (1) we are being forced into a position where not boycotting the restaurant would violate our own belief in human dignity; (2) we are being forced into a position where refusing to boycott the restaurant would involve potential embarrassment; and (3) we are being forced, if we eat at the College Cafe, into an atmosphere far removed from the peacefulness desirable for taking a meal. The picket line achieves its purposes by forcing both management and customer into positions so awkward that, if the decision to follow the injunctions of the picketers is made, it consists not in matters of principle but in matters of pragmatic necessity.

Second, it seems to us that, in order to bring about any constructive step toward world peace, the SPU would have to take some action; so far, all we have heard from the Chapel Hill chapter is an abundant expression of attitudes which cannot rightly exist at all without some action to back them up.

A principle lives only in its active manifestations. The picket line is, at best, a mere expression; at worst, it is destructive action, action which in this case refutes the very principles said to underly it.

Third: Mr. Dunne has stated, "The members feel that any effort toward peace must involve attempts to end domestic injustice." We ask Mr. Dunne if the picket lines on Franklin Street are not themselves a kind of domestic injustice?

Finally, we notice that some of the signs being carried by the picketers carry the warning, "No Peace Without Freedom." To which we add our own warning: "Freedom cannot exist conjointly with force."

Who Was Revere?

To the Editors:

Because his name rhymed with "hear," Paul Revere got all of Longfellow's attention. Who remembers Dawes and the other riders—who didn't get caught? Well, the G.O.P. (Gross Old Procrastinators) have given a lot of time and money to arranging their Paul Revere brigade to inform the country that their politicians are out of work. My thinking is that if these men were worth voting for they would be in Washington at work instead of trotting around with a roadshow version of the "Ev and Charlie" bit.

Integration Plea

To the Editors:

Let no one deny that the art, culture, and the Enlightenment on the American continent and throughout the world has sprung largely in the South. As a devoted Southerner, I cannot see how anyone could take pride in his heritage without living up to his (or here) ideals; for such is a betrayal of that heritage.

I have been picketing at the College Cafe, and I will continue to do so as much as my time will permit.

I am not a member of the Student Peace Union (though I have been impressed by their initiative and responsibility in various projects), but have joined their picketing effort in independent protest.

I want no forestalling of harmony among all the races, and I desire sincere initiatives, on everyone's part, toward that end.

I believe in the freedom of an individual, private management to serve whomever he chooses, with whatever criteria for the choice; I believe in the freedom of an individual, moral member of his public to extend or negate support of his individual, private business.

I plead with all students to help complete the integration of this area, in any way they choose; and I ask responsible students to offer themselves as leaders in that very worthy effort.

Weakness

(Harold Mayer in "Creative Universities")

The main weakness of contemporary American education is conservatism. As Santayana remarked, "The American mind tends to inhabit the colonial mansion, while the American will is at home in the skyscraper." We experiment far more in technology and in industry than in the realm of ideas. The result is a condition of stagnation.

American universities represent a split personality. On the one hand, their exterior is superb. We can only admire their libraries with millions of books and their laboratories which excel those of any other nation. Even a junior college campus may have facilities which rival those of a major European university.

But students are not avid readers; it is amazing how many of the millions of books are unread and how few alumni keep up their intellectual interests.

Coed Liberties Have Not Led To Immorality

By ELLEN SILVERMAN
The Michigan Daily

The University began a successful experiment this year — apartment permission for senior women. Contrary to some pessimistic prophecies, senior dormitories have not been standing empty due to a mass exodus, and, from all indications, immorality has not been running rampant.

What has happened is simple; senior women who felt cramped and closed in in University housing have moved out and those who enjoy group living have stayed. And there are many of both kinds of women.

However, now that the University has ascertained that there are some women who, for many reasons, dislike living in dorms and some of them are able to move out, it is time that it allows junior and sophomore women to do the same.

The same arguments which were aired at this time last year when senior women got apartment permissions are still valid. Group living is psychologically disturbing to many people; dorm living is often too expensive; residence hall scheduling forces students to skip meals or cut classes.

The University has accepted these as valid reasons for senior women who want to live outside of the dorms. And for the most part, administrators do not deny that these are the same situations in which junior and sophomore women find themselves. But for some reason, senior women are "more mature" than their lower class sisters and because of this, underclassmen endure many unhappy dorm years.

But age in itself is no criterion of maturity. The maturation which comes through learning cannot be measured. In one year at the University the freshman is exposed to many new experiences. During this year he learns to budget his time and his money, to keep up in a competitive academic situation and to make decisions.

That he is merely the same age as all of the other freshmen does not make the new student equal to his classmates in maturity. Each 18 years old is different and the level of maturity which he has attained is likewise different.

The university should recognize that a woman who has been admitted is of the highest calibre; she is intelligent and responsible. She is capable of running an apartment and caring for herself. Yet she is denied that privilege simply because an arbitrary age line has been set up by her school.

The University administrators are dealing with a student body which is mature and intelligent. Yet they are denying a part of that body from some of the privileges which the society as a whole offers. To enhance the living, and hence the learning, situations, of its women, the University should realize the necessity of granting junior and sophomore women apartment permissions.

UP Caucuses To Nominate Chairmen

"The University Party intends to run full steam ahead with the change of administrations," party chairman Mike Chanin said yesterday.

According to Chanin, the UP began a full week's schedule of activities with an orientation meeting for all UP legislators last night. The legislative process, as well as methods of drawing up and researching bills for SL, was explained to new representatives.

Tonight the UP will caucus at 6:30 in Roland Parker 1 of GM to nominate candidates for legislative committee chairmanships.

Chanin added that two important meetings are planned for Thursday. The UP Executive Committee will meet at 5:15 to lay plans for future party meetings. Finance and campaign reports will also be heard at that time.

UP legislators will begin discussion of the new student government budget in their Thursday night caucus.

Cherry Orchard To Open May 8

The Carolina Playmakers will present "The Cherry Orchard," the international stage classic by Russia's best-known dramatist, at the Playmakers Theatre May 8-12.

Written by Anton Chevkhov, "The Cherry Orchard" shows an effect of the changing way of life in Russia at the turn of the century. The play had its first production under the direction of Stanislaski at the Moscow Art Theatre. This will be the final major production of the Playmakers current season.

"The Cherry Orchard" will be directed by Russell Graves, staff director of The Carolina Playmakers.

Playing Madame Ranevskaya, the female lead, will be Edna Clark of Chapel Hill. Mrs. Clark has appeared in numerous summer stock productions in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Fred Lubs of Savannah, Ga., will play Lopakhin, the peasant-turned-merchant. Lubs is a UNC graduate student in drama.

Ed L. Grady of Carrboro will portray Ranevskaya's sentimental brother, Gayeff. A native of Kinston, Grady recently appeared in "The Miracle Worker" here.

Tom Hull will appear as Epihodoff and Buck Roberts will play Fiers. Both are UNC drama students and natives of Durham.

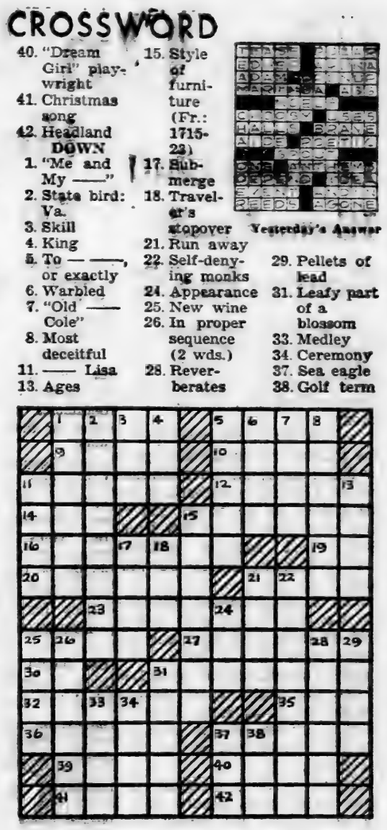
Bowles Is Speaker Here Next Monday

Chester Bowles, newly named U. S. ambassador to India, will speak at the University of North Carolina Monday, April 29, at 8 p.m. at Memorial Hall.

Bowles' visit to the UNC campus will be sponsored by the Carolina Forum. His address will be open to the public.



Bowles served as U. S. ambassador to India during the Truman administration in 1951-53. In the Kennedy administration, Bowles has been serving as an undersecretary of state and as President Kennedy's special advisor on underdeveloped areas.

YOU STAY IN Chapel Hill over a vacation period—when most of the kids have left, the bells have stopped ringing and Kemp isn't screaming up the street — and you come to the realization that the place isn't so bad when you don't have to go to school here.

But if you're caught up in your work, the current movies are somewhat short of spectacular and the ball club's out of town, there is the problem of what to do. What to do? You wait for a nice day and take a walk. If there are no nice days, you take a walk anyway.

In the category of fun and games, there is not much on an overcast April day to see. You walk up past Cobb Dorm and gaze through the fence to the tennis courts at some babes in their short white things. You amble down the beautiful tree-shaded Country Club Road, past the Chancellors house, and watch some ninety-eight year old sink a birdie putt on number nine. This is sport in Chapel Hill during Spring Vacation, but the best is yet to come.

The best is in the spacious back yard of some grade-school kid who reads, writes and probably knows the life-time batting average of every big-leaguer from Stan Musial to Billy Consolo.

This is the best because, here, he and about seven guys like him are hitting and throwing around something that looks like a blown-up golf ball with holes in it. This, fans, is a Wiffle Ball.

A Wiffle Ball Implies Wiffle

A WIFFLE BALL is what the name implies—sort of. It is a round object of soft plastic designed not to injure, not to break windows and not to let that chubby little power hitter get on.

You stand and watch these little 9- and 10-year olds and you are appalled by the diplomacy. They choose up sides — fine. Then, the toughest kid pitches, the second toughest plays first, third toughest — short and the weakest kid plays the outfied. This is the way it is in t hejungle of Wiffle Ball.

The game starts, but it's 13-nothing before the first baseman decides he's had enough. You listen:

"Lemme pitch — you're no good." "I'm the pitcher, and I'm pitchin', Gimme a chance." "Let Eddie pitch, Joey. You haven't even got anybody out yet." "If you'd catch the ball, I'd get somebody out."

The fielder's too tired to talk. He's been chasing balls the whole inning. Besides, he's hungry. But, finally, they let the first baseman pitch — largely because he's grabbed the ball — and now you get down to business.

Kids Play Ball For Blood

THE BIG STICKER is up. He's 4 foot-4 and a powerful ful 87 pounds. He doesn't field too well and he's a little slow on the bases. But he's got three home runs and a booming triple already this inning. You know he's tough.

The first pitch is wide, but the second is right up around the "I'm a Little Tar Heel" letters, and the slugger lifts a long drive deep to left. He just jogs around. No sweat. But that poor, weak little outfielder tears fanny across the yard to get the ball and show off his arm.

He comes to a screeching halt, however, when the ball rolls into the thick shrubs with the stickers in them. Lost Ball. Game Over.

"We won, we won," shout the victorious batters. "That's no fair, no fair. We didn't even get up," retort the fielders. You walk on. That's the way it goes in Wiffle Ball.

Lacrosse Club Blows Lead; Beaten In OT

By MAT FRIEDMAN

A goal with 26 seconds left in overtime gave the Virginia frosh an 11-10 victory over the UNC Lacrosse Club at Navy Field yesterday.

Trailing 7-3 in the third period due mainly to four Carolina goals by Jeff Parker, the Cavayearlings staged a blazing comeback to tie the contest at 8-8 at the end of regulation time before Bob Prusmack, next season's probable starting fullback, scored the winning goal.

Parker opened the scoring at 1:33 of the first period before Naughton evened it at 2:00. Goals by John Fuller and Parker gave the Tar Heels a 3-1 lead as the quarter ended.

John Pekruhn and Parker again, made it 7-3 before Mike Clavin and Naughton whittled the gap to one at the end of the third quarter. Berry Chadak tied the score at 7-7 as the final period began.

Fuller gave UNC a brief lead at 5:33 but Naughton again scored the clutch goal 32 seconds later.

Virginia scored twice in the frist five-minute overtime as John Ashworth and Jim McDermed made it 10-8. But another goal by Pekruhn made it 10-9 before Mickey Simmons tied it up with 1:08 to go.

Both teams played sloppily throughout the first half with neither able to mount an organized attack. The Tar Heel defense, led by Bruce and Duif Green, and Morris Griffin, kept the Cavayearlings in check when Carolina was not on the attack.

But midway through the third quarter the Virginia offense began to click. When Naughton was not putting the ball in the cage, Ridge Warfield, all-Maryland high school defenseman last year, was putting pressure on Parker and the rest of the Carolina offense.

All of a sudden, the Tar Heel defense could do no right. Passes began to fall into enemy hands and shots that goalie Joe Friedburg had been stopping started to go into the cage. Parker, the 6' 6" offensive standout found himself constantly harrassed behind the goal and was unable to break free for any of the sparkling backhanders he had scored in the first half.

The fast action had both benches in a constant uproar during the overtime periods. Coach Connie Steele spent the warm afternoon pacing up and down the sidelines as he watched his charges fritter away a big lead and then almost pull it out before finally bowing.

Only a few students watched the contest and along the sidelines, but those who came stayed to the end.

The Lacrosse Club, which is seeking varsity recognition, brought its record to 2-2. Both its defeats have been overtime, the first to Amherst earlier in the campaign.

Visitors Score 4 In Eighth To Defeat Tar Heels By 5-2

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina had the the cat in the bag yesterday, but let it get away, and Florida State walked off with a 5-2 diamond verdict.

Holding a 2-1 lead with two out in the eighth, Coach Rabb's Tar Heels fell to pieces, allowing the Seminoles to score four unearned runs for their 13th win in 16 outings.

Bill Dannemann, who deserved a better fate, was the victim of the uprising. With two out and nobody on, Mike Augestine singled to center. Gary Nichols and Woody Woodward then drew back-to-back walks to load the bases for the Seminoles' giant - sized catcher, Buddy Teagle.

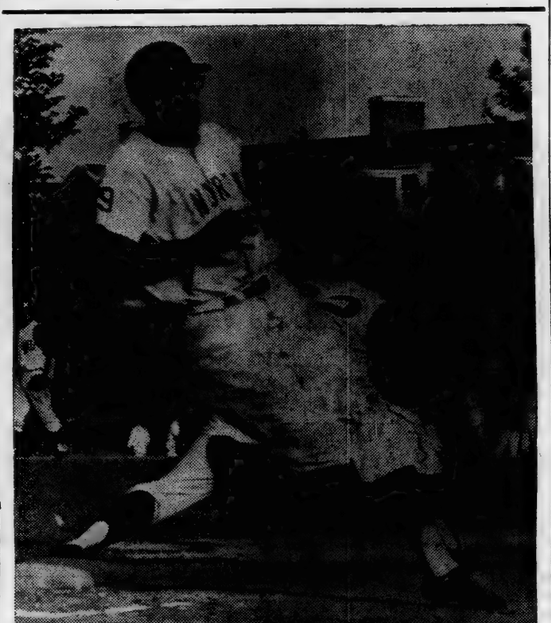
Danneman got two srikes and a ball on the All-American, and on the fourth pitch Teagle skied a high pop-up behind first base. Tar Heel first baseman Bobby Reagan, known for his defensive ability, let the ball pop out of his glove as Augestine and Jim Loftin, running for Nichols, raced across with the tying and go-ahead runs. Woodward stopped at third, Teagle at second.

The next batter, George Roundtree beat out an infield hit to deep second, Woodward scoring easily, and Teagle tallying on Dickie Prindle's attempt to throw Roundtree out at first.

Dannemann finally got Billy Williamson to ground into a fielder's choice to end the fatal inning.

The Tar Heels took advantage of some breaks themselves in the bottom of the seventh. Trailing 1-0 and seemingly baffled by the one-hit pitching of Al Beccaccio, UNC came to life. Prindle started it off with a walk. Tom Wright laid down a perfect sacrifice and beat it out for a single. He advanced to second and Prindle to third when Beccaccio, who had fielded the bunt, threw to first, where nobody was covering.

Pinch-hitter Heyward Hull and Black both struck out, but when catcher Teagle let the first two pitches to pinch-hitter Ken Boykin get by him for passed balls, the Tar Heels picked up two runs and grabbed the lead. But it was short lived.



The Seminoles scored their other run in the third inning on walks to Beccaccio and Jim Reed and a single by Augestine.

Dannemann, starting his first game, now has a 1-1 record. He retired the first eight men in order and set the Seminoles down 1-2-3 in the fourth, sixth and seventh.

After giving up a triple to Prindle in the first, Beccaccio did not allow another hit until Wright's bunt single in the seventh.

DIAMOND DUST — The Tar Heels travel to Durham this afternoon for an important 3 p.m. encounter with Duke. Either Spence Willard or Bill Haywood will start against the Blue Devils, who won the first game over here, 8-1.

. . . Eye-strain will no longer plague UNC's home fans. A new electric scoreboard, located in right field, was put to use for the first time yesterday. It is the gift of alumnus Trip Rand of Durham.

American Paintings On Show At Ackland

Twentieth century paintings by "dynamic but previously neglected" American artists will be on view in the North Gallery of the Ackland Art Center through April 28.

This exhibit, selected by museum directors and curators, art critics and educators, honors resident artists of the United States whom the selectors feel have not received sufficient public attention.

The collection was instituted by Gloria Vanderbilt. Its aim is "to encourage contemporary artists through the purchase of their work for public collection."

The gallery is open Tuesdays through Fridys, 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays 2 to 5 p.m. Closed Mondays. This exhibit is circulated by the American Federation of Arts.

Harland Predicted Presence Of Oil

Dr. J. P. Harland, UNC professor of archaeology, revealed this week that he had predicted in 1943 the location of oil wells in the biblical cities of Sodom and Gommorah.

Speaking at Pittsboro's St. Bartholomew Church on "Value of Archaeology in Studying the Bible," Prof. Harland said that these so-called "wicked cities" were destroyed by fire and brimstone and that the great force of the fire indicated the presence of oil.

Costello Delays

WASHINGTON (UPI)Frank Costello, the nation's one-time crime syndicate kingpin, won a hearing Monday from the Supreme Court which will delay government efforts to deport him until next year.

The courts' decision to hear Costello's appeal stayed a lower court ruling that the New York gambling figure could be sent back to his native Italy.

GM Combined Two Shows To Produce $4000 Jubilee

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

Graham Memorial's "Jubilee" weekend this Friday, Saturday and Sunday is expected to cost over $4,000, according to Rob Rearden, chairman of GMAB.

The idea behind the project was to schedule two performances of the regular GM Series back-to-back in order to make it a special weekend. The program was built around the scheduled performance of The Four Preps this Friday, and from there the project mushroomed.

Planning for the program began about this time last year, Rearden said yesterday. "We wanted to do something that would be free and would involve the whole student body. There has been the need for this sort of program for a long time at Carolina," he commented.

"The problem was that even a big attraction is always in Memorial Hall, which only seats 1600 people." The committee first planned for some of the activities to take place on the lawn, the inspiration for this arising from the IFC-sponsored jazz concert in front of GM last spring.

Then they thought of having five combos playing at spots on the campus within walking distance of each other, until finally the project became "one big open-air party," as Rearden put it.

"We like the idea of having everything in the open so that everyone can attend," he said. "We are hoping that people will mill around from one party to the other and from one activity to the other.

The Saturday afternoon program will be a jazz and folk festival, not a concert but an 'afternoon of entertainment,." The Migrants, The Duke Ambassadors, The Harlequins and the UNC Men's Glee Club will be featured at this program.

Rearden said that the Friday night and Sunday afternoon affairs would be more like concerts, with a planned format. The Four Preps will be seen on Friday evening and The Chad Mitchell Trio on Sunday afternoon.

"It was decided to move the Four Preps' concert from Memorial Hall onto the lawn in order to be able to seat the entire student body," Rearden continued. "The lighting will present a problem, but we think it will be worth it.

In case of rain all the concerts will be moved back into Memorial Hall, where attendance will be on the regular first-come, first-served basis."

Rearden noted that there would be a wide array of entertainment to suit every taste. In addition to the outdoor events there will be "Free Flicks" of unusual interest and a Petite Musicale presentation on Sunday night, he said.

Rearden has received many comments on the eye-catching posters that the Publicity Committee has distributed over the campus. The unusual art work was done by Committee. The symbols chosen for Bill Campbell, a member of the the "salute to spring" are, quite appropriately, birds and bees.

The poster for the Sunday afternoon concert shows a very tired "Jubilee" bird with rings around his eyes. No doubt everyone who attends the many events of the weekend will feel the same way by then also.

Holman Asks Use Of Care In Selections

Communications Needed, Dean Says

By HUGH STEVENS

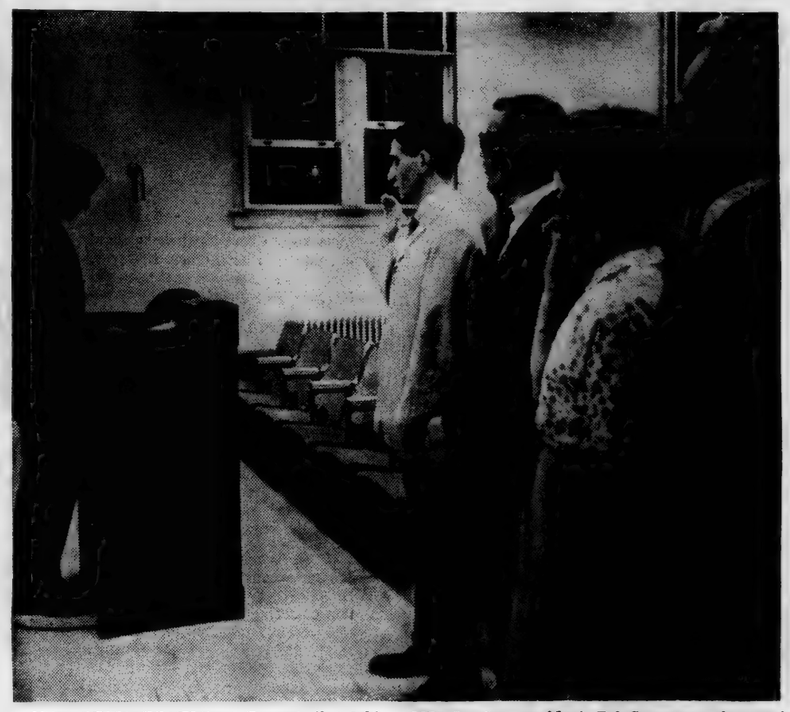
A warning that care should be used in the application of graduate research grants was voiced Monday night by Kenan Professor C. Hugh Holman, dean of the UNC Graduate School. He addressed the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Dean Holman also discussed other problems of the graduate school, including communication to the public and within the department, admissions standards, and the work loads of graduate instructors.

He stressed the fact government and private research grants should not interfere with the main tasks of research by graduate professors. The danger, he said, lies in "yielding far too many of the decisions about the special work we undertake to outside agencies in order to gain support for it."

He urged faculty members to "preserve our integrity as scholars" while grants are secured to make possible the acquisition of equipment.

"Government agencies and private corporations sometimes tantalizingly dangle before us the probabilities of large scale support, and divert our attention from our immediate goals," he said.



Dean Holman continued, "the ultimate protection against perversion of purposes and undue influence on research is the integrity of the individual and his sense of commitment to his basic discipline."

He encouraged the professors to know and communicate their specialties, but he cautioned against slipping into narrow and exclusive specialization. He said that research and development funds should go primarily to support basic research, and that applied research should be secondary. Only to a limited degree, he said, should such money go into highly specialized developmental work.

Dean Holman also spoke about the problem of communication, saying that better understanding of the graduate program by the public is necessary, as well as better communication between departments. He said that we need more interdisciplinary programs and better exchange of ideas in order to break down some of the "high walls" between departments and schools.

As to public communication, he said, "We have a serious and important public relations job. Graduate education demands of us commitments different from those demanded by undergraduate education." He referred to the greater expense of graduate education as an example of the problems.

Amendment Is Backed By Alumni

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH — The squabble over the new name for N. C. State College popped up again yesterday in the House of Representatives as they began deliberations on the Higher Education Bill.

Only one amendment has been proposed for the bill and it is to rename N. C. State, "North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina" instead of the committee proposal of "North Carolina State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

The proposed amendment is being backed strongly by the State College alumni who also backed it when the bill was brought up in the Senate last week.

The amendment was defeated, but the bill as a whole received unanimous Senate approval.

Except for this proposed amendment, the Higher Education Bill now before the House is identical to that passed by the Senate last week. Several representatives said they thought the education bill would easily pass the House once the name change controversy was resolved.

Also concerning the greater University, new legislation was introduced in the Senate and House which authorizes the trustees of the Consolidated University to issue revenue bonds to raise money for construction of a new football stadium at N. C. State.

In other legislative action yesterday, the Senate passed into law a bill requiring seat belts on new automobiles in North Carolina.

The bill, which passed the House three weeks ago, requires that new cars registered after Jan. 1, 1964 be fitted with seat belts in the front seat.

The Senate also approved and sent to the House a proposed bill which would declare all women living on relief rolls who have mothered three illegitimate children to be declared unfit mothers. The bill says these children will be taken from their mothers and placed in foster homes.

Relations Meet Here May 2-5

Approximately 100 student leaders from colleges and universities throughout 13 Southern states are expected to participate in a conference on Human Relations in the South here May 2-5.

The conference is sponsored by the University and the Young Adult Council, which represents 32 youth organizations in the U. S. ranging from the Young Democrats to 4-H Club.

Its theme will be "The South into the Mainstream," providing an open forum for the exchange of ideas concerning Southern issues. In addition to panel discussions, there will be four keynote addresses.

The first will be given by Professor J. Clayton Fever, chairman of the Religion department at the University of Oklahoma, Thursday May 2 at 8:30 p.m.

Professor Richard Bardolph, chairman of the History department at Woman's College and author of The Negro Vanguard will speak Friday May 3.

Saturday the speaker will be Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, member of the NAACP legal staff for Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina. She argued cases involving James Meredith, Harvey Gant and the University of Georgia.

The final keynote address will be given 9:30 Sunday night by the Reverend Will Campbell, past YMCA secretary at the University of Mississippi and now executive director of race relations in the South for the National Council of Churches.

All keynote addresses will be given in Howell Hall auditorium.

The participants will arrive Thursday, May 2, and will be served meals at the Carolina Inn.

Infirmary

Councils Distribute Rule Change Letter

By JOEL BULKLEY

The Women's Council and the Women's Residence Council have issued a joint letter clarifying recent rule changes made by these groups, the DTH learned yesterday.

Copies of the letter, as co-authored by Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council and Diane Blanton, chairman of the WRC, have been sent to 130 leaders throughout the state, including Gov. Terry Sanford, members of the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees and the state press. Copies were also mailed to present and past members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, the University administration and student leaders.

"The letter is informative in nature and is an attempt to provide specific background material, by presenting the facts and rationale behind the actions of the councils," Miss Blanton reported Tuesday.

The text of the letter follows:

"On March 12, the WRC made several changes in its constitution. These changes were made in an effort to make its constitution of the more consistent with the long tradition of student responsibility in the area of student conduct. The constitution formerly stated that the WRC could make the rules only with the approval of the Dean of Women. It now states that the WRC possesses the sole authority to formulate the social rules governing women students; however, the council will continue to confer with the Dean of Women's office before making any rule changes. The changes in the constitution were effective immediately and met with no objection from the administration.

On March 19, the WRC approved a revised version of the women's rules and put these changes into effect immediately. One of the changes made was a redefinition of the apartment rule. The original version of this rule, passed by the WRC in 1956, stated that all women students were required to have a minimum of two couples present before they could visit in a man's apartment. The rule was changed so that it applies only to freshmen women.

For many years students have been dissatisfied with the apartment rule. It has failed to face the social situation realistically. Therefore, it cannot be respected by the students; and it has seriously weakened the foundation of the Honor System.

This rule has been actively debated by the WRC and the Women's Council throughout the years. Both councils have sought information and advice from the students whom they represent, the administration, and other colleges and universities before deciding upon a specific change for this rule.

There has been opposition voiced concerning the immediacy of the rule's effectiveness. In 1960 and 1961 the WRC changed rules and put them into effect in the middle of the year. Therefore the WRC feels that it has acted in good faith according to accepted procedure.

Having clear precedent, the WRC declared the rule changes of March 19, 1963, immediately effective. In addition, this action would prevent the Women's Council from being placed in the awkward and hypocritical position of enforcing a rule previously declared unjust. Students cannot be expected to support an Honor System which is devoid of consistency, reason, and justice.

The Women's Council concurs with the rule changes made by the WRC and will therefore continue to enforce the rules as legislated by that council. In regard to the apartment rule, we would like to reiterate the fact that the Women's Council will maintain its jurisdiction over conduct in accordance with the Campus Code; therefore, it intends to handle any question of breach of lady-like conduct."

Two pages of rule changes instituted by the WRC were enclosed in the letters sent out.

Tuttle Gets Award

Donald L. Tuttle, a second year graduate student in the University of North Carolina School of Business Administration, has been awarded a Ford Foundation Doctoral Fellowship in Business Administration for the academic year 1963-64.

The fellowships are awarded annually to some 30 students throughout the United States who are in graduate schools of business administration. Recipients of these fellowships must have completed at least one year of graduate work in business administration. The fellowships are awarded on the basis of academic achievement.

Tuttle received the only fellowship of this kind awarded in North Carolina this year.

A native of Florida, Tuttle is the son of William O. Tuttle of 2260 Southwest Fifth St., Miami. Tuttle did his undergraduate work at the University of Florida where he received a B.S. degree in Business Administration in 1956 and an M.B.A. degree in 1961.

College Integrated

Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, Va.—the oldest women's college of the Southern Presbyterian Church—has opened its doors to Negro applicants.

The change in policy will have no effect on the fall enrollment because admissions have already been completed, said college president Dr. Samuel Ried Spencer Jr.

The Board of Trustees took the action last weekend changing the policy so that applicants would be considered "without regard to race or creed."

Henderson Calls Student Meeting 'Satisfactory'

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

"We had a satisfactory meeting", Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson commented after a conference of student leaders, administrative representatives and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline yesterday.

The meeting, which was barred to reporters, was held to discuss "both general and specific concerns in the area of student conduct."

Henderson said all parties presented their points of view and the discussion revolved around three main points including: discussion of the past tradition of Student Government at UNC; the responsibility imposed on the Chancellor, the faculty and the administration by the Board of Trustees; and, according to Henderson "some attempt was made to show the student leaders that they simply could not accept FULL responsibility for everything concerning student affairs and conduct."

He said there is a "valid and viable tradition of student government at Carolina," but that "tradition has received its authority from the faculty, administration and trustees."

Henderson said that student government "cannot operate independently of the faculty, trustees and the Chancellor."

Dean of Men William Long said there is a confusion over the term "student autonomy." He said that many people really didn't understand just what student autonomy means.

He said the term means to many people "an un-encumbered activity that Student Government owes responsibility only to itself. I'm afraid that's the connotation received from that term," Long said.

The general opinion among those attending the meeting was that it was a valuable one, but according to one spokesman, "There is a lot left to be discussed as to whether students should have more responsibility in dealing with student affairs."

Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael said, "I learned a lot from the meeting but in two hours you just can't learn everything there is to learn about human nature. You just can't have a complete soul bearing in two hours. I'm sure everyone is looking forward to another meeting."

Men's Honor Council Chairman Whitney Durand said he thought that the students and administration "have a better understanding of each other's position, but no solution came from the meeting."

Student Body President Mike Lawler said he would reserve comment on the matter until his inaugural

Russians Block Laos Settlement

LONDON (UPI) — The Soviet Union Tuesday night blocked a speedy diplomatic settlement of the crisis in Laos when Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko formally demanded that the United States be blamed for the latest outbreak of fighting there.

Britain proposed this weekend that Britain and the Soviet Union as co-chairmen of the Geneva Conference on Laos, send an appeal to the Laotian government asking it to cooperate with an international Control Commission set up to supervise the peace.

The Soviet repily handed Tuesday to British ambassador Sir Humphrey Trevelyan in Moscow demanded that a clause be inserted in the peace appeal blaming the United States for the new fighting. Britain rejected this.

Government sources said the Soviets dealt a severe blow to the peace machinery of the Geneva accords ending the civil war in Laos. The exchange was released Tuesday night by the foreign office.

Reds Driven Out

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — Delayed military dispatches reported Tuesday that neutralist Gen. Kong Le's troops had driven pro-Communist Pathet Lao troops from the Plain of Jars village of Tha Thom and bombarded the strongpoint of Xieng Khouang.

Withdrawal Demanded

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States Tuesday demanded a Communist withdrawal in northern Laos and American officials deplored Russia's refusal to join the British in an appeal for peace in the troubled kingdom.

Airlines Policy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy approved a new U. S. international air policy Tuesday which called for authority to control fares of all crriers operating to and from this country.

The policy also came close to urging approval of the proposed merger between Trans World Airlines and Pan American World Airways without actually spelling it out.

The fare proposal was the most drastic of several recommendations contained in a policy statement drawn up by an interagency steering committee and approved by the President.

Mitchell Innocent

NEW YORK (UPI) — Joseph McD. Mitchell, controversial Newburgh, N. Y., city manager who drew nationwide attention last year with a "welfare chiseler" crackdown, Tuesday was found innocent of charges he demanded and accepted a $20,000 bribe in return for a real estate favor.

The verdict automatically cleared co-defendant Lawrence J. DeMasi Jr., accused of being the "bagman" in the alleged scheme, of conspiracy and bribery charges.

However, DeMasi was immediately re-arrested and charged with grand larceny as he walked out of the courtroom.

Ehrhard Nominated

BONN (UPI) — The 14-year rule of Chancellor Konrad Adenauer neared an end Tuesday with the formal nomination of Economics Minister Ludwig Erhard as his successor. Adenauer fought the action to the finish.

Erhard is scheduled to succeed the 87-year-old Adenauer in the chancellory this fall, when Adenauer has said he will resign.

In the meantime, it appears Adenauer will be little more than a "lame duck" chancellor who has lost control over the party he molded into one of the most powerful political machines in Germans history.

Experst To Meet

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American and Soviet experts may meet in Geneva soon to thresh out technical problems involved in establishment of a "hot line" teletype wire between Moscow and Washington, disarmament chief William C. Foster said today.

He said the United States expects its technicians to go to Switzerland within the next two weeks. He indicated he believed the Soviet technicians also would show up, although Moscow has been engaged in a little foot dragging in recent days.

Johnson Hails Space

DALLAS (UPI) — Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson said Tuesday the space age has produced a "second industrial revolution" for all parts of the nation.

In less than six years, more than 5,000 companies and research organizations have joined in the space program, and space research has produced more than 3,000 new products and methods for private enterprise, he said.

Johnson's statements were in a speech prepared for delivery at the second manned space flight meeting of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics.

Publishers To Cooperate With Wirtz

NEW YORK (UPI) — The American Newspaper Publishers Association ANPA said Tuesday it would cooperate with Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz in exploring "new approaches" to prevent a breakdown of collective bargaining in labor disputes.

Wirtz proposed last week in a speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington that newspaper management and labor get together in an effort to find new ways to solve mutual problems and ease labor tensions.

Irwin Maier, publisher of the Milwaukee Journal and Sentinel and president of the ANPA, sent a telegram to Wirtz saying the organization was always ready to cooperate in such suggestions.

Wirtz replied he believed industry leaders should take the first step toward such approaches themselves without government or public participation. However, he added that he would be available at any time to meet with ANPA representatives and help if requested.

The ANPA Special Labor Committee will meet during the four-day convention in New York, which ends Thursday, to consided the exchange of telegrams between Wirtz and Maier.

A workshop panel discussion Tuesday for executives of newspapers with a circulation of more than 50,000 daily devoted its time to use of electronic computers in typesetting, classified advertisement programming and billing.

The Minneapolis Star and Tribune was awarded a prize by the panel for the "best idea of the year." It was for a 26-week science information series written by nationally known experts. The series later was distributed in a package to 2,000 science classrooms.

Tragic Spectacle

"Don't cry. Have faith."

These are the words New York attorney James B. Donovan uttered Monday to the woe-stricken wife of the only American remaining in jail in Cuba, when she asked why her husband hadn't been brought out with the other prisoners.

More than anything else we have seen or heard, those words brought home to us the tragic spectacle of Cuba, 1963. What began as a bright hope for a new life three and a half years ago has spiraled downward into Marxian despotism and all we can do, it seems, is hope for a miracle.

We cannot invade Cuba. Not only would it be illegal, the cost would be too high in terms of that most sacred of commodities, lives.

We cannot impose any further sanctions. We have already exhausted that avenue of pressure.

All we can do is remain vigilant and take advantage of any opportunities that come along to oust Fidel and his crew.

In the meantime, what can we do?

We can work harder at investing in the future rather than continuing to insulate ourselves from the hard realities of the present.

We can work harder at demolishing the breeding grounds of Communism—poverty, injustice, hunger—around the world and especially in Latin America.

We can stop supporting dictators.

We can stop spending so much time, effort and money to "contain" Communism and start working harder at eradicating the conditions that allow it to flourish.

We can remember our own national beginnings and ask ourselves if we are not doing to others what late 18th-century England tried to do to us—enshrine the status quo, however repressive and repulsive it was.

We have learned to fight fire with fire. Now we must learn to fight revolutionary ideas with revolutionary ideas. Surely we have some. They go under the name of Democracy.

* * *

"Don't cry. Have faith."

The theme-song of history.

An All-Campus Weekend

The first really all-campus weekend is almost upon us, and from all indications it promises to be one of the most festive and most fun things to happen at Carolina in a long while.

This year's Jubilee is not an attempt to preempt Germans, but rather an effort to have the whole campus included in one big party, with something offered for everybody.

The Graham Memorial Activities Board has done an excellent job of planning and organizing this year's Jubilee, and we can only heartily endorse their choice of entertainers.

We certainly wish them the greatest success in this experiment, and hope the students exhibit the interest this project deserves.

Telephone Book Woes

We are rarely moved to do a book review in the editorial columns of this paper. And we are even less rarely apt to do a book review of a telephone book in any column of the paper.

But the Chapel Hill Telephone Book, aside from a weak plot and dull format, leaves so much to be desired and has caused us so much wasted time and frustration that we can no longer resist the urge to vent our wrath and point up the indifference that must surely be the guideline for the compilation of this volume.

First, and most obvious, the University of North Carolina is unlisted. We find it difficult to believe that the University doesn't want anyone to call them and requested an unlisted number, especially since they have manned the information phone at South Building 24 hours a day.

Another example. Suppose you wanted to call the French Department and didn't know what building it is in? It's not listed. Suppose you wanted to call the French Department and did know what building it is in. The building isn't listed either. Granted that no one in his right mind would ever want to call the French Department, but crises do arise at times.

The same thing is true for several other often called numbers, and we haven't even taken up the question of numbers that are listed but are wrong.

Our only cause for hope comes from a small sentence on the inside front cover of the book. "Next issue, all campus listings will appear in indented "caption" form under the main heading of Univ. of N. Carolina."

Seems we have seen that sentence before. Matter of fact, it was in the last issue, and the one before that, and the one before that.

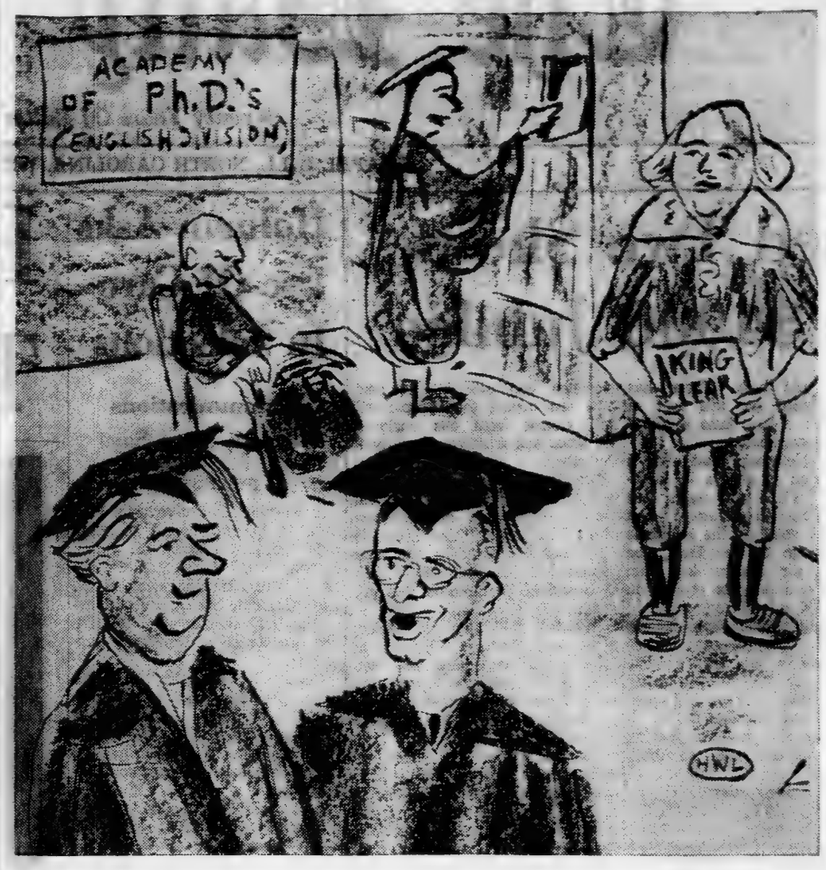
Grade System Leads Only To Bluffing

The Michigan Daily

One of the threats facing learning today is the grading system. This system attempts to rank a student among his fellows according to the amount of knowledge he apparently has. In reality, it places the importance of getting a good grade above the importance of learning.

The intended use of a grade is to show the University how well a student is doing in comparison with other students. The University uses grades for conferring academic honors and scholarships, and for showing other academic institutions a student's progress and position in case the student wants to transfer or go on to graduate school. Because of the law averages, the overall record of a student's achievement is fairly accurate. For administrative purposes, this record need never be more than fairly accurate.

Grades as administrative tools are necessary. The University must know where its students stand in relation to each other. However, there is no reason for the student to know his official standing.



One of the most entertaining college activities is bluffing. It is used by students with great ability and little achievement to see if their cleverness can cover up their lack of knowledge. Usually this bluffing doesn't fool the professor, and the general attitude is that cleverness deserves a reward which is a good trade, and that the clever student should receive a college education.

If the student didn't have the fun of playing the grade game, if he were never given the satisfaction of seeing if he won, he might find more satisfaction in learning itself. Not every student misuses grades in the bluffing fashion, but every student does use them as an incentive. They are a very good incentive, but they are also false ones.

The goal of getting good grades never entirely dissolves the real purpose of an education, but it does dim it. If instead of receiving a grade for a paper, or an hourly exam, or even for a final exam, the student were given written criticism, he would have a better idea of not only where he stood, but how he should proceed.

Erasing the idea of grades would not erase competition. The desire to know more, and the desire to be right are stronger incentives than a good trade. Grades are an administrative classification separate from the academic goal of learning.

"No, He's Not A Scholar, But He Is Persistent"

Phiddity: Academic Malady

Shakespeare never would have earned a Ph.D. degree by submitting "King Lear" or an other of his famous works, an outstanding educator said at Duke University last week.

Addressing a regional Conference on Teaching Political Science, Dr. Edgar H. Brookes, former South African senator for 15 years, said colleges and universities have often become so preoccupied with Ph.D. degrees and faculty research and publications that student education suffers.

Dr. Brookes referred to "the phenomenon which I venture to call Phiddity the tyranny of the Ph.D.," and added that while many countries suffer from phiddity, "It is found in full flower in America."

Currently a visiting professor of political science at Duke, Dr. Brookes formerly was a veteran faculty member of South Africa's University of Natal.

Stating that Shakespeare would never have earned a Ph.D. degree by submitting "King Lear" or "Cymbeline" to the examiners, Dr. Brookes added that Aristotle, Milton, Plato, Mill and other great writers would have fared as badly.

"In short most of the great political texts which we use in our courses woul be considered incompatible with the Phiddity of our day," he declared.

He said further that ". . . the feeling that research must constantly be done and that publications are one of the most vital factors in promotion means that almost all spare time is given to these things."

No comparable effort is made to assure that faculty members give adequate time to their students as individuals, he continued. "This does not count for promotion," he added.

He then posed this question: "Will anyone seriously maintain that the American university system would be sensibly weakened if one-third of the time now given to research were devoted to individual students?"

Another speaker, Dr. Lindsay Rogers of Columbia University, also remarked on the emphasis on faculty writing. "Some of them feel that they must publish or perish, for in certain misguided academic quarters, a 'productive output'" is an essential for promotion in rank, he said.

Dr. Rogers said further that "I confess that I have always thought that brilliant political journalists—Walter Lippman, James Reston and Raymond Aron, for example—merit the attention of scholars an dstudents" just as much as academic writers on political topics.

Is Second Oldest Campus Building

Person Has Had Many Careers

By DONA FAGG

What is Person Hall? Through the University's history it seems that no one has been able to decide for sure what the purpose of this small ivy-cloaked building located between Hill Hall and Old West Dorm is.

Erected in 1795 with funds donated by General Thomas Person, a Revolutionary War hero and one of the first trustees of the University, the Hall is the campus's second oldest building.

It was half its original size when first built and housed the University President's offices, an auditorium and several small recitation rooms. The first graduating class received their diplomas in its chapel.

During the 1800's and until 1904 it reeked with chemical fumes as home of the chemistry department. In 1904 the School of Medicine moved in. The School of Pharmacy then claimed the building as its quarters from 1912-1925.

Everyone and no one in particular used Person Hall for the next ten years. There the Playmakers stored scenery, the Di and Phi societies debated, the Book Exchange stored books and the mice ran rampant.

In 1934, the building was remodeled with federal funds to house the art department and to provide a small art gallery. A few months earlier, Katherine Pendleton Arrington had donated three pieces of statuary to the University. The windowless south wall of Person was considered to be an ideal setting for the two Gothic gargoyles and the statue of Stephen Langton, Cardinal Archbishop of Canterbury in 1225.

The donation of the statuary is a story in itself. In the 1890's Katherine Pendleton as a young belle attending dances at the University had met and charmed Robert Worth Bingham, a law student. Although there never was any romance, they kept a friendship alive through the years. When Bingham became ambassador to Great Britain, he chose Mrs. Arrington to be presented at court.

While Mrs. Arrington was in London, she noticed that there was a great deal of statuary lying about, seemingly discarded. She was told that the statuary on Big Ben, Houses of Parliament, had to be replaced since the weather ate way the stone. The British Government was pleased to sell Mrs. Arrington the three pieces at a minimal cost. The statues were shipped to the University.

The other statue "Youth," a bronze piece of a young man taming a horse, was given by the sculpturess Anna Hyatt Huntington whose work appears in Brookgreen Gardens and in 200 galleries and exhibits.

Person Hall is now the research laboratories of the anthropology department and the museum of geology. It now contains the remants of the past—artifacts of a Central American civilization, remains of a one-year-old child, cloth woven of bark and an Ainu punishment club. But Person Hall not only contains objects of the past, it itself is full of history.

Comment: Cars For Students

Car ownership by students was the subject of a rather lengthy article in a recent issue of the Daily Tar Heel, student newspaper at the University at Chapel Hill. The headline asked the question, "Is Car Ownership a Right of Students as Citizens?"

Being factual rather than argumentative, at least for the moment, we share with our readers the information on campus car ownership contained in the Tar Heel's story. We are told that, of the 9,000 students at Chapel Hill, 6,200 do not maintain cars or have them in Chapel Hill. About 3,400 student cars are registered, 1,000 of them owned by married students, and most of the remainder by graduate and professional students and juniors and seniors.

There are bars and limitations on student car ownership and operation at Chapel Hill. Freshmen may not have cars, and sophomores must maintain C average before bringing the family car to the University. Students holding scholarships or borrowing from the loan fund may not maintain motor vehicles, with exceptions made for students needing cars in connection with self-help jobs and whose cases have faculty approval.

Quite a debate could be worked up over the question of a student's right to own and operate a car as part of campus life. Another query, as the Tar Heel suggested, might be warmly debated, and that is whether possession of an automobile is a drawback to "scholarly efficiency."

The subject came up again in legislative circles, as we recall. It has happened before, and is likely to happen again. We incline to the opinion that the student and his car pose a question or questions for parents, guardians and academic authorities, rather than for the General Assembly.

Divorce Italian: Social Comment In Comic Vein

A Review

By NINA DAVIS

"Divorce—Italian Style:" a "Lux-Vides-Galatea" film, presented by Joseph E. Levine; produced by Franco Cristaldi, directed by Pietro Germi; screenplay by E. de Concini, A. Giannetti, P. Germi; photography direction by L. Barboni, camerawork by A. Zavattini.

"Divorce—Italian Style," which completed a three-week run at the Rialto Theatre Tuesday, is comedy of the highest quality and social commentary of the most palpable directness. In this Joseph Levine presentation, Marcello Mastroianni displays a new facet of his seemingly limitless talent, and Pietro Germi directs his way into the Italian elite of Federigo Fellini and Michelangelo Antonioni.

The object of director and co-author Pietro Germi's satiric attack is Article 587 of the Italian Penal Code which prescribes a three to seven year prison terms for a murder committeed in defense of "family honor." Thus, in a country where divorce is impossible, an objectionable spouse can be disposed of if he or she can be caught in an act of "illicit carnal relationship."

Sicilian baron Ferdinando Cefalu's wife is indeed objectionable. As brilliantly played by Daniela Rocca, Rosalia Cefalu is a mustachioed and inane giggler. Ferdinando's cousin Angela, on the other hand, is the most voluptous of 16-year-old nymphets. Within the confines of the ancient family palace, proximity breeds passion. Ferdinando (Mastroianni) and Angela (Stefania Sandrelli) fall hopelessly in love; Rosalia assumes the status of an insurmountable barrier.

Lover Is Needed

At this point, a much-publicized "crime passionel" brings Article 587 to Ferdinando's eager attention. His gun is well oiled; all that is lacking is a lover for Rosalia.

With infinite care, Ferdinando clothes Rosalia's not unappealing derriere in the most clinging silk draperies and parades her through busy village streets. With the anxious expression of an artist exhibiting his masterpiece, he scans the watching male faces for limmers of latent lust. His quest is not lengthy. For every silly woman, seemingly, there is a silly man who desires her.

Rosalia temporarily complicates the situation by fleeing with her lover, but the baron's passion is prodigious and his ingenuity without limit. He keeps busy making files of anonymous letters and the other expressions of the Italian contempt for a cuckold until the time for revenge is ripe. The murder is ridiculously easy, the jury understandingly sympathetic, and a brief eighteen months sets him free to marry Angela and—perhaps — live happily ever after.

Technical Perfection

The technical perfection of "Divorce-Italian Style" alone would justify its Academy Award nominations and its recognition by the Cannes Film Festival as the Best Comedy of the Year. Flash-backs and dream sequences are used with unerring effectiveness, and the photography direction of Guglielmo Colonna captures both the Sicilian spirit and the nuances of Mastroianni magnetism.

Marcello Mastroianni, whose singularly uncomic roles in "La Dolce Vita" and "La Notte" have merited him international acclaim, here proves himself a comedian of the first magnitude. His humor is of the subtle variety that only the most outstanding of actors can successfully put across. Ferdinando has a nervous tic which, perhaps ten times in the course of almost two hours, twists one side of his mouth for the briefest of instants. Mastroianni's unerring comic instinct makes each fleeting contortion a momentous occasion in cinematic history.

Michigan Poet Will Read Here

Donald Hall, a young poet who is professor in the Department of English at the University of Michigan, will read for the spring session of the North Carolina Poetry Circuit.

Hall will give his first reading in the state here on Thursday, April 25, at 8:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of the Monogram Club. He will read at seven other institutions of higher education in the state on succeeding evenings.

The Poetry Circuit was established in 1961 under the sponsorship of the University of North Carolina Press. Each academic year the circuit brings two poets into the state for readings of their own works.

The 34-year-old Hall is the author of two volumes of poetry, "Exiles and Marriages," which was the Lamont Poetry Selection of the Academy of American Poets, and "The Dark Houses." His poems have appeared in "The New Yorker," "Harper's," the "Partisan Review," and many other magazines.

Dean Henderson said yesterday's meeting was just a begining step toward the "solution of this particular problem," and he said there would be more meetings between student and administration leaders in the very near future.

Employment Firm Has 290 Branches

UNC students and teachers looking for summer jobs may find them at one of the 290 branches of Manpower, Inc., a world-wide temporary help and complete business service firm.

The nearest Manpower offices are located in Charlotte, N. C., Greensboro, N. C., and Raleigh, N. C.

Manpower is interested in people who can work only for a short period of time such as summer vacation. Many college students and teachers are assigned to handle the additional workload created because of vacationing employees.

A spokesman for Manpower said that most of the demand is for temporary workers with offices skills—secretaries, stenographers, typists, offices machine operators, file clerks, bookkeepers and telephone solicitors.

Other jobs include taking surveys, demonstrating products, distributing pamphlets, serving as hostesses, and selling in department stores.

Bridge Winners

Winners in the Master Point duplicate bridge game held Friday, April 19th, by the Friday Night Duplicate Club in the hall of the Chapel of St. Thomas More, 744 Gimghoul Road, Chapel Hill, are as follows:

NORTH-SOUTH:
1. S. N. Ray and Mrs. A. K. Bose.
2. Bob Stevens of Durham and Jim Mason.
3. N. D. O'Briant of Durham and Father James E. Kelly

Canadian Professor To Speak On Africa

"Afrikaner Nationalism" will be the topic of a speech to be delivered this afternoon by Dr. Arthur Keppel-Jones, professor of History at Queens University, Ontario.

The talk will be sponsored by the Graduate History Club in Conjunction with Phi Alpha Theta history honors society at 4:00 in Room 104 of Peabody Hall.

Professor Keppel-Jones obtained his degrees at Oxford and the University of Cape Town. He was Senior Lecturer in History at the University of the Witswatersrand in Africa and has of late been Professor of History at Queens University in Kingston, Ontario.

Glass Company Offering Grant

The Corning Glass Works Foundation has established a $5,600 traveling fellowship for one senior each from UNC and four other universities.

The Scholarship will run for the period September 1, 1963 to July 1, 1964, and will be for those college seniors interested in an industrial career who will spend one year o ftravel and study on a subject related to broad needs and problems of industry.

Application for the fellowship will consist of a statement of why the candidate wishes to follow a career in industry and, in general terms, of the method by which he believes he can make a contribution, and a detailed description of the fellowship project including a tentative plan of study or travel necessary to carry it out. No special fields of study are required for eligibility.

The University Committee to select the Corning fellow is composed of James H. Blackman, Professor of Economics; Frank M. Duffey, chairman, Professor of Romanee Languages; Claude S. George, Associate Dean of Business Administration; and William F. Little, Associate Professor of Chemistry. Interested seniors should inquire of Dr. Duffey in 203 South Building before May 1.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

THE 1936 EDITION of the All Sports Record Book (Title Registered U.S. Patent Office) is a sometimes-serious, sometimes-hilarious collection of sports standards set down in print by Frank G. Menke.

Since it states: "Privilege to reproduce in whole, or in part, any of this book, may be done only with written consent of the publisher and, under all circumstances, a full credit line must be carried." And since I have not obtained this consent, and since my failure may lead to the bringing of a lawsuit against the sovereign state of North Carolina, the following anecdotes are put down with a slight bit of hesitation.

The years 1915 and 1935 stand out in my mind as prime examples of as-yet unheralded ages of sport.

Card-tearing records all went out the window this year when Mrs. Loretta Montagna of Italy picked up 110 playing cards and tore them in half with one herculean tear. Her record, however, is still pending for she was, at the time, visiting Algiers, and they weren't her decks.

On March 8, a 141-pound Melbourne, Australia man picked up six men — their combined weight was 750 lbs. — and carried them 20 feet, 7 1/2 inches, a world mark.

Purring Can Be Quite Rough

ON ANOTHER CONTINENT, a pastime called "purring" brought together two men in a test of shin-resistance. The two wore heavy boots, put their heads together, hands on each other's shoulders and, upon signal, proceeded to kick. The first to cry out, or break away, was the loser. Anton Hanislan of Wales was the winner.

"Cloudburster Hen" Langer, Turtle Creek, Pa., claimed some sort of a record also in 1915 when he made 36 consecutive aeroplane trips and never landed in one, because he made each descent in a parachute.

John Strickland, Blackpool, Eng., played piano 122½ hours without stop, but this, too, is only pending. He used sheet music.

1935: Captain Jack Abernathy, formerly of Texas but more lately of New York, bagged 1,008 wolves (alive) up through his 60th birthday. This still prevails as the all-time wolf catching record.

Miss Free Used Her Hands

THE WORLD HAND-WALKING and doughnut-eating champions were also crowned that year. Constance Free, Chicago, walked 408 feet on her hands at the age of 10 before learning what hands could best be used for.

Alfred S. Howes, a former Boy Scout doughnut-eating title winner, rose to a higher class on Feb. 17 by putting away 20 doughnuts in 18 minutes flat. His time bettered W. Russell Pillsbury's 20-doughnut record of 29 minutes, 26 seconds.

Perhaps no one has been more prolific at his specialty than John H. Schlueter, whose gifted talent came to an end in '35 when he died at age 81. The Watertown, Wis. man smoked 24 cigars a day, an estimated total of 438,000 for a lifetime, with a value of around $50,000.

Another probable playing card record was set this year, one that must not go unmentioned.

Leuben, the famous German lunatic, wagered he could turn up a pack of cards in a certain order. The guy turned cards 10 hours a day for 20 years—4,246,028 times—before he succeeded. This,, too is a world record —for lunatics.

Spence Willard Baffles Duke As UNC Wins Big One, 3-1

By JOHN MONTAGUE

DURHAM—Spence Willard was "Tar Heel of the Day" here yesterday as North Carolina paid back Duke for an earlier defeat, 3-1.

The big Kernersville righthander threw a four-hitter at the Blue Devils, striking out eight and walking three. It was the second complete game of the season for Willard, now 2-0, and he almost had his second shutout of the year.

Duke picked up its lone run in the ninth inning on a single, a passed ball and an infield out. Earlier in the year Willard blanked Virginia Tech, 1-0, on three hits.

Coach Walt Rabb's crew, now 2-3 in A c p s, took advantage of some errant throwing by the Blue Devils to score its first run before the ball game was five minutes old.

Stan Crisson, the Duke ace who suffered his first setback of the season after four wins, hit lead-off batter Dickie Prindle with a pitch, but seemingly had things under control when he got Buddy Tilden to line out and Jim Speight to strike out.

However, with clean-up man Tom Wright at bat, Prindle attempted a steal of second and the comedy of errors was under way. Catcher Ed Chestnutt threw the ball into centerfield and Prindle headed for third. Center fielder Sonny Odom picked up the wild toss and let loose with one of his own, several feet over third baseman Tommy Taylor's head. The ball bounced in and out of the Duke dugout, automatically giving Prindle the extra base, which in this case was home plate.

North Carolina picked up a pair of runs in the sixth frame, and this proved to be the difference in the ball game.

Prindle, who reached base four times during the windy afternoon, led it off with a walk. With a full count on Tilden, Rabb called for the hit-and-run and Tilden responded with a blistering single to right, a few feet behind the moving Prindle who raced to third.

Speight brought Prindle across with a sinking liner to right which fell in for a single. Tilden, who had moved to third, scored two plays later on Bill Brown's sacrifice fly to Odom in deep center.

Willard retired the Blue Devils 1-2-3 in only one inning, the third, but he held the big hand when the chips were down. In the second he struck out Chestutt with Odom, who had reached first on a bunt single and advanced on two infield outs, standing on third.

Slugging Biff Bracey, who entered the game with 5 homers, 23 RBI's and a .426 batting average, led off the fourth with a towering triple to right center, but was cut down at home when the next batter, Dave Uible bounced one back to the mound.

Uible, on the fielder's choice, stole second with two out, and moved to third on catcher Bob "Hot Rod" Hundley's throwing error, but Willard fanned Bobby Hawn to escape unscathed.

In the seventh Willard gave up a walk to lead-off man Odom, but then got Hawn to strike out, Ken Stallings to ground out and Chestnutt to strike out.

The Blue Devils, who lost their second conference game in six starts, finally got to Willard in the ninth.

Bracey, a troublemaker all afternoon, led off with a single to left. Hundley then let the second pitch to Uible get by him for a passed ball. Bracey made it all the way to third as the ball rolled some 60 feet behind the plate.

Willard struck out Uible, but Odom's grounder to Prindle brought Bracey across and spoiled Willard's shutout bid.

Crisson's wildness kept him in constant difficulty, but the big righty, who beat UNC when the two teams met in Chapel Hill, was equal to the task except for his sixth inning lapse. His best effort came in the seventh when he struck out Wright, a .417 hitter, with the bases loaded.

UNC takes on Georgia Southern this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium. Bobby Cox or Joe Wright will start against the Eagles, who hung a 4-2 defeat on the Tar Heels two weeks ago.

CAROLINA CAPSULES—Spence Willard was, needless to say, overjoyed at his performance. "I threw sliders about 75% of the time," the 6-2, 200 pound junior said after the game. "But that Bracey is tough." . . . Biff Bracey, the Duke's slugging outfielder, solved Willard for two hits and a walk, including the booming triple in the fourth. He reached base every time up—once on an error. . . . Ken Willard, currently in a terrific batting slump with his .234 average, was benched yesterday by Rabb.

Track Team Hosts Gamecocks At Two

By FRED HOBSON

Carolina's cindermen, victims of all-conquering Maryland last Friday, hope to bounce back against two other ACC foes here this week.

The Tar Heels face South Carolina at 2 this afternoon and Virginia at 2 Saturday afternoon.

Assistant Coach Joe Hilton is confident of a better outcome in these meets. "Actually we gave a very good performance at Maryland," Hilton said, "but they just have a tremendous team. Some of our boys gave their best performances of the year—and still finished second.

"It took the best in the country to beat Jim Brown's 37 seconds in the 330 hurdles," he added. "But Chris Stauffer's time of 36.8 was the best."

Other top showings in the Terps meet were by Jerry Stuver in the half mile, Ed Boyd and Nick Street in the javelin and John McNinch in the 100.

South Carolina and Virginia aren't as loaded as Maryland, but should provide interesting competition for the Heels.

Atkinson, in the hurdles, and Rose, in the distance events, are top men for the Gamecocks. Ronnie Collins, of basketball fame, is a 6'4" high jumper.

Gene Engel, also a cager, is the strong man for the Cavaliers. He is outstanding in the shot, discus and javelin.

This weekend in Philadelphia, several Tar Heels will compete against the best in the country in the Penn Relays. These events are equal to a national track tournament, and national prominence will be up for grabs.

Tommy Clark will be pitted against the land's best leapsters in the high jump.

Duke Netters To Fall Today

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina resumes tennis action this afternoon by playing host to arch-rival Duke.

Match time is 2 o'clock.

The Tar Heels, who are 12-1 overall, will be seeking their third conference win of the season. UNC initiated ACC competition last week by defeating Virginia and Maryland by identical 8-1 scores.

Carolina doesn't exactly hate conference opposition, because the Tar Heels have won five straight ACC titles. In four years Coach Don Skakle's netters have posted a 30-0 mark in the conference.

Skakle is expected to go with his usual "Sensational Six" in the singles. These include George Sokol, Charlie Shaffer, Bitsy Harrison, O. H. Parrish, Ted Hoehn and Keith Stoneman.

Should one of these not start, Skakle most likely will call on Stan Cocke, Kirby Jones or Pete Myers.

Today's game will be the last home match for UNC until May 1, when N. C. State comes to Chapel Hill. This week-end the netters journey to South Carolina, playing the Gamecocks on Friday and Clemson on Saturday.

Murals Break Tennis Rules

The Intramural Department "broke the rules" Monday and the result was some of the best tennis played this year on the sub-varsity level.

Because of space and time shortages the department usually allows only one set to be played by the two singles and one doubles contestants. Monday was a slow day, however, and the rules were stretched to allow Law School and the Physics Fiends to play the best two out of three sets.

The number one singles match was the highlight of the day as Law School's Marshall Harper and Dick Sanders went 26 games before the winner of the first set could be determined.

Harper won 14-12 and seemed to gain momentum in the victory as he took the second set by an easier 6-3 score.

In the number two singles Bill Dicks dropped the first set to Physics's Pat Rickey 4-6, but took the next two 6-1, 6-3 and the match.

Walker Stars In Frosh Win

Bill Walker starred on the mound and at the plate here yesterday as UNC's Tar Babies beat Duke 5-3.

Walker pitched seven innings before yielding to reliever Alan McArthur, and, before leaving, blasted a bases-loaded triple in the fourth which sewed it up for Carolina.

The freshmen, now 3-3 on the year, play Ferrum Jr. College at Emerson Stadium on Friday.

Report On The Co-op—III

Financial Problem Would Be Plan's First Obstacle

By BILL WUAMETT

A cooperative is a business concern which must meet all the problems of private enterprise. And like private businesses, the greatest obstacle blocking the establishment of a cooperative at UNC is money.

Any store must make an initial investment in merchandise. It must also pay rent, utilities and salaries until its sales income matches expenditures. These require that a large capital fund be raised before students receive any benefits from their investments.

Estimates of the amount of initial captal needed range from $25,000 to $35,000. Dr. R. J. Tillman of the B.A. Dept. and record merchant Kemp Nye estimate $30,000. Co-op committee chairman Bob Spearman thinks $20,000 might be sufficient, but estimates from other cooperative managers have run as high as $50,000.

There are a number of possible ways a sum of this size could be raised. Section 54 of the North Carolina law prohibits a direct appropriation from Student Government or the University to a business which would be in competition with private enterprise, but it does not prohibit a loan to a private cooperative from the general surplus of Student Government.

This source, however, probably could not provide more than $10,000 at the present time. Although the surplus runs as high as $40,000, this money is drawn on at the first of the school year in the period prior to the transfer of student fees to the Student Government fund. Last October, the cash reserve dropped to $15,000 during this period.

The size of this loan could be increased, however, either by a cut in Student Government expenditures or by an increase in student fees.

Presently under discussion is a plan which would place the Yackety Yack on a subscription basis, releasing fee money now going to the Yack for use in the cooperative loan.

Another possibility is a referendum among the student body allowing it to vote an increase in fees to be used for the loan.

Capital could also be raised through the sale of stock to students and alumni. State law requires ownership by individuals, however, so that Student Government could not own shares as the University of Washington does.

North Carolina also has stringent laws governing the distribution of profits from a cooperative. This means that all profits could not be distributed in rebates to member customers.

Dividends must first be paid to all holders of capital stock according to the stock owned. Ten per cent of the profits must then be placed in a reserve fund until that funds equals 30 per cent of the value of the capital stock. Two per cent must be placed in an education fund.

A large per cent of the profit, however, could still be paid to members in rebates by paying only a minimal dividend on the capital stock.

If the required capital could be raised, the problem of location of the store remains. State law also prohibits the establishment of a cooperative on University property.

Store space on or near Franklin Street would be essential to the success of a cooperative. The store would not only have to be convenient for students, but also from non-member customers whose purchases would provide a large percentage of the store's profits.

Also important would be the cooperation of the Chapel Hill Merchants Association, whose members would certainly be hurt by the competition from the cooperative.

The location problem might be solved, however, by Kemp Nye, who has agreed to lease space for a cooperative if and when he completes capital improvements on his building.

Thus many obstacles still block the establishment of a cooperative at UNC. All persons connected with the project agree that the major of these is money. If capital can be found, the legal and physical problems can probably be ironed out.

But there is one question that will remain unanswered until a cooperative actually exists: will the students here support it? Are they willing to risk money individually, and is Student Government willing to risk loss of its loan if the project fails?

Despite these questions, those working on the project are optimistic of its success. As one has remarked, "There is only one reason student government would become involved in this. A cooperative is needed here."

World News In Brief

Reds Accuse Pair Of Wall Bombings

BERLIN (UPI) — The Communists Wednesday accused two Americans—a man and a woman—of being part of "terror groups" that bombed the Berlin wall and helped East Germans escape to West Berlin.

The two were identified only as Bill Otto Kranz, said to be a student who teaches at Sweden's University of Lund, and a woman identified as Joan Glenn.

The charges were leveled at a news conference in East Berlin at which the chief of the East German Press Office, Kurt Blecha, produced a 23-year-old Swedish student from Lund, Leif Perssons.

Perssons was arrestd last month on charges of carrying 40 Swedish passports to help East Germans flee to the West. He was released later.

U. S., Britian Appeal

MOSCOW (UPI) — The United States and Britain, seeking to save the Geneva disarmament conference, went directly to Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev on Wednesday with a dramatic compromise plan for on-site inspections of a nuclear test ban.

Informed sources said the West proposed a set number of inspections—30 was understood to have been suggested—over a period of seven years, an average of about four a year.

The West had been holding out for seven a year; the Soviet Union for two or three.

U. S. Ambassador Foy D. Kohler and British Ambassador Sir Humphrey Trevelyan submitted the proposal to Khrushchev in a 90-minute conference in the Kremlin.

Tortures Revealed

JACKSON, Miss (UPI) — A Mississippi Legislative committee that spent six months investigating the "Ole Miss" rioting issued a report Wednesday charging that federal marshals kept prisoners confined on a "torture slab."

The general legislative investigating committee said students were beaten with clubs, kicked, cursed, spat upon, forced to sit in uncomfortable positions for many hours, and denied food, sleep and needed medical attention.

Committee chairman Russel Fox, a state representative, said the Justice Department "successfully concealed the actions of its marshals from the press and other news media by its management of news at the university."

Youth Action Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A presidential advisory committee endorsed a modified verson of the administration's youth employment program Wednesday and President Kennedy promptly appealed for final congressional action.

The 32-man committee handed the President a report backing his "domestic peace corps" plan to provide jobs and training for young people to work on urban programs and rural conservation projects. It did not go quite as far as the administration measures now in Congress.

Alte, Erhard Meet

BONN (UPI) — Chancellor Konrad Adenauer went through the motions Wednesday of making up with Economics Minister Ludwig Erhard, who was chosen Adenauer's successor Tuesday over the chancellor's objections.

Erhard then went before parliament in his first public appearance since Tuesday's Christian Democratic Party decision and warned the nation that inflation threatens its economy later this year.

Harriman To Moscow

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy said Wednesday he is sending under Secretary of State W. Averell Harriman to Moscow Thursday to discuss the Laos crisis.

Kennedy told a news conference that Harriman would meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and would carry a "short message" from Kennedy to Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Harriman has been in Paris and London discussing the Laos situation with officials there.

Maneuvers To Begin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than 3,000 U. S. Army troops organized into two battle groups will begin arriving in Thailand next month to participate in military maneuvers, the Defense Department announced Wednesday.

Cafe Showing Business Hike With Pickets

By BOB SAMSOT & DICK ROTH

All's quiet at the College Cafe.

The signs—"College Cafe Practices Racial Discrimination" and "Jim Crow Must Go" are still there. But since pickets began carrying signs to end racial discrimination the scene has been characterized by relative quiet, according to Patrolman James Parker, who "keeps an eye on things."

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake says there has only been one incident last week requiring police intervention.

A Carrboro resident struck at a picket out only hit his sign. The man, who fled the state, is charged with simple assault.

Blake said this was only the second incident since integration picketing began here in early 1960. He said both incidents were aimed at white pickets, not Negroes.

He said the present picketing has affected police very little.

"Our regular traffic director has been instructed to keep an eye on things," he said. "He's there from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. We just want to be around if anything happens."

Max Yarbrough, manager of the College Cafe, says business is better than ever and has gone up since the picketing started. No regular customers have been lost.

"Everything is fine," said Yarbrough. "We're just trying to tend to our business like we have been for 25 years."

David Morton, a picket, said "The College Cafe is one of the few luncheonettes still practicing racial discrimination. The idea is to end it—hopefully, soon."

Other cafeteria and luncheonette managers declined comment.

SP Members To Chair 3 Committees

Baddour, Jackson, Hays, Himes Named

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Party members were named chairmen of three of the four Student Legislature committees in elections held Tuesday night. An informal address by student body President Mike Lawler and the swearing in of new student government officers and SL representatives highlighted the first session of the 35th Assembly.

SP representatives Arthur Hays, Phil Baddour and Neal Jackson were elected chairmen of the Finance, Judicial and Ways and Means Committees, respectively. Sam Himes (UP) took the chairmanship of the Rules Committee. Clark Brewer (SP) was named Sergeant-at-Arms.

Student Legislature will consider an amendment to its by-laws allowing the Speaker to appoint the SL clerk at its session tonight, beginning at 7:30 on the fourth floor of New East.

The bill, as introduced by Phil Baddour (SP) for Bonnie Hoyle, would allow the Speaker of Legislature to appoint the clerk, who would not necessarily be a member of SL.

Legislature will also elect two students to the Consolidated University Student Council, the Graham Memorial Activities Board and the Publications Board. The election of a file clerk, and the appointments of a chaplain, Carolina Athletic Association members and an SL parliamentarian will also be acted upon.

Lawler challenged the 50 members of legislature to know the history of their student government and to be courageous enough to stand up for their ideas.

He noted that student government's position can be strengthened only if "we clean up our backyard and only if we concern ourselves with student problems through responsible action, even to the point of sacrifice."

Lawler quoted former Dean Weaver, saying that "the mistakes that make us men are better than the mistakes which keep us children," as a reason for students to maintain their tradition of autonomy. He said that since our autonomy is not licensed, our authority can not be detracted because of disagreement. He reported that the administration has the final authority to overrule a student decision, only if the decision is blatantly irresponsible.

He also summarized the happenings at Tuesday's meeting with the University addinistration and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

Administration Scored At First Press Conference

By JOEL BULKLEY

"The whole character of the University has been challenged by the administration," student body president Mike Lawler told reporters yesterday at his first press conference.

The over-emphasis of the idea of full and final authority over student government resting with the chancellor and the administration also came under fire from the new chief executive.

He and Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council, outlined the happenings at Tuesday's student-administration-faculty meeting to discuss the problems of student discipline.

Lawler noted that students could be lobbying for the University at the legislature in Raleigh, implementing needed reforms for the fraternity system or generally working on student problems.

Instead, he said, their time is now being consumed by discussing "an existing fact."

This fact, he said, is the tradition of student government as established 168 years ago and as recently re-affirmed in the Medford Report (1962) of the trustees concerning the Ann Carter case.

Miss Haynes reported that the student leaders at Tuesday's meeting talked on the historical background of student government, the Women's Residence Council's position on the recent changes in its constitution, the jurisdiction of the Women's Council and jurisdiction of morals cases.

Lawler commented that after the initial presentations of the students, the next one was in the form of a "rebuttal" by Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson. After this the chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline stated his beliefs and concurrence with Dean Henderson, Lawler said.

Lawler also said that, "The student leaders involved—the chairmen of student judicial bodies—felt that the issue at hand had changed. After yesterday, the problem of coeds visiting off-campus living units has become almost secondary to what we consider to be the more acute issues.

Lawler noted that, "In the beginning negotiations were on a specific problem but now the general atmosphere and rationale of the administration and some faculty members has forced the specific problem into the background."

"The issues now seem to be the nature of student authority and the relationship of our jurisdiction and form of responsibility to that of the full and final authority of the chancellor," Lawler continued. "The circumstances under which this full and final authority can be reasonably and ethically employed for the chancellor to either intervene or veto actions of student government are now also a part of the present issues," he concluded.

Sister Sub Is Launched

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. (UPI) — The nuclear attack submarine Jack, sister ship of the ill-fated Thresher, was launched Wednesday, the second of three ceremonies in an unusually busy week in the nation's submarine program.

A $3 bottle of champagne was cracked against her bow in the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard—two weeks to the day after the Thresher went down in the Atlantic with 129 men aboard.

On Saturday at Groton, Conn., the Polaris firing submarine Daniel Webster will be launched as part of the Navy's one-a-month submarine building program. Only Tuesday at Groton, the Polaris submarine Lafayette was commissioned.

Later in the summer, possibly in August, the Navy has planned a "first"—a double launching of Polaris super submarines at Groton.

The Navy has contracted for 40 nuclear attack submarines and 41 Polaris type ships.

Education Bill Is Amended By House

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH—The House of Representatives yesterday gave second reading approval to an amended version of the Senate-approved Higher Education Bill.

The 109-1 vote included an amendment to rename State College, "North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina," the name favored by State College alumni.

In voting to replace a committee proposal of "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh," the House voted against the wishes of the Senate leaders, Gov. Sanford's administration and Consolidated University spokesmen.

The same amendment was proposed in the Senate last week but was defeated 34-12.

The House will vote on the Education bill again today but as in the Senate, the third reading is expected to be merely a formality and passage is virtually assured.

Only one other amendment was proposed in the House yesterday dealing with the Education Bill. That was to retain the name of "Woman's College of the University of North Carolina" instead of changing it to "The University of North Carolina at Greensboro." The amendment, introduced by Rep. Roger Kiser of Scotland was defeated 103-7.

After the House passed the name change amendment Monday, administration leaders tried to regroup their forces and drum up support among representatives to reconsider the amendment and possibly vote it down should another vote be made possible.

But administration and University officials weren't able to round up the necessary support for reconsideration of the amendment.

Since the Senate passed a version of the bill with one name for N. C. State, and the House passed a version with another name for State, the Education Bill is a long way from becoming a law since the name difference must be resolved before final action can be taken.

Conserve 'Creative Energy'

By VANCE BARRON

Richard McKenna urged the Men's and Women's Orientation Counselors to conserve their store of "creative energy" during their college years and not to be afraid of a world of "changing intellectual shapes" Tuesday night in Memorial Hall. The meeting was the first of several required meetings for next year's counselors.

McKenna was introduced by Peter Jason for the Orientation Committee.

McKenna said that he was paraphrasing Wordsworth's "Intimations of Immortality" in his talk. Instead of modes of being, however, he said that he would talk of creative energy.

Creative energy is not only that which produces art, but that which powers scientific and scholarly pursuit, he said. All of us begin life with a fund of creative energy, he noted, but somewhere most of it is lost in the "normal course of things."

Alabama Victim Had Mental Problems

NEW YORK (UPI) — A New York publisher disclosed Wednesday that William L. Moore, the Baltimore postman who was shot in Alabama on an integration march, was a brilliant, well-educated "do gooder" who once spent nearly two years in a New York mental institution.

Edward Uhlan, head of Exposition Press, said Moore had devoted his life "to fighting man's inhumanity to man." Uhlan published Moore's only book, "The Mind in Chains — The Autobiography of a Schizophrenic," in 1955.

"Moore knew he'd wind up bruised, beaten, battered — even dead—but for him the goal was the thing," said Uhlan. "He was never sensitive about having been insane and always referred to his dreams for mankind as 'crazy' dreams and to himself as a 20th century Don Quixote."

Drugs Produce Weird Dreams

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Hallucinations of dragons with irridescent scales, and oriental rugs are helping UNC psychiatrists study the inner workings of the human mind.

These are some of the more spectacular effects produced by the so-called "hallucinogenic drugs" whose suspected illicit use in colleges and universities has been a growing cause of concern in the medical profession.

There are at least three such drugs: LSD, mescaline, and psilocybin, and they can produce strange and occasionally harmful effects.

It has been suspected that students and intellectuals around the country have been using them for "kicks" but no real evidence has been turned up. Just last fall, charges were made of "psilocybin parties" and black marketing of the drugs at Harvard, but nothing came of it.

Dr. Martin Keeler and Dr. Morris Lipton, faculty members of the Department of Psychiatry in the UNC School of Medicine, are presently doing research with the drugs which they hope will some day unlock some of the secrets of human emotions. "We hope that the studies will help us understand the relations between physiological and psychological behavior," says Dr. Keeler. "We don't know that they will.

"The drugs produce interesting and different experinces," he says. "It's difficult to characterize them as pleasant or unpleasant. The most consistent changes are visual and, if hallucinations occur, the elements of color and design are paramount. There are other effects which depend more on the individual.

He objects to reports that they uniformly produce the strange and wonderful effects attributed to them by certain national magazines. The drugs, he says, do not make a person "high" in the sense that narcotics do. They may give the user a sense of detachment that may or may not be pleasant and they may cause impaired consciousness of the passage of time.

Some, such as writer Aldous Huxley, claim that they experienced mystical visions while under the influence. Huxley says he saw ordinary objects in their real essence, as he believes the artist always sees them.

Dr. Keeler says the drugs often cause visual distortions of detail and proportion, different perception of color, and hallucinations of color and geometric form.

LSD is manufactured by Sandoz Laboratories, a Swiss firm with offices in New Jersey, and is sold only to authorized personnel. Mescaline comes from the peyote cactus in Mexico and southwestern United States.

Peyote, a dried slice of the cactus, is used mainly by Indians. Peyote eating is a sacramental feature in the half-Christian, half-pagan rites of the Native American Church, which claims some 200,000 adherents among Indians of 17 Western states. Mexico's Mazatecas Indians use psolocybin in similar fasion and get it from a mushroom.

What are the dangers of these drugs? "They may cause excitement, nausea or both," says Dr. Keeler, "and may upset integration of personality. This could precipitate mental illness although this is infrequent. The use of the drugs may become a substitute for more realistic gratification. They do produce a feeling of euphoria in some people and what some would call a mystical experience."

He notes that although some may find the drugs pleasant, they are not addicting in the same way that morphine might be. "Any drug can be habit-forming," he says. "It can produce a craving for the sensation it induces. Psilocybin does evoke a different and interesting experience."

Dr. Keeler, who uses mostly psilocybin in his research, is studying the relationship between the psysiological and psychological effects produced by the drugs. Work like this may some day teach us what happens in the human body to cause the many emotions we experience in our lifetime, and could help science understand the mind and defeat mental illness.

He works within the confines of Memorial Hospital and all his subjects are carefully chosen from hospital personnel. The peak effect of the drug generally lasts about one and a half hours in which time the suojects are given physiological and psychological tests. Their ability to answer the questions, says Dr. Keeler, are not normally impaired by the drugs. He studies only one person at a time.

"Psilocybin acts as a stimulant to most people," he says, "but not in the usual sense, and this is not the primary effect. Most people will take the drug again out are not enthusiastic about the idea. I think, in our current state of knowledge, it should be taken only in laboratories or in supervised situations.

"Nobody knows what another person is seeing. What Huxley experienced depends more on Huxley than on mescaline. Creativity and the ability to have mystical experiences resides in people and not drugs. People might see new aspects of themselves during a drug reaction, but there is little evidence that this is a useful way to develop literary or artistic creativity."

Report On The Co-op—III

Financial Problem Would Be Plan's First Obstacle

By BILL WUAMETT

A cooperative is a business concern which must meet all the problems of private enterprise. And like private businesses, the greatest obstacle blocking the establishment of a cooperative at UNC is money.

Any store must make an initial investment in merchandise. It must also pay rent, utilities and salaries until its sales income matches expenditures. These require that a large capital fund be raised before students receive any benefits from their investments.

Estimates of the amount of initial captal needed range from $25,000 to $35,000. Dr. R. J. Tillman of the B.A. Dept. and record merchant Kemp Nye estimate $30,000. Co-op committee chairman Bob Spearman thinks $20,000 might be sufficient, but estimates from other cooperative managers have run as high as $50,000.

There are a number of possible ways a sum of this size could be raised. Section 54 of the North Carolina law prohibits a direct appropriation from Student Government or the University to a business which would be in competition with private enterprise, but it does not prohibit a loan to a private cooperative from the general surplus of Student Government.

This source, however, probably could not provide more than $10,000 at the present time. Although the surplus runs as high as $40,000, this money is drawn on at the first of the school year in the period prior to the transfer of student fees to the Student Government fund. Last October, the cash reserve dropped to $15,000 during this period.

The size of this loan could be increased, however, either by a cut in Student Government expenditures or by an increase in student fees.

Presently under discussion is a plan which would place the Yackety Yack on a subscription basis, releasing fee money now going to the Yack for use in the cooperative loan.

Another possibility is a referendum among the student body allowing it to vote an increase in fees to be used for the loan.

Capital could also be raised through the sale of stock to students and alumni. State law requires ownership by individuals, however, so that Student Government could not own shares as the University of Washington does.

North Carolina also has stringent laws governing the distribution of profits from a cooperative. This means that all profits could not be distributed in rebates to member customers.

Dividends must first be paid to all holders of capital stock according to the stock owned. Ten per cent of the profits must then be placed in a reserve fund until that funds equals 30 per cent of the value of the capital stock. Two per cent must be placed in an education fund.

A large per cent of the profit, however, could still be paid to members in rebates by paying only a minimal dividend on the capital stock.

If the required capital could be raised, the problem of location of the store remains. State law also prohibits the establishment of a cooperative on University property.

Store space on or near Franklin Street would be essential to the success of a cooperative. The store would not only have to be convenient for students, but also from non-member customers whose purchases would provide a large percentage of the store's profits.

Also important would be the cooperation of the Chapel Hill Merchants Association, whose members would certainly be hurt by the competition from the cooperative.

The location problem might be solved, however, by Kemp Nye, who has agreed to lease space for a cooperative if and when he completes capital improvements on his building.

Thus many obstacles still block the establishment of a cooperative at UNC. All persons connected with the project agree that the major of these is money. If capital can be found, the legal and physical problems can probably be ironed out.

But there is one question that will remain unanswered until a cooperative actually exists: will the students here support it? Are they willing to risk money individually, and is Student Government willing to risk loss of its loan if the project fails?

Despite these questions, those working on the project are optimistic of its success. As one has remarked, "There is only one reason student government would become involved in this. A cooperative is needed here."

World News In Brief

Reds Accuse Pair Of Wall Bombings

BERLIN (UPI) — The Communists Wednesday accused two Americans—a man and a woman—of being part of "terror groups" that bombed the Berlin wall and helped East Germans escape to West Berlin.

The two were identified only as Bill Otto Kranz, said to be a student who teaches at Sweden's University of Lund, and a woman identified as Joan Glenn.

The charges were leveled at a news conference in East Berlin at which the chief of the East German Press Office, Kurt Blecha, produced a 23-year-old Swedish student from Lund, Leif Perssons.

Perssons was arrestd last month on charges of carrying 40 Swedish passports to help East Germans flee to the West. He was released later.

U. S., Britian Appeal

MOSCOW (UPI) — The United States and Britain, seeking to save the Geneva disarmament conference, went directly to Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev on Wednesday with a dramatic compromise plan for on-site inspections of a nuclear test ban.

Informed sources said the West proposed a set number of inspections—30 was understood to have been suggested—over a period of seven years, an average of about four a year.

The West had been holding out for seven a year; the Soviet Union for two or three.

U. S. Ambassador Foy D. Kohler and British Ambassador Sir Humphrey Trevelyan submitted the proposal to Khrushchev in a 90-minute conference in the Kremlin.

Tortures Revealed

JACKSON, Miss (UPI) — A Mississippi Legislative committee that spent six months investigating the "Ole Miss" rioting issued a report Wednesday charging that federal marshals kept prisoners confined on a "torture slab."

The general legislative investigating committee said students were beaten with clubs, kicked, cursed, spat upon, forced to sit in uncomfortable positions for many hours, and denied food, sleep and needed medical attention.

Committee chairman Russel Fox, a state representative, said the Justice Department "successfully concealed the actions of its marshals from the press and other news media by its management of news at the university."

Youth Action Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A presidential advisory committee endorsed a modified verson of the administration's youth employment program Wednesday and President Kennedy promptly appealed for final congressional action.

The 32-man committee handed the President a report backing his "domestic peace corps" plan to provide jobs and training for young people to work on urban programs and rural conservation projects. It did not go quite as far as the administration measures now in Congress.

Alte, Erhard Meet

BONN (UPI) — Chancellor Konrad Adenauer went through the motions Wednesday of making up with Economics Minister Ludwig Erhard, who was chosen Adenauer's successor Tuesday over the chancellor's objections.

Erhard then went before parliament in his first public appearance since Tuesday's Christian Democratic Party decision and warned the nation that inflation threatens its economy later this year.

Harriman To Moscow

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy said Wednesday he is sending under Secretary of State W. Averell Harriman to Moscow Thursday to discuss the Laos crisis.

Kennedy told a news conference that Harriman would meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and would carry a "short message" from Kennedy to Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Harriman has been in Paris and London discussing the Laos situation with officials there.

Maneuvers To Begin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than 3,000 U. S. Army troops organized into two battle groups will begin arriving in Thailand next month to participate in military maneuvers, the Defense Department announced Wednesday.

Cafe Showing Business Hike With Pickets

By BOB SAMSOT & DICK ROTH

All's quiet at the College Cafe.

The signs—"College Cafe Practices Racial Discrimination" and "Jim Crow Must Go" are still there. But since pickets began carrying signs to end racial discrimination the scene has been characterized by relative quiet, according to Patrolman James Farrel, who "keeps an eye on things."

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake says there has only been one incident last week requiring police intervention.

A Carrboro resident struck at a picket but only hit his sign. The man, who fled the state, is charged with simple assault.

Blake said this was only the second incident since integration picketing began here in early 1960. He said both incidents were aimed at white pickets, not Negroes.

He said the present picketing has affected police very little.

"Our regular traffic director has been instructed to keep an eye on things," he said. "He's there from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. We just want to be around if anything happens."

Max Yarbrough, manager of the College Cafe, says business is better than ever and has gone up since the picketing started. No regular customers have been lost.

"Everything is fine," said Yarbrough. "We're just trying to tend to our business like we have been for 25 years."

David Morton, a picket, said "The College Cafe is one of the few luncheonettes still practicing racial discrimination. The idea is to end it—hopefully, soon."

Other cafeteria and luncheonette managers declined comment.

SP Members To Chair 3 Committees

Baddour, Jackson, Hays, Himes Named

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Party members were named chairmen of three of the four Student Legislature committees in elections held Tuesday night. An informal address by student body President Mike Lawler and the swearing in of new student government officers and SL representatives highlighted the first session of the 35th Assembly.

SP representatives Arthur Hays, Phil Baddour and Neal Jackson were elected chairmen of the Finance, Judicial and Ways and Means Committees, respectively. Sam Himes (UP) took the chairmanship of the Rules Committee. Clark Brewer (SP) was named Sergeant-at-Arms.

Student Legislature will consider an amendment to its by-laws allowing the Speaker to appoint the SL clerk at its session tonight, beginning at 7:30 on the fourth floor of New East.

The bill, as introduced by Phil Baddour (SP) for Bonnie Hoyle, would allow the Speaker of Legislature to appoint the clerk, who would not necessarily be a member of SL.

Legislature will also elect two students to the Consolidated University Student Council, the Graham Memorial Activities Board and the Publications Board. The election of a file clerk, and the appointments of a chaplain, Carolina Athletic Association members and an SL parliamentarian will also be acted upon.

Lawler challenged the 50 members of legislature to know the history of their student government and to be courageous enough to stand up for their ideas.

He noted that student government's position can be strengthened only if "we clean up our backyard and only if we concern ourselves with student problems through responsible action, even to the point of sacrifice."

Lawler quoted former Dean Weaver, saying that "the mistakes that make us men are better than the mistakes which keep us children," as a reason for students to maintain their tradition of autonomy. He said that since our autonomy is not licensed, our authority can not be detracted because of disagreement. He reported that the administration has the final authority to overrule a student decision, only if the decision is blatantly irresponsible.

He also summarized the happenings at Tuesday's meeting with the University addinistration and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

Our Freedom At Stake

The student-administration split, which has been so often mentioned and so little understood, came to head during and after Tuesday's meeting on "morals cases" and related topics.

It is now apparent that one of the roots of this split is the present conceptual misunderstanding on the part of the Dean of Student Affairs of the nature and history of Student Government at the University of North Carolina.

Student autonomy, student rights, and student freedoms should not be a debatable topic on this campus. The only reason they have is because of the position held by Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson.

The freedom which has been inherent and exercised by the students at Chapel Hill has made the whole atmosphere here unique from any other university. And now, Dean Henderson feels that he can abolish that freedom and its 160-year-old tradition by the sweep of an administrative pen. We would remind him that his position was created only a few years ago to assist student government in handling student affairs.

This campus could have a student government merely handle the dirty work of the administration. Other campuses do.

This campus could have a newspaper to MERELY publicize campus activities. Other campuses do.

This ampus could have student organizations run by faculty advisors to call meetings and discuss upcoming dances and what students should wear. Other campuses do.

But that has not been the situation at Chapel Hill, and it should not become that. This university has produced leaders in every field, and in order to accomplish this feat, it has had to train leaders. The best training for leadership has always been to give students freedom and let them lead.

Henderson's answer to such a proposal might be that they have freedom, but if they make a mistake, he is authorized to step in. This is not freedom; rather it is analogous to a cat playing with a mouse.

And regarding mistakes — we would point out to Mr. Henderson that the Administration is responsible for the "Ehringhaus experiment" which has undoubtedly been the major reason that 77% of the Freshmen Class did not make a "C" average.

Such experiments will certainly be far more damaging in the long run than any past mistake on the part of Student Government officers.

Consolidated University Secretary Fred Weaver, who preceded Henderson as Dean of Student Affairs, spoke of student government's authority in his book, "Traditions in Chapel Hill":

"It was technically a delegated authority," Weaver wrote, "but as the record shows, it was an authority which had asserted itself, then proved itself and then won recognition for itself; and with their close organization and fine esprit de corps the students were quick to defend it in time of attack.

"The record of the students for promptness, fairness and sound judgement in the administration of justice is not perfect; the point is that their achievement is not inferior on those counts to that of the faculty or trustees."

The impasse which has now been reached and openly stated does not just concern those people involved in student government.

It involves EVERY student in the university and every student who will come here in the future.

For if we students lose our autonomy to an Administration whose concept of student welfare may be far different from our own, then we may all be subject to infringements of our rights to speak when we wish, to stand up for what we believe, to demonstrate if we feel it necessary, or to organize for any reason.

Speaker bans, censorship boards, mandatory faculty advisors, newspaper censors, and administrative vetoes do exist but WE ABSOLUTELY CAN NOT LET IT HAPPEN HERE!

Rather, it may well be the most serious crisis that has faced students at Chapel Hill in their role as students.

'King Hannis' Departs

"The Head Cheerleader shall be chosen each year during the spring semester by the cheerleaders and four (4) members of the Carolina Athletic Association to be chosen by that body." — Student Government Bylaws.

A reign comes to an end tonight at 8 in the Woodhouse Room of Graham Memorial.

Next year's head cheerleader is scheduled to be chosen then, and, for "King" Hannis Latham, it will be all over. It will also be too bad.

Hannis is not leaving because his eligibility has run out; neither is he leaving because people do not want him back. Indeed, he would be the overwhelming choice if he were to stay in school.

But Hannis has decided not to come back to school next Fall. He will go to Europe instead in an attempt to conquer new worlds.

This leaves a bigger void than one would expect in our athletic program. Here is a guy who did his job as well as anybody ever has; here is a guy who won friends and admiration wherever he went. Here is a guy who will be missed.

And now the task is to find a new head man. This used to be, until last year, up to the student body. Hannis Latham was the first person to hold the position under the amendment mentioned above.

The point here is that this position, office, whatever you want to call it, is not to be regarded lightly. It is important. To the cheerleaders, to the athletic teams, to the campus.

The post is closed to no one. One is not required to have been a cheerleader this past year or any year. And everyone interested is not only asked but urged to come up for the interviews.

But it's going to take a pretty good man to fill Hannis' shoes.

No-Sock Fad Is Spreading At Carolina

By BILL McALLISTER
in The Raleigh News & Observer

That comment from a respected professor of religion at the University of North Carolina was no joke. The professor, a scholar among scholars, was never more serious.

Wearing socks to use a college phrase—is now "strictly out" for a great many students here.

Students, according to the university's Dean of Men William Long, began shedding their socks "about two or three years ago." Today about "30 to 40 per cent" of the boys do not wear socks, he says.

"They just wear loafers."

Social norms, however, still prescribe socks for certain important campus events such as football games, concerts and most parties. There are no university regulations that require students to wear socks to class.

For some newcomers a first glance at what zealous students call "the Carolina gentleman" can be shocking. Pattie Perrin of Ft. MacPherson, Ga., a transfer student from the University of Michigan, says she "nearly fainted" when she first noticed the fad.

"It was dancing with this real good-looking fellow who was quite well dressed. But then I looked down at his feet. No socks! That was too much."

The number of sockless students apparently varies with the weather. As the temperature goes up, the number of socks on campus goes down.

But a few students carry the fad into winter. One student was seen walking around the campus barefooted earlier this year shortly after snow had been cleared off walkways.

The stronghold of the sockless fad is Carolina, but there are indications that it is spreading to other schools.

"It's being done some at State," says Jerry Taylor, manager of a clothing store which has outlets both in Chapel Hill and in Raleigh. "But it's more universal in Chapel Hill."

Taylor says the fad has not hurt his sock sales. "We're still able to sell socks."

Not all the stores have been so lucky. One of the town's more expensive clothing stores says its sock sales now "fall off" in the spring. In fact, the fad has been adopted by one store clerk whose business it is to sell socks.

"I think it's a great idea," claims Jack Shuford of Lincolnton, who was a student here last year. "I jerk them off every chance I get. There's nothing more comfortable."

Where did the present sockless trend originate?

Some students say they picked up the habit in high school. Others say the boys began copying girls, who stopped wearing socks with their loafers several years ago. Socks are now a rarity at most girl's schools in the State.

A few students will frankly admit that they stopped wearing socks just to conform. Others give different reasons.

"It's more than just conforming," claims Jack Harrell of Snow Hill, a freshman. "When you get up just five minutes before your eight o'clock class, you're pretty rushed and not putting on your socks saves you a couple of valuable seconds."

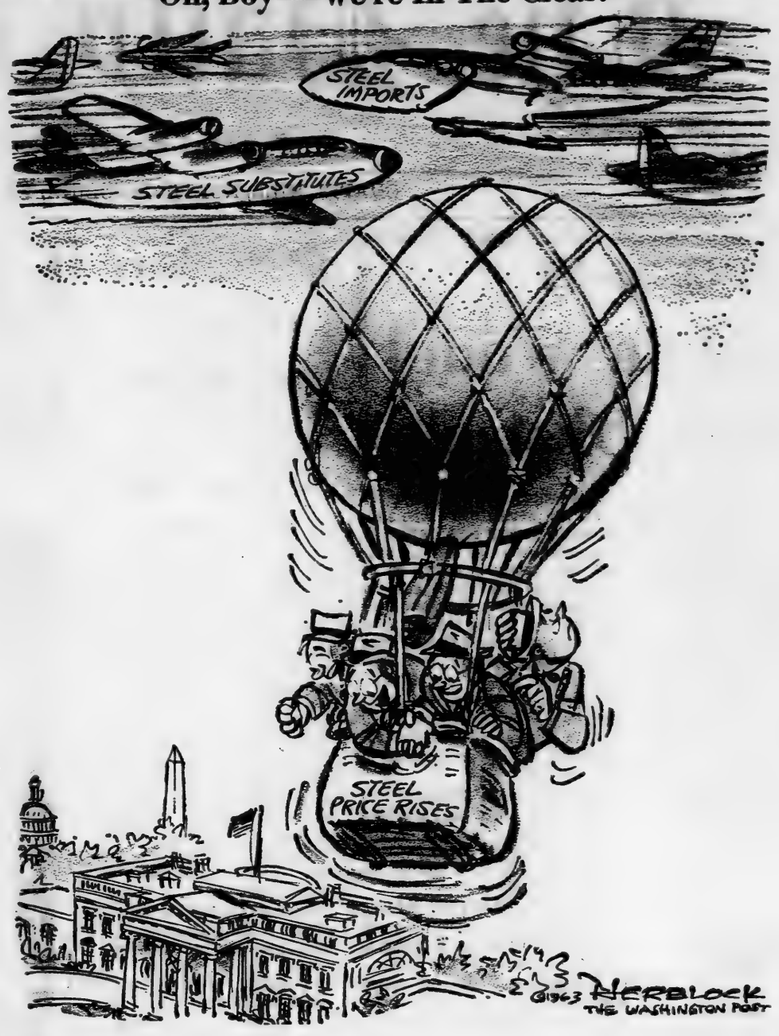
Others say they stopped wearing socks for economic reasons. "It helps save money that can come in mighty handy in the summertime," says Ruffin Hood, a senior from Dunn.



"It's just more comfortable," suggests John Buylin, a freshman from Durham. "It's so cool, too," adds Doug Russell, a pre-medical student from Dover, a small town near Kinston.

But all reaction to what one student calls the "sockless ones" is not favorable.

"I think it is about the grossest thing I've ever seen," says Dick Akers of Roanoke Rapids, recently elected treasurer of the student body.

But it was Jim Lee, a senior from Mebane, who probably best summed up not only his but also the sock manufaucturers' position when he snapped: "I think the whole thing stinks."

"Oh, Boy—We're In The Clear!"

Letters To The Daily Tar Heel

Is Wellman Also Hypocritical When He Blasts Integration?

To the Editors:

Wade Wellman has spoken! The idea that a man's skin should not be a factor in his fellow man's judgment of him is trite. More than that, no intelligent integrationist believes this.

Mr. Wellman has said one of two things in his article on the College Cafe picketers. If he is saying that a man should be judged by the color of his skin, let him explain. More than that, let him act accordingly. Let him work to banish all Negroes from the University of North Carolina and all other integrated establishments. Let him work to "keep the nigger in his place." Let him do more than mince across a picket line.

If, on the other hand, Mr. Wellman is saying that man should judge and be judged by irrelevant as well as relevant factors, let him again act accordingly. Perhaps a good exisitential place for him to begin is to withdraw from the University. After all, it is a bit inconsistent for Mr. Wellman to operate within a system which differs very basically from this position.

Mr. Wellman has bandied the term "pseudo-moralist" in his highly moral article. Apparently the original sin to him is hypocrisy, for he gives examples of this throught-crime throughout his article. In the first paragraph he labels the picketers of the College Cafe hypocrites, or, in his words, "pseudo-moralists." (To be pseudo anything is to be hypocritical.) In his second paragraph he goes further, labeling the whole integration movement as "largely hypocritical." (In the third paragraph he does concede that a few integrationists are neither stupid nor hypocritical.)

Certainly some of Mr. Wellman's points are well taken. Those members of the NAACP who patronize segregated establishments are hypocrites. Those "liberals" who talk integration until it comes to their neighborhoods are hypocrites. Those men who champion integration because they want to use the Negro are hypocrites.

But the real point is this. Mr. Wellman, the great moralist, has committeed his own original sin. He stands convicted on his own terms. If he believes that a man's skin is a relevant factor in determining his worth, his actions belie it. Why hasn't Mr. Wellman protested the acceptance of Negroes into the University? Certainly the moral man is willing to champion a cause he believes is right. Not to do so would be a bit inconsistent.

If he believes that a man's skin is not a relevant factor, but still should be taken into account, then, again, his actions belie it. Is the great moralist so practical that he would rather continue in the University than be true to his principles? Again, some inconsistency seems to be creeping into Mr. Wellman's well-ordered life.

Our moral man, Wade Wellman, has become, after all, a "pseudo-moralist." Those on the picket line have stood up for what they believe. Let Mr. Wellman do likewise. As for national disunity, perhaps it stems from a basic hypocrisy in America today. To paraphrase George Orwell, "All men are equal, but some are more equal than others."

View From The Hill

ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, on a brief visit to this country, was recently billed as the feature attraction of an unprecedented "Human Rights Rally" in Harlem.

Sharing the platform with the Negro minister, nightclub entertainer Dick Gregory told the crowd that dependence on relief checks is an honest living and that, until the white man has assuaged the Negro's economic pains, the Negro should continue to draw government welfare.

The tone of the rally was disturbingly indicative of the attitude that seems to prevail among current Negro leaders. For, instead of stressing the civic and moral consciousness that comprise "first-class citizenship," these clever professionals aimed, rather, to stimulate only bitterness and a sort of righteous irresponsibility. Glossing over their own shortcomings and those of their race, they labeled all critics as "prejudiced."

How many Negro leaders, we wonder, have ever bothered to differentiate between unreasoning prejudice and the honest and fearful concern of the white community? How many have sought positive steps to eliminate the conditions of which the white so often speaks?

The mass migration of white families from Washington to the surrounding suburbs was was brought about, in part, by the violent outburst of crime in that city. Last year, 80 per cent of these offenses were committeed by Negroes—a group which compromise little more than half the population. In Philadelphia the comparable figures are 80 per cent and 21 per cent. In Chicago, 65 per cent and 17 per cent. In Detroit, 58 per cent and 19 per cent.

These are northern cities—communities where years of integrated schools, restaurants, and recreational faciilties have failed to alleviate a problem that most Negro leaders blame on "discrimination" or "white oppression."

The N.A.A.C.P. and CORE continually lament, and rightly so, the instances in which a Negro has been unfairly deprived of his vote. Yet, has either of these organizations ever sought to honestly evaluate the irresponsibility of many Negroes regarding this right? The Michigan Chronicle, a Negro newspaper in Detroit,, observes that little more than one third of all eligible Negroes in the city ever register and only 40 per cent of those who register bother to vote.

The Negro illegitimacy rate remains ten times greater than the white. And this tragedy is heightened with the realization that one out of every five Negro fathers ends up deserting his family. Yet the organization that professes to seek "the advancement of colored people" turns it back to these facts and pursues weightier problems (How to get a cup of coffee at Woolworths—How to get rid of Aunt Jemima).

The Negro leader in America today is in the position to provide an invaluable service to his race and his country. But until he develops a capacity for constructive self-criticism and a sturdier sense of public responsibility, racial antagonisms will continue to thrive.

There is no gentle way to put it.

Student Hostels Quite Popular In Europe

By PETE RANGE

Besides the thousands of camera-toting Americans who will be pouring into Europe after June 1 on some sort of organized tour, (like the one GM is offering) there will be countless other eager American students headed for the delights of the Old World "on their own."

Most of these will have some idea, but not a very fixed one, about what they want to see and do, how they want to live and travel. Here are some tips about how to do the latter in European student-style, i. e., cheaply.

The secret word is "youth hostel." A youth hostel is a building accommodating wayfaring youths from about 14 to 25 years old. It originated in Germany around the German's love for hiking, but now thrives on the business of youth and students traveling by sundry means all over Europe.

The hikers still have priority at all hostels, cyclists coming second, motor scooterists third, and all others last. Auto-travelers are theoretically excluded, but one can find means of gaining entrance to any hostel when it is not overflowing.

Simple Building

Most hostels are rather simple buildings with a day-dining room and two large sleeping rooms, one for boys, the other for girls. The more modern ones in Germany and Austria, however, display the latest in contemporary architecture. Sleeping quarters are broken down into suite units of eight beds, with a bathroom for each suite. The cost, however, remains the same — about 25c-45c per night, varying from country to country.

On the other hand, the Genoa hostel is in an old mansion atop a cliff, high above the Mediterranean. In Stockholm you board an old sailing vessel in the harbor, and that's the hostel. Others are in old castles, hunting lodges, and farms.

Each traveler is expected to provide his own linen (or pay a fee to rent it for the night). He can purchase the standard youth hostel "sleeping bag" (two sheets sewn together) for four to five dollars in Europe — I recommend simply sewing two sheets together and taking them with you. Blankets and squeaky beds are provided.

Washrooms and showers are usually available, but don't expect hot water in most of them. In many hostels a simple hot supper and a Continental breakfast are served optionally, costing about 25c each.

Closing hours are usually 10 p.m. or 11 p.m. in the hostels and are strictly observed.

Membership Card Needed

Prerequisite to entrance to every youth hostel is a membership card. If absolutely necessary, the card can be secured in some big European hostels, but you'd best order it from the American Youth Hostels, Inc.

Your best friend and indispensible guide in Europe is your International Youth Hostel Handbook, containing detailed listings of all hostels, their hours, tram stops, prices, etc.

A map of Europe, dotted with the exact locations of all hostels is provided, too. Both the membership card ($5.00 if under twenty years old, $6.00 if over) and the Handbook ($1.00) should be ordered immediately from American Youth Hostels, Inc. (AYH), 14 West 8th Street, New York 11, N. Y.

The hostels literally saturate West Germany and are rather thick in other European countries, too, so that one hardly ever need stay in a hotel — unless he wants to stay out beyond closing hours. In Germany, in fact, one is theoretically never more than one day's hike (about 25 miles) from one hostel to the next.

Perhaps the greatest feature of the youth hostels is the contact they provide the American with European students. Come vacation time, the average German or

Free Bridge Lessons Offered On Fridays

The Friday Night Duplicate Club will hold a free learn-as-you-play session for all new duplicate bridge players on Friday at 7:45 p.m. The game will be held in the basement of the St. Thomas More Church.

The regular Friday night game will be held at the same time but there will be a separate section for new players.

Mrs. Phil Jackson will direct the new section, awarding fractional master points and prizes to the winners. No charge or entry fee will be accepted from new duplicate players.

Available to help the new players will be Mrs. Barbara Newton, president of the sponsoring club; Mike Alexander, director of the Carolina Duplicate Bridge Club; and Mr. and Mrs. Vic Huggins.

There is much room for new duplicate players as there are an estimated 35 million rubber bridge players in the United States compared to only 250,000 duplicate players.

Those wanting further information may call Vic Huggins at 942-3188.

final House approval today, it will then be sent back to the Senate since the bill originated there.

In the Senate the bill will be held "for concurrence." That is, the amended bill will be debated and deliberated upon by Senate leaders. They will decide whether to accept or reject the House's version of the bill.

A highly reliable spokesman said he was told today that the Senate would not accept the House version of the bill. This means they will not accept the House proposal for State College's new name over the Senate's earlier proposal passed last week.

If the Senate rejects the House's name for State College, then the matter will be referred to "conference committee action." This committee will be appointed by presiding officers of the House and Senate. They will discuss the name change difference and then report their proposals to the Senate and House for acceptance or rejection.

According to one spokesman, the conference committee's recommendation does not have to be accepted by the House and Senate.

This bill is a "long way" from becoming a law, the spokesman said. He said there was no real way of telling just how long it would take to resolve the State College name change.

French student dons bluejeans and sandals, loads his knapsack on his back or bike, and sets out for a tour of some country he has not yet seen.

He lives cheaply, making his own sandwiches, staying in the hostels, spending his days visiting museums, castles, and other attractions.

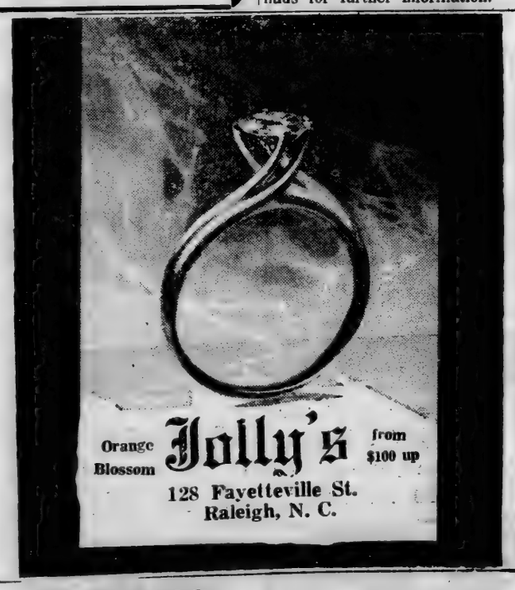
Chance To Meet People

A very special sort of social life occurs rather spontaneously among students who meet during their travels. Hitchhiking is certainly the quickest way to find contacts with the people of a given country in your travels; the youth and student hostels offer the most exversities. Contacts with other students.

The student hostels are in a network separate from the youth hostel system. They are no more than loosely connected university dormitories thrown open to traveling students during university vacations. (Why don't we do that in the States?)

There are usually no closing hours in these hostels, but they are less common than the youth hostels, being found only in the large towns where there are universities. Contacts wiht other students are perhaps even better here.

While no membership card is required, it is best to carry one's Stateside student ID card at all times in Europe — it will be useful in obtaining reductions for concerts, museums, etc. Or better still — send a passport photo, your ID card, and one U. S. dollar to USNSA, 20 West 38th Street, New York 18, and you will receive an international student ID card in return. The handbook on these hostels costs 50c and is available from the Schweizer National studentenbund, Zurich, Switzerland or in most student hostels.



Camping Popular

Camping possibilities are very good in Europe now. Besides camping-in-the-wild there are innumerable privately owned campsites around Europe with the usual facilities and prices ($.50-1.00 nightly). Camping guides are on hand at AYH and in the Bull's Head Bookshop on campus as well.

Interested persons should feel free to contact me in 244 Ehringhaus for further information.

Travel Plans Are Outlined

In a brochure sent to college and university placement directors throughout the country this week, the International Student Travel Center outlined a stepped-up program for student work and travel abroad in 1963.

Among the innovations offered for the summer ahead will be job opportunities outside of Western Europe, travel grants, and a two-way exchange program whereby ISTC members can obtain travel expense reductions by providing work or room and board for foreign students visiting the U. S.

The goal of the ISTC, the booklet points out, is to provide stimulating work, study and travel experience abroad as an essential part of education and a means of furthering good will. In the past both students (ages 16-35) and teachers (no age limit) have participated in such programs, which include paying jobs, orientation seminars and tours.

Planners Hear Wingo

The Planners' Forum and the Department of City and Regional Planning will sponsor a talk by Lowdon Wingo, Jr. on Friday, April 26. Wingo is presently a Research Associate with Resources for the Future, Inc., Washington, D. C. and holds masters degrees in Public Administration from Harvard and in Social Science (Planning) from the University of Chicago. He was formerly Director of Planning for the city of El Paso, Texas.

Wingo will speak at 8 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Carroll Hall on the topic "Policy Alternatives: The Appropriate Bases for Choices and the Function of Planning."

Infirmary

creative energy by an example. He spoke of an incident in his childhood when, after reading a story about cavemen, he went out to hunt imaginary bear. A familiar rock became a fearsome bear with which he grappled in his fantasy.

Imagination is not a fearful thing to a child to whom the world is a constantly changing thing, he said, but to the adult who has created a stable world physical reality is independent of imagination and is almost dead. "Rocks can no longer become bears," he said.

College students, he said, are entering into an "equally wonderful world where ideas are still like birds in flight." In relating to this new world, there will be a temptation to make it an equally small and unchanging world where there will be "no more playing and exploring."

This would not mean that a person no longer could think, but that he could no longer think creatively, he explained. "There are still men of power and influence who are as frightened of an idea changing shape as a rock. For them the salt has lost its savor."

The culture will "move you in that direction unless you resist it intelligently," he said. One cannot remember fully the experiences of childhood, but intellectual manhood does not come as early as thought. The danger is that one will pay the price of creative energy for intellectual manhood.

This will not happen intellectually if the same powers of imagination are carried over. The sticks and stones of childhood can be used by architects and builders, he said.

McKenna said he felt he had come through college without a "crippling loss" of his creative energy. He outlined some ways for students to protect their store.

One should be "friendly or hostile to ideas, but never indifferent." He told the counselors to find their personal poet, for "poetic thought is the least petrified of all." He said the students should understand their college years as years of "staking out ideas." "Make each course an outpost of the imagination," he said. "Understand each course as an investment in creativity, not a tax or purchase price." He urged the audience to address themselves to the set of ideas in a course, but to "hope that you never grasp them in full concreteness."

He said students must never assume that if differing with a professor, they are wrong. "Never grant to a professor the intellectual authority to grant your ideas." That is what "turns universities into factories," he said.

In conclusion, McKenna said the students would have to confine themselves to a discipline, but they should grant no boundaries to their "private world of the mind." He counseled them to avoid both "stony immutability" and the "surrealistic freedom" of science and art. One must incorporate science and art in his personality, he said.

Jason announced at the close of the meeting that the next required meeting of the Men's Orientation counselors would be on Monday night at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. The Women's Orientation counselors will meet on Tuesday night in Gerrard Hall at the same time.

Exchange Plan With Colombia

Plans are now complete for the establishment of a student exchange between the University of Antioquia and the University of North Carolina. Up to three room, board and tuition scholarships will be given to selected Carolina students. Three students from the University of Antioquia, which is in Medellin, Colombia, will be on this campus next year. The purpose of this exchange is to further understanding and increase communication between the two countries and the student communities.

Established in 1871, the University of Antioquia now has an enrollment of 1800 students and is divided into faculties, schools and institutes. The academic year begins in February and ends in November. While the University has a large technical curriculum, it also offers a wide variety in the humanities, specifically courses in philosophy, literature, economics, political science, law, and education.

Interested students are asked to pick up application forms in the "Y" office or in Graham Memorial on April 25 until May 11. Interviews will be held on May 13 and 14. For further information contact Ben Newlin at 968-9073 or Jim Scott at 968-9177.

Shorter Peace Corps Test Given Saturday

A new — and much shorter — Peace Corps Placement Test will be administered for the first time Saturday in more than 400 communities across the nation.

The new test, to be given on an experimental basis, consists of half-hour sections on general aptitude and modern language aptitude. All applicants who have any knowledge of French or Spanish must remain to take the appropriate language achievement test of one hour's duration.

By contrast, the former examination took four to eight hours, depending on optional sections. Both tests are non-competitive. Applicants who took the longer test do not need to take the new one.

Dr. Edward R. Henry, director of the Peace Corps' selection division, said the new test has been designed on the basis of information gained after two years of experience with the longer examination.

"Some tests in the former battery have been found to be of low validity in relation to the success of Volunteers in training and overseas. Other sections were more useful for proper class placement in training than they were for selection," Dr. Henry said.

He added that college transcripts provide much of the information obtained from sections of the former test and that the Peace Corps now requires transcripts from every candidate.

Increasing emphasis on aptitude for a foreign language for all Volunteers serving where English is not the main tongue has greatly increased the need for the language aptitude and achievement tests, Dr. Henry said.

The new test will be given at 8:30 a.m. and should be taken by all new Peace Corps applicants for one of the 4,000 openings in 44 countries. Training begins in June, July and August.

To be eligible to take the exam, candidates must either have submitted a questionnaire to the Peace Corps or must bring a completed questionnaire to the test site with them.

Questionnaires and the location of the exam site may be obtained from the campus Peace Corps liaison officer, Dean Charles Henderson, in South Building.

New Curriculum In Genetics Created For Grad School

An interdisciplinary Curriculum nouncement by Dr. C. Hugh Holin Genetics leading to Masters man, Dean of the Graduate School, and Doctoral degrees has been Genetics—dealing with the phecreated at UNC according to an an- nomenon of heredity and variation —has found increasing application in medcal science in recent years and the genetic investigation of medical problems has made possible greater understanding of general genetics.

The new curriculum at UNC will cut across departmental lines and will employ the talents of teachers and research scientists in both medical and natural sciences. The Departments of anatomy, bacteriology, biochemistry, botany, pathology and zoology will participate in the cooperative program to provide a new major field here.

"As a major field of specialization, some students of genetics—whether in biochemistry, zoology, botany or general science—prefer to be known as 'geneticists,'" say officials who will direct the new curriculum.

Though the majority of students in medical science in recent years studying genetics will probably continue to take degrees in existing departments, the new curriculum will attract both these students and those who wish to be 'geneticists,' to the University.

Will Provide Minor

At the same time, the new curriculum will provide a minor field of specialization which is not presently available. "Students now engaged in pre-doctoral studies, and future students, would benefit greatly in this regard from the establishment of a broad curriculum in the field of genetics," according to Dr. John B. Graham, professor of pathology, who will chair the curriculum.

Various courses in genetics have been taught at the University for many years. Some twelve faculty members in the six departments involved and in the departments of internal medicine, psychiatry, and pediatrics, are currently performing research and providing instruction in genetics.

Research training in genetics became firmly established at UNC in 1961, when the National Institutes of Health awarded a Genetics Training Grant of $45,888 annually for five years to provide pre- and post-doctoral fellowships, teaching aids, and educational staff for the program here.

The great bulk of this grant support goes to provide stipends for students in the program. There are already six pre-doctoral candidates and several post-doctoral students in training and more in prospect.

A number of undergraduate and medical students have taken advantage of a special summer program in genetics supported by the grant. These include students from Duke, Davidson, Penn. State, Johns Hopkins, Ohio Wesleyan and elsewhere.

$150,000 A Year Being Spent

More than $150,000 per year in research grants are already being spent at UNC to advance the frontiers of knowledge of the field. Facilities for research and training include newly opened laboratories in the participating departments and the recently opened Clinical Research Unit at Memorial Hospital, where it will be possible to study intensively persons with hereditary metabolic disorders. The new Botany Building, completed this year, and a proposed addition to UNC's Zoology Building, will give still more space.

Because of current outside support, which has just been increased to about $80,000 annually from the NIH, and because the geneticists who will be teaching are established members of existing departments, the new curriculum will require no additional financial support from the University.

Students who have completed an undergraduate major in one of the six departments providing the curriculum may apply for entrance into the curriculum. Eligibility, however, says Dr. Graham, is not limited exclusively to such persons. The Administrative Committee will consider applicants with undergraduate majors in other natural and social sciences.

SAVINGS BONDS

Savings Bond sales in Orange County during March totaled $22,549, according to J. T. Gobbel, head of the County Savings Bond Program. The County's quota for the year in bond sales is $111,887.

Combo In New York Gallery Travis's M'moiselle Win

By SUE SMITH

KAY TRAVIS, a junior studio arts major, has five oil paintings currently on exhibit at the New York Art Gallery. Her subjects range from a lazy New Orleans combo to native African patterns, and won honorable mention for her in the Mademoiselle College Art Contest for 1963. Kay bids from Winston-Salem.

The Fran Alexander Award, for the most outstanding senior sister, was given to JUDY REYNOLDS during the final event of the Kappa Kappa Gamma Province Convention at Schrafft's Country Inn Saturday.

The award was named for the woman instrumental in founding the chapter on the Carolina campus in 1958, and still active in the sorority as Kappa delegate to the National Panhellenic Conference, Mrs. Fran Alexander. Judy gets her degree in physical therapy in June.

Schrafft's again on Sunday, was the scene for a sorority convention: this time the ALPHA GAMMA DELTAS. The occasion was International Reunion Day, and the Chapel Hill House played hostess to the sister North Carolina chapters, Queens and High Point. A hundred or so undergraduates and alumnae from the three colleges were present for the luncheon and afternoon House reception.

Also on the calendar this week at the Alpha Gamma Delta House is a Sunday chicken dinner from 5 until 6 o'clock. Tickets are $1 from any Alpha Gam, and the dollars go to the National Society for Crippled Children.

More about crippled children—Circus Day for the ADPi's means a Saturday afternoon trip to the Cerebral Palsy Hospital at Durham. Armed with coloring books, costumes and cookies, the UNC chapter joins hands with its Duke sisters for Ring-Around-the-Rosy with the little folk, ages 3-15. Someday the children will leave the hospital cured; meantime, come Saturday come ADPi's and come cheer to while away one hour a week for the ailing.

WITH THE MARRIED

"Pearls of the Deep" is the theme of the semiformal dance at the Chapel Hill Country Club Saturday. The Jades will begin to play at 9 o'clock. The MEDICAL WIVES will bring their husbands, and all unmarried med students their dates.

Mrs. Juanita Kreps will serve as president of the UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S CLUB for its 1963-64 year. Vice President and President-elect is Mrs. Joseph C. Sloane; Mrs. John W. Carr III is treasurer, and Mrs. Ralph Pennall, secretary. The club has 424 members, 169 of these in the Newcomer's Division. Mrs. Hugh Lefler is liaison representative with the Newcomers.

The DENTAL DAMES will hold a meeting to elect officers, April 29 at 8 p.m. in the Medical Building.

All married students are reminded that the STUDENT WIVES want you to play bridge at Graham Memorial April 30 at 8 in Roland Parker I.

A FINAL NOTE

The doorbell rang at the ADPi House at 9:30 Sunday night. A caller for a late date? Not one, but two.

They scratched their feet on the Welcome mat and shivered a little bit. Too young to be handsome, too scared to say a word, they held their heads high above their stripped coats.

They struck the girls' fancy though, and stayed all night.

Tabby cats they'll grow up to be; but not nameless orphans.

The Alpha Delta Bottle-warmers already have a strict two-hour feeding schedule.

And of schedules and deadlines—it's 5:00, and the printer is waiting.

They gave us a desk at the Tar Heel office, a history-book model typewriter, but not enough chairs. So I'll up myself and my notebook cushion from my trash-can seat and go.

Orientation Sees Change

Diana Teasdale, chairman of the Women's Orientation Committee, has announced the new additions to an improved orientation schedule for the fall of '63.

Changes from last year's program include a faculty-student panel to discuss academics at UNC informally with the new students. Departmental tours will also be offered.

To prepare for the program 143 counselors are undergoing training with a "four part" program. Richard McKenna, author of the prie-winning novel "Sand Peobles" and former UNC student, discussed academic life with the trainees. The next part of the program will be a discussion of Chapel Hill's customs and traditions. The third phase will be a discussion of the WRC and Honor Council's role on campus. A quiz will complete the training session.

There are also plans for an expanded women's section in the Carolina Handbook and the publication of the women's regulations instead of in separate handbook.

McColskey Honored By CWC

Jan Greer McColskey, a senior, has been named the outstanding dormitory woman of the year by the Carolina Women's Council.

The award is given annually to a senior woman who has "served her dormitory and the University with diligence, faithfulness, and loyalty, and has proved herself to be outstanding in character, personality, leadership, and scholarship."

Miss McColskey is the daughter of Mrs. Greer McColskey of Lake City, Fla. She is enrolled in the medical technology program of the University.

President of Alderman Dormitory for the year 1962-63, Miss McColskey has served as treasurer of Valkyries, student women's honorary; vice chairman of the Women's Honor Council, corresponding secretary of the Women's Residence Council; and treasurer of the Order of the Old Well. She has been active in the Carolina Smyposium, in the Student Legislature, the CWC and Angel Flight.

Mrs. William B Aycock, wife of the UNC Chancellor presented the Carolina Women's Council Award to Miss McColskey.

Also presented awards at the Sunday afternoon reception were Shelby Purser of Davidson; Judy Deal of Landis; Kay Stinson of Vero Beach, Florida; and Jean Yoder of Hickory. The four women were honored as nominees for the CWC award.

Miss Purser, an education major, has had an active senior year as President of the CWC, secretary of West Cobb dorm and was recently selected to be a member of Valkyries.

Miss Yoder, a journalism major, was also selected to be a member of Valkyries this year. She has been active in Student Legislature, has served as Activities Chairman in the Nurses Dorm, and Publicity Chairman of the CWC.

Miss Stinson, an English major, was President of West Cobb dorm; and has been active on the CWC, the Graham Memorial Activities Board, the Wesley Foundation and the YWCA.

Miss Deal, a nursing student, was President of Sigma Theta Tau, nursing honorary, and was the 1963 recipient of the George Livas Award in Nursing. She has been a member of the Summer School Honor Council, Women's Athletic Association, Order of the Old Well and Valkyries.

WAA Plans Awards Picnic, Tennis Day To End Year

By DIANE HILE

The Women's Athletic Association is closing its year with two major events—the sixth annual Tennis Day, Saturday, April 27, and the Awards Picnic, Monday, May 6.

Ten coed colleges, each with two singles entries and one doubles team, have accepted the invitation to play on Tennis Day. They are: Appalachian State Teachers, Salem, Guilford, East Carolina, Queens, Meredith, Wake Forest, St. Mary's WCUNC and Carolina. The matches will begin at 10 a.m. and last all day.

Last year's singles champion, Chris Stafford from Queens College, and UNC's Susan Mott, one member of last year's champion doubles team, will not be returning to defend their titles. The other UNC member, Nancy deGrummond, is presently competing to represent Carolina in doubles play again this year.

The Awards Picnic, Monday, May 6, at 5:30 p.m. in the tin can will feature a barbecue dinner, presentation of awards, and entertainment. Awards are to be presented to outstanding club members, the eight intramural winners, the outstanding WAA representatives in the dorm and sorority divisions and the Outstanding Senior award.

An All Sports Cup, awarded on points given for intramural participation and achievement, will be given to the dorm and sorority divisions. Closely contending for the dorm cup is Kenan with 407 points and Spencer with 380. Alpha Gamma Delta has a 15-point lead over the next highest sorority, Chi Omega. The two intramural events, golf and swimming, that are still in competition may be enough to change the dorm point lead.

KAREN NELSON, new president of the WAA admires one of the several trophies to be given away at the WAA Picnic May 6. Other new officers of the WAA are: Zannie Poplin, vice president; Peggy Clayton, treasurer; and Jane Blakely, secretary.

Escape From Matrimony Expert Says

By A MARRIED MAN

This is not really being written in order to inform everybody about how they can escape being caught. It is being written because it is necessary to fill up this space with something. Actually, they really didn't want me to write but I was a last resort.

But for the occasional person, generally male I suppose, who is desperately leafing through this publication hoping against hope to find somewhere one slight indication that getting married immediately is not the only thing (or even the most important) in the world, I offer my encouragement and will offer whatever advice I can to help him maintain his freedom.

Lest anybody expect too much, however, I will issue the warning that not getting caught is more a matter of instinct (some say a lack of it) than anything else. I look back and see that the real triumphs were almost accidental, they were certainly not planned.

More serious, however, is when the girl, despite everything you have done, seems to think you would be worth catching. This, believe it or not, has never happened to me, at least not that I know of. (Note: this is an example of technique: talk as if no girl was ever interested in you and imply that there is something wrong with any girl that is.)

But if a girl is interested there are several things one can do. Running is probably the most successful way, if possible. The Foreign Legion was full, not of men trying to get away from it all, but of men trying to get away from a woman.

A couple of final warnings might be in order. First, don't get overly confident. The pursuer is not to be underrated and will very often win. Second, according to informed sources, getting caught isn't always so bad. In fact, maybe bridal editions have their place after all.

Panhel Council Renovates Rules For '63 Fall Rush

Five major changes in the rush rules have been made by both the old and the newly-instated Panhellenic Council in the past few weeks.

Recommendations were made to the Council by the rush committee haded by Beth Walker, outgoing vice president of Panhel, in order to "clarify, modernize and facilitate orientation and rush weeks at Carolina."

"I believe that the sorority girls have a mutual respect and trust among themselves concerning Rush," said Miss Kalker. "Therefore, we made these recommendations in order to encourage this trust and to convenience those who are participating in rush."

The new rulings passed by the Council are:

1) Silence will exist during orientation week only between prospective rushees and sorority girls. Previously, all girls on campus not in sororities were considered rushees until rush week. The rule has been clarified so that next year only those girls planning to participate in rush will be considered rushees.

2) Sorority girls may now go on campus during orientation week, except in the immediate dorm areas. In the past, if a sorority girl wished to go on campus she had to sign out with the permission of the rush chairman. Miss Walker felt that "with the trust we have, this new permission will not be abused."

3) There will be no regulation on jewelry, pins and sorority stickers on cars. The old rule stated that no sorority jewelry or pins could be worn during orientation week and all sorority stickers on cars had to be covered. The Council felt this rule was unnecessary.

4) Sorority transfers living in dorms do not have to observe silence. The sad plight of this past year's sorority transfer student was to be able to say only "hello" to all her new dorm acquaintances except her roommate.

5) Orientation counselors in sororities will now be allowed to wear their pins.

The new changes will go into effect in the fall of '63, and have been approved wholeheartedly by the Panhellenic administration advisors to the Panhel.

Coed Queen Is Sought

Unlike other contestants, however, the National College Queen Pageant is not based on beauty, but rather on scholastic ability, campus activities, fashion and cosmetics sense, poise, personality and attractiveness.

In short, they are looking for the most typical American college girl!

Regional finalists will win an exciting 10-day trip to New York City which will include dining at the city's most famous restaurants, attending top Broadway shows and previewing the latest fashions.

And, the National College Queen will enjoy more than $5000 in prizes, including a sports car, a trip to Europe, a full year's supply of Cutex and Angel Face cosmetics and a fashionable wardrobe created by a leading designer.

To be eligible, a candidate must attend an accredited college or university, be between the ages of 17 and 22, and unmarried. She may enter the Pageant herself or be nominated by friends.

UNC Cindermen Romp To Two Meet Wins

By FRED HOBSON

Carolina's trackmen swept two dual meets here yesterday, defeating Wake Forest 97-46 and surprisingly strong South Carolina 77-67.

South Carolina beat Wake Forest 91-52 in the other dual meet.

After trailing the Gamecocks most of the afternoon, the Tar Heels came from behind with a brilliant showing in the mile relay. Carolina's quartet of Maurice McDonald, Jim Brown, Charlie Little and Bob Hart ran the distance in 3'20.6".

South Carolina strength was in the weight events (shot and discus) and broad jump.

The Gamecock runners also pulled a couple of upsets. Bland Allison nosed out Bob Hart in the 440, and Ed Cribb beat Bob Bennett in a close 880.

Tommy Clark and Joe Huffman weren't pushed by either USC or Wake, and coasted to an easy victory at 6'2".

Art Maillet, the distance man who runs a mile with the endurance of a dashman, won the two mile, finishing far ahead of the field in 9-38.5.

Milt Baugess, sophomore fleet-foot from Winston-Salem, took the 330 hurdles in a disputed decision. One of the hurdles was misplaced, but officials ruled the event legitimate.

Other Tar Heel winners were Ed Boyd in the javelin and Heath Whittle in the pole vault.

South Carolina's strong men took the discus and shot events as expected. Walt Christensen heaved the big ball 50-1, and Billy Nies sailed the discus 143-11.

Bynum of USC ran the 220 in 21-9 for first place, and Melton, the Gamecock's distance leaper, took the broad jump as he went over 21 feet.

Wake Forest, definitely not an ACC track threat, placed well in several events but could not evidence the individual strength of the Tar Heels and Gamecocks.

In the freshman division, Carolina defeated the Baby Deacs 87-56, but lost to South Carolina 11-5. Victorious Tar Babies were Tom Cordell in the shot, Richard Ambrose in the 330 hurdles and Chapman in the discus.

This was the varsity's third dual meet triumph of the year. They have lost only to Maryland.

Georgia Southern Handed 5-4 Victory

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina's hot-and-cold Tar Heels were something less than luke warm yesterday afternoon as Georgia Southern won over UNC for the second time this year, 5-4.

Except for the torrid timber of Jim Speight, the Tar Heel fans didn't have much to cheer about. The blond shortstop rapped out a homer, two doubles and a single in four official trips to the plate, knocking in the last three UNC runs.

Once again it was sloppy fielding which was the Tar Heels' downfall. In all they made seven errors, three of them coming in the eighth when the Eagles tallied twice.

In that frame the visitors used two singles, two errors by Speight and another by Gary Black to tie and go ahead. In the first it was a single and errors by Dickie Prindle and Buddy Tilden which produced a run for Georgia Southern. A passed ball by Bob Hundley helped the Eagles, who beat UNC earlier this year, 4-2, to a run in the fifth, and Bill Haywood's wild pitch brought another across in the ninth.

Speight kept the Tar Heels in the ball game until the final out. He socked a 380-foot homer to left in the third with nobody on. In the seventh his scorching double to right center scored Buddy Tilden, who had singled, and another double in the ninth brought Prindle, who had walked, across with UNC's fourth run.

On the hit Speight advanced to third when centerfielder Tommy Jones failed to field the ball cleanly. But reliever Pierce Blanchard struck out Black and got pinch-hitter Ken Boykin to bounce back to the mound to end the game.

The Tar Heels scored their first run in the first on a walk to Prindle, a sacrifice by Speight, and a sharp single by Heyward Hull.

Bobby Cox, who took over for starter Joe White in the seventh, was the loser. Starter David Bell got credit for the victory though he needed help from Blanchard in the ninth.

Coach Walt Rabb's charges will leave this afternoon for College Park, Md., where they meet Maryland on Friday. On Saturday afternoon the Tar Heels take on UVA at Charlottesville, Va.

Win Needed In Horseshoes

All activities except horseshoes are reporting "go" as UNC prepares to wrest the Big Four Sports championship from N. C. State next Wednesday.

Carolina is defending champion in horseshoes and it is "extra important that we keep our first place if we are to win," according to Walt Tuthill intramural undergraduate assistant.

"The way it looks now, horseshoes could be the determining factor as to whether we win," he added.

Mike Traynor is the manager for the event and can be reached at the Sigma Nu House (968-9077) for those interested in offering their services.

Competition will consist of two doubles and one singles match in the best two of three 21 point games.

UNC's Stan Cocke and Kirby Jones, at number three doubles, put the finishing touches to Duke here yesterday. The two won their match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4 to complete the farce.

Duke Reaches Peak; Gets Smashed By 9-0

By BOB BETTIS

The Duke Blue Devils, who, according to last week's Duke Chronicle, planned to "reach their peak" in time for their tennis battle with UNC, will have to climb Mt. Victory again.

North Carolina's powerful tennis club easily shoved the Dukes down whatever peak they were trying to reach yesterday by shellacking the Blue Devils, 9-0, here yesterday.

It was conference win number three for Coach Don Skakle's crew, who are now 13-1 for the season. Duke suffered its second ACC loss, as opposed to one victory. The Blue Devils are 6-5 over-all.

Without a doubt the entire afternoon belonged to Carolina.

Keith Stoneman set the tempo of the match by quickly defeating Jim Cheek, 6-0, 6-0, on the number five court. The fans were hardly settled in their seats, and Stoneman's triumph gave an accurate preview of what was to come.

When George Sokol followed with a 6-0, 6-0 verdict over Duke's number one netter, Jerry Mattson, there was grave concern over whether the Blue Devils would win a game, let alone a set, let alone the match.

Sokol Near Perfect

Sokol played nearly perfect tennis. His stroking was beautiful and he placed his shots where Mattson wasn't located.

Similar to Rod McNerney of Indiana, Mattson at first tried to charge the net. But Sokol sent scorching liners at the Blue Devil, and the only thing Mattson got out of his strategy was a good workout.

Shaffer, playing at number two, used a big service and powerful strokes to subdue Clyde Gouldman, 6-4, 6-2.

Parrish set back Duke's number four man, Richard Predmore, by 6-3, 6-2 with his ever-consistent game.

Pete Myers, at number six, stopped Ken McCullough, 6-2, 6-4 while Ted Hoehn became the only UNC man to have anything that even resembled trouble.

Hoehn beat Duke's Al McIntosh in two overtime sets, 7-5, 8-6. The two played at the number three post.

Doubles Summary

Sokol and Parrish (UNC) def. Gouldman and McIntosh, 6-3, 6-4. Stoneman and Shaffer (UNC) def. Mattson and Cheek, 6-3, 6-2. Jones and Cocke (UNC) def. Predmore and McCullough, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

Thanks, Chuck —Day Of Rest

UNC teams get a much - needed rest today after a full schedule of events yesterday and before a heavy load of action coming up this weekend.

The baseball team hits the road North where it will play Maryland on Friday and Virginia on Saturday. Coach Don Skakle's tennis group, again the scourge of the ACC, will also be away this weekend. The talented netters play South Carolina and Clemson on successive days beginning tomorrow. The Clemson match should be a tough one.

Carolina's golf team winds up its series of three tri-matches with Duke and Wake Forest tomorrow on the Duke course at Durham.

The track and lacrosse teams are the only ones performing here this weekend. Coach Dale Ranson's cindermen entertain Virginia Saturday while the lacrosse club hosts Washington and Lee the same day.

For Coach Connie Steele's stickmen, the match with the Generals will be the last home engagement of the year.

Golfers Split Road Matches; Play Friday

By HUGH STEVENS

The UNC golf team split two matches on the road this week, defeating Virginia 11-10 on Monday, and dropping a 12½-8½ decision to Maryland on Tuesday.

The Tar Heels' first four men were all victorious in the Virginia match, with number one man Abe Andes leading the way with a 2-1 victory over Charles McKenzie. Skip Tucker also won by a 2-1 score over Mickey Callahan. Tom Arnold and Mike Dore were victorious over John Hayes and Bill Kirby, respectively, by identical 2½-½ scores.

Carolina's Harvey Hill was beaten 3-0 by Fred Jones of UVA, and the Cavaliers' Woody Stevens claimed the only other Virginia win by shutting out Les Fleisher, 3-0. In the final match of the day, UNC's George Reams beat Mike Timbers by the score of 2-1.

The final three matches were decisive in the Carolina-Maryland meet held Tuesday at Maryland. Andes of the Tar Heels was defeated 2½-½ by Vernon Novak of the Terps, but Tucker of Carolina evened the score in the number two match by whipping Terry Campbell, 2½-½. Arnold, playing number three for UNC, halved his match with Ron Jamieson, 1½-1½. Carolina's Hill and Maryland's Ray Horne also divided the fourth match, 1½-1½.

The Terrapins rallied in the final matches to gain the win. Ron Scales of Maryland defeated Fleisher, 2-1, and Ron Righter dropped Carolina's Dore by 2½-½. Reams was beaten 2-1 by the Terps' Peter Rivera in the final match of the day.

FOUR PREPS CONCERT OPENS SPRING JUBILEE

Jades To Play For Dancing Until One

Liz Taylor Movie Is Free Flick

By SAM BLUMBERG

The Four Preps will begin Graham Memorial's first "salute to spring" jubilee tonight with a concert beginning at 8 on the GM lawn.

Following the concert, The Jades will provide music for dancing under the stars until 1. Refreshments will be served.

There will be three showings of the Free Flick "Butterfield 8," which features an Academy Award winning performance by Liz Taylor. Eddie Fisher and Laurence Harvey also star in this flick. Showings will be at 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30 in Carroll Hall.

The Four Preps began recording for Capitol in 1957, with their first record, "Dreamy Eyes." However it was their million-selling recording "26 Miles" which made them national celebrities a year later.

Their other hits—"Big Man", "Down By The Station", "Big Surprise", "Lazy Summer Night", "Got A Girl", and "Cinderella" (which they sang in the motion picture "Gidget"), have proven that the Preps are as popular as ever with the jukebox crowd.

What has made The Preps a phenomenon is that they've grown up in show business—without passing through "that awkward stage."

By mid-summer of 1961, when their smash album, "The Four Preps On Campus", became a national best-seller, it was apparent that The Preps had smoothly matriculated to college and adult audiences.

Recorded live amid the typical pandemonium of one of The Preps' campus appearances, 'On Campus" contains audible evidence of why The Preps are one of the busiest vocal groups in the business. Equally as entertaining and successful was their follow-up album "Campus Encore."

In their brief career they've appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show four times, Ernie Ford six times, "Ozzie and Harriett," another six, and Dick Clark's show 14 times—perhaps a record.

In addition, they have played almost every major state fair in the country and many of the top night clubs, including Los Angeles' Coconut Grove and Hollywood's Crescendo, Reno's Riverside Hotel, San Francisco's Facks II, The Dunes Hotel, Las Vegas and Harrah's Club, Lake Tahoe.

Their college appearances have taken them to every state of the union, leaving numerous broken attendance records in their wake. For example, recently at the Universities of Minnesota, British Columbia, Illinois, South Dakota, they broke all existing attendance records.

Listening to and viewing The Preps' smooth vocal blend, outrageous quick wit, and uncanny sense of timing, one must marvel at the fate that brought together four lads of such compatible talents.

Bruce Belland, Glen Larson, Marvin Ingram, and Ed Cobb were primarily interested in athletics, girls, and sundry things other than swinging during their Hollywood High days.

Ed was an All-City football player, Marvin lettered in basketball, and crew later at UCLA, while Glen and Bruce were track stars. Their records in the 440 and 100-yard dash, respectively, still stand at Hollywood High. All had other ambitions picked out: Glen, a TV writer; Bruce, a public relations man; Marvin, an attorney; and Ed, a research chemist.

Glen and Ed attended Los Angeles City College until their careers began to monopolize their time. Marvin and Bruce attended UCLA; Marvin long enough to nail down a bachelor's degree.

If there were any doubts about The Preps' versatility, one of their hit records, "More Money for You and Me," should have cleaned them up. In it, The Preps spun off amazingly accurate imitations of other vocal groups ranging from The Fleetwoods to the Four Freshmen.

Bruce, shortest member of the group, is fond of pointing out one competitor whom The Preps parody in a slightly different way. The climax of The Preps' act is when 6-5 Ed leaps into 5-6 Bruce's arms and is carried off stage.

Says Bruce: "We could have called ourselves the Hi-Lo's."

This program will be free for UNC students and their dates. In case of rain, Memorial Hall will be used.

Four Preps—On GM Lawn Tonight

Khrushchev Tells Plans Of Retiring

Red Leader Says He Can't Last Forever

MOSCOW (UPI)—Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev told a meeting of construction and industry workers he "can not hold for all time" his dual position as chief of the Communist Party and the Soviet government, the official Tass news agency reported Thursday.

Tass said he made the declaration at a Kremlin meeting Wednesday in stressing the need for acceptance of the authority of the party.

There was no indication from the Tass report whether Khrushchev was dropping a political hint or merely commenting, as he has before, that he is mortal and must pass on eventually.

But it came at a time when there has been a flurry of reports in Western newspapers—attributed to Communist sources—that Khrushchev is considering retirement from one of his two demanding posts.

"I believe that no one will suspect me for stating this: I have no special standing of my own in the party. I am already 69 and I have the right to say so. For everyone understands that I cannot hold for all time the position I now have in the party and the state."

When Josef Stalin died in 1953, his titles of party secretary and premier were split between Khrushchev and Georgi Malenkov. Nikolai Bulganin became premier in 1955 and held the job until Khrushchev took it on along with his party secretaryship in 1958.

In recent weeks reports have circulated in Rome and London that he would split the jobs again, keeping only one, presumably the more powerful party post.

In Washington, the first reaction to Khrushchev's remarks was that he had given a powerful boost to current speculation that he may be on his way out. Washington sources said the statement lent new authority to the speculation in some Communist circles that he was planning to announce at the May 25 meeting of the Communist Central Committee his plans to retire within a month or two. The Washington view was that the premier's remarks also gave some substance to rumors that a number of Kremlin leaders feel the time is approaching for new leadership.

Most speculation about a successor has concentrated on Frol Kozlov, 54-year-old metallurgist and diplomat who is secretary of the party Central Committee and member of the presidium.

Presumably he would step up if Khrushchev relinquished his party post, although he also has been a first deputy premier and presumably would be a contender for the premiership too.

'Split Must Be Resolved'

Autonomy Has Limit, Chancellor Explains

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Chancellor William B Aycock said yesterday that any existing misunderstanding between student leaders and administration officials "can and must be resolved," and he hopes that future meetings will accomplish this.

In a wide-ranging interview, Aycock discussed the present Student Government-Administration conflict; the Apartment Rule controversy; jurisdiction of morals cases; Dean Henderson's role in student affairs; the Doug Moe case; and the Tom Crais-Chuck Erickson controversy.

Concerning the present charge by Student Body President Mike Lawler that the "character of the University has been challenged by the administration," Aycock said the notion that Student Government is COMPLETELY autonotonomous is false.

"This notion has always been false," he said. "It's false now and it will continue to be false.

Never In History

"There has never been a time in the history of this University when the students had the first and last say so in student affairs," he said.

Aycock said that student body president Mike Lawler "has got to understand that we can't do something we can't do . . . We've tried to deal on realistic facts and we have handled cases which students are not equipped to handle.

"Students are well equipped to handle certain types of cases —cheating, for example, lying, and stealing cases.

"But there are other kinds of cases in which the delegation can't be complete because the student councils don't have the means or power to secure the necessary evidence.

"You know, there is written authority giving the Student Honor Council the right to try cheating cases such as the Ann Carter case.

Testified In Case

"I testified in the Ann Carter Case on one matter and one of the lawyers kept arguing that the Student Council had no right and no delegated authority to try her case in the first place . . .

"Well, years ago the trustees used to come here to discipline students. Then the faculty did it; then society said that the campus would do it.

"But there has never been a time when the trustees have excused the faculty from disciplining students.

"There is nobody here that can legally give something away when we've got to account for it.

"The trustees are the only ones who could relieve us of our authority; but they won't ever relieve the faculty and administration from their responsibility . . .

Limited Authority

"Sure the students on this campus have a great deal of student self-government, but there is just so much authority that can be delegated . . ."

He cited a serious case of immorality involving two young girls and two male students.

"Now there isn't any way on the face of this earth that the parents of those two girls will let them testify before a student council — and student government doesn't have the power to make them testify. They don't have any subpoena power . . .

"We keep the Honor Councils informed of what goes on. They have handled morals cases such as the boy who was found under a girl's bed at W. C. or the two boys who broke in a dormitory in Salem College recently. We have a formal agreement with the Honor Councils on these matters.

"But there are times when we just have to step in . . . If the boys who took the girls to their apartment were found not guilty because of a lack of evidence — but if everyone knows they're guilty — then if we try them — they can say that the Chancellor has delegated authority to the Student Council on these matters, when in reality we haven't . . .

"Look At Record"

"If you will look at the record, you will see that offenses of this serious kind have been handled by the administration or not at all . . .

"My guess is that if Mr. Lawler wants to pick out a period when all the autonomy he claims existed really did, I can go to the record and show him where it never has existed . . ."

Sure the students have a lot of freedom here, but there has got to be a working agreement between us . . .

"We delegate to the students as much authority as they need to decide cases.

Present Facts

"Over a period of time, when a certain category of cases are not being dealt with effectively, then we present the facts to the student leaders and discuss with them whether or not they are in fact dealing effectively with this type of case.

"Dean Henderson is perfectly willing to let students handle cases, but sometimes they aren't responsible . . . that's what happened in the Doug Moe case . . .

Doug Moe Case

"Two detectives showed up in my office one day wanting to see Doug Moe and Lou Brown. Of course, I wanted to know why — and especially why Lou Brown, since he hadn't been playing basketball recently . . .

"After they explained to me that Moe was suspected of ac-

World News In Brief

Russians Show No Interest In Early Test Ban Progress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Hopes for early progress on a nuclear test ban treaty hit a new low Thursday after Russia brushed off the latest British-American effort to break the East-West deadlock.

Officials studying Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's reaction to a revised Western approach to the inspection problem found nothing to indicate Russia was interested.

The State Department said, however, that the United States would continue its efforts to find some solution and get the talks off "dead center."

They have been hung up for months because of Russia's refusal to accept the number and type of annual inspections of her territory which the United States considers essential to prevent cheating.

State Department Press Officer Lincoln White said he expected that the U. S. and British ambassadors to Moscow, who presented the new Western inspection proposal to Khrushchev Wednesday, would meet with the Soviet leader or some one in the Kremlin in the near future.

RFK Visits Wallace

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy paid a "courtesy" call on Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace Thursday in the "cradle of the confederacy," but the visit proved something less than a casual get-together.

As a starter, nearly 100 highway patrolmen were assigned guard posts in offices and in every block surrounding the statehouse.

Then, sources said, both Kennedy and the segregationist governor demanded that their discussion be taped.

Outside the statehouse police arrested 18 anti-Kennedy pickets—hurling two of them bodily into a paddy wagon when they resisted arrest.

Troops Take Defense

BERLIN (UPI) — U. S. troops equipped for combat took up defense positions in West Berlin Thursday to test their abilities to ward off a possible Communist attack on this isolated city.

Communist East German border guards, meanwhile, built three new tank barricades along the wall in another effort to seal the border to refugees fleeing West.

One of the barriers made of concrete blocks was put up not far from the spot where an East German youth escaped by crashing a stolen armored car through the wall last week.

Clay Suggests Cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Gen. Lucius D. Clay suggested Thursday that as much as $500 million more could be chopped from President Kennedy's already pared-down $4.5 billion foreign aid request.

He specifically recommended that the House Foreign Affairs Committee order a $200 million cut into the authorization bill now before the group.

He told newsmen an additional cut of up to $300 million might be possible later when Congress considers legislation carrying the actual cash. The authorization bill merely sets an outside limit on the program.

Carr Social Room Is Best On Campus

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

Carr Dormitory has the best social program of any dormitory on campus. If you don't think so, just ask someone who lives there.

That's what we were told too, so we went over yesterday to see for ourselves. The first sight that greeted our eyes were multicolored strands of crepe paper hanging from the ceiling. No one would have suspected that law students could be so artistic. It seems that the fellows were decorating for a combo party this evening with the Kappa Delta sorority.

Al Gilliam and Butch Fleetwood came over and introduced themselves. Al was president of Carr this past year and Butch is the new president. They invited us into the living room to sit down and talk. As we moved toward the living-room we passed through a small vestibule that had been converted into a small French restaurant, complete with red-checked tablecloths and prints on the wall.

Al pointed out where they were planning to build a bar to serve soft-drinks and punch. Then we entered the living-room. New curtains were spread out on a couch ready to be hung and had to be moved.

Needless to say, we were more mystified than ever. A men's dorm never looked like this before. Al explained that when Carr was converted from a girls' dorm into the Law students' dorm this year, nearly all the furniture was moved out. There was nothing but a couple of couches and a TV set, he said. A good many of the fellows wanted to fix the place up, but "there was only $60 in the 'kitty' from last semester," he continued. "Obviously we couldn't throw any parties."

A group was sent to the IDC Dorm Improvements Committee, under the direction of John Mitchener, and presented their problem to him. Mitchener told them to go to it, said Al, and since then they have spent about $400—all in fixing up the dorm. By Christmas it was all finished and you wouldn't have known it for the same place, he said.

Butch ran for president of the dorm on a "party" platform, according to Al. "We have had five parties with women's dorms—this one tonight makes six," broke in Butch, "and we've got a combo party with West Cobb in a couple of weeks."

Both Butch and Al placed a lot of the credit for the project on their dorm adviser, Walt Ladwig. "If all dorm advisers showed half as much interest, life in men's dorms would be much better," Al said. Butch said that Ladwig had first suggested the project and had helped to carry it through. Besides that, he mentioned, he has even chaperoned their parties.

The important thing is that the fellows in the dorm have all cooperated, commented Al. "Today we had so many people trying to decorate, we had to chase them away. To use a cliche, it's been a team effort all the way," he added.

They pointed up to the ceiling. "Probably the only cutglass chandelier on campus," Al said. Most of the furniture in the room had been bought used and then refinished. Mr. J. S. Bennett, Director of Operations, had helped them to accomplish this. Walt Ladwig, who had just entered, broke in. "Bennett didn't want to do it. We had to fight this all the way through to convince them that we are used to living in better conditions. There is no reason why, if individuals have fine things, they couldn't protect them." He said that after Mr. Bennett saw that they were sincere, "he has been cooperating fully."

One reason that the project has been so successful is that "everybody knows everybody" in the dorm, in the words of Al Gilliam. This is the first time that the University has put the people from one school in a single dorm, he said. The people in the dorm see each other not only there but at the Law School, he continued. Ladwig commented that the administration might be considering making Carr into some kind of experimental dorm.

Gilliam said that the purpose of dorm officers was to give the men some kind of social life. "You can always meet girls but this way you can meet a lot more," he said. "Our parties have gotten better and better," he added and was obviously pleased.

Sophomores, Stores To Stage Sale Week

The first Sophomore Merchant Week, sponsored by the Sophomore Class, will be conducted May 7-10 with four downtown merchants participating.

Each night a free door prize including a guitar, pants and skirts will be given by the participating merchants. Members of the Sophomore class will work in the stores each of the four nights.

Senior Morehead Scholars Are Honored At Dinner

John L. Morehead, vice chairman of the foundation, addressed the graduating class of Morehead Scholars. John Motley Morehead, chairman of the foundation who traditionally gives the talk to the graduating seniors was unable to came to Chapel Hill because of a slight illness.

The Morehead Scholarship class of '63 has distinguished itself in many ways during the past four years. The president of the student body during 1962-63, Inman Allen, came from this class as did Richard Vinroot, who served as president of the junior and senior classes.

Other achievements are as follows: 19 members of the class were in freshman honors; 13 in sophomore honors; 14 in Phi Eta Sigma, national freshman fraternity; 18 in the Order of the Grail and/or the Order of the Old Well; eight in the Order of the Golden Fleece; two served as captains of sports teams; 19 won one or more freshman numerals in sports; and nine won one or more monograms in varsity sports.

Eight members of the class will receive degrees with honors; nine will enter graduate study; five will enter the Air Force or Navy as commissioned officers; four will enter schools of medicine; and five will take either full time or temporary positions in business or government.

Two members of the Morehead Scholar class of '63 were graduated ahead of schedule and both are already studying medicine. One of these students completed 74 hours of study by the end of his freshman year.

Three members of this class of '63 are on leave; two have had a year's study in Europe as Goettingen or Tours Scholars and one has been serving as a missionary in Alaska.

Eight of the students going on into graduate or professional study have received scholarships or fellowships.

In addition to the members of the class of '63, two members of the Morehead Scholarship class of '62 were honored at the dinner. These two students are being graduated this year after having been awarded leaves of absence. They are David Harper and Alvis Rich.

Paul Ortega Jolis is graduating a year ahead of schedule and also attended the dinner.

Members of the Morehead Scholar class of '63 are Daniel M. Armstrong III, Edwin W. Bass, William W. Bevis, Charles R. Britt, Theodore J. Collier Jr., Donald B. Craven, Joe M. Craver, Frederick H. Croom, Thomas E. Cummings, Frederick K. Dashiell Jr., Charles A. Eure, Douglas M. Fambrough Jr.

Also, Charles M. Ferguson, Edward N. Graham, Anthony S. Harrington, Stephen J. Hill, James N. Irvine, Charles R. Jonas Jr., Randolph L. Lambe, James B. Reston Jr., William B. Riley Jr., John A. Sherrill, Myron P. Simmons, William R. Sullivan, Frederick C. O. Wedler Jr., John B. Welch, William S. Wells Jr., and Thomas J. White III.

Dorm Court Tries Three

The Interdormitory Council Court tried three cases this week.

In the first case, five students were charged with participating in a water fight and causing a disturbance in a dormitory. The Court accepted a plea of not guilty.

In another case a student was charged with throwing water from a dormitory window. The Court accepted the defendant's plea of guilty and gave a court reprimand.

In the final case, a student pleaded guilty to a violation of dormitory regulations and the campus Code. He was sentenced to general probation until June, 1964, a $10 fine, and the recommendation that a letter be sent to the defendant's parents.

Chancellor's Concern

We were lucky enough yesterday to catch Chancellor Aycock leaving his office, and as usual, we found him more than willing to talk to us. As a matter of fact, he talked to us for two and a half hours on every subject currently of concern to students and Student Government.

We found the Chancellor most sincere, most honest, most enlightening, and certainly most willing to accept the responsibility for current administration policy. He invited us to lay off of Dean Henderson and start shooting at him as the legitimate target of our editorial wrath.

He may be the legitimate target, but we shall still refrain from firing for several basic reasons. First, the Chancellor speaks from a feeling of great concern for Student Government and student welfare, as well as an understanding of student problems. He has been president of a student body.

He then favored and still favors as much student responsibility as he feels he can extend to the students. Maybe we disagree about how much is enough, but we don't catch it from the parents. Neither do we have the Board of Trustees looking over our shoulder.

A resolution of the Board of Trustees passed in 1957 states ". . . among the duties of the faculty and Chancellor . . . shall be included the duty to exercise full and final authority in regulating student conduct and in all matters of student discipline in that institution."

This is the framework within which the administration must work, and within this framework, the Chancellor appears ready to allow as much latitude as he can.

The Chancellor also defended Dean Charles Henderson, saying he had by far the toughest job on this campus. This is possibly true.

But the fact remains, that in the first real effort to reach some accord between the students and administration last Tuesday, Dean Henderson sandbagged the meeting at the outset and killed any chance that existed for an agreement to be reached on that level.

Possibly the Dean had good reason to attack Student Government for irresponsibility, or perhaps he is getting a little thin-skinned, having been under attack from students before within the period of his vivid recollection, but this meeting should never have degenerated into an exercise in charge hurling.

It now seems obvious that no agreement can be reached while student leaders must deal with Dean Henderson, Dean Long and Dean Carmichael. Unfortunately, none of them are trusted by the student representatives.

We will not call names or throw insults. Both groups are able to document their cases well, and we can only lose ground by running down our little rabbit holes of prejudice filled with half truths and misunderstanding.

The Chancellor has left the door open for us. Let's fall back and lick our wounds, re-group and try again.

Maybe if we go a different route, our case will receive the consideration we feel it deserves.

Conservative Praise

It's like Santa Claus in the summertime.

A dyed-in-the-wool, honest-to-goodness, 100 per cent pure Conservative came in the office the other day and told us how happy he was that we are putting out such a fair, balanced paper.

By that, of course, he meant that there've been a lot of conservatives represented on the editorial pages lately.

Slightly amazed, we thanked our Conservative friend and told him we'll try to keep up the good work.

But just between you and us, aren't there any vocal Liberals or Moderates around? I mean this holding the fort down by yourself is a little trying, congratulations from the opposition notwithstanding.

YAF Autonomy?

Local autonomy — or rather, the lack of it — has always been a sore point with the local Young Americans for Freedom, who have to get national approval before they can spit.

Their posters advertising an upcoming meeting, therefore, are interesting.

"The _____ Chapter of the Young Americans for Freedom, Nation's Leading Conservative Organization, will meet _____ at _____" Written in are "UNC", time and place.

Does the national YAF have to print your posters even?

Did a local YAFer really write in the time and place without checking with the national or was this just an attempt to trick us into thinking they could do something by themselves?

Actually it just sounds like good old YAF policy, "don't do anything, think anything, or say anything, it might be divisive."

Jubilation

It starts today.

Under the trees on the lawn near Graham Memorial we will be serenaded from 2 to 5 p.m. tomorrow and Sunday.

And that's only part of it. Top flight entertainment, free for all students of the University is something long needed on this campus, and now it's here.

Ideology Not Reason For Segregation

By ROBERT ERVIN MURPHY

Mr. Wade Wellman's latest breakfast apocalypse (April 21) hardly merits refutation on political grounds, so patent is its contradictoriness, but as a sheer act of Philistine egotism disguised as wisdom it calls for comment.

Mr. Wellman's contempt for the College Cafe pickets is not ideological at all. It is directed at their failure and derives from the respect for success that he shares with the Philistine mentality. The justice or injustice of the picketing and of the integration movement in this certainly does not concern him.

"Nowadays," he says in the maddening tone of complicity that dominates every sentence he writes, "it is most unfashionable to call oneself a segregationist, but the fashions that come and go in this country seldom express the deep inner feelings of a human being." This is a perfectly outrageous, meaningless statement if I have ever heard one. Mr. Wellman imagines that the integration movement in this country was concocted for his amusement, like a joke or a play. He is hard to amuse. That one of the purposes of the integration movement is to release the American Negro for some integrity of feeling beyond that of the bitterest resentment doesn't occur to him.

Lest we mistake his own integrity of feeling, however, Mr. Wellman leaves us to doubt that he is a very serious person. Like every "serious" person who has nothing to say, he presumes to speak for everyone:

"The crusade for integration now sweeping the United States is largely hypocritical and squares very imperfectly with the private lives of many of its loudest advocates. Hence we are bored to the point of stupor by the trite reiteration: 'What's the color of the skin?'—a piece of rhetoric which no intelligent integrationist really believes."

Mr. Wellman's insight into the states of mind of others would seem to place him among the bad novelists.

His insight into the spirit of the times is equally suggestive:

"The entire country has grown weary of it (the "clamor for race mixing') and a strong public reaction against the movement is not unlikely in the near future . . . The crusader for integration will ultimately tire of their useless battle and give it up as a sorry task."

That's news. Martin Luther King, on trial in Birmingham for contempt of court, would be interested to hear.

Mr. Wellman knows two NAACP members who "frequent a tavern long banned by the organization" and somehow takes their bad faith as a vitiation of the principles of integration for which the College Cafe pickets have tried to win acceptance. Has it occurred to Mr. Wellman that he keeps bad company as well as bad logic?

Not only is Mr. Wellman an egotist whose tone of condescending generosity attempts to secure authority in the absence of facts; he is also a sensationalist who settles for nothing less than the grand emotions. He finds the result of integration thus far "heartbreaking," though he has obviously never tried to imagine how it feels to be a Negro in America. This, I submit, shows a curious displacement of feeling.

What Mr. Wellman really resents, I suggest, is not integration or any political movement as such, but that anything happens at all, that any fact disturbs the wisdom of which, this and his previous ludicrous postures in the Daily Tar Heel are the voice. Dismissing a serious political movement as a "fashion" of no more importance, one is led to think, than the length of women's dresses, Mr. Wellman really believes in nothing else. What but fashion could call forth the flimsy rhetoric with which he aims at every moving object on the landscape of his own dull, bored vision?

Liberty is the only thing you cannot have unless you are willing to give it to others.

"Well, Back To The Old Grind"

Affluence Of Today's Student Has Led To Disease Of Mind

By SAM KINCH JR.
Daily Texan Editor
In The National Observer

A strange disease pervades today's University of Texas college student: A disease of the mind.

This weird intellectual malady is caused by a bug called affluence —a common bacterium in the United States, but one that hits in epidemic proportions in American colleges and universities.

The college student of today is wealthy in a material sense, which makes him particularly susceptible to the bacteria of affluence. He eats well, three times a day — so much so that many times he must count calories and cholesterol at the ripe old age of 21.

He wears nice clothes, stylish clothes which may be obtained even by the lower middle class on the crutch of credit. He either has an automobile or has access to one. He is pathetically addicted to air conditioning and comfortable surroundings at home and away. He has movies, television, record players, and FM radio for entertainment. He either has a checking account or a good credit rating . . . or both.

But with all his affluence, the college student has not earned one iota of it. He, as a member of the college generation of the mid-Twentieth Century, has all and has had to give nothing. And with this heritage he goes to college, chockfull of unintellectual ambitions, and with his eyes set on a $10,000-a year starting salary when he graduates. He knows he can get by without too much scholastic effort and without too much financial strain, while enjoying a relatively high standard of living.

Suffering From Affluence

In short, the American college student of today is suffering from his affluence. He has too much he didn't have to work for.

One result of this disease is mental inertia and a stagnation of criticism. Joe College knows there are problems in his country and in the world, but he has an abiding faith that they will be worked out for our good. He hears about people starving in half the world, but does not rise to the occasion to formulate answers, but he leaves the scene for a short beer without occupying himself with such matters. He sees specific instances of injustice or discrimination, and answers "This, too, will pass." He is either satisfied with the political and social status quo, and says little about it; or he is dissatisfied and does little.

Another result of his affluence, and perhaps the more socially ominous, is that the college student has too much "time on his hands." This has serious ramifications not only for the college he attends but for society generally. Because he does not have to work his way through school nor study for more than a few concentrated times per year, the collegian is able to channel energies into projects of little or no political or social worth. If he is politically oriented and motivated, he participates in partisan politics — accepts a party dogma and works like the devil for candidates and party principles, many of which he unable to understand and which, if he did understand, he would reject.

If he leans more to the idealistic, he advocates such values as "peace" and "ban the bomb" — not as Moral Good but as instruments to survival, which to him is the Ultimate Good. And if he is socially "in," he goes to pep rallies, panty raids, and parties with the fervor and drive of a Madison Avenue junior executive.

All these activities, and others of more and less meaning, relate directly to the fact that there is more time for college students to participate, which bears on another symptom of the college student's strange disease. Because he is not a particularly intense student, although he may have a relatively high grade average, and because he has so much time to devote to non-academic activities, the wheat-jeans-and-loafers man and the bubble-haired girl are submitting or have submitted to an administrative sort of parenthood — the in loco parentis (in place of a parent) concept of university life. The college student sees university administrators as Great White Fathers of leadership, which he abhors but about which he does nothing.

He dislikes being told where to live, what hours to date, what groups he can and cannot join, where he can park his car (or if he can have one), when he can drink, etc., but his protests are never heard by the administrators, or anyone else except by accident.

It would almost seem that the Revolution of 1776 had been betrayed — particularly by college students — in a manner unbecoming loyal Americans. We simply aren't continuing to revolt. Thomas Jefferson taught what he considered an important lesson: In order to keep up with the times, a revolution is necessary in each generation. In this sense, the college man of today is a complete flop, for he is more interested in hi-fi and beer than he is in new thoughts and challenges to the old order.

Is There Any Hope?

He is well-off materially, knows it, and enjoys it. He knows the country is on sound footing and is willing to let it chug along without concern for the problems that still exist and new problems that are arising. He does not understand—or perhaps he doesn't even realize —the need for new well-defined formulas of criticism and reform. His only concept of revolution is that of Cuba or Russia, and he can't — or won't — accept the moral obligation of an educated person to contribute new and revolutionary ideas. He reflects on history to the point that he "understands" the revolution of the 1930s and the 1940s, and doesn't want more of the same. But he is not inclined to put forth criticism of the old or to advocate the new.

A dismal picture? Yes and no. We are producing scholars capable of challenging anything, and some of them are doing so. We are developing scientists and engineers who are "discovering" constantly, overturning the old knowledge and replacing it with the new. We are seeing politicians with vigorous, imaginative ideas. A few of them are getting elected.

But the American college student, with the exception of a frightfully small percentage of his cohorts, is missing out on most of the "new." He often ignores the knowledge and rejects important new ideas, in favor of the more leisurely approach to what he calls "education." Fortunately he is sometimes exposed to educators who are able to feed him enough inspiration to learn what is and what is to be; but most college students are not that lucky.

Is there a fermenting revolution of dissent and criticism and challenge? Not yet, but there is hope. Hopefully the college student of today, a member of the Silent Affluent generation, will throw off the chains of conformity and inertia, challenge the old and advocate the new, benefit from the mistakes of his elders, and create a new atmosphere consistent with the changing world of the 1960s.

But until that trend is begun, the American college man will remain an economic, social, scholastic, and political "sick, fat cat" who has a lot but has little to do.

Republicanism's Future In The Growing South

By CHUCK NEELY

A panel of three Republican Congressmen spoke recently to an enthusiastic Gerrard Hall audience. This panel's visit to Carolina was one of a number they are making in a swing through the South. At the same time, other Republican Congressmen are barnstorming across the nation, castigating the Kennedy administration.

What is the goal of these "Paul Revere Panels?' What is it that they are trying to accomplish?

Their goal is the exposal of the blunderings of the present administration to the American nation. Their aim is the revitalization of the Republican Party and the awakening of the American people to the dangers of expanded governmental powers.

Striking hard at the President's Cuban policy, at the proposed domestic Peace Corps, and at the growing national debt, the Congressmen articulated the fundamental beliefs of conservative Republicanism. All three spoke lucidly and persuasively. All three were personable and magnetic. All three were comparatively new to Congress, two of them having upset Democrat incumbents in the last election.

Reps. Anderson, Dole and Lloyd are the forerunners of a new breed of Republican — conservative but not reactionary, forward-looking but not recklessly impulsive, careful but not afraid.

The reception these men received in Chapel Hill, coupled with the growing activity of their sponsors, the YRC, indicates a groundswell of popular movement in the South to the Republican standard.

Responsible Southerners are finally awakening to the fact that they have very little in common with the Democrat Party, and a great deal in common with the Republican Party. On the national level, the Democrat Party is dominated by northern and western liberals. These leaders have never had the interests of the South at heart. Everything they stand for is opprobrious to most Southerners.

Why then has the South clung to the Democrat Party for so long?

The answer is easily found. The crushing of the South in the Civil War, the bitter Reconstruction years, the vengeful Republican domination of the prostrate Confederacy, all combined to coalesce the South into a solid Democrat block. For a long time the Democrat Party served the South and served it well. It helped the beaten states to recover and rebuild and to maintain their pride. But as the liberal elements of the party have grown more powerful, the Southerners have been shunted off into the position of poor relations.

These blatant actions have not gone unnoticed and now it would seem that an irreversible trend toward the Republican Party and its old-fashioned virtues has set in.

The process is a slow one, but one that must prevail if the South hopes to ever again have a voice commensurate with her increasing population and growing industrial strength.

Too long have Southerners allowed the Democrats to wave the tattered banner of the Old South. Too long have Southerners harkened back to the unfortunate days of Reconstruction. The Democrat Party which was the salvation of the post-war South is no more. In its place stands a bastardization which bears the same name and falsely claims to be the same party.

he Southerner must lift his eyes from the barrenness of the past and gaze forward into the future. The Old South is no more; its values live on. Let the New South take up these values and nurture them. But let these values thrive with that party which would see them saved. There is but one such party, and it is the Republican Party.

—Chancellor Explains Stand Of Administration—

cepting a bribe, I agreed to call Moe and Brown to my office but I insisted that the coach be present.

"The detectives didn't want to see the coach; they only wanted to see Moe and Brown. But I insisted and finally they agreed to what I said and we agreed to meet at the coach's house for privacy.

"I asked Moe what the whole thing was about and he said he didn't know anything.

"The detectives then wanted to take Moe and Brown back to New York, but I said 'no' because there was an exhibition game of All-Stars that night and I thought that Moe should be present at the game.

"So they agreed to meet after the game around one a.m. in front of Parker dormitory. The team was playing in Henderson that night, I believe.

"Well, I had to go to Raleigh that night and while I was there I was notified that one of the wire services had a story on two detectives being on campus . . .

"I rushed back and told them that Moe couldn't go because he had to be seen on campus the next day . . . so people wouldn't get suspicious of what I thought to be an innocent boy. Brown did go with them to N. Y. though.

"Moe stayed and told me everything about the matter . . .

"Later, though, he had to appear before a grand jury and he came to see me and ask me to write a note to his teachers excusing his absences . . . Moe said again he didn't know anything about the matter . . .

"Then when the detectives came again and told me exactly what they were charging Moe with, I asked him, 'Doug, what about the $75? Then he told me the whole story . . .

"I wrote up the whole story about Moe's failing to report a bribe offer and accepting $75 before school began in September.

"Then I asked Dean Henderson to ask students on the Honor Council if they wished to handle the case. They said they wanted to think it over. They came back the next day and said they wanted to handle it . . .

"Your own Wayne King (then editor of the Tar Heel) and others said they were glad that students were allowed to handle the case.

"I was at the hospital visiting my wife, who was ill at the time, when I heard that Moe had been found not guilty and I couldn't understand why . . .

"Right then and there, I established an office in the hospital and called Bill Harriss (newly elected student body president) and others to discuss the verdict in the case.

"I told them I was going to call Doug Moe over there and ask him why he lied to me . . . I told Moe he was going to have to leave school and he said he understood.

"My decision was quite apart from the Honor Council decision. The matter I was concerned with was that Doug Moe had lied to me.

"But it came out in the paper that I overruled the student council, when I hadn't.

"The night after I made my decision, around 10 p.m., I got a call that the students were demonstrating and shouting, "We want Moe."

"I got in my car and went down to see just what was going on. I saw a couple of students I know and asked them and anyone else who wanted to, to come to Gerrard Hall and I would tell them the whole story.

"While I was talking, Bill Harriss and George Campbell came on the stage. The Moe case was the first case that Campbell had handled since he was elected Honor Council chairman.

"George got up and said that 'we really didn't try Doug Moe since Lou Brown wasn't here but was in New York.'

"Now, I couldn't understand that, so I asked him how they could have found him not guilty if they didn't try him . . ."

Concerning the controversial Apartment Rule, Aycock said, "I certainly will admit that if the students don't enforce the Apartment Rule, nobody is going to make them enforce it.

"The Apartment Rule is a guideline . . . If you've got an Apartment Rule, girls know that anything worse than that has got to be taboo.

"If the rule is thrown away, then let's say that the girls go out to the boys apartments. Then the boys in the dorms will say, 'I can't afford an apartment but I can afford to rent a motel one weekend a year,' and they will say 'Let's take the girls out there.'

"Then, too, some of the boys won't be able to afford a motel fee once a year and they will say 'Let's bring them in the dorm.'

"The Apartment Rule may not be the proper guideline but it is a guideline, and it provides a lot of protection for the girls.

Aycock said he had pointed out to one girl the advantage of having an Apartment Rule, if only as a defensive mechanism for the girl to use should the need present itself.

"I'm quite sure that most of our girls here can take care of themselves," Aycock said. "But some of them aren't as sophisticated as others and possibly many of them may be a little green, if you know what I mean."

'Big-Time Athletics'

Concerning "big-time athletics," Aycock said he was asked how he felt about the question when he was being interviewed for the Chancellor's position at UNC.

"I told the man who asked me the question that if it were an open question, I'd probably decide 'No'.

"But it's not my decision. The decision was made years ago. Many people have tried to change it and there have been many fights against it, but they all were futile.

"I feel good about our situation here, better than I've felt since I've been Chancellor. Everyone is getting along fine . . .

"There are still 'big-time athletics' and there are still the pressures on the Admissions Office to admit this or that athlete even though he might not be qualified for admission.

"But, I say one thing: I'll take the kind of boys on our teams and let you close your eyes and let you pick an equivalent number out of the other 9,000 students on this campus and you won't find a better group of students."

On the Tom Crais case, Aycock said Crais came in to see him on his own. Aycock said he pointed out to Crais that most of his letter criticizing "big time athletics" was not at issue because it was his opinion and no one contested Crais' right to that opinion.

Aycock said he objected, as did Erickson, to the paragraph indicating athletes were getting preferential treatment when Crais couldn't prove it.

"I am against a policy of showing favoritism toward athletes," Aycock said. "I said so in my first speech after inauguration and I've said so since.

"I will continue to fight any type of favoritism toward athletes.

"Overall," Aycock concluded, "I welcome the enthusiasm and interest of the student leaders and student government, because even though for the moment energies may be directed toward disagreements, the ultimate effect will be a more vigorous attention to the Honor System and of fulfilling the responsibilities that are clearly delegated to student government.

"I can't believe that all this energy is going to begin and end with this present thing."

Student Beaten Up

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI) — Silent crowds watched khaki-robed army Bedouins stone and beat up a student demonstrator and knock him head-over-heels down a steep, 40-foot hillside Thursday.

The youth was covered with blood from multiple injuries by the time the Bedouins handed him over to police.

I WAS LOOKING over some old campaign posters the other day when I decided it was about time to shape up. My job was in deep jeopardy.

They told me "minor" but that's kind of hard to define, so I didn't try to define it. I went out looking for it.

My first thought ws the Arboretum, but that really isn't minor. So I continued on past it and walked down by the Tin Can.

Then it hit me. Right on the forehead.

When I regained consciousness, things were a little hazy. I looked up and there he was. It was big, amiable Walt Smuthill. I couldn't tell if he was laughing or swearing at me. It turned out he was doing both.

"Your WHAT path?" I mumbled. "My HORSHOE path!" He yelled back. "Eureka! I've found it!" I said. "Get the h - - - out of here!", he said. I took off. But I HAD found it.

Next day, I walked into the horseshoes coach's office. He was busy on the phone apologizing to Commissioner Beaver for failing to turn in his lineup card in time for the ACC meet. But then he turned around, and we were in business.

Coach Bear Butts is a large, greying man who has been through many horseshoe wars in his time. He has had winners and he has had losers; writers have worshipped him and they have ripped him; but I don't think the guy could have possibly been more insulted when I told him: "I'm here to do a MINOR sports story on horseshoes."

"MINOR!" But before he could explode, I assured him that I really didn't know what the word meant, and that we should go on ahead with the interview on those terms.

He cooled off quickly and started to expound on his career. It seems Bear just arrived here last year after a long and distingushed career at Bethesda Institute of Interior Decorating and Design.

"Yes, sir. I was hired to come here last Fall after Tom Cries was let out of the horseshoe post. It seems he spoke too long and loud over something about extensive money and scholarships going toward big-time fencing.

"But I won't make that mistake. I'm going to keep my mouth shut. I'll just concentrate on teaching the boys how to throw a game."

"Ha, ha, ha," I laughed. "I thought you PITCHED horseshoes."

"No, no, son. You PITCH baseballs. You THROW horseshoes."

"But you just said you throw GAMES."

"So I did, son. So I did. What I meant was that I teach them how to throw horseshoes in the games." You see, now, don't you? DON'T YOU?

"Uh, I think so," I said.

"Have any top-notch ringers this season, coach?"

"Oh no, no, son. I won't stand for any ringers coming in playing for me. . . . . Oh? RINGERS. Yes, well, we're not too experienced this season. I hope we can come up with some dependable performers, though, before the year's out."

I thought I had the makings for a good story, so I got up and started to leave.

"Hey kid," Bear called back at me. "Be sure to shape up and tell that Add Pinhead, the assistant director of horseshoe publicity over at Duke, that I'm not sure whom we're supposed to play over there next week. His "freshman-upperclassman" team, his "upperclassman-varsity" team or his "freshman-upperclassman-varsity" team?"

Golfers Face Duke & Wake

By HUGH STEVENS

Carolina, Duke, and Wake Forest will tangle tomorrow at Durham in the final round of their 54-hole stroke play tournament, but the tournament leader, Duke's George Smith, will not play. Smith, leader by three strokes with a 36-hole total of 144, was suspended from school this week for disciplinary reasons.

"This will definitely hurt Duke in the final round," UNC Coach Ed Kenney said yesterday. Kenney's charges trail Duke by three strokes in their battle for second place behind Wake Forest.

The Deacons have piled up a seemingly unsurmountable lead after two rounds with a team total of 1,067 strokes. Duke trails by 16 at 1,083 and the Tar Heels have 1,086. The final round will be played on Duke's own course.

"Smith's scores for the first two rounds will stand," Coach Kenney stated. "The rules say that changes may be made in the starting teams, so Duke will simply substitute another starter for Smith tomorrow."

Two Wake Forest golfers are deadlocked for second place in the individual standings. They are Jay Siegel and Ed Honeycutt, each with a total of 147. Rich Basset of Duke follows at 148, with Donnie Hedrick of the Deacons and Skip Tucker of Carolina at 150. Tucker has fired rounds of 79-71 to lead the Tar Heels. Abe Andes' 84-69—153 is the next lowest Carolina total.

Coach Kenney said he plans to start the same lineup tomorrow as in the first two rounds. "We'll go with Andes, Tucker, Les Fleisher, George Reams, Mike Dore, Tommy Arnold, and Harvey Hill," he said.

The Tar Heels will be host to N. C. State on Monday in their next dual match. So far, Carolina's dual match record is all even at four wins and four losses.

Carolina Faces "Must" Games On ACC Northern Road Trip

DTH baseball reporter John Montague is on the road with Coach Walt Rabb's UNC ball club this weekend. His special on-the-spot coverage of the Maryland and Virginia games will appear in the Saturday and Sunday editions of the Daily Tar Heel.

By JOHN MONTAGUE

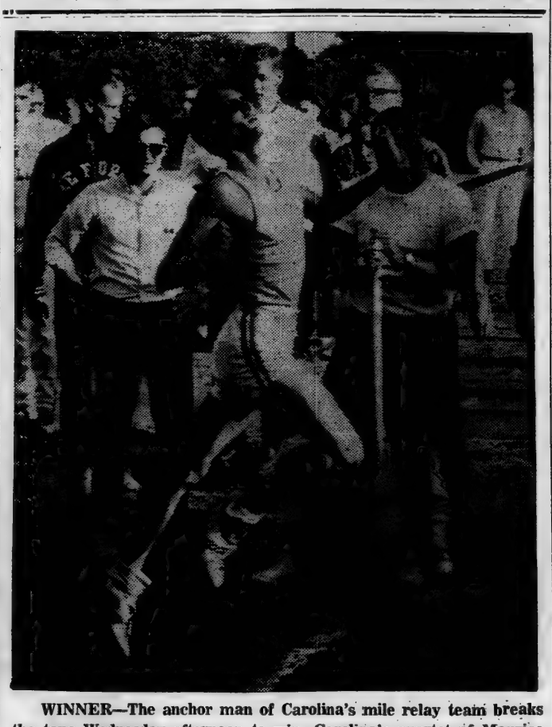
WASHINGTON, D. C. — Bill Danneman or Bill Haywood will draw the starting mound assignment today as Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels play Maryland in the first two "must" road games. Tomorrow UNC will meet Virginia at Charlottesville.

"We have to win these two if we are to remain a factor in the ACC race," Rabb said yesterday as his team arrived in the nation's capital. "We've played some bad ball recently, but luckily it was against two non-conference teams. Our good game came against Duke —and that one counted."

The Tar Heels arrived here late yesterday afternoon and planned to attend the Minnesota Twins-Washington Senators game at D. C. Stadium last night. After the game the team was to take a short bus hop to nearby College Park, Md., where they were to spend the night.

Heyward Hull and Merle Kruer, two sparkplugs in the North Carolina attack, are doubtful starters in the game with the Terps. Outfielder Hull, carrying a healthy .357 batting average, has seen very limited action in the last two weeks due to a sore throwing arm. A pinched nerve in his right shoulder has made Hull a big defensive risk, though Rabb still tries to get his big bat in the line-up occasionally.

Kruer, the first-string catcher, jammed the joint on his right forefinger while corraling a pop foul at Duke on Tuesday, and hasn't been able to throw the ball since then. He will be used strictly as a pinch-hitter this weekend.



The second-string receiver, Bernie Isgett, also ran into trouble over at Durham. The trouble came in the form of third-string catcher Bob Hundley. The two collided while shagging flies in the outfield before the game. Isgett received a gash on his chin which required seven stitches. Hundley was shaken up, but came in to catch when Kruer was hurt, and has been behind the plate since then.

"Spence Willard will be my starter against Virginia," said Rabb. "Hard work really paid off for this boy. He was wild last year, but his control this season has been outstanding. He worked a lot on his breaking pitches and he also has a sneaky fastball which keeps the batters honest. He's definitely a better than average college pitcher."

The record supports Rabb's praise. Willard, in 33 2-3 innings, has given up only six walks and has yielded only six earned runs for a sparkling 1.60 earned run average. He also has completed two of his three starts.

The Tar Heels, now 2-3 in the ACC and 11-7 overall, will leave for Charlottesville immediately following the game today, and will spend the night at UVA. They'll return to Chapel Hill tomorrow night—and they hope to bring two conference victories back with them.

SPU Speaker Says Policy Must Change

Allen Says Nations Must Find Accord

By BILL HICKS

"If we do not commit ourselves to finding and then utilizing some alternative to our present policy of deterrence, we may be placed in a situation where we have only the choice of surrender or suicide," the National Field Secretary of the Student Peace Union said Thursday night in Gerrard Hall.

"Not only is this policy of deterrence extremely dangerous," Peter Allen told a Gerrard Hall audience, "it is also failing to do what it is supposed to do."

Allen went on to point out that our foreign policy today is a no-win policy which refuses to resolve the issues involved.

"We must begin a policy which will resolve these very real issues —without ending civilization as we know it in both the Soviet Union and the U. S."

Allen, who has been speaking at colleges around the country for the past year, pointed out that the way to resolve these issues was not militarily, but economically and socially.

"Our emphasis on gaining military allies has produced situations opposed to the very thing we are fighting for. A good example is South Viet Nam, where we are supporting a dictatorship only because this guarantees our military dominance in the area—except that after ten years of "military dominance," the communists are taking over faster than ever."

Allen stressed that this attempt at military dominance was not succeeding, and was, in fact, increasing the chances of a grass-roots communist movement.

"Castro-type revolutions are taking place because the people of underdeveloped countries want plows, not missiles."

The SPU Field Secretary outlined a number of possible steps which, might lessen the present tense situation between the U. S. and the Soviets.

"One possibility might be allowing the Soviet Union to plug into our early warning system. After all, since we are not going to attack, national security won't be endangered by such a move."

Allen also praised the "hot line" between Moscow and Washington as a step in the right direction.

"People say we can't trust the Russians, and this may be true. But, if we put them in a position where they will either disarm or lose amounts of their influence, they will disarm."

"One of the most important functions of the SPU is being around when someone else gets worried about the world we are living in," Allen concluded. "Because only when a good number of people realize the danger will anything be done to alleviate that danger."

Art League To Hold Sidewalk Show Here

The University Art League yesterday announced plans for its fifth Annual Art Show, May 3-5 on East Franklin St.

The show, which will feature oils, prints, etchings and watercolors, is open to all residents of the Durham-Chapel Hill area.

The show will be held on the sidewalk and lawn area on East Franklin St., between the Vance-Pettigrew dormitory and the Methodist Church.

Entries must be turned in at the GM porch either Wednesday or Thursday, from 1-5 p.m. No late entries will be accepted.

All oils must be framed and all prints must be matted. A fee of one dollar per person will be levied, with 10 the maximum number of entries.

Show hours will be 11 a.m.-6 p.m. Friday, May 3, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday and 1-6 p.m. Sunday.

To Make Students Liable

Cheating Bill Goes Up For House Trial

By DAN DONAHUE

The Senate Committee on Higher Education will begin hearings Wednesday in Raleigh on a bill to prohibit the procurement of academic credit by fraudulent means.

Students who allegedly cheated on quizzes or exams or handed in term papers which they did not write will be liable for trial in a civil court if the state legislature okays this bill, as introduced by State Senator John Jordan of Wake County.

Under provisions of the bill persons who get someone to take an examination or write a term paper for them or who cheat on quizzes or examinations would be charged with a misdemeanor. Upon conviction, these people would be fined or imprisoned, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The second article of the bill makes it unlawful for a firm or corporation to sell or advertise the sale of term papers for students.

New York is the only state with a similar law. Violators there are subject to a fine of fifty dollars or thirty days in jail for the first offense, and two hundred and fifty dollars or six months for the second.

Text Of Jordan Bill

A bill to be entitled an Act To Prohibit The Procurement Of Academic Credit Through Fraudulent Use Of Work Other Than That Of The Student.

Section 1. Article 20 of Chapter 14 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is amended by adding a new section to read as follows:

"SS 14-118.2. Obtaining Academic Credit by Fraudulent Means. —(a) It is unlawful for any person to obtain or attempt to obtain, by fraudulent means, any academic cerdit, or any diploma, certificate or other instrument purporting to confer a literary, scientific, professional, technical or other degree in any course of study in any university, college, academy or other educational institution. The activity prohibited by this subsection includes, but is not limited to, a person's procuring, or attempting to procure, another to prepare a term paper, thesis or dissertation for the use of the procurer or a third party, and a person's procuring, or attempting to procure, another to prepare a term paper, thesis or dissertation for the use of the procurer or a third party in taking or attempting to take an examination.

"(b) It is unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to assist any student, or advertise, offer or attempt to assist any student, in obtaining or in attempting to obtain, by fraudulent means, any academic credit, or any diploma, certificate or other instrument purporting to confer any literary, scientific, professional, technical or other degree in any course of study in any university, college, academy or other educational institution. The activity prohibited by this subsection includes, but is not limited to, preparing or advertising, offering, or attempting to prepare a term paper, thesis, or dissertation for another and personating or advertising, offering or attempting to personate another in taking or attempting to take an examination.

"(c) Any person, firm, corporation or association violating any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Sec. 2. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 3. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Parents Day Set For Next Week

The 13th annual Parents' Day will be held Sunday, May 5, according to Mike Lee, chairman of this year's arrangements.

"The main purposes of Parents' Day," Lee said, "are to give the parents a rare opportunity to visit the campus, to visit student residences and to have a chance to meet members of the faculty and administration.

The Parents' Day event will be highlighted by an address by Consolidated University President William Friday in Memorial Hall at 2:30 p.m.

A spokesman for the administration said they are "especially anxious to meet and talk informally with every parent who can attend.

Alpha Phi Omega Service Fraternity and the University, co-sponsors of Parents' Day, feel that this will be the perfect opportunity to remove much of the impersonality associated with a university this size.

Between 11 and 1 p.m. parents will have an opportunity to visit in the students' dormitories, fraternities and sororities and also to look over many of the buildings on campus.

At 1 p.m. the Air Force ROTC unit will pass in review at Fetzer Field; at 1:30 there will be a faculty reception on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial; Friday's address is at 2:30; the UNC Glee Club and Woman's College Chorus will present a joint concert in Hill Hill at 3:15.

At 4, the UNC band will present a concert on the lawn. Then at 5 the faculty will hold a Tea in the Faculty Lounge at the Monogram Club.

Lee also announced that at 6 the parents are invited to any of the student supper forums held at various churches.

"Alpha Phi Omega will maintain information booths at South Building and Graham Memorial to assist the parents and visitors," Lee said.

4 Professors Honored With Tanner Prizes

Dawson, McKnight, Geer, Mackie Named

The annual Tanner Awards for excellence in teaching of undergraduate students were awarded last night to four faculty members who teach: political science, mathematics, Spanish, and history.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock presented the valued $1,000 awards each to: Raymond H. Dawson, assistant professor of political science; Ernest L. Mackie, professor of mathematics; William A. McKnight, associate professor of romance language and William M. Geer, instructor in history.

Geer is one of two UNC faculty members to have received a Tanner Award twice. He received the Award in 1957.

The Tanner Awards were established in 1955 by the Tanner family of Rutherfordton in honor of the late Lola Spencer and Simpson Bobo Tanner. The awards go to teachers who devote a portion of their time to classroom teaching of undergraduates and are "in recognition of excellence and inspirational teaching." The Tanner Awards were first presented in 1956.

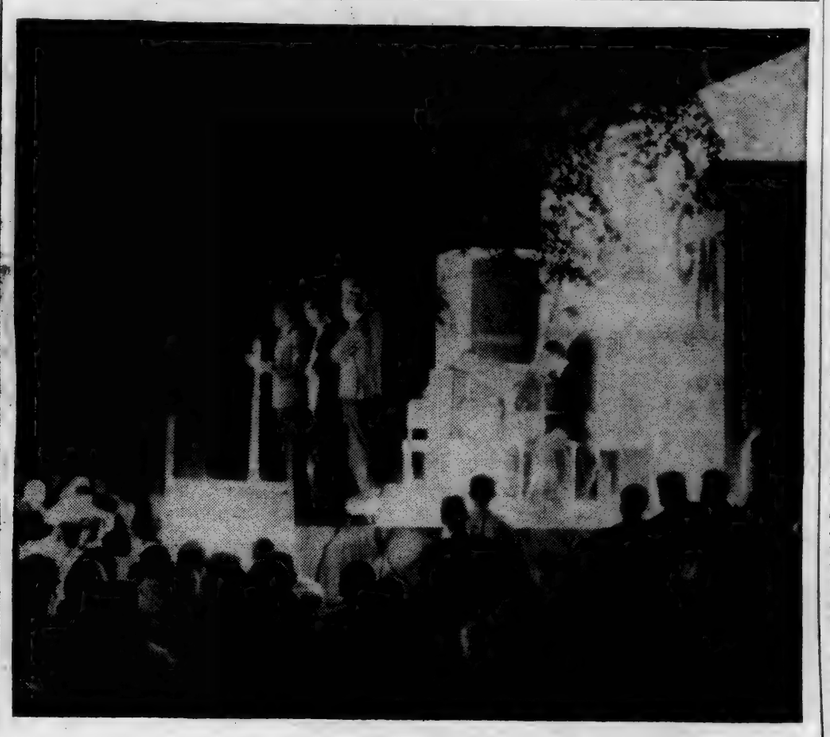
Prof. Dawson teaches the honors group in political science and is also an adviser in the General College. He also teaches a course in international relations and world politics.

Prof. Mackie teaches integrated algebra and trigonometry and calculus with analytic geometry. He is an adviser for Phi Eta Sigma, the national freshman honorary fraternity, and is a faculty officer for Phi Beta Kappa.

Prof. McKnight teaches Spanish to second and fourth year students of the Spanish Language. He also teaches a course on a survey of Spanish literature to 1700, and a survey course on Spanish Literature from 1700 to the present. He has taught beginning courses in Spanish advanced students, and is the Department of Romance Languages' coordinator for undergraduate instruction in Spanish.

Instructor Geer teaches in modern civilization in the Department of History, and is very active in student activities.

Winners of the Tanner Awards last year were Ransom Taylor of the Department of Germanic Languages, Earle Wallace of the Department of Political Science, Frank W. Ryan Jr. of the Department of History, and John Lasley Jr. of the Department of Mathematics.



Di-Phi Sympathy Given To Arabs

The Di-Phi voted Tuesday night to table a long-pending bill advocating the abolition of the UNC student government, supported the integration movement, and passed a resolution of sympathy to the displaced Arabs of Palestine.

A previous vote on reconsideration of the student government bill was declared illegal because copies presented to the body had been incorrectly written. Action to table the reconsideration was unanimous.

The Di-Phi also voted to support a boycitt of local segregated businesses by signing the society's name to a petition presented by the Student Peace Union.

Lawler Says Responsibility Must Accompany Autonomy

SL Elects Committee Members

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student body president Mike Lawler Thursday night cited several statements he had used in earlier speeches in order to reaffirm his belief that "in our assertion of autonomy there is inherent responsibility."

Lawler addressed the second session of Student Legislature and stated:

—"Will we realize that much of what we at first see as malicious intervention of the administration is, after experience and quiet thought, more truly an acute failure of the administration to understand the dynamics of student government?"

—"What we need is thought that will not sacrifice principle to expediency or efficiency, but thought that will commit itself to a student government directed of its citizens."

—"This student generation is concerned . . . about its government, not whether the principle of student self-government is valid but whether our generation will express its concern through its government in concentrated effort on the challenges this student community faces."

Block Voting

Block voting continued Thursday as Student Party members were elected to the Consolidated University Student Council and the Publications Board. Representatives named include Hugh Blackwell and Evelyn Morris to the CUSC and Martin Lancaster and Jeff Davis to the Pub. Board.

Rufus Edmisten (SP) was named SL Chaplain and Don Carson (UP) was named Parliamentarian in appointments announced Thursday by SL Speaker Bob Spearman.

Legislature will hold a special session Tuesday night to consider presidential committee chairmanship appointments, a bill concerning the SL clerk being appointed by the Speaker, and legislative appointments to the Carolina Forum, Quarterly and the Athletic Association.

Campaign Material

Individuals and political parties may be fined five dollars and twenty-five dollars, respectively for defacing University grounds and property with political campaign material if SL gives its approval to a bill introduced this week.

The bill, as introduced by Bill Straughn (SP), would amend the elections laws by not allowing posters and campaign which would result in permanent damage to property. Also, all campaign matter would be removed within 48 hours after an election. All fines would be imposed by the Elections Board.

The following Representatives were absent: Gordon Shapiro (UP, TM 2), Bill Newsome (SP, TM 4), Rufus Edmisten (SP, TM 4) and Bo Edwards (UP, TM 3).

Jubilee Swings Into Second Day

On with the Jubilee this afternoon.

A lawn concert at 2 o'clock features the UNC Men's Glee Club, the Migrants, Duke Ambassadors and Harlequins. It offers jazz, folk songs and popular music until 5.

The campus will dance tonight from 9 until 1 to the rhythms of five combos:

"The Kajums"—Hill Hall Parking Lot.

Lee Farrell's "Trojans"—Graham Memorial Front.

"The Checkmates"—Steele Hall Parking Lot.

"The Delmonicos" — Y-Court, and

"The Catalinas"—Morehead Parking Lot.

The "Buccaneer," starring Yul Brynner and Charlton Heston, is tonight's Free Flick at 6:30 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall.

"Free" is a rare word, but the Jubilee is yours. Just bring your foam cushions for the concerts and your fun dates for a jubilee of a day.

Vance Named Award Winner

Rupert B. Vance, Kenan Professor of Sociology, received yesterday the University's Thomas Jefferson Award for 1963.

The award is presented annually to the UNC faculty member "whose life and work is in the best tradition and spiirt of Thomas Jefferson."

The Robert Earl McConnell Foundation of New York City and Hobe Sound, Fla. gave $10,000 in 1961, with the income to be used for the annual award.

World News In Brief

Khrushy Promises Free Laos Attempt

MOSCOW (UPI) — Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev responded to a personal plea from President Kennedy Friday and promised to keep working for an independent and neutral Laos.

The President's message was handed to the premier by U. S. troubleshooter W. Averell Harriman at a three and a half hour meeting in the Kremlin.

A tersely-worded joint statement issued afterward declared both governments "fully support the Geneva agreements on the Laotian question about which there was an exchange of views between them in Vienna and a mutual understanding reached."

The full import of the statement could not be determined immediately, however. It said nothing about whether Moscow would take an active part in trying to stop the fighting in Laos.

Harriman, who also met with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko for 2 hours and 40 minutes, declined to discuss his talk with reporters.

'No Meddling'

ATLANTA (UPI)—U. S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy assured Georgia Gov. Carl E. Sanders Friday that the federal government has no desire to meddle in local racial problems.

Sanders said in a statement that he and the attorney general had agreed Georgia has "demonstrated the ability to handle our own affairs in our own ways.

"The attorney general recognizes this as I do and he assured us that as long as Georgia continued to demonstrate the leadership necessary to solve its own problems, we need never expect any problem from the federal government," Sanders said.

Civil War Threat

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — Pro-Communist Pathet Lao troops Friday were reported fighting right-wing forces in southern Laos and the neutralists in the northeastern Plain of Jars, threatening this Southeast Asian nation with a full-scale civil war.

Fighting broke out Thursday night and Friday between the Pathet Lao and neutralists at four places in the strategic Plain of Jars.

A defense ministry spokesman reported that the Pathet Lao launched an attack Thursday night against the rightist outpost of Ban Vong Boua La in southern Savannakhet province. He gave no details but stressed it was "an attack — not a skirmish."

Rusk Plans Trip

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk announced Friday he will visit two leading neutralist powers, Yugoslavia and India, after a plane-hopping tour of U. S. allies in the Middle East.

Rusk and President Kennedy discussed major issues involved a few hours before his scheduled departure by air for Ankara, Turkey, his first stop.

The primary purpose of Rusk's trip is to attend a meeting of the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) in Karachi, Pakistan, April 30-May 1, but the stop-over to see Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Yugoslav President Tito have taken on added significance in the light of recent developments.

Raid Reported

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A free-lance reporter — photographer in Washington and Cuban exiles in Miami Friday reported a bombing raid Thursday night against Cuban oil refineries on the outskirts of Havana. There was no official confirmation.

Cuban Premier Fidel Castro was silent and the U. S. State Department expressed skepticism over the claimed attack. The department said Castro's radio would have been "the first voice to shrill the air" if such an attack had occurred.

College Bowl Ends First Season Run

The Junior Class College Bowl was forced to close last Sunday due to lack of time, according to Junior Class Vice-President Woody Harrison.

Present champions are the "Know Nothings" (Walter Dellinger, Henry Mayer, Mickey Simmons and Bob Spearman). They defeated Pi Lambda Phi, Tau Epsilon Phi, Delta Upsilon fraternities and Ruffin and Joyner dorms, after coming from behind to win their first match.

The "Know Nothings" will be unable to meet the challenge of Zeta Beta Tau, Mangum and Avery dorms.

Harrison said that he hoped that the Bowl will continue to be as successful as it was this year. He expressed a special note of thanks to Dr. John Clayton, moderator for the Bowl, and to Tracy Spencer, Pat Peden, Sherry Rottman, Bob Ross, Chris Fink and Emily Klyce for their help in the program.

NCS Name Is Only Obstacle To Education Bill

RALEIGH — The Higher Education Bill received another setback yesterday when the Senate refused to concur with the House on the House's proposed new name for N. C. State College.

As reported in Thursday's DTH, the bill will now be referred to "conference committee action." Senate President Clarence Stone said yesterday that the committee, composed of members from both houses, will be named in a few days.

Currentiy, the Education Bill has no other major obstacles to be resolved except the name chane controversy.

The Senate last week passed the Higher Education Bill after defeating, 34-12, proposed amendment to rename State College, "North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina." The Senate's choice of names was "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

The same amendment that was defeated in the Senate was then presented in the House and passed 64-48.

As the Senate had originally proposed the bill, it was then sent back to them to see whether they would agree to the House's amendment. They failed to do so and now a stalemate is predicted when the conference committee meets to resolve the name-change fight.

The conference committee will be composed of five members from the House and five from the Senate. The five members from each house will vote as unit; that is, the House will have one vote and the Senate will have one vote.

Since the two houses will probably send members representing the majority point of view, the bill may again reach an impasse.

Then what?

According to UPI, Rep. Gordon Greenwood of Buncombe took significant action on this very point in the face of loud opposition Thursday. The House and Senate bills were identical when reported out of the higher education committees, so the House acted only on the Senate-passed version.

A News Analysis

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Greenwood, House higher education chairman, moved Thursday that the bill be kept alive for future consideration. The House still cannot reconsider the bill as it is, since a vote has already been taken on it—and against the original name-change provision.

But the name change occupies one phase in a 53-page bill which would set up the machinery for a new statewide system of community colleges and bring junior colleges at Asheville, Charlotte and Wilmington into the state system as four-year schools.

After a lively hassle on the floor, and in the corridor just outside the chamber, Rep. George Uzzell of Rowan explained cooly that Greenwood's motion was not a maneuver to get the upper hand on opponents of the original proposal to rename State College. Uzzell even used an example of what a useful purpose this move would serve in the event a conference committee reaches a stalemate.

He said the original House bill, if re-referred to the higher education committee following Greenwood's motion, could be rewritten and come up again for a vote in the House. He said the committee might merely delete the entire section dealing with universities . . .

Herein may lie the end result of the name-change squabble. State College & Woman's College would remain as they are with no change in name, function or status; while the community college program could be started and three junior colleges could expect state support and four-year status.

One Great Big Moral

It is simply this: Closed meetings make great rumor-mills.

Time and again this has been proved — from the halls of Congress through local School Board meetings and on down to just such a meeting as last Tuesday's.

Already several conflicting reports have come out of the meeting, charging this, that and the other thing. None of us who was not at the meeting can be sure of who is right and who isn't.

Had reporters been present, this would not have happened. We understand Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson is the one who decided the meeting would be closed. Undoubtedly he felt this would facilitate a free exchange of viewpoints, and perhaps it did.

But we — the rest of the campus — are still in the dark about what specifically was said by whom and to whom. We are therefore in the position of having to make judgments on the basis of hearsay evidence.

We bristled when we first learned the meeting would be closed, fearing that what has happened, would happen. But we held our peace, thinking that our protest might serve only to further confuse matters.

Now we know we were wrong in not doing more than asking if our reporters would be allowed to attend the meeting. We will try not to make the same mistake again.

We hope Dean Henderson — and anyone else in the position of having to decide if an important meeting will be open to reporters or not — joins us in this resolve.

A place that preaches democracy must practice it or the lesson is largely lost. And secrecy has little place in a democracy.

Unwanted Phippancy

This paper recently took Representative L. J. Phipps to task for what we felt to be good and just causes. Now Rep. Phipps shows us that he is on occasion able to display good judgment. He voted (unfortunately with the minority) against killing the compromise bill to rename Cow College, "North Carolina State, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh".

This was the name decided on by the Carlyle Commission and university trustees, and previously agreed on by all parties — including the irascible N. C. State Alumni Association.

We admit that it's a cumbersome name, but this fool flap has gone on so long that any agreement looks good now.

Well, as we said, Representative Phipps voted against killing the billl after it had passed the Senate, and we're glad. But if Mr. Phipps did this in an effort to curry favor with the Daily Tar Heel, hoping for future good publicity, he's Phipped his lid.

You see, to our knowledge, he has not withdrawn the name of Representative Kerr from nomination for a seat on the Board of Trustees of the University. Representative Kerr has yet to give any evidence of being able, willing or worthy of holding the post after losing it for failure to attend a board meeting for two successive years.

Representative Kerr also was one of three house members voting against the Higher Education Omnibus Bill, voicing an objection to the community colleges program.

This is hardly the type of enlightened man we need sitting on the Board of Trustees. And Rep. Phipps nominated him for the position because he was an old college buddy.

Man, that's leadership.

Senseless?

The murder of Baltimore postman William L. Moore on an Alabama roadside cannot be explained by protesting that he used bad judgment in carrying his solo crusade into a hotbed of racialism.

To kill a man is bad enough. To kill him for passively carrying out his convictions on human rights is the height of barbarism.

Moore did not use the discretion practiced by the average man. But he was far from being an average man. He was driven mentally and physically to crusade for individual rights as he saw them.

The former mental patient was killed by ignorance. He was killed by hatred. He was killed by fear. He was killed by a combination of factors comprising a far more serious mental illness than the schizophrenia for which he himself once was treated.

A senseless martyrdom? It will remain for history to say what effect Bill Moore's killing will have on the conscience of the South and the country.

"The white man," Moore had written in a letter he planned to deliver to Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, "cannot truly free himself until all men have their rights. Each is dependent upon the other. Do not go down in infamy as one who fought the democracy for all which you have not the power to prevent. Be gracious. Give more than is immediately demanded of you." Deranged? Foolhardy? Maybe Bill Moore was a little of both. But he gave all that he could give in answer to the demands made by his conscience.

Tchaikovsky Enthusiasts Can Be Glad

By JOHN MEDLIN

Record review: Tchaikovsky, Smyphony No. 7 in E-Flat major. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Columbia ML 5749.

Tchaikovsky enthusiasts who are startled by the title of this symphony will be reassured to know that the composer never knew it as such. As recorded by Columbia, the work is a reconstruction by the contemporary Russian composer, Semyon Bogatyryev, from original notes and other sources. Tchaikovsky himself had abandoned work on the symphony, which would have followed his fifth.

As a whole, the symphony has a boisterous, pastoral nature. Its major key sets it apart from all but the little-known third of the other six, "orthodox" symphonies, and occasional phrases and harmonies seem too modern to be true Tchaikovsky. But the symphony also bears the Tchaikovsky trademarks of emotional intensity, crashing climaxes, and soaring lyricism. Closest to the composer in spirit is the lazy second movement, a nostalgic dialogue between woodwinds and strings. This andante movement is set between an exuberant first movement, and a wild, elfin scherzo. The last movement is the weakest, as it seems somewhat disorganized, and even chaotic at the climax. It is saved by a charming miniature march which returns at the finale with full-orchestra fireworks, accompanied by an insistently military snare drum.

Made up as it is from fragmentary notes and scattered sources, the "seventh symphony" cannot justifiably be compared to the other six. Too much of it is Bogatyryev's, and it should be announced more as a work apart, perhaps credited to "Tchaikovsky-Bogatyryev," rather than as an integral part of the Tchaikovsky canon.

Way Of Living

THE PRINCIPLES upon which Carolina student government is based are a way of living. As the creed of University life it stands for the individual assumption of an active policy of honesty and fairness, of gentlemanly conduct. So keenly is this spirit felt that it has become a social as well as personal responsibility. We Carolina students have pledged never to lower our standard of honor, and we have set up from among our number a Student Council to whom we send those who do not respect our self-imposed code of life.

To think and act the truth is the heart of our way of life. The Honor Principle states: A student is on his honor not to lie, cheat, or steal. This is a personal, living principle that we strive to live, and its practice is its own reward.

A second self-imposed and self-maintained standard in our University life is the Campus Code. Simply stated it is; A student is on his honor always to conduct himself as a gentleman. Listing no offences, it leaves its interpretation broadly to the student and relies upon Carolina's long-standing traditions to mark the channel.

The Honor System can be, and is, easily perverted in the minds of many people. The idea that reporting an offender is spying and tattling is a relic of childhood, when to an external authority when reporting to a external authority was to "break faith with the gang." Here at Carolina the "authority" is self-imposed. We report to an internal authority, to fellows whom we elect to do our bidding. With this change of circumstances, not to report is to "break faith with the gang" in a larger and more important sense. We accept the fact that we have entered a new life in a self-determining democratic society where we have responsiblities both to ourselves and to our fellow men. TO RETAIN THE FREEDOM WHICH WE NOW KNOW ON THIS CAMPUS, TO HELP OURSELVES AND OUR FELLOWS LEARN AND LIVE HONESTLY, TO MAINTAIN OUR SELF-IMPOSED STANDARDS, WE MUST AT ALL TIMES ACT PROMPTLY TO PREVENT AND CORRECT VIOLATIONS OF THIS TRUST.

Big N. C. Political Question Is Who Next Governor Will Be

By DAN THAYOR

North Carolina politics is oft a strange and unpredictable thing. No wonder, then, that so many people are having so much fun trying to predict who the next governor will be.

One thing seems certain: The youthful brain trust which played such a dominant role in the Terry Sanford campaign—much of it nurtured at the University of North Carolina—will not be quite so successful in helping to pick his successor.

This is based on the premise that Bert Bennett will not be the next man in the mansion despite the fact he is conceded to be a leading Democratic contender at the moment.

Numerous of the state's leading newspapers and others in the political know already have begun to mention the names of likely candidates for the Democratic nomination in 1964. Generally, they are in agreement on such names as Bennett, Dr. I Beverly Lake, Dr. Henry Jordan and Woodrow Jones.

More recently, the name of Judge Dan K. Moore, who sits on the Superior Court bench in Western North Carolina, has come down out of the mountains where the most influential citizenry already have started calling him "governor."

No final judgment about the next Democratic can be made, but some explanation of the men and politics involved may be helpful.

The premise that Bennett will not be the candidate has a broad base. Important among the reasons is his connection with Sanford, a fact which some credit on the asset side of his political balnce sheet.

But tht connection appears from here to be a liability. It must be remembered that Dr. Lake, a latecomer to the 1960 primary who had two strikes against him even before he threw in his hat, came prettty near upsetting the Sanford machine in only several weeks of vigorous campaigning.

And then came the general election, pitting a lawyer from Sanford named Robert Gavin against the Democratic nominee. Many Republicans felt that a tortoise could have run better than their man — but again the Sanford tide was almost turned.

The disenchantment with the Sanford program caused a vigorous "Democrats-for-Gavin" program in the grassroots throughout the state. There is reason to believe that a Sanford man running on a Sanford plan in 1964 would revive the opposition from registered Democrats and probably induce increased energy on the part of the disgruntled party members.

This is particularly true if Rep. Charlie Jonas accepts the GOP nomination for governor in 1964 and faces the Democratic nominee in general election. He could count on all the Republican vote (far more than registration shows) and collect the support of many Democrats who are beginning to wonder whether one-party North Carolina is a pie-in-the-sky after all.

Jonas or any other Republican candidate would have a far better chance at the polls against Bennett than any other Democratic candidate. This is conceded by many leading Democrats — and it may cause a compromise in the nomination.

In fact, some old line party members so dislike Sanford's 1960 campaign manager that they wanted him to run against Sen. Sam J. Ervin in the Tar Heel senatorial race two years ago. If there's any way to get rid of Bennett for good, they concluded, it's to run him against Ervin for the Senate.

Conditions now seem to call for compromise within the Democratic Party if it is to win in 1964. And assuming that the Sanford element prefers compromise to defeat, it is probable that someone besides Bennett will be on the ticket. Who will it be?

Dr. Lake is running strong. He never, of course, will get the Sanford support for the primary—but he may not need it. He would count on the vote he garnered in two primaries in 1960 and would no doubt pick up a little support from those disgruntled with the Sanford program. The conservative Democrats who would vote for Jonas in November anyway would probably throw a lot of votes toward Lake in the primary.

Lake would lose the faithful machine vote (whatever that is), the Negro vote, and the vote of other moderates in the integration dispute. He could expect his own views on that point to pick up some support, however.

His best show would be in the general election, because the Democratic machine vote which could oppose him in the primary would have to support him in November.

Dr. Jordan, as others have noted, would make a poor campaigner in public appearances and on television. The best facts in his favor are his ties with the party organization, his non-association with any particular faction and his proven abilities in organization —a talent displayed in conducting his brother's campaign for the Senate in 1960. But he is not a man whose name is widely known in grassroots circles, and he does not reflect the youthful image which may be important in the next gubernatorial race. Beside Jonas, himself not a young man, Dr. Jordan may look old and tired. This could have a big influence on the voting public.

Although the name of Woodrow Jones is heard often in test-balloon talk, he does not appear to be as serious a contender at this stage as do Bennett, Lake and Jordan. He appeals to much of the conservative element, and his nose is clean of recent North Carolina controversy. But beyond that he doesn't seem to be an important threat.

The man to watch at this stage—and until he denies he is a candidate — is Judge Moore. The west is said to be teeming with ambition to put him on the ballot for governor.

In fact, they say he already could carry the west — and that all it would take to win the support of the east would be a tour through the low-lands where his ability and charm would solidify Democrats for miles around.

Moore, like Jordan and Jones, is unscathed by party fights, and unlike Lake bears no stigma that would mark him before the primary.

It's true that his is not a well-known name except in the west. But his supporters believe this could be quickly overcome. He also has a quality of relative youth which would appeal to the public.

With the governor's race undecided, there is even less assurance about the contest for lieutenant governor. There seems to be little impressive timber in the legislature although that is where the No. 2 man will probably come from.

The smart thing for the GOP to do is to back the strongest contender on the Democratic side—for if that happens the Democrats are sure to kill him before he gets out of committee.

Muslim Preached Same Thing Byrd Has Been Saying

By FRED SEELY

By now, everyone has been thoroughly saturated with Malcolm X and the Muslims.

Thanks to the Carolina Forum, we recently have had an opportunity to see this outfit first-hand, and, as is the wont of Carolina students, we have attempted to hash it out through the various media available.

Malcolm, or X, or whatever he is called, proved to be a suave, educated gentleman highly skilled in evasive speaking.

He spoke long and eloquently of the Nation of Islam and its black prophet, the Honorable Elijah Muhammed, a venerable seer.

But, unlike the departure of William F. Buckley and Norman Thomas, Carolina was left in a state of bewilderment at Malcolm5s exodus. An attempt was made to apply the Carolina Syllogism to him (Speaker A is controversial; we should raise hell about controversial speakers: therefore, we should raise hell about Speaker A).

It failed.

Nobody knew exactly what to think except Clyde Wilson, and nobody understands him, so a great void existed.

The conservatives came to the lecture expecting a fight, and left amazed. Why, that black man had said just about what ol' Harry Byrd has been saying for years! Of course, this black supremacy bit. . . .

Along came the liberals. The man they heard speak was black and, as all men are created equal, they figured on a pleasant evening with a good fight with the conservatives later. But what's this? Black and white not equal? Heresy!

And then came the NAACP, which has enough trouble these days trying to find a place to picket without stumbling over the Student Peace Union. The Muslims pose a definite threat to the integrationists, as Elijah's stand grows stronger with every setback to civil rights legislation.

"The government must remove (the conditions imposed by segregation) or such groups as this will continue to flourish," comments Dr. Martin Luther King, the NAACP Oracle.

The future of the Muslims?

It's difficult to say. If people remember Marcus Garvey and the Liberian fiasco, if people remember the Temple of Nobel Drew Ali, if people realize the absurdity of some of the Muslim arguments, then they will fail.

But to the Negro laborer who earns $30.60 a week working for the county and tries to support a family on that salary, the lure of a black Paradise is as strong as a siren's song.

So, hopefully, the Muslims will fade out for a while. Everyone has had a great time wondering what to think of them, and now, perhaps, the Carolina students can seek new horizons.

Au revoir, Malcolm X.

(Chester Bowles, ambassador-designate to India, will speak at Memorial Hall on Monday, April 29, at 8 p.m. The liberals will be there to cheer, the conservatives will be there to jeer and everyone will return to his own little pigeonhole. Welcome to Carolina, Chester. Have fun.)

Nations Fleeced

The Soviet Union fleeced its East European satellites of more than $6 billion between 1955 and 1961 through unfair price discrimination.

West European countries in that period paid less for imports from Russia and received more for their exports to it than did the Soviet bloc countries.

Instead of giving $6 billion in aid to the satellites in those six years, as it had claimed, the Soviet Union actually took $5 billion from them, mostly through price-rigging.

Peace Corps Exam Given In Durham

UNC students available for summer training programs for Peace Corps service in 44 countries may take the Saturday, April 27, placement test at 8:30 a.m., in the Durham Post Office Building.

Peace Corps Director Sargent Shriver reminded students that there are 4,000 new opportunities in the Peace Corps, with training slated to begin in June, July and August. In order to process questionnaires and place candidates in these projects, the Peace Corps should have questionnaires and test results as soon as possible.

Applicants who have not already submitted a questionnaire to the Peace Corps must bring one to the test site. Questionnaires are available from the campus Peace Corps liaison officer, Miss Anne Queen, in the Y Building.

OLD BOOK NEWS

During the next week, we expect to bring down a flock of lively books for the treasure-hunter. Just bought in, these are a collection of recent books, mostly non-fiction, and mostly in top-notch condition.

You'll find them on the 97c shelf, and the under-five-dollar shelf, and we think you'll like them.

The Feature Case, starting Monday, will be filled with North Carolina Booklets, which, in case you don't know, are filled with historical and geneological material. So if you have an aunt who is given to ancestor worship, she'll thank you for telling her that now is the time and all that.

Come treasure-hunting, won't you?

USIA Recruiter Here Tuesday

A representative of the United States Information Agency will be on campus Tuesday, April 30, to discuss Foreign Service careers and general employment opportunities with the U.S.I.A. and to publicize the Career Foreign Service examination to be given next September.

Two group meetings will be held for interested students at 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. in 208 Gardner Hall. Students in broadcasting will meet in the RTVMP department at 12.

Positions open in the U.S.I.A. are for public affairs officers, cultural affairs officers, information officers, writers, editors, broadcasters, telecasters, librarians, motion picture specialists and educational exchange officers.

Also on Tuesday Major Arnold E. Tyndall of the U. S. Army Medical Corps will speak to students to publicize the direct appointment program for all areas of the Army Medical Corps.

There will be two group meetings at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. in 208 Gardner Hall.

Positions are open at all degree levels for science majors, many liberal arts majors, business administration majors, and majors in social work, public health and sanitary engineering.

Individual job interviews will be held on Wednesday, May 1, by E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc. and on Thursday, May 2, by Ditto, Inc., a subsidary of Bell & Howell Co., and by the Boy Scouts of America.

Student Gets Probation For Book Thefts

"I'm sorry about the books but I needed them in my studies."

Garrett Weaver, 20, a student at North Carolina College in Durham, told this to Recorder's Court Judge William S. Stewart after receiving 12 months probation for illegally removing books from Chapel Hill and University libraries last week.

In answer to his plea of nolo contendere, the court said it gave a light penalty because of this being his first offense and because of the character witnesses of two ministers.

Most of the items Weaver was charged with taking were returned, according to Detective Howard R. Pendergraph.

These included $70 worth of books and a $30 raincoat from the University Library and $54 worth of books from the Chapel Hill Public Library.

Another man, Dean Harris, 20, of Baltimore, Md., received 6 months on the roads for larceny.

Harris was charged with theft of a portable radio and a gun. He also admitted ransacking six cars near Spencer Dorm Sunday, according to Detective Pendergraph. He stole nothing from the cars, however.

Florida Legislator Blasts College For 'Un-Americanism'

By FRED SEELY

Florida state senator Charley E. Johns has denounced the University of South Florida on charges of softtoward communism, anti-Christian attitudes and use of obscene literature.

The senator, former acting governor and now chairman of a committee set up to review accusations against the University of South Florida, urged the state legislature to "clean up a bad situation." Assisted by Mark Hawes of St. Petersburg, attorney for the committee, Johns blasted USF president John S. Allen in a two-hour-long harangue.

Two cases of softness toward communism were cited. Allen was accused of inviting Dr. Jerome Davis to speak at the campus, though Allen knew he was accused of being a member of 76 Communist front organizations. In addition, Allen was charged with describing Dr. Davis "falsely" in a news release, saying that he was a doctor of divinity from Yale University, a post he had not held for several years.

Hawes said that Allen had hired Dr. D. F. Fleming to teach courses in political science, American government and American foreign relations. He added that the committee was disturbed because Fleming was the author of a book which blamed the United States for World Wars I and II and the cold war.

Pressure upon Allen at the time caused him to withdraw the invitations to Dr. Davis and Dr. Fleming.

Hawes claimed that it was shown conclusively that a large number of teachers at USF "questioned the validity of orthodox religions."

Students were told that to interpret the Bible literally was "unsophisticated, superstitious and . . . unreasonable in the light of new facts."

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

We designed two new cars—and built a lot of our record-setting Avanti into them: supercharged R2 engines... heavy duty springs and shock absorbers, plus anti-sway bars, front and rear ...trac rods, rear...facing type disc brakes, the safest known and ours alone.

We named them R2 Super Lark and R2 Super Hawk and had Andy Granatelli take them out to the infamous Bonneville Salt Flats for final performance and endurance tests.

We could scarcely believe the results, but the official U.S. Auto Club timers confirmed them: R2 Super Lark—132 mph! R2 Super Hawk—140 mph! Two-way averages—under the most punishing weather and surface conditions. That kind of performance, combined with their gentle 'round-town manners, told us these cars were ready. R2 Super Lark and R2 Super Hawk are now available on special order at your Studebaker dealer's.

Ken Boykin's Clutch Hit Drops Maryland, 3-1

Bill Haywood Gains 4th Win In Tense 12-Inning Struggle

By JOHN MONTAGUE

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — Pinch-hitter Ken Boykin drilled a two-run single to center in the twelfth inning here yesterday to give North Carolina a tense and thrilling 3-1 victory over Maryland.

The Tar Heels, with Bill Haywood pitching brilliantly in relief of Bill Dannemann, went 1-1 with the Terps from the seventh inning on before Boykin delivered his game-winning shot. The hit, which came with the bases filled, scored Dick Prindle and Buddy Tilden and handed a third defeat to Jack Lund.

UNC, down 0-1, scored its first run in the seventh when third-baseman Tom Wright hit a sinking liner which right-fielder Bo Johnson misjcdged into a triple. Wright scored when Maryland's Bob Smith booted Bill Taylor's chopper to third.

Maryland took its only lead of the ball game with an unearned run in the fifth. With Dannemann on the mound for UNC, the Terps' Tom Moss hit a sharp bounder to Jim Speight. But the shortstop could not find the handle, and it went for a two-base error.

Dick Brueckner then singled to center with Moss stopping at third. But Dannemann's wild pitch to G. R. Harmeyer produced the run anyway, Moss scoring easily.

Haywood relieved young Dannemann to start the sixth and pitched seven innings of two-hit shutout ball. His only problem was in the 11th when Charlie Hannigan singled and stole second. But the ace right-hander struck out Johnson to end the inning.

Coach Walt Rabb plans to start Spence Willard today against Virginia as the Tar Heels go after ACC win number four. They have lost three in the conference.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

THE SIX NATIONS tribes of the Iroquois Indian Federation first started it even before Columbus landed at San Salvador in 1492. Pontiac used it as a training measure for war in upper New York State and lower Ontario until about 1840. Then, some French settlers — Cartier, de Frontenac, de Champlain and their boys — sailed down the St. Lawrence and called it "Baggataway".

It has been talked of as the national summer sport of Canada, the oldest organized competitive sport in America and "the fastest game on two feet." And it comes to the University of North Carolina this Spring of 1963 asking to be recognized as a varsity sport.

This is lacrosse, and, now having seen it and having become enthralled by it, I must ask that its request be fulfilled.

When 75 guys report out the first day, this is interest. When you go 2-2 (so far) with both losses coming in overtime, this is a successful season. There seems to be nothing left in the way of lacrosse. But there is.

Conrad J. Steele Jr. is the name of the man who deserves the most credit for the resurgence of this game on the campus. His physical appearance is somewhat of a cross between Clark Kent and Dennis the Menace and he looks like he could do eight 50-mile hikes in one day and still come up playing handball.

But he'd rather coach lacrosse than go on a hike. And it isn't because he knows more about one than about the other, either. In fact, he knows nothing about lacrosse. At least he didn't when he first volunteered to coach these kids who had played the game most of their walking lives. But he took it on as a challenge and now he loves it.

To Play It, You Must Love It

"I WAS TREMENDOUSLY pleased at the interest shown this season," Connie Steele says. "Out of about 75 who first turned out, 35 are still around, playing not for varsity, glory, not for letters, but for their own personal satisfaction and love of the game."

This is fine and good. And, if you've ever seen lacrosse, you know the guy is giving it to you straight. Because nobody in his right mind would play this game unless he loved it — I mean really, really loved it. Sometimes it looks like football. Sometimes it looks like hockey. But all the time it looks like a street fight, and I'm glad all I have to do is watch it.

Steele's record (2-2) is nothing to drink to, but, in light of the circumstances, it is a successful one.

You say one of the wins was against a freshman team, and I, along with Connie Steele, say bull. In the first place, a good deal of UNC's starters are freshmen. They play along with upperclassmen and even grad students. But the Duke team that came over here labeled supposedly as a "freshman" group also had upperclassmen in it.

"It is my understanding the Duke team we played had some upperclassmen. I have seen both Duke teams (its supposed "varsity" and "freshman" teams) and the one we played is the better of the two. It is my impression that the Duke "varsity" does not want to play us."

This is Connie Steele again. And the "varsity" he refers to is the same team that was smashed by touring Amherst 14-4. UNC lost to Amherst in overtime, 10-7.

Is this a mark in the favor of varsity status? I think so.

Cup Might Have Been Ours

THE CARMICHAEL CUP is awarded each year to the ACC school most proficient in all varsity games. Its points are distributed each season in each sport on an 8-7-6 basis according to a school's spot in the final standings.

UNC finished third last year behind Duke and Maryland — with 67 1/2 points to Maryland's 72. A lacrosse team with a varsity label would have automatically (since there are currently only three ACC lacrosse teams, Duke and Maryland included) given us five points and the Carmichael Cup.

Is this a mark in the favor of varsity status? I think so.

Connie Steele, perhaps with a gun at his back, perhaps not, says he's gotten everything from the athletic department he's ever asked for. He says he's had even more support than he's needed. He says Chuck Erickson and Walt Rabb have gone out of their way to help the boys — AS A CLUB.

Fine. But what about varsity status? As mentioned above, there are still some problems.

A varsity sport means increased schedules. It means away games. It means more equipment. It means more maintenance of this equipment. It means a freshman coach. In short, it means more money.

This is a problem I can and do talk about easily. It is a problem Connie Steele can, but does not, talk about easily. And we can talk about it easily because we do not have to face it.

The men who do have to face it — Chuck Erickson and Vernon Crook — are watching and waiting. If their pocketbooks can allow it, it will be. If their pocketbooks say no, we will have to wait some more. I hope we won't have to wait.

TODAY AT 3 on Navy Field the lacrosse club plays Washington and Lee in a final home appearance this season. Any and all support is wanted, needed and appreciated. It is also deserved. And while you're down there, keep an eye out for number 69. His name is Jeff Parker, and he is a good one.

Rod And Gun Meet Here Next Tuesday

The Seventh Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet will be held April 30, at UNC in connection with Big Four Sports Day.

Target rifle, archery, bait casting, and trap shooting will test the skills of students from Carolina, Duke, State, and Wake Forest.

Since its inception in 1957 N. C. State has held part or all of the championships four times. State won in 1958 and 1960. State and UNC tied in 1958 and in 1960, and UNC won in 1959. Wake Forest won in 1961.

The meet is held in connection with the Big Four Sports Day, but is scored separately. Team scoring will be 5, 3, 2, 1 for the top four places in each event.

All students are eligible to participate except members of ROTC and varsity teams who cannot take part in target rifle competition.

Starting time for all events is 2 p.m.

Trap shooting will take place at the American Legion hut, but all other events will be on the UNC campus.

Archery competition will be on the Navy field archery range. Each archer will shoot 12 arrows from 20, 30, and 40 yards with a possible score of 324 points.

Bait casting (skish) will be at the outdoor pool behind Woollen Gym. Entries will cast twice at each of five loops in the pool to complete one round. The highest possible score for four rounds is 200 points.

Target rifle competition will be at the AFROTC rifle range by Emerson Field. Each contestant will shoot 10 shots prone and 10 shots standing from 50 feet.

An entry fee of 50 cents will be charged to cover the cost of the ammunition. Special safety rules will be enforced by the Marine and Air Force Sargeants in charge.

Though the Intramural softball season is far from over, 17 of the 34 berths in the Fraternity Blue and Dormitory divisions' playoffs have already been claimed.

Chi Psi, DKE, Phi Delt, SAE, ATO, Sigma Nu, Phi Gam, Kappa Sig, Delta Sig, and Lambda Chi Alpha have all clinched at least second place positions in their respective leagues.

Track Team, Lacrosse Club Are At Home

North Carolina's track and lacrosse teams hold the home fort this Jubilee weekend as all other UNC teams are on the road for away contests.

The cindermen of coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton host Virginia this afternoon on Fetzer Field while just about 100 yards away the lacrosse team faces Washington and Lee.

For Carolina, 3-1 in dual meet action this season, the track contest will be actually the third in four days. The cindermen beat both South Carolina and Wake Forest in a "triangular dual meet" just Wednesday.

Coach Connie Steele's stickmen are out after after win number three in their final home appearance today. The team has beaten Randolph Macon and the Duke "freshmen" while losing two overtime matches to Amherst and the Virginia "frosh."

USC Wins Six Games

Netters Fry Chickens Alive

COLUMBIA, S. C.—North Carolina captured its second shutout in a row and seventh of the year by crushing a helpless South Carolina tennis team, 9-0, here yesterday.

The victory extended Carolina's record to 14-1 over-all and 4-0 in the conference.

The Gamecock netters managed to win only six games altogether, despite the fact that UNC played without the services of Charlie Shaffer and Keith Stoneman in the singles. Shaffer was held out because he couldn't find any tape for his groin injury, and Stoneman was bothered by his back.

Both should return to action today when the Tar Heels meet Clemson on the Tiger Courts. Clemson is expected to offer UNC its toughest ACC match.

Former Grid Star Talks On Physics

Dr. Edward George Bilpuch, a member of the renowned 1949 UNC football team, will speak Wednesday, May 1 at 4 p.m. in Phillips Hall. His topic is not going to be on football or the Athletic Program as one might expect, but physics.

Since he was graduated from Carolina in 1956 with a Ph.D. in physics, his time has been devoted mainly to research in the field of physics. He joined the faculty at Duke University and is now serving as Assistant Director of the Duke Nuclear Structure Laboratory and Assistant Professor of Physics.

Dr. Bilpuch is a native of Connelsville, Pa., and he attended Germantownship High School in McClellentown, Pa. Following his graduation from there he served in the U. S. Navy as a radar technician. He then entered the University on an athletic scholarship and played football throughout the "Justice Era" at Carolina.

In 1951 he obtained a B.S. Degree from UNC and the fall of that year was among the first group of Morehead Scholars. The scholarships were given then for graduate and professional study, but they were later changed and are now given to entering freshmen.

In his junior year, 1949, as a member of the Tarheel football team, he played defensive end. He played along side other stars as Art Weiner and Ken Powell. Another member of the team that year that many people remember was Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice.

The Tarheels that year finished with a 7-3 record and earned a trip to the Cotton Bowl on New Year's Day. They were defeated by Rice, 27-13.

"We thought we were ready for that game but I guess we weren't," Bilpuch recalls.

Although most of his time is devoted to his physics research he still finds time to enjoy the football and basketball games.

"I still have a high interest in sports, especially in the Big Four," he says.

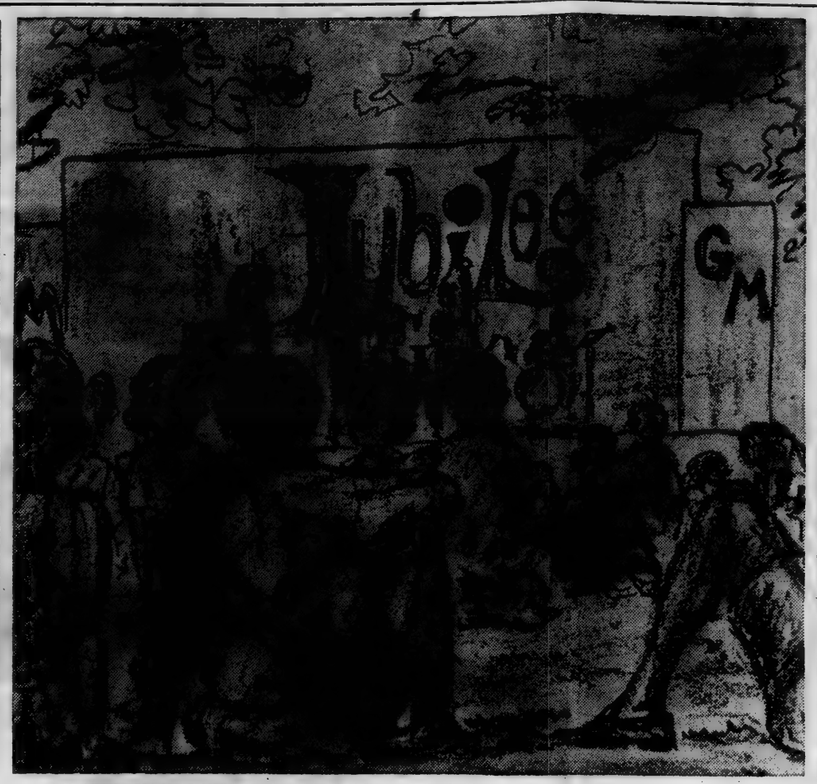
Since he has gone into the scientific field he has written many articles for physics journals and has become very well known in scientific circles. He is listed in the American Men of Science and is a member of the American Physical Society.

In his lecture here he will discuss several experiments which have been conducted at Duke in the past three or four years.

J. Slaughter Named Chief Cheerleader

Jim Slaughter, a sophomore from Kannapolis, has been selected as head cheerleader for the coming school year.

Slaughter, a member of the Chi Psi Lodge, is an English major. He was selected Thursday night during a joint meeting of the Carolina Athletic Association and the cheerleaders.



"Hannis Latham raised school spirit 100 per cent, and I hope that I can do as well," commented Slaughter.

"We need two more girls and one boy for the squad," he added. "Tryouts will be the first week in May and there will be notices in the DTH and on WCHL concerning the exact time and place."

Folks Singin'...

THE MIGRANTS, Carolina's own folksinging group, are the center of attraction during a session on the GM lawn yesterday afternoon. —Photo by Les Howell

AN AFTERNOON LAWN concert by the Chad Mitchell Trio will highlight today's activities as Graham Memorial's "Salute to Spring" Jubilee weekend comes to a close.

The trio, which will perform at 2:30 p.m. on the lawn in front of GM, is said to be "a highly musical group that combines the finest folksong of the past with pungent musical comments on the world today."

The Sunday Cinema will include two showings of "Two Women," with Academy Award Winning performances by Sophia Loren. Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 tonight in Carroll Hall.

Chester Bowles Here Monday For Speech

Chester Bowles, U. S. Ambassador-Designate to India, will speak tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. The lecture is being sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

President Kennedy recently appointed Bowles as Ambassador to India to replace John Kenneth Gailbraith, who is returning to Harvard to teach. Bowles held the position under the Truman Administration in 1951-53. Since 1961 he has been serving as the President's Special Adviser on African, Asian and Latin-American affairs.

In announcing the appointment, President Kennedy said of Bowles: "No American has a deeper understanding of India and Asia. A decade ago he was a pioneer in creating bonds of understanding between India and the United Statse. . . . He has been a devoted, articulate, energetic public servant at home and abroad for over 20 years and he has served this administration with particular effectiveness in our relations with less-developed countries."

Bowles has been a controversitl figure throughout his 20 years of public service as a diplomat and politician.

At the age of 40 Bowles retired from the advertising firm of Benton and Bowles as a millionaire to enter public life. He served as National Price Administratior during the World War II. In 1949 he was elected Governor of the State of Connecticut, and served in that position until he was appointed as Ambassador to India by President Truman in 1951.

As an Ambassador to India, he was widely considered to be a success. The Ambassador and his wife sent their children to the Indian public schools and often took trips into the outlying provinces on horseback. Bowles is still considered to be the most popular Ambassador among the Indian people, according to reliable sources. The New York Times said of his tour of duty as Ambassador that, "the former Governor tackled it with the informality and enthusiasm of a Peace Corps volunteer."

In 1959 Bowles was elected to Congress in his home state of Connecticut. He terminated his legislative career, however, to work for the election of John F. Kennedy to the presidency. In 1960 he was considered to be a top contender for the appointment as Secretary of State by Kennedy. Instead he was appointed to the No. 2 post as Under-Secretary of State.

Shortly after the Cuban invasion he was moved to his present post as Special Adviser to the President. At the time it was said that Bowles was shifted because of "differences over the abortive Cuban invasion and because Mr. Bowles was considered a better 'idea' man than administrator."

Bowles will assume his new duties on July 15 of this year. His new assignment is considered to be an increase in his responsibilities, and not an attempt to shunt him aside.

During his trip to the area, Bowles will also speak at State College in Raleigh.

One Of Three Found Guilty Of Violations By Council

One student was found guilty and two others innocent of Honor Code violations in cases tried by the Men's Council Thursday night.

In the first case, a senior was charged with lying to a dorm advisor and a university official concerning the whereabouts of a girl. The student pled guilty to the circumstances involved but innocent to any Honor Code violation. He was found guilty of the second charge and placed on definite probation for one full academic semester. He can still graduate, a spokesman for the council reported.

In the second case, a student pleaded innocent to a charge of cheating. He was allegedly seen glancing repeatedly at the papers of two students, but was never seen writing anything down afterwards. The Council found the student innocent, as no objective proof was available.

A student charged with failure to turn in another student for an Honor Code violation pleaded not guilty to the charge and was found innocent.

The student allegedly did not report to the Council the identity of a student at another school who had checked into a motel and then refused to pay.

NSA To Sue Alabama In Attempt To Gain Entry For 2 Negroes

By COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE

PHILADELPHIA — The United States National Student Association has announced that it will undertake an action without precedent in the 15-year history of the association — a law suit against the State of Alabama.

NSA National Affairs Vice-President Timothy Manring of Washington State University, said that NSA will bring the suit in an attempt to secure the admission of two Negro students to the University of Alabama.

The applications of the two students, Marvin Carroll and David McGlathery, were denied by the university earlier this year when they attempted to enroll for courses at the university's extension in Huntsville.

Both of the students are employed as scientists by the federal government. Carroll works at the Redstone Arsenal and McGlathery is connected with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. They both wished to take courses connected with their work. Manring charged that their admissions were turned down "on insignificant technicalities." The university asserted that the applications were incomplete.

Manring said that NSA had been assured of a grant from the Field foundation to cover the expenses of the lawsuit. Charles Morgan, a white lawyer from Birmingham, will be retained by NSA to conduct the suit. NSA hopes that the students can be admitted for the summer session this year.

NSA has taken many positions in regard to student rights and equal rights for students in the South in the past, but this will be the organization's first venture into legal action to defend the rights of individual students.

NSA, an organization of some 400 college and university student governments, establishes its policies by vote of delegates from each member school at an annual convention. The officers of the group are then charged with carrying out those policies during the year. Manring said that, although the undertaking of legal action in the defense of the rights of two students was unprecedented in the history of NSA, the action was "clearly in line with the policy of the association."

Manring added that "The officers of the association weighed the case carefully before deciding to become involved. Before taking such a step, we wanted to make sure that the case was clearly in line with the policy of the association and that there were some unique points that could be made through the association's involvement. The case is clearly in line with the association's policy regarding equal educational opportunity for all regardless of race, religion, or creed, and with the association's interest in the desegregation of public educational institutions."

Manring asserted that the legal action would demonstrate to the nation the deep interest that American students have in such cases. He added, "NSA was deeply concerned over the events at the University of Mississippi last fall. We think that the case at the Huntsville extension will help avoid a recurrence of violence when the University of Alabama's main campus at Tuscaloosa is integrated this fall. Because of the clear interests of the federal government, the background, abilities and interests of the two individuals involved make this case one with some unique points. We think it is important to make clear the interest that Amreican students have in such cases."

The University of Alabama is under federal court order to admit Negro students when they apply. The university administration avoided a showdown earlier this year by closing down admissions before the applications of Negroes could be processed. It is expected that the school will have to admit a few Negroes in the fall, and many officials have expressed fear of "another Ole Miss." The state government is pledged to maintain segregation in the state—the last in the union without a single integrated public classroom.

World News In Brief

Moscow Gives Giant Welcome To Castro

MOSCOW (UPI) — Cuban Premier Fidel Castro headed for Moscow by train Saturday night for a bear hug greeting by Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and one of the most enthusiastic welcomes Russia has ever given a visiting foreign leader.

The Soviet capital already was gaily bedecked with flags and slogans for the forthcoming May Day celebrations, and Castro's mammoth Red Square welcome was expected to eclipse those given to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, President Tito and Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung.

The bearded Cuban flew into Murmanks early Saturday on a flight from Cuba in a Soviet TU-114 transport. He received a "viva Fidel" welcome from waiting dignitaries and a long distance call from Khrushchev who told him: "The whole Soviet people are waiting for you. I am looking forward to seeing you in Moscow tomorrow."

Cuban Was Prowler

WASHINGTON (UPI)—One of four Marine officers thrown out of the corps for involvement in the slaying of a Cuban spy at Guantanamo said Saturday the Castro agent was discovered prowling around a restricted powder magazine.

Details of the incident were given newsmen Saturday by former Lt. William A. Szili who said the only thing he did wrong was get caught helping Capt. Arthur J. Jackson dispose of the body.

News stories Friday said Jackson shot the suspected agent, Ruben Lopez, in self-defense.

The Defense Department has declined comment on the shooting incident of October, 1961, and its aftermath that saw Jackson, Szili and two other officers forced out of the Marine Corps.

But Szili, a 31-year-old Pennsylvanian, told newsmen he probably would decide again, as he and Jackson did, to dispose of the slain Cuban's body without making any report.

Khrush 'In Power'

MOSCOW (UPI)—U. S. troubleshooter Averell Harriman said Saturday he found Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev still firmly in power and apparently willing to help cool off the crisis in Laos.

He said the Soviet leader, during their three and a half hour conference Friday, gave no hint he is thinking of retirement.

He said he and Khrushchev discussed "almost every subject" of joint concern to Russia and the United States, but concentrated on Laos.

The U. S. Undersecretary of State said he straightened Khrushchev out on some false impressions of American intentions in Laos.

Gun To Be Tested

GADSDEN, Ala. (UPI)—Police Saturday awaited the outcome of a ballistics test that apparently will determine whether Floyd L. Simpson will be charged in connection with the slaying of a crusading Baltimore postman.

Simpson, 40-year-old father of six children, was picked up Thursday for questioning and held ever since on suspicion. Authorities have 72 hours in which to bring specific charges.

The suspect operates a grocery store-filling station in nearby Collbran.

A rifle belonging to Simpson has been sent to the FBI laboratories in Washington to determine whether it is the weapon used to kill William L. Moore.

Moore, who was hiking to Jackson, Miss., to present a segregation protest letter to Gov. Ross Barnett, was found slain Tuesday night alongside U. S. Route 11 around 13 miles northeast of here.

Police have been tight-lipped about their investigation, but have made clear that should the ballistic tests clear Simpson, they will be without a solid lead in the case.

Student Work In Second Collection

By FRED SEELY

"We're in a cycle of good writing at UNC, and we have tried to take advantage of it by this book."

These were the comments of Jessie Rehder, editor of the second volume of "The Young Writer at Chapel Hill," an anthology of writing by students at Carolina. Miss Rehder, author of "Remembrance Way," teaches English at UNC.

The volume, to go on sale this week, contains the work of seven students, including such familiar names as John Medlin, Dudley Carroll and Kent Dixon. Other contributors are Sylvia Burroughs, Mike Albright, Jack Neal, and William R. Bynum.

"Dr. Holman, then head of the English Department, suggested that we do this last year, and it was financed through by the School of Arts and Sciences with the help of Dean Carlyle Sitterson," said Miss Rehder. "It received such a good welcome that Chancellor Aycock arranged for it to be published again."

"Frances Gray Patton, Betty Smith and Howard Webber helped me in the selection of stories, and Bill McQueen aided me in the editing," she added.

"If this number is as successful as the one last year, we will definitely make it an annual affair."

The book will be on sale at the Intimate, the Booketeria and the Bull's Head Bookshop by midweek. The price is fifty cents.

Rabbi Speaks

Rabbi Joseph Asher of Temple Emmanuel, Greensboro, will speak on "The Role of the Jews in the Time of Jesus," Tuesday, April 30, in Howell Hall Auditorium.

The speech is under the sponsorship of the Hillel Foundation and the University YMCA.

Rabbi Asher will be visiting Chapel Hill April 30 and May 1 by special arrangement with the Jewish Chautauqua Society of America, an organization which creates better understanding of Jews and Judaism through education.

He will speak to the faculty at the Faculty Club Wednesday, May 1 at 1 p.m.

Scientists Here Deep In Space Research

By MAT FRIEDMAN

UNC scientists are working far into the night these days on research that may help in the "race for space" or aid in the nation's defense.

Their work is not concerned with practical applications—it is pure research—but one day it might help engineers to produce a material that will withstand extreme temperatures, shock or vibration, or will repel the deadly radiation of outer space and help us land a man on the moon.

The research could go on for years with no material gains. In any event, the work being done here will add to the knowledge of science, and all concerned are delighted with the opportunities it presents.

The program, called the Interdisciplinary Materials Laboratory Program is being underwritten by the Advanced Research Projects Agency of the Department of Defense. It involves at least 15 faculty members of the departments of chemistry and physics.

UNC is the only southeastern university taking part in the multi-million dollar grant. It began here in 1961 with a $1.5 million award for the period 1961-66 and involves eleven other American universities.

"It's the biggest single research program ever undertaken here," says Dr. Crockford of the chemistry department. "It has proven valuable to us in pressing forward with valuable laboratory work and in improving our potential to produce better scientists for the future."

Since 1961, over $100,000 worth of equipment has been added to the two departments to aid in the quest for answers to such things as the speed of electronics in matter, properties of thin ferromagnetic films and the effects of light waves on matter.

Many of the scientists have built their own apparatus, such as a thermometer capable of measuring temperature to within a 10,000th of a degree, and a "positron annhilation" device which measures the speed and angles of gamma rays produced when a positron (a positive electron) and an electron collide.

Transistor Discovery

The projects are many and complicated and no one knows where it all may lead, but research like this led to the discovery of the transistor and the rocket nose cone. The scientists are almost completely on their own, and all had some experience in their present research before the ARPA grant. Very little "new" is being done because of the program, but there is a lot more of it and new and better equipment to work with.

They are personally interested only in the theoretical aspects of their problems and, whatever the results, everyone agrees that the project will have done much to improve the teaching facilities here. Better research and better graduate students are expected to result.

Heading the project here are Prof. Horace D. Crockford, chairman of the Department of Chemistry, and Kenan Professor Everett D. Palmatier, Chairman of the Department of Physics. It is impossible to describe all the research being done, but a summary of some of it follows.

Electrode Process

Dr. Charles N. Reilly, of the Chemistry Department, is studying electrode precesses and gas chromatography. He hopes to get more energy in small packages with the use of hydrogen and oxygen electrodes.

Dr. S. Y. Tyree, inorganic chemist, is studying new inorganic substances. He hopes his work will help in testing the theories of chemical bonding.

Dr. A. T. Stewart of the physics department is studying positron annihilation. This work may help find the speed of electrons in matter. He has built most of the complicated equipment in his laboratory.

Research assistant Charles Childs is studying radiation detection in silver chloride. It involves radiation caused by hydrogen cosmic rays from outer space.

Dr. E. N. Mitchell also in physics, has found that small spots of nickel and iron placed on a microscope slide show some unusual magnetic properties. His work may help to build better electronic computers.

Dr. O. K. Rice is studying "critical temperature" of liquids; that is, the temperature at which two insoluble liquids become soluble. He has built his own thermometer, accurate to 1/10,000 of a degree.

Dr. J. W. Straley in physics is doing research on the effects of light waves on different materials. ARPA funds have provided him with an infrared ray producing machine.

There are many other projects and no one knows what they may mean for the future, but all great scientific achievements began like this, in the laboratory. The work being done here may produce something vital in the 1960's or may not bring anything for 50 years. No one knows.

Segregated Breakfast

The comments from the student body are in and the dust has cleared, and now this paper would like to comment on some of the opinions that have been voiced on the action of the SPU in picketing the College Cafe.

First. We vigorously reject the palpable perversions of truth and logic expounded by Dr. W. C. George, Wade Wellman and all the others who would profess to see only science and not morality as the issue. The pompous, ineffectual rantings of Wade Wellman tell us nothing of the true magnitude of the problem, and say only that morality is no fit basis for rational judgment.

Tripe.

Others tell us that the College Cafe has a perfectly legal right to remain segregated if it wishes. We don't deny this.

The issue involved here is that some of our students are not allowed to eat in this establishment. If the College Cafe wants student customers, then let them serve all students.

We are a student body almost 10,000 strong, and should be willing to defend any member of our group. We are not blacks and whites, we're a family of students, and the abrogation of the rights of one of us is an attack on all of us.

Is our current fight for student rights only with the administration and only for the rights of some students? If it is we are all frauds and hypocrites, unaware of the meaning or need for rights.

The College Cafe is only a small instance of what is the largest social revolution in our short history. Nowhere before has a whole race emerged and demanded their just rights in less than a decade.

This revolution threatens to erupt in another unhappy battle in some part of our nation every day. We can afford no more Little Rocks, Oxfords, Albanys, Montgomerys or Birminghams. They are too costly to our vitality and dignity as a nation. Neither can we hide our heads and hope that the problem will go away. It won't.

Someone must do something. The SPU has. They are only following the dictates of their conscience and doing what they feel they must. If this is bad, then nothing is good.

We subscribe to their actions and embrace their cause. We urge our fellow students and townspeople to do likewise.

A Commendation

All four well represent that rare type of instructor who makes learning an enjoyable experience.

2% 'Idiot Factor'

Sad to say, some people aren't enjoying Jubilee because too many students are over-enjoying themselves.

We're informed three dump-truck loads of debris greeted the grounds-keepers when they arrived on campus Saturday morning.

And we know for a fact that several aspiring fools went out of their way Friday night to be obnoxious during the Four Preps concert.

This is no way to thank those who've worked so hard to make Jubilee a success. And it's definitely not the way to make sure Jubilee becomes an annual feature at Carolina.

Most of the 4,000 students who attended Friday night's festivities conducted themselves in exemplary fashion, although many of them contributed to the mounds of trash left behind. Perhaps the fault lies partially in that trash cans weren't staked out prominently and people weren't invited to use them.

The trash-tossers, though, concern us less than the hecklers who were present. Apparently the two percent "idiot factor" found in almost any group turned out in force.

Next time they do, and one of them is sitting nearby, let's let him know we don't appreciate his noise.

Damn fools usually respond well to a healthy dose of social pressure.

Bowles: Man Who Deals In Ideas

By JIM CLOTFELTER

The conservative oracle National Review has made a standing quip of the line, repeated week after week, "Where is Chester Bowles?"

In August, 1962, he answered the question himself with a top-level State Department recommendation for a "tougher-minded" foreign aid program — in some ways the spiritual father of the Clay report.

Earlier this month President Kennedy answered the question again — by announcing Bowles would be sent as Ambassador to India.

In a more practical vein, the question will be answered again Monday night when Bowles speaks here in Carroll Hall, on American foreign policy.

* * *

Mr. Bowles is a New Dealer in a New Frontier government — he deals in ideas within a political community which is so non-doctrinaire as to be devoid of ideals, where manner, poise and "sophistication" have come to be the cardinal virtues. With these new values Bowles is out of step, and thus his turbulent and controversial recent career: from Kennedy's foreign policy advisor in 1960, to chief author of the 1960 Democratic platform, to under-secretary of state, — then the State department shakeup which sent Bowles into limbo as presidential advisor on underdeveloped nations. The president and Mr. Bowles had disagreed on the Bay of Pigs invasion — and, as James Reston pointed out, Bowles made the mistake of "being right", which no President can allow.

What Bowles could (but probably won't) say about foreign affairs—and particularly about foreign aid —could be of great importance. He has studied the economics and politics of foreign aid more closely than any other major political figure — and, if his past writings are any indication, this study has led him to a position very different from the Clay Committee and several leading members of the Kennedy administration.

What does Mr. Bowles think of the overall theme of the Clay report — that there is too much aid, being given to too many countries? In the past he has called for increased economic aid (particularly in agricultural and light industrial areas), particularly to the major underdeveloped nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America; he has recommended a reduction in the large expenditures in such countries as South Korea, and a separation of the military and economic aid budgets.

Does Mr. Bowles agree with the Clay report that economic aid should not go to government-owned industries competing with private enterprise? Probably not. (A major example of this is the present U. S. hesitation as to whether to construct a steel plant for the Indian government. Present ambassador Galbraith has asked that the aid be granted. What does Mr. Bowles say?)

What of aid to nations, like India and Indonesia, which have failed to support the United States in the UN and which receive Soviet aid? From Mr. Bowles' past writings it would appear he favors continued aid to these countries.

* * *

The ambassador may address himself to a broader scope than foreign aid, or even foreign policy. In American Politics in A Revolutionary World he called for a "new majority" in American politics—a "new consensus" similar to those which emerged around Jefferson in 1800, Lincoln in 1860 and Roosevelt in 1932. To the leaders of America's "fourth consensus", Bowles says, "It is OUR revolution for self-determination, for human dignity and for expanding economic opportunities which is alive and marching in Burma, India, Africa and Latin America . . ." He sees this consensus as necessarily cutting across party lines — but centering upon a strong President, the only man who can span the barriers of confusing communication and multiplicity of interests, and gain a public consensus on policy formulation.

Whatever he addresses himself to within the scope of foreign affairs, Mr. Bowles will do it honestly and forthrightly.He has a States foreign policy is not a bland, negative reaction to Soviet initiatives — in which, instead, the American people, in a "new consensus," support a foreign policy which will make possible for the under-developed nations the freedom we now enjoy, and make possible for ourselves the retention of that freedom.

"First Let's Get Him Out Of That Black Box"

How To Eliminate The Yack: Put It On Subscription Sale

This article was written at the request of the editors. Proponents of the opposite point of view—that the YACK should be put on a purely subscription basis—are invited to state their case in subsequent articles.

By LOUIS LEGUM
Outgoing Yack Editor

Just think. If we can only put the nasty old Yackety Yack on a subscription basis, then everything will turn out happily ever after. The Yack will be happy because it will begin to thrive in the intoxicating air of the free enterprise system. The Student Legislature will be even happier because it can put to constructive use the $30,000-plus new being siphoned off by the greedy Yack. And the Student Body will be the happiest of all because they will be the recipients of this $30,000 shower of benefits that the Legislature will so graciously bestow upon them.

Gee, doesn't it all sound wonderful? Maybe free cigars will be thrown in for good measure.

Now that we've had our little fun for the day, it might be instructive to take a look at some of the facts that concern a subscription yearbook, something that many of our erstwhile campus politicos have neglected to do.

1. At the moment the Yackety Yack is already over 40 per sent self-supporting. It has been able to accomplish this through selling advertising and organization space, an amount totalling close to $20,000.

Each students pays along with his tuition a specific sum designated as a student fee. This fee, among other things, pays for his right to attend athletic events, to attend most of the entertainment on campus, to receive a Daily Tar Heel every morning, and to receive a Yackety Yack.

3. The Yack, like any other student organization, gets the money it needs from the Student Legislature. The Legislature's money is derived from the student fees. If the Yack were to attempt to become wholly self-supporting by selling books to the students, then this $30,000 appropriation should be deducted from the fees and and hence out of the hands of the Legislature. In other words, students ought not to be required to pay all over again for something they've already paid for, merely to keep the Legislature happy.

4. Why pick just on the Yack to make it self-supporting. Many students don't exactly relish the idea of having a DTH crammed down their throats every morning. Why not sell that for a nickel a copy? Just as many students don't care to stagger down to Kenan Stadium five Saturdays o fall sadistically to watch our legions do their perennial bit as cannon fodder. Why not require the students body to buy tickets at their own discretion? The same argument holds true for our campus entertainment.

5. On the basis of the appropriation from the Legislature, it costs each student now about $3.50 for a Yack. Considering that Carolina's yearbook is one of the largest and one of the best college annuals in the nation, this is an extraordinarily small price to pay.

6. If the Yack were to go on a subscription basis, the cost to the student would of necessity be higher. With no assurance of any level of student support, the price would have to be increased to insure that there was a yearbook at all. In addition, a subscription Yack would be prone to seek a profit (heh, heh), both for its staff and as a reserve fund. This is another cost that must be figured.

The psychology of subscribing to a yearbook should also be considered. It is sometimes very difficult to hand out $5 in September for something you won't see until May. The money unfortunately would be blown by many students on a weekend date or drunk (take your choice). These same students seven months later would be knocking their heads against the wall for not signing up for a Yack.

8. Quite obviously under this system fewer books would be bought, which means less money for the Yack to work with, which means higher prices the next year or a book of inferior quality, which would mean the following year even steeper prices and an awful Yack, since who wants to shell out maybe $8.00 for a yearbook that isn't worth a damn.

9. A subscription yearbook would necessitate a staggering increase in the Yack staff. Who is going to want to keep books and make receipts out for 5,000-10,000 students? And what would happen if the Legislature recommended that the Yack allow thes poor students to pay on an installment plan? Maybe the Diner's Club could even join the act.

In short, the idea of a subscription Yack is not the brightest brainstorm currently circulating around campus. Possibly, despite everything, it could be done. If so, the Legislature ought to figure out a way, since they seem to be about the only ones interested in the matter anyway.

Bad Record Of Young Drivers

Young drivers in 1962 had the worst performance record of any age group, according to a report by The Travelers Insurance Companies.

The report has been compiled annually since 1931, except during the war years, from information provided by state motor vehicle departments.

A spokseman pointed out that drivers under 25 years of age comprise only about 15 per cent of all licensed drivers in the United States. Yet, he said, these young people are involved in nearly 29 per cent of all fatal accidents. In 1961, this age group participated in 27.3 per cent of all highway deaths.

The report shows that young men and women in this age group also were involved in a great number of non-fatal highway mishaps. In 1962, they were implicated in 27.3 per cent of all non-fatal traffic accidents as against 23.3 per cent in 1961.

On the brighter side, the best relative improveemnt in 1962 was made by drivers 65 and over. This group was involved in only 6 per cent of all fatal accidents compared with 7.2 per cent the previous year.

The largest age group—including drivers from 25 through 64—also improved its performance record in 1962.

Martian Human Finds Earth Strange Home

Book Review: Stranger in A Strange Land, By Robert A. Heinlein. Avlon in paperback, and Doubleday.

By DAVID LOBDELL

"Once upon a time there was a Martian by the name of Michael Valentine Smith." The first human expedition to Mars was organized on the assumption that Man's greatest enemy was other men — and if the expedition was to succeed its members would have to get along together far better than people generally do. So four married couples with about twenty-four or twenty-five combined skills were chosen. The expedition arrived safely only to meet a mysterious silent doom. World War III comes on earth and 20 years later a 20 man ship operating on Lylle drive arrives — They found Mars to be inhabited by a highly civilized and very alien race and they found one survivor of the previous expedition a male, who had been born shortly before the end of the two year Journey.

Thus closes the introductory chapter to Robert A. Heinlein's Stranger in A Strange Land, the most remarkable and well-thought-out book of any category that I have read in many years.

From M. V. Smith's halting learning of the English language through his seeing of the first female of his species to the end many chapters further on the book is a well thought out as a chess game, as sweet as a stolen kiss, and as vigorous as a 20 year old french canadian logger.

The most remarkable character I have ever met is the Old Philosopher, Jubal Hershald, who takes on the U. S. Government and wins, and who from the time he enters holds forth on religion, sex, politics, civic duty, human rights, and morality. His speeches are beautiful and well thought out. And his views should find a great deal of support here at UNC.

Students Discuss Idiot Characters

By NANCY VON LAZAR

"The father's an idiot," says a University student, and a fellow student not only agrees with him, but suggests the name of another "idiot."

The students are members of a UNC course in creative writing. They are studying the short story and are discussing characters in author E. M. Forster's story, "The Celestial Omnibus."

Forster's story is included in a new short story anthology edited by Jessie Rehder, UNC Assistant Professor of English and teacher of creative writing courses. Her book is entitled "The Story At Work." It has just been published by the Odyssey Press, Inc., of New York.

Miss Rehder's book is not just a collection of short stories thrown together for the reader's enjoyment. Her book is unique — it goes one step further. Following each of the 26 stories by 26 top authors are comments on the story's theme, its characters, the use of time or place, and other techniques of the story. These comments are contributed either by Miss Rehder or by students in her class on the short story.

The comments "are meant only to stir up the reader's own responses and provide a trigger for spontaneous discussion," says Prof. Rehder in the foreword to the book. The comments give just enough of a hint about the story's meaning to aid the reader in analyzing what the story says.

'Birds' Swoop Down With Terror, Gore

By HENRY ALDRIDGE

"The Birds" Produced by Alfred Hitchcock, color by Technicolor. Starring Tippi Hedren, Rod Taylor, Jessica Tandy and Suzanne Pleshette.

Have you ever thought what might happen if the birds decided to attack the human race? Have you ever imagined what it would be like to be assailed some dark and gloomy evening by a raging flock of crows, picked to death, have your eyes plucked and be left bleeding in an alley? If you haven't, better see Alfred Hitchcock's latest thriller, "The Birds."

It all starts innocently enough when heroine Tippi Hedren, Hitchcock's latest blonde discovery, takes a pair of love birds to a boy friend who is spending the weekend at a small fishing village on the coast. While out in a boat, a sea gull swoops down and slashes her head. She and her boy friend, Rod Taylor, think nothing of it. But that night, a gull runs into the front door of the school teacher's house. The next afternoon, a swarm of gulls attacks a school birthday party.

Still no one is alarmed except boy friend's mother, played by Jessica Tandy. Next morning she drives over to visit a neighboring farmer. One of the hands says he is in the house. She goes in and — you guessed it— there he is all bloody, eyes missing, lying on the floor quite dead. A gull is smashed ominously against the window pane.

Next day, while Miss Hedren is visiting the school house, she notices crows sitting on the telephone poles and the jungle gym. The children are evacuated quietly, but as they start to run the crows attack, and it is only luck that all the children escape. Later the school teacher, Suzanne Pleshette, is found gouged to death just a few steps from her front door.

After gulls make a wave attack on the town, the inhabitants evacuate, leaving Miss Hedren, her boy friend, his mother, and his little sister boarded up in their house awaiting the next onslaught. It comes at night.

Gulls and crows together batter at the house. Windows are broken but quickly boarded up. The flimsy kitchen door is riddled with peck marks and almost gives way. The lights go out, and the attack subsides. All is quiet.

But Miss Hedren hears a rustling of wings somewhere in the house. It is coming from the upstairs bedroom. Everyone else is asleep, and she takes a flashlight and goes up. Slowly she opens the door and shines the beam into the darkened room. There is a hole in the roof and there, perched on everything, are the crows. They — but Alfred wouldn't want me to tell the rest.

Based on a short story by Daphne Du Maurier, "The Birds" is traditional Hitchcock. But this one pulls all the stops. Hitchcock builds the suspense to unbearable heights, and then releases it with unimaginable horror.

The stars do a creditable job, especially newcomer Tippi Hedren, but the birds themselves are the real stars of this film. How they were trained, I don't know, but they perform amazingly— viciously pecking at innocent victims, or sitting menacingly on telephone poles. Many of the scenes were accomplished by superimposing shots of the attacking birds on the strugglings of their victims. For this feat alone, camera craftsmanship should be given special praise. As for what goes on between bird attacks, it's not too interesting. The whole thing is really for the birds anyway.

And, Oh yes. Now that you have all the doors locked, better stuff the chimney too. They can get in that way, too, you know.

Diamondhead: Not Out Of The Rough

By LOUIS LEGUM

"Diamond Head" (playing at the Carolina through Monday) is an incredibly bad movie to end all bad movies. It must have taken real talent to produce such a rhinestone clinker, but then the novel of the same name by Peter Gilman gave things a head start from which Charlton Heston and his Cinemascope Grimace never could quite recover. After this pineapple opera makes the rounds of the second-run popcorn palaces, the Hawaii tourist business will never be the same.

Perhaps a more apt title would be "One Man's Freud." Writer Marguerite Roberts (women always seem to be messing something up) and director Guy Green have ingeniously combined to create one of Hollywood's pet sexo-dramas that is as effective as some of those wooden surfboards. The other accomplices to the crime include the cast of Heston, Yvette Mimieux, George Chakiris, France Nuyen, and James Darren, not to mention Elizabeth Allen and Aline MacMahon, who's been around long enough to know better.

Take Virile Charlton for instance. He's the authoritarian ruler of a displaced Tara located on one of those Technicolor islands that make up dear ole' Hawaii. To hear him grind his teeth, he's the coolest thing out since somebody thought up cherry ice. By the way, his name's "King" Howland. Pretty clever, isn't it? But then you have to remember this is a pretty clever picture.

Our pal King's trouble is that he's got a sister (Yvette) whose pants are a little hotter than they ought to be, especially when it comes to playing beddie-bye with a cute, brown-skinned Hawaiian boy (Darren). See, it's like this. The Howland family is one of those White Anglo-Saxon Protestant going concerns that's been going a little longer than it should be. King's got a lot of Pride in his family, too. After all, what else can you expect from such breathtakingly, Anglo-Saxon patriarchs? People with colored skins are all right in their place, of course (heh, heh, sound familiar?), but it just won't do to have them clashing with the virgin-white sheets in Little Sis's cradle.

But Little Sister has other ideas about who's going to sleep whom. She just can't understand why Big Brother can knock up one of those demure brown young things (France Nuyen) and not let her try the same game. Turnabout's fair play, isn't it, or is it?

Just about the time you're through eating your candy bar, Heston accidentally slips a knife into poor Darren, which doesn't exactly bring joy into the heart of Yvette. Well, you can't get every thing the way you want it.

Don't ask us how, but Darren's older brother (Chakiris) manages to come to Yvette's rescue give-or-take a few tears fists and stroking hands and they go through the happily-ever-after routine enhanced by the timely crescendo of about thirty thousand violins Even that meanie Charlton sees the light because by this time he's tired too of playing nursemaid to the precarious dialogue, salary or no salary. And for those avid integrationalists in the audience for good measure, he magnanimously agrees not to chuck his illegitimate boy into the Pacific. As Heston so profoundly puts it, "the kid's half-a-Howland, isn't he?"

Well, we'll go along with that. The producers will need the little devil for their sequel, "Son of Hula."

IFC To Drop 'Affiliate' Category

By RON TUTHILL

An amendment to the Inter-Fraternity Council by-laws doing away with house "affiliates" was proposed at an IFC meeting Monday night.

IFC President Charlie Battle said that it had become a practice among some fraternities to make pledges and actives who had not made their average "affiliates," thereby giving them full access to the house and its functions.

"This amendment will require everyone affiliated with a fraternity in any way to have a C average," said Battle.

The fraternities will vote on the amendment before the next IFC meeting, at which their representatives will vote.

'Cherry O' A Realistic Play

By JOHN DOYLE

The brand-new smell of varnish and the hum of buzz saws assailed me as I entered the Workshop, curious to find out more about "The Cherry Orchard," the upcoming production (May 8-12) of the Carolina Playmakers.

I stepped carefully over odd-shaped flats still sticky with paint, dodged a pile of wood shavings and came upon five workers busily putting a wall-paper design on a cloth stretched over a wooden frame.

"Hello," I said. "Understand you're doing one of Anton Chekov's plays this time."

"That's right," answered a girl dusting off a column soon to become brown. "Its the first Chekov play to be done on the UNC campus, ever."

"What kind of play is it?"

"Without giving away the plot," said scene designer Tommy Rezzuto, "I'd say it was a realistic play. By that I mean it has real rooms and a real garden with a full-fledged 18th century gazebo—"

"You mean these splotches on the flats make a wall?" jested a fellow workman, moving his stencil over a clean section of cloth.

Intrigued by the mention of a gazebo, I asked: "Just what period is the play set in?"

"Well, it's a social drama concerning the decadence of the upper classes of Russia around the turn of the century. Many critics consider "The Cherry Orchard" Chekov's masterpiece."

"It's a challenger," interjected the column duster. "It's so different from anything we've done before."

Reginald Spalding, stage manager, handed me a list of names in the cast, including Edna Clark as Ranevskaya, Ed Grady as Gayeft, Janice Moore as Anya, and Fred Lubs as Lopakin.

"Really there are no throw-away parts," said an actress in overalls opening another can of brown. "That's why it's so difficult. It's a combination of forces rather than individuals. I don't know whether our director, Russell Graves, would agree," she smiled, "but rehearsals don't seem to be tiring at all it's so interesting."

"Watch that brush!" yelped costume designer Larry Randolph, graduate assistant in the D. A. department, who had just come in fondling a handsome suit of clothes, 1900-style.

"How's this?" he asked.

"Looks fine to me," said Graham Pollock, busily helping Ranny Umberger transport a tremendous spotlight through the sawdust.

"Don't think it'll clash with your lighting lined up for act three, do you?"

"As long as it fits!" someone joked again.

"Say, when is the play?" I managed to interrupt.

"It's May 8 through the 12th, at the Playmakers' Theater, of course. Curtain time is 8:30 each evening with a matinee Sunday, the 12th, 2:30 in the afternoon."

"Hey! Is this for the Tar Heel?" asked the jester.

"Yes . . ." I answered cautiously.

"Well, be sure and tell 'em it has four acts and a Russian folksinger" he exclaimed with glee.

"I will," I said.

Writer Says Power Is In Unconscious

"The powerhouse of all creative writing" rests in the unconscious, according to best-seller novelist Richard McKenna, who addressed the annual luncheon of the UNC Woman's Club here Friday.

McKenna, the author of "The Sand Pebbles," has a name for this unconscious which he calls "the little man in the sub-basement." He attributed his success as a writer to the recognition of this "little man."

"Learning creative writing is a process of training the unconscious," said McKenna, who said that the intellect is not enough in writing. He added that "lived experience" is essential — experience which is found in the unconscious.

"My theory of the moment is that the little man must learn how to change himself from a private to a public dreamer," said McKenna. He said that "the professionally written story may be a kind of collective and public dream."

1. My theory on looking for a job is—Play it big! Shoot for the top! Go straight to the prez for your interview.

I don't know any presidents.

2. Use your head, man. Have your dad set up appointments with some of the big shots he knows.

He's a veterinarian.

3. Beautiful! All you have to do is find a president who likes dogs. You'll have him eating out of your hand in no time.

I don't know an Elkhound from an Elk.

4. Frankly, I don't know what else to tell you. You've got a problem.

It's not as bad as it seems. My idea is to find out the name of the employment manager at the company I'm interested in. Write him a letter telling him my qualifications. Spell out my interests, marks. Simple as that.

5. A letter to the employment manager! Ho ho ho! You've a lot to learn.

Then how come I landed a great job at Equitable — an executive training spot that's interesting, pays a good salary and has a lot of promise for the future.

6. Say, could you set something up for me at Equitable?

Q: Dear Answer Lady: My boyfriend rubs me the wrong way. Please help me!

A: Dear Irritated Frosh.

Yours may be an emotional problem. I don't think so.

I feel you're suffering from simple "Whisker Rub." Most girls have come up against this same trouble.

My advice: Go to the bookstore and buy him a REMINGTON® 25. (Use any excuse for the gift. A birthday, Groundhog Day or the eve of Bacon's Rebellion.) You'll be surprised how much closer you two will be. You see, Dear Irritated, the REMINGTON 25 is a powerful shaver. Powerful enough to shave closer... faster... smoother. Sports a man-size shaver head. It has roller combs, too. They roll skin down, comb whiskers up. Push them in the path of six rows of diamond-honed cutters. (And other jazz like that.)

You may wonder how the Answer Lady knows so much about shavers? Well, you see, my dear, I am really a man. I live on fraternity row. I use a REMINGTON shaver myself. Maybe you should give up this guy. I'll call you Saturday.

HOT CORVETTE—Chuck Fazio leans over the engine of his supercharged '63 Corvette Sting Ray to check a few last minute adjustments before going out for a spin. The car, the first and only of its kind to date, accelerates from 0 to 60 in 4.5 seconds.

Fazio's Corvette Is More Than Fast

By WARREN OGDEN

Chapel Hill, like many other college towns, has an enduring affection for machines built for speed. Among the legions of vehicles which fall into this category, the Chevrolet Corvette ranks with the best. "And the fastest by far in the ranks of the Tsar . . ." belongs to Chuck Fazio, a sophomore from Chagrin Falls, Ohio.

Chuck's Sting Ray looks very much like any other '63 Corvette, with the only obvious alterations —a set of Lake plugs and a small chrome warning, "Supercharged by Latham." The only other warnings are that it has a midnight-blue soft top, and an unusually high whine coming from under the low-slung hood.

When you open the door and slip into the seat, the glow is like that of pink champagne. As the ignition is turned to "on," there is a pause as the electric fuel pump ticks off its duty. The engine starts with polite growl of a well-leashed panther. The next noticeable sound is the high-pitched whine of the supercharger.

As the car starts from a stop, your body tenses as you realize what incredible power must be under the accelerator. When the clutch pops and the tack jumps, all the gauges peel over with fantastic rapidity, your neck snaps back, and the merry race has begun.

The car accelerates through the gears with the smooth lurch so typically Corvette and the next thing you know you're going 120 miles-per-hour and the telephone poles look like a picket fence.

Chuck's car was the first, and is the only one to date, with a Latham supercharger. The engine cranks out an estimated 440 true horsepower, compared to 340 for a stock model. It accelerates 0-60 in 4.5 seconds; a regular model takes 6.1.

Prior to spring vacation, this Corvette was resting quietly in a showroom in Cleveland. Chuck picked it up over the holidays and drove it to the Latham shop in West Palm Beach, Fla., where the transformation took place.

The old manifold and carburetor went out the window and then a Latham aluminum manifold was snuggled cozily under four husky Carter carbs which chime in two-by-two, just like the Virginia Reel. The heads were reworked and new gaskets added. The distributor was also re-worked and an electric fuel pump added. And finally, the crowning—a Latham Supercharger. The result is just about the fastest street machine running.

For those with an eye for bare facts, this supercharged Sting Ray goes from 10 to 80 mph in 11.9 seconds, compared to 14.15 stock, in third gear. In the 50 to 80 range the time dropped from 6.2 to 5.3 seconds. In fourth gear, from 50 to 100 the supercharged machine took 10.1 seconds and compared to 14 seconds for the stock model. And so sports car owners, all things considered, "you just can't touch it!"

TEPs Hike To Greensboro

By ALAN SAUL

President Kennedy's 50 mile hike program is not dead, at least not on the Carolina campus.

At midnight last Thursday, four members of Tau Epsilon Phi Fraternity started on a 50 mile hike from Chapel Hill to the Woman's College at Greensboro. The primary object was to prove that Carolina fraternity men are physically fit, without needing the President's program. With a challenge to start with, plus some minor monetary incentives, the group tramped out from in front of the TEP House at Midnight.

With Phil Guller, vice-president of the House from Charlotte, in the lead, Joe Hahn of Gastonia, Mike Zaslav of Cedarhurst, N. Y., and Richard Gins of Silver Springs, Md. (the acclaimed Ugly Man on Campus) following, the boys set a wicked pace.

In the first four hours, they averaged 4 miles per hour. Their best mile time was 13 minutes. After a brief encounter with a wild pack of dogs at 3 a.m. on NC 54, the group fought on.

A progress report and map was posted in the Fraternity House, with checks on progress being made every few hours. Upon arriving at the junction of NC 54 and US 70, they stopped briefly for breakfast.

At 11:30 a.m. Friday, after a check of the highway,, one of the hikers—Richard Gins—was found to be missing. His absence was reported to the State Patrol.

He was located later in the afternoon. In an interview with WFMY-TV, he said that he had made a brief stop for first-aid due to an injured ankle.

The TEP members had covered the 57 mile distance in 16½ hours.

Feminine Flair

Which Role Should Coed Play --- "Feminine" or "Modern"?

From Oregon Daily Emerald

In Western culture, the role of the woman has traditionally been to bear and rear the children while the man brought in the food and fought the wars. The man's position was always superior.

Ancient Grecian women were not much more important than slaves and were considered as mere receptacles for the more aggressive men. In Rome women's rights were limited on the ground of the "imbecility and instability of the sex."

The Christian attitude toward women was even worse because, after all, it was Eve who caused the downfall of man.

Since their "emancipation" in the 1920's—by getting voting rights and the men's jobs during the wars—the roles of women have come closer and closer to those of the men.

Equality for women causes them frustration as well as contentment because cultural definitions of roles have not kept up with the changes in society. The contemporary coed faces a dilemma of two contradictory roles offered her by her culture.

The goals set by each role are mutually exclusive and what are assets for one become liabilities for the other; the full realization of one role threatens defeat in the other. Sociologist Mirra Komarovsky who studied attitudes and problems of college women, termed these two roles the "feminine" role and the "modern role.

The feminine role could be called the "traditional" role, for it defines the woman as "a young lady" whose "place is in the home" where she is interested in the "family" and is "not as dominant and aggressive as the man, but is more emotional or sympathetic."

The other more recent role partly obliterated the differences in sex and demands of women the same qualities and attitudes as of men their age.

These two roles are conflicting for the college girl who feels that she has to succeed both academically and socially.

If she competes with the men for a job, they will probably resent her because most men still hold the attitude that women are inferior and belong in the home.

The traditional or feminine role is found in marriage, so single working girls bear the tag "old maids."

The conflict in roles is solved in different ways by different coeds, depending on their interests in academics, their social contracts and their desire to comform to traditional standards or to be individualistic and progressive.

"Until the sex roles of women have been redefined to keep pace with the socio- economic and ideological changes of modern society, probably the happist and least-frustrated coed is the one with a 'middle of the road' personality," says Mirra Komarovsky.

But, if the woman maintains this "wishy washy" attitude, will the roles ever be redefined? And can she be happy not doing her best in a job? Won't her attempts to be flexible make her frustrated, also? These questions point out that there are no answers now to the dilemma of conflicting roles for college girls.

Wednesday Teas, Campus Are Anne Queen's Projects

By DONA FAGG

Anne Queen, advisor to the Y executive committee and the cabinet, loves people. This affection is apparent not only in her work with students on the UNC campus but also in her quiet, easy manner.

The comfortable friendliness is even present in her welcome mat. Her home on a lane off Mallett Street has been the meeting place for thirty to forty students at her weekly Wednesday teas.

"The Wednesday teas grew from a tea I had for the new foreign students and their counselors several years ago. Now the students know and they come," Miss Queen said with a soft drawl.

Miss Queen is a native Tarheel, born outside of Canton in Haywood County. After working ten and a half years in a paper mill, she went to Berea College in Kentucky. She then went on to attend Yale Divinity School.

She became Assistant Chaplain at the University of Georgia after attending Yale seminary. From there she worked with the American Friends Service. She has been with the YWCA for seven years.

"When I went to Berea I always appreciated the opportunity to get into faculty homes. I think that college students get out of touch with home life and the Wednesday teas offer a chance to have this atmosphere," she smiled.

The cottage itself is furnished to Miss Queen's tastes, a mixture of both the contemporary and the American colonial. Her interests in mountain arts and crafts is clearly shown with small homey touches. A handmade broomstraw hearthbroom stands by a native stone fireplace. Earthenware jugs and pitchers are placed at random.

"These are my two Kennedy rockers," she pointed out. "They were given to me by students. I was really surprised when they were delivered to me at the office."

She paused and ran her hand fondly over the arm of the rocker. "Now I think they look as if they had always been here."

Abstract paintings hang in prominent spots. They are originals and were given to Miss Queen by fond student friends. In each case the donor was the artist himself.

Aside from entertaining almost every visiting group that comes to the University, Miss Queen finds time for reading. She enjoys philosophy and modern fiction but while in Chapel Hill she has enjoyed "a re-awakening of interest in Thomas Wolfe."

"I think he so clearly shows the spirit of the mountains," she said.

Indeed there is something in the spirit of the mountains about Miss Queen.

It is her warm hearthside, tea and freely offered companionship

Girls Offer Scholarship And Dinner

"Everyone you know will be there," said the cute Delta Delta Delta sorority member. She is referring to their spaghetti dinner this Monday given to finance the Tri Delta scholarship fund.

For a $1 ticket the sorority offers spaghetti, tossed salad, french bread, ice tea and dessert in the sunny atmosphere of their house. Dinners will be served from 5:30 to 6:30.

This year the sorority is offering two scholarships to campus coeds, one $100 and the other $50. Competition started April 19 and will end May 10. Applications for the scholarship will be in the Dean of Women's office, and both sorority and non-sorority girls are urged to compete.

Judges for this year's winner will be Dean Catherine Carmichael, Nancy Adams, assistant to the Dean of Women, Mrs. F. D. Milam, alumnae advisor of Tri Delta, Becky Jo Greene, chapter president, and Janet Dawson, chapter scholarship chairman.

Women Are Happy, Hopeful Says Recent YWCA Survey

NEW YORK (CPS) The Young Women's Christian Association asserted this week that American young people are not so discouraged and apttheti:c as the prophets of doom have been telling us.

The YWCA says they are "happy," "hopeful" and "challenged."

The organization has recently completed a survey of 15,026 young women in 39 states and the District of Columbia to see just what they were thinking. The ages ranged from 34 all the way down to 2. Most were YWCA members.

They were asked three questions: 1) What does it feel like to be a girl or young woman in today's world? 2) What worries you most about life today? 3) What encourages you most about life today?

The women and girls were asked to select three items out of a list following each question. The top three answers to the first question were happy (42 per cent), hopeful (37 per cent), and challenged (34 per cent).

The most common of the worries were: uncertainity of the future, having enough money and threat of a nuclear war, in that order. The girls found the most encouraging things about contemporary life to be: educational opportunities, friends and religious faith.

The YWCA officials who prepared the questionnaire said that the predominant attitude in responding to the questions was one of hopefulness. Teenage girls showed early anxieties about getting an education and getting married. As they approach 18, they seemed to worry more and more about money.

The threat of war was a frequent worry among the younger girls, but seemed to drop off as they got older. The poll-takers noted that the older women seemed to be more concerned about how to continue to live in a Cold War that they expected to continue indefinitely.

The answers indicated no particular worry about the place of a woman in modern society, The YWCA said. They seemed not to worry about their jobs and their future prospects. "They are happy homemakers," the YWCA said.

HOW TO SEE EUROPE FOR ONLY $300 A DAY: NO. 1

Summer vacation is just around the corner, and naturally all of you are going to Europe. Perhaps I can offer a handy tip or two. (I must confess that I myself have never been to Europe, but I do have a French poodle and a German shepherd, so I am not entirely unqualified.)

First let me say that no trip to Europe is complete without a visit to England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Lichtenstein, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, Russia, Greece, Yugoslavia, Albania, Crete, Sardinia, Sicily, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Lapland, and Andorra.

Let us take up these countries in order. First, England.

The old ones are thrown away

The capital of England is London—or Liverpool, as it is sometimes called. There are many interesting things to see in London—chiefly the changing of the guards. The guards are changed daily. The old ones are thrown away.

Another "must" while in London is a visit to the palace of the Duke of Marlborough. Marlborough is spelled Marlborough, but pronounced Marlboro. English spelling is very quaint, but terribly disorganized. The late George Bernard Shaw, author of Little Women, fought all his life to simplify English spelling. They tell a story about Shaw once asking a friend, "What does g-h-o-t-i spell?"

Shaw sniggered. "Pshaw," said Shaw. "G-h-o-t-i does not spell goatee. It spells fish."

"How is that?" said the friend.

Shaw answered, "Gh as in enough, o as in women, ti as in motion. Put them all together, you get fish."

This was very clever of Shaw when you consider that he was a vegetarian. And a good thing he was. As Disraeli once remarked to Guy Fawkes, "If Shaw were not a vegetarian, no lamb chop in London would be safe."

But I digress. We were speaking of the palace of the Duke of Marlborough—or Marlboro, as it is called in the United States. It is called Marlboro by every smoker who enjoys a fine, rich breed of tobaccos, who appreciates a pure white filter, who likes a soft pack that is really soft, a Flip-Top box that really flips. Be sure you are well supplied with Marlboros when you make your trip abroad. After a long, tiring day of sightseeing there is nothing so welcome as a good flavorful Marlboro and a footbath with hot Epsom salts.

Epsom salts can be obtained in England at Epsom Downs. Kensington salts can be obtained at Kensington Gardens, Albert salts can be obtained at Albert Hall, Hyde salts can be obtained at Hyde Park, and the crown jewels can be obtained at the Tower of London.

The guards at the Tower of London are called Beefeaters because they are always beefing about what they get to eat. This is also known as "cricket" or "petrol."

Well, I guess that about covers England. In next week's column we will visit the Land of the Midnight Sun—France.

©1963 Max Shulman

Wherever you may roam in Europe and in all fifty states of the Union, you'll find Marlboro ever-present and ever-pleasant—filter, flavor, pack or box.

W&L Generals Knock Down Stickmen, 9-7

By MAT FRIEDMAN

The UNC Lacrosse Club hung on for almost four quarters but finally had to bow 9-7 on two late Washington and Lee goals at Navy Field yesterday.

Led by Tom Thayer and Jeff Parker with three goals each, the Tar Heels made comeback after comeback before Carroll Klinglehofer put it away with two quick goals at 11:30 and 13:40 of the final period.

In a rough game marked by frequent penalties and several injuries, the Generals peppered goalie Harvey Stanley all afternoon but never were able to build more than a two-goal lead.

Under constant pressure, the brilliant Stanley turned in 29 saves against eight for Washington and Lee and almost singlehandedly kept Carolina in the game. His efforts brought many cheers from the fine turnout which crowded the sidelines on the warm afternoon.

Two quick first period goals by Randy Wooter and Doug Morrison gave the Generals a 2-0 lead before Parker at 2:30 and Thayer at 10:40 evened it up.

Johnny McDaniel, who had a goal and three assists, scored at 13:15 to give W&L a one-goal lead as the first period ended.

Parker tied the game up at 4:15 to make it 3-3 at intermission.

The third quarter produced another deadlock as Klinglehofer at 3:30 and Thayer at 6:40, and then Jay Bowersox at 13:57 and Thayer again at 14:15 exchanged scores.

W&L Coach Tom McHenry spent a good part of the period launching a verbal attack against the referees. His efforts earned him two technical fouls and numerous jeers and taunts from the UNC bench.

In the fourth quarter, Mike Michaels scored for the Generals at 2:20 and 4:40 and it looked like the Tar Heels were finally dead.

But Parker on a brilliant steal and John Fuller made it 7-7 with five minutes to go as the Carolina bench went wild.

Even as Klinglehofer scored the lead goal they were screaming for another comeback, but the clincher quieted them for good.

The game was something of a reunion for the teams as many of the boys played together on prep school teams in the Baltimore area. But old friends thoroughly pummeled each other throughout the contest and made post-game backslapping a precarious venture.

Checkink was close and rough all afternoon with many of the players getting an unwanted ground's eye view of the action.

Coach Connie Steele saw his men drop their third tough decision of the season as they closed out the home schedule and brought their record to 2-3.

They still have two road games, with the Duke and Virginia frosh, before closing out the season.

Many students and their dates snjoyed the Jubilee afternoon shuttling back and forth between the lacrosse match and the track meet. It is very possible that both sports made new fans.

Whittle Sets Record As Cindermen Win

By PAUL HOUSTON

For a few moments Saturday, Chapel Hill was Cape Canaveral and Heath Whittle was our eights astranaut.

"I orbited," beamed the Davidson senior and Carolina's track co-captain.

Fiber-glass pole in hand, Whittle ebopped down the runway, dipped pole into box, rared back in bucket position, and arched over the bar, grazing it slightly, but it held at 15 feet.

Not only six inches better than Whittle's own school record, but according to assistant coach Joe Hilton, "closer to 16 feet than some might think. Heath could really go up now."

Heath: "I felt good before the meet today, but my first warmup cleared 13-6 and landed on my neck and that could have been serious. But I go 13-6 and 14-0 on my first tries, 14-6 on my second and I knew I could get 15. For the first time I got something extra out of my pole."

With no competition, Whittle said he was "relaxed." So, too, was the entire team, for it had little opposition from Virginia, either.

Score: 109 to 32, the Tar Heels fifth triumph against a lone defeat to Maryland, and a warmup to next Saturday's affair with Duke here.

Jim Brown (120 high hurdles, 330 intermediates) and Art Maillet (one and two mile) were double winners for the Tar Heels, while Virginia's All-ACC basketball ace Gene Engel captured the discus and shot put and placed second in the javelin.

Carolina freshman Bob Hicks won the 440 and 880, White the 100 and 200 and Burkette the broad and triple jump.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

I CERTAINLY DO not profess to be an expert on the horses. But the Thoroughbred Racing Association is, and its word is not to be doubted—especially where money is concerned.

The TRA announced a fortnight ago the results of its first 1963 poll on the probable Kentucky Derby winner. The winner (of the poll) was Candy Spots, the magnificent spotted wonder owned by Rex Ellsworth and loved by Mish Tenney.

The unbeaten (in four races) colt got 150 points to 115 for his arch rival, Cain Hoy Stable's Never Bend. A look at the record would justify the poll's outcome. A loook at Candy Spots would not.

This is the colt that won the Santa Anita and Florida derbies easily, but looked like the lead horse on a milk wagon doing it. He has been called monstrously big, overly-muscled, unsound, too tall, a loafer and weak-kneed. But only by those that didn't bet on him.

Candy Spots and Never Bend have met once already. That was last summer in the Arlington-Washington Futurity which the former won going away. The two thought they had the monopoly on the Louisville betting cash. They did until Aqueduct's Wood Memorial.

Now, there are three. Greenstable's No Robbery, a bay son of Swaps, stood off a late challenge by Bonjour in the Wood and won it by 2½ lengths in the fastest time since the race was transferred from old Jamaica in 1960. He, too, now is unbeaten. And since this is the same race that has sent Gallant Fox, Count Fleet, Twenty Grand and Assault on to Kentucky and mint julep fame, he, too, must now be reckoned with.

You can take any one of a number out of a hat and bet on the Derby. Crewman, Top Gallant, Sky Wonder, Jet Traffic, Outing Class all could win. But none of them will.

It's Candy Spots, Never Bend or No Robbery. This future book says Candy Spots.

Morgan Brings Back Memories

DAVE MORGAN, sixth man emeritus of UNC's powerful tennis team and business manager emeritus of UNC's powerful newspaper, once had the big game and the big serve. Now, he has left only the big mouth.

This is the guy whom I will always remember for his stirring singles win against Joe Schwartz of Miami last spring. The first five singles matches already finished—UNC already down 0-5—Morgan and Schwartz were still on the courts when the number one doubles match started that hot Friday afternoon.

Dave blew the first set when Schwartz rallied from a 4-5 disadvantage to win 7-5. But our hero fought back gallantly to take the next two sets by identical 6-3 scores. I will never forget Morgan's boisterous victory wave to the crowd as some 4,000 spectators screamed with delight.

Ah, that day is gone forever. But Morgan remains, and he never lets me forget it.

"Yes, that was my greatest moment," Dave says today. "But, hell, I should have gone back out this year. With my tremendous talent, I figure I would have reached the peak of my game—I would have been number one easy."

Yes, Dave. Yes, Dave.

"Schwartz was such a nice guy. I was a little sorry I had to smash him, but we, or rather I, wanted that singles win badly."

SMASH him?

"Just think. I am the only one to win a singles match for us against Miami in two years! Sometimes I wonder why I didn't get a plaque or something."

What do you think about the Miami match this year Dave? I was sorry I asked.

"Well, Skakle said it was 98 degrees down there. But I'm so cool anyway, I wouldn't have been bothered no matter what the temperature.

"And then you figure I would have probably been playing Mandelstam. I guess it would have gone three sets. It would have been close."

You really think you'd be playing higher than number six this year?

"Definitely I'm better than any of those hackers out there now. You know that. At Miami, it would have been 8-1."

As I said, the big serve is gone. The big mouth remains.

Billy Gets His Due—Officially

IT WAS MADE official at the Carolina Inn last Monday night. Billy Cunningham received a Most Valuable Player award for his efforts this past winter. E. Carrington Smith presented the award with the magnificiently verbose statemcnt "Billy Cunningham." They might as well have gotten Harpo Marx. But I guess E. Carrington figured that was all that was needed. It probably was.

At this same basketball banquet, Larry Brown was called "a package of dynamite, a player's player and a coach's dream" before being presented the Educational Foundation Award and a watch as the team's outstanding senior.

Dr. Oliver Cornwell then presented a third prize: This was the coveted Foy Roberson, Jr. Memorial Award based on contribution to team morale and sportsmanship: It went to Peppy Callahan.

This came as a surprise to a lot of people. Not to me. Callahan meant a lot to this team. Though he didn't play a lot, he always hustled, he always fought and he took the losses as hard as anyone—maybe harder. He also kept this team loose—on the road, on or off the court. Dean Smith lost two valuable guards in Brown and Yogi Potcet. But he also lost a third in Peppy Callaham. They will all be missed.

UNC track coach Dale Ranson, a fixture here for some 40 years, entered Duke Memorial Hospital this past week to undergo a serious operation. The operation has been completed, but Ranson is still on the critical list. The entire campus hopes and prays for a quick recovery.

UNC Mistakes Costly; Virginia Takes 5-2 Win

Title Hopes All But Gone; Willard Loses

By JOHN MONTAGUE

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA. — Errors and subsequent unearned runs continued to plague North Carolina here yesterday as the Tar Heels stumbled before Virginia, 5-2. The loss was UNC's fourth in league competition and all but eliminated it from any pennant consideration.

Carolina's troubles started early—very early—yesterday when Tom Wright booted Jay Lambiotte's leadoff chopper to third. The little second baseman went to second on a passed ball and scored moments later when Wright threw wild to first on another grounder by Lou Seabolt. After Johnny Adkins lined out, Cavalier firstbaseman Larry Tate hit a sizzler down the third-base line which just eluded Wright's glove. Seabolt scored the second run on the hit.

Virginia tallied what amounted to the winning run in the second when Butch Gibson reached first on a bobble at short by Jim Speight. After two were out, Gibson stole second and came across on Lambiotte's knock up the middle. The third unearned run.

Carolina, trailing 0-4 in the sixth, produced a mild comeback starting with walks to Buddy Tilden and Speight. After Bill Brown flied out, Wright was hit by a pitch to load the bases.

Ryland Vest replaced Henry Massie on the mound for Virginia, and Heywood Hull greeted him with a sacrifice fly to right. Tilden scored, and when cutoff man Adkins threw wide of third, Speight also came across.

Virginia scored single markers in the third and sixth on solo home runs by Tate and Gene Angle. UNC's Bill Taylor, a converted infielder, misjudged Angle's blast to left and the mistake enabled the Cavalier catcher to make it home.

Spence Willard, making his first appearance since his brilliant job at Duke Tuesday, took his second loss. This was the fifth straight time Virginia has beaten the Tar Heels. UNC won last in 1960. The Cavaliers are now 5-4 in the ACC.

Tigers Roar Loudly But Netters Win, 8-1

CLEMSON, S. C. — North Carolina completed its two-day tennis invasion of South Carolina on a successful note by defeating Clemson here 8-1 yesterday.

The Tigers, rated number two in the ACC behind Carolina, made a determined bid to topple the Tar Heels. But the UNC netters captured six victories in the singles, and that smothered any hope of a Tiger upset.

Charlie Shaffer and Keith Stoneman, who did not play in the singles against South Carolina Friday, returned to action and won on their individual courts.

Shaffer, at number two, turned back Malloy Evans' effort by 8-6 and 6-2. Stoneman had less trouble in stopping the Tigers' number six netter, 6-2, 6-0.

Ted Hoehn and Eddie Crow engaged in the longest match of the day. Hoehn finally toppled the number three Tiger in two overtime sets, 11-9 and 7-5.

The triumph was the fifth in the ACC for the Tar Heels, and they are now 15-1 for the season.

UNC's next match is on May 1, when it plays host to the Wolfpack of N. C. State.

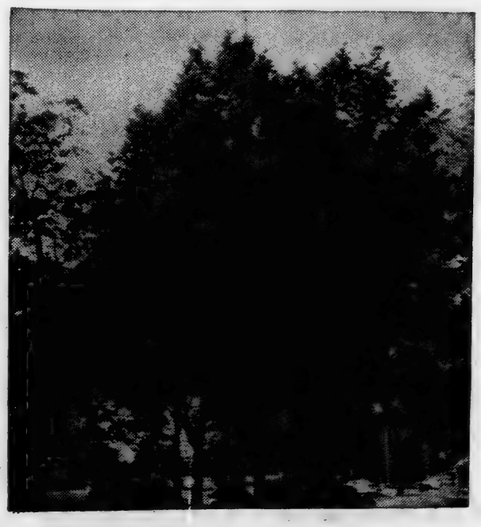
OLD BOOK NEWS



During the next week, we expect to bring down a flock of lively books for the treasure-hunter. Just bought in, these are a collection of recent books, mostly non-fiction, and mostly in top-notch condition.

You'll find them on the 97c shelf, and the under-five-dollar shelf, and we think you'll like them.

The Feature Case, starting Monday, will be filled with North Carolina Booklets, which, in case you don't know, are filled with historical and geneological material. So if you have an aunt who is given to ancestor worship, she'll thank you for telling her that now is the time and all that.

'Arms And The Man' Topic For 1964 UNC Symposium

By HENRY MAYER

An assessment of the changes wrought in American society by the requirements of national security and defense will be the principal theme of the 1964 Carolina Symposium, chairman Dick Hesse announced Monday.

Entitled "Arms and the Man: National Security and the Aims of a Free Society," the structure and details of the '64 program were worked out over the past three months by a special student-faculty committee.

During the five evening sessions (Sunday through Thursday, April 5 to 9) and a number of afternoon panel discussions, the Symposium will explore the demands made by the Cold War upon American values and institutions.

"The Symposium essentially asks," Hesse said, "whether or not, in the defense of free society, too many of its values have been sacrificed in the name of self-perpetuation?"

"Individual Freedom and Collective Security: A Balancing of Objectives" will be the subject of the opening Sunday evening session. It will attempt to examine basic American values in their historical context and to indicate how the direction of Amerian civilization has been changed by the emphasis on the struggle for self-preservation in a Cold War world.

"From this overview we hope to achieve a general idea of what national sacrifices are being made for purposes of defense, and gain some perspective for deciding if these sacrifices are consistent with our historic conception of values and ideals," Hesse explained.

Monday's evening session, "The Garrison State: The Growth of Economic and Political Concentration," will explore the "growing web of inter-relationship" between government and the economy due to considerations of defense. The twin problems of making political adjustments to economic demands and the control of the economic by non-economic forces will also be discussed.

Panel Discussions

Panel discussions scheduled for the first two days include meetings on "Civil Liberties and National Security," "International Economics and Foreign Policy," and "If Peace Breaks Out?" all will be asking if economic stability is possible without the stimulus of war.

"The Moulding of the Public Mind: Control of Information" will be the subject of the Tuesday evening session. It will pose the question: "How do official news, propaganda and national security demands affect the citizen's right to know and his basis for decision in a democratic society?"

Afternoon sessions relating to this theme will focus upon "Education's Response to the Cold War" and "The Impact of National Security Upon Research." The education meeting will consider the influence of national security and government demands upon university curricula, budgets, the relationship between the sciences and humanities, and other problems. Similar restrictions and controls in secondary education also will be discussed.

The panel on research will consider the limits placed upon free inquiry in research work, and the direction of research efforts by defense considerations. It will explore the position of the creative researcher in a society organized for war.

"Interviews for Symposium committee chairmanships will be held within the next ten days. Detailed information and an interview procedure will be announced in Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel," Hesse said.

Bowles Sees Need For New Leaders

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

Chester Bowles told a Memorial Hall audience last night that an old generation of world leaders is passing from history and that the ablest members of the new generation must "step forward to establish new voices, to propose new concepts, to develop fresh thinking, to find new ways to express itself."

Bowles said that these were "decisive years involving unprecedented changes and challenges." He cited the break-down of old colonial ties, the growth of Soviet power, the emergence of Communist China as a power in the Far East, the emergence of the United States from isolationism into the most powerful country in the world and the development of new technical, industrial and military capabilities that are transforming man's physical environment as evidences of these changes.

The question is what not only what shape the new world will take, he said, but what role the United States will play, if at all. He said that the U. S. would face economic and political isolation if it is cut off from Africa, Asia, and Latin America. "If we choose the negative path of high tariffs, of disdain for the United Nations, of impatient attempts to impose our will as a requirement of American assistance, we shall run the grave danger of national destruction," he continued.

The Soviet Union is striving to achieve "domination of the world

NO GERMANS CONCERT

Germans Club President Dexter Rumsey yesterday confirmed a rumor that there would not be a spring Germans Concert this year. Rumsey reported that the members had voted not to have one this year but to begin planning for next fall's concert immediately.

Rumsey added that he hoped to have next fall's program lined up by the end of the school year.

Jubilee Success May Spur Repeat Show Next Year

By HUGH STEVENS

Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial, said yesterday he felt GM's Jubilee Weekend was a success and would probably be conducted again next year.

"I think I can speak for myself and for Bob Rearden, GMAB president, when I say that the weekend went very well," Henry said. "As a whole, attendance was very good. We naturally don't expect everything we do to appeal to everyone, but we were quite pleased at the response we got."

Henry estimated the attendance at Friday's Four Preps Concert at 4,500 to 5,000. "We had between 2,000 and 2500 for the Saturday afternoon concrt," he said, "and about the same on Sunday for the Chad Mitchell Trio."

"It is hard to say how many people heard the combos on Saturday, because the crowd moved around, as we had hoped it would. But I would guess that there were at least 2,000 around most of the evening."

"I thought the response was excellent for the platform events," he continued, "and people seemed to be enjoying themselves Saturday night also."

As to next year, Henry said, "that is a GMAB decision, but there is almost no question in my mind that we will go ahead with plans. In fact, I'd bet on it."

DU's Lead Greeks With 2.41 Average

By HUGH STEVENS

Delta Upsilon led all fraternities on campus in scholarship for the fall semester with a house average of 2.410 the Dean of Men's office announced yesterday. Alpha Tau Omega was second with 2.358, and Zeta Beta Tau was third with 2.346.

Among sororities, Delta Delta Delta compiled a 2.628 over-all average to capture first place over Pi Beta Phi, which had a 2.606. Chi Omega was third among sororities with a 2.557. The Dean of Women's office released the figures last week.

Dean William G. Long said yesterday in releasing the fall academic report that he wished to dispell rumors concerning the number of freshmen men who had a "C" average last semester.

"The rumor is that something like 23 per cent of the freshmen made a 2.0," Dean Long said. "This is not true, as our figures show. On the contrary, 49.6 per cent of the freshmen made a 2.0, and even among fraternity pledges the percentage was 46.6 per cent."

Dean Long gave other figures in evaluating the academic performance of fraternities last semester, stating that the all-fraternity average, combining actives and pledges, was 2.172. This is against the all-university average of 2.249. The over-all average for active fraternity members, excluding pledges, was 2.387.

"The freshmen who pledged fraternities had a lower over-all average than those who didn't," Dean Long said. "The freshman average of 1.952 is broken down into three areas," he stated. 'Freshmen not in a fraternity compiled a 1.925, freshmen fraternity pledges a 1.875, and freshmen Women had a 2.244."

Dean Long declined to comment on the part that fraternity membership plays in these figures.

"We haven't had time to thoroughly review our information, but it is obvious that freshmen fraternity pledges are not doing as well as the freshman class as a whole," he said. "I would not say that fraternities are hurting pledges scholastically, but with these facts it is impossible to say that they are helping."

Miss Nancy Adams, assistant to the Dean of Women, stated that her office was "pleased" with the scholastic performance of the sororities on campus for the fall semester. "We would always like for them to do better," she said, "but as a whole they did quite well."

The over-all sorority average for the fall was 2.529, including both pledges and actives. This compares with the women's dorm average of 2.479, and with the all-university average of 2.249. It is also very close to the all-sorority average for 1961-62, which was 2.531.

Both Dean Long and Miss Adams urged sororities and fraternities to improve upon their scholarship in any way possible.

"It is important for fraternities to take steps to improve the scholarship record of their pledges," Dean Long concluded.

"Of course," said Miss Adams, "these facts support one belief I have had for a long time. It looks as though the women are just smarter than the men."

Dean Long announced that averages for dorm men are being compiled and will be released in a few days.

Supreme Court Rules

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to rule next fall on whether Gov. Ross R. Barnett should be given a jury trial on the government's criminal contempt charges stemming from the University of Mississippi rioting.

In other actions the Supreme Court:

—Nullified the conviction of Ford T. Johnson Jr., a Negro found guilty of contempt because he insisted on sitting in an "all-white" section of the Richmond, Va. traffic court. The court declared: "It is no longer open to question that a state may not constitutionally require segregation of public facilities."

—Agreed to hear the appeal of bookseller Bradley Reed Smith, convicted of obscenity under a Los Angeles law for displaying the controversial Henry Miller novel, "Tropic of Cancer." Smith was sentenced to 30 days in jail and placed on one-year probation for knowingly exhibiting and selling the book.

Campus Police Discover Prints On Book-X Truck

By LES HOWELL

Vandals struck several places in Chapel Hill early Saturday morning, doing at least $400 worth of damage, Chief A. J. Beaumont, Director of Safety reported yesterday.

Between 3:30 and 4 a.m., unknown parties broke off a four-by-four light post in front of the Kappa Sigma house, Beaumont said. Then they pushed over a stop sign at the corner of Pittsboro and Cameron and headed for the Carolina Inn where they tore down another light post and smashed the tops on four more.

"The vandals also pushed the light post through the windshield of a 1963 Ford panel truck belonging to the Book Exchange and left it there," Beaumont said in his written report.

"It has been dusted for finger prints, and we have some good ones," he added.

"They also broke a metal street lamp from its base near Gerrard Hall, ripped out a loose door frame, damaged a water cooler in Bingham Hall and broke the windshield and rear window of a car parked near Winston Dorm.

"We think that a small group did this," said Beaumont. "One boy would have to be pretty hefty to swing the four-by-four and break that metal street lamp."

First reports of the damage came from campus police officer B. Bowden. He was walking on Franklin St. when he heard the sound of glass breaking. When he arrived at Cameron Street where he found the broken lamps, the vandals had vanished.

Beaumont said he hoped students would volunteer any information they might have on the case.

Special Session For Legislators Cancelled Tonite

Tonight's scheduled Special Session of Student Legislature has been cancelled because of a delay in the consideration of the proposed 1963-64 student government budget, SL Speaker Bob Spearman reported Monday.

Spearman said five campus organizations have failed to appear before the Finnce Committee, necessitated a "needless delay in the committee's consideration of the budget."

He urged all organizations who have not submitted their budget requests to the Finance Committee to do so as soon as possible.

The Special Session was called so SL could clear its docket of minor legislation before beginning consideration of the budget.

Aid To Education Still Not Enough

By PETE WALES

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a two-part series on the Federal Aid to Education Conference last weekend in Washington by Delegate Pete Wales.)

"We must declare that the present commitment of government on education — even should the President's bill pass — is not anywhere near enough."

This was the statement of the general resolution of the National Student Federal Aid to Education Conference that met last Thursday and Friday in Washington to discuss Pres. Kennedy's National Education Improvement Act of 1963.

The conference, nicknamed the FATE Conference, was organized by the National Federation of College Young Democrats and various other organizations "to formulate and make known national student opinion on the subject of Federal Aid to Education and more specifically on the National Education Improvement Act of 1963 now before Congress.

"The Conference will be strictly non-partisan . . . so that it may represent a cross-section of American students and may accurately reflect student opinion," according to the steering committee of the conference.

Students heard addresses by Congressmen, educators, and administrators, discussed the issues in workshops and plenary sessions, and talked to their own Congressmen and Senators about the bill.

In the resolutions that were passed in the long debate Friday evening, the students supported Kennedy's proposal and urged more aid than was indicated in the bill.

Students also felt, from numerous interviews with Congressmen, that much of the omnibus bill now in the House would not be passed this year.

The President's bill, H. R. 3000, lists six areas for federal aid:

Title I of the bill provides funds for loans, scholarships and work programs for students in higher education.

Title II provides loans and grants for the expansion of facilities for higher education.

Title III allots funds for the improvement of teacher quality at all levels of education.

Title IV deals entirely with the improvement of secondary and elementary schools.

Title V provides for the improvement and expansion of vocational and special education.

Title VI provides for the expansion of continuing education such as increased university extension programs, adult education programs and increased public libraries.

A seventh title to the bill prohibits any federal control of education.

"The current omnibus bill, H. R. 3000, packages all the country's needs where federal education is both appropriate and essential," Rep. John Brademas (D-Ind.), a member of the House subcommittee on Education, told students Friday morning.

Rep. Brademas outlined to students the purposes of education and spoke of "the desperate need" for aid to education.

"The bill represents an investment in education rather than spending on education. The word spending implies that the funds are being wasted, but money spent on education is an investment by the people of the United States."

Brademas further cited three major obstacles to the bill: the civil rights controversy, the church school question and the debate over federal control.

In an afternoon meeting, Francis Keppel, U. S. Commissioner of Educoation, told students the view of the Administration on the proposed bill.

"The Administration is attempting to selectively stimulate education and educational standards in the United States as is indicated by the provisions for matching funds in the bill," Keppel said.

Keppel also quoted part of Pres. Kennedy's special message to Congress, Jan. 29, 1963, accompanying the current bill:

"For the nation, increasing the quality and availability of education is vital to both our national security and our domestic well-being. A free Nation can rise no higher than the standard of excellence set sohcsti nio vitu cellence set in its schools and colleges."

Ex-Atty. Gen. Speaks On 'Morals Cases'

Former Attorney General Allen Cronenberg, who served during the Bill Harriss Administration, 1961-62, Saturday issued a written statement to clarify the Student Government's position on "morals cases" and the Doug Moe case.

The statement came after the publication last Friday of a DTH interview with Chancellor Aycock in which the Chancellor discussed the present student-administration debate concerning "morals cases" and the Apartment Rule.

Cronenberg said that much of the controversy stems from misunderstandings regarding previous student - administration relations cited by the Chancellor.

The Statement

The complete statement follows:

Chancellor Aycock did a service to the debate which is now being conducted between students and the administration, for his statements in a recent DTH interview bring into sharp focus some of the significant particulars around which the debate centers.

Several of these particulars need clarification and elaboration, as it is apparent that there is a misunderstanding of what actually took place two years ago—namely the arrangement on the working agreement between student government and the administration, and the Doug Moe case.

The working agreement was concluded two years ago, just after the Bill Harriss administration came into office, at a meeting between student government leaders and the administration. A majority of items on the agenda was concerned with the central question of jurisdiction.

For instance, it was decided that a student who was at the same time a part-time employee of the University (a grader, a part-time instructor, an intern in the hospital, and similar categories) would fall within the jurisdiction of the administration.

On the part of the students there was no objection to such an arrangement, for the University certainly had the right to hire and fire, and further, the professional standing of such a student would be impaired.

Morals Cases

On the question of morals cases, a presently contested issue, there was indeed agreement. But looking back to that meeting, it is apparent that there was really no meeting of the minds.

The morals issue was presented to the students as one which the administration had always handled. Furthermore, the administration made it clear that they were only talking about morals cases involving psychiatric problems.

That was the sense in which I received their presentation; the others with whom I talked left with the same interpretation. It was agreed that students were not trained in evaluating psychiatric cases. Problems of that nature would be handled administratively by turning them over to competent University psychiatrists for treatment.

So in my judgment the agreement on morals never went beyond that point. There was never any blanket agreement giving the administration the right to handle all cases involving morals. It was my opinion that students still retained their responsibility for and jurisdiction over all morals cases, except those of a psychiatric nature.

There is also a question of the binding nature of such a working agreement. It would seem that such an arrangement has such a personal nature that its life cannot extend beyond that time in which two persons or groups are working together. There was no intention on my part to enter into such an agreement which would establish the relationship between student government and the administration for years to come.

Honor Councils Informed

The Chancellor stated that in cases which were handled administratively: "We keep the Honor Councils informed of what goes on." More correctly, he should have used the past tense for such instances.

Within the last academic year a number of students have been suspended or expelled from school on moral grounds without the knowledge of the appropriate student body officers. Student Government did not learn of these cases until the defendants had already been told to leave school, and the student body did not learn of the incidents except when the suspended students themselvs told what had happened.

Admittedly, the Councils have handled some morals cases recently, as the Chancellor said. But it seems that these working arrangements and delegations of authority are up to the discretion of the administration. Chancellor Aycock is quoted as saying that the administration delegates "to the students as much authority as they need to decide cases . . . Over a period of time, when a certain category of cases are not being dealt with effectively, then we present the facts to the student leaders and discuss whether or not they are dealing effectively with this type of case."

Is the Chancellor saying that the administration is willing to turn over to the appropriate Councils only those cases in which it is felt the decision of the Councils would agree with an administrative disposition of the case?

The Moe Case

Chancellor Aycock then discussed the Doug Moe case whose verdict surprised him. The Chancellor had decided to ask the students if they were willing to handle the case, and it was agreed that Moe would be brought before the Men's Council for a hearing. Mr. Aycock stated that "Dean Henderson is perfectly willing to let students handle cases, but sometimes they aren't responsible . . . that's what happened in the Doug Moe case..."

The charge of irresponsibility does not appear to be well founded. Doug Moe had been approached on two occasions by Lou Brown who offered Moe bribes to shave points.

The Chancellor in his statement to the Council said that he did not feel there was any indication that Moe had accepted a bribe. The Chancellor, then, did not view an earlier $75 "gift" as a bribe.

Likewise, the District Attorney's office in New York confirmed in a telephone call from the student Attorney General's office, that Moe was not named by the state of New York as a defendant or as a co-conspirator in the 'fixing' of basketball games.

Moe was charged with "failure to report an infraction of the Honor Code." Before the Council, then, there were two questions: 1) was the bribery attempt by Brown indeed an Honor Code violation? 2) to what degree was Moe responsible to report these attempts?

I am sure that the Chancellor wants to keep the record straight. He has stated that Moe was suspended for lying to him personally. At no time during the investigation or hearing was Doug Moe charged with lying by the Chancellor.

If one goes to the written statement made by the Chancellor to the Honor Council it can be seen that Moe was not being charged with lying. If the Chancellor had supplied the Council with the same information upon which he reached his decision, there is little doubt in my mind that the Council would have rendered a different verdict.

Council Acted Responsibly

I am convinced that the Council acted responsibly in deciding the original charges brought before that body. There was no opportunity for them to act responsibly, or irresponsibly, on the charge of lying. Chancellor Aycock's judgment that he did not over-rule the Council is an accurate assessment, for he was taking action on an entirely different matter.

The Chancellor's statement that "the notion that student government is COMPLETELY autonomous is false" is a reality. The central issue seems to be just how autonomous student government is. The discussions held between Dean Henderson and student leaders and between Chancellor Aycock and the student press are helping to answer that question.

Point Of Clarification

Al Cronenberg's statement in this morning's paper concerning the Doug Moe case and the student-administration "working agreement" of two years ago goes a long way to bring the present controversy into a realm where it can be understood and discussed.

It discusses specific issues—issues which perhaps have not yet been resolved and upon which there is still disagreement — but at least ones in which there is substance and upon which one can comment without getting lost in platitudes and misunderstandings.

Up until now, we have been hearing lots of talk from the administration about "full and final authority" in disciplining students and rebuttals from the students about infringements on student freedom and student autonomy. There can be little doubt that we have contributed to this by reporting statements from both sides and commenting on them.

But now we feel that the whole situation needs some clarification. Who is taking what side, and what are they all trying to say?

First, the autonomy issue arose out of a student action to redefine the Apartment Rule. The administration objected to the rule change, and announced that it could not go into effect before September — thus giving everyone time to figure out what to do next. Then, a student-faculty-administration meeting was held to discuss various problems involved in student discipline — particularly special cases such as those involving morals.

The meeting brought no answers regarding morals cases, but several comments from Dean Henderson and Dean Long led the student leaders to believe that their right to govern themselves was in danger, and Mike Lawler made a statement that the character of the university had been questioned. He was, of course, referring to the tradition of student government at Chapel Hill.

However, it appears that many members of the faculty and administration — as well as many students — misunderstood him and thought he was saying that students had "full and final authority" in governing themselves. The administrators thought that this was a ridiculous and naive assertion, as indeed it would have been had that been what he was saying.

From that point, the argument got almost incomprehensible. Our editorial entitled "Our Freedom at Stake" brought a long interview with the Chancellor, which gave us his opinions and what he bases them on.

His references to earlier student-administration issues involving student responsibility and jurisdiction began to bring the great squabble back to earth.

Now, Cronenberg has presented a student's point of view on the issues mentioned by the Chancellor. There is disagreement between the two men, and the problem is certainly not settled, but at least it will now be possible to discuss autonomy in relative terms — as it should be discussed — and where everybody wants it to be.

Jordan Junks Jeopardy

We have been on the phone to Sen. John Jordan, the fellow who introduced the bill in the state legislature that would make cheating on quizzes a civil offense.

Part (a) of section one of the bill says "it is unlawful for any person to obtain or attempt to obtain, by fraudulent means, any academic credit, or any diploma. . . ." Part (c) says that "any person . . . violating any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, in the discretion of the court."

This would place the student in double jeopardy and make him accountable to the general public in a matter that doesn't concern the general public.

The good senator says that he has since reconsidered and that he will have the objectionable section deleted before it leaves the Committee on Higher Education, to which it was referred.

The situation seems resolved, but one unanswered question remains: Who was responsible for the inclusion of the section in the first place?

Senator Jordan says it was the Institute of Government, whose responsibility it was to draw the bill up in the first place. The Institute says it performed only an administrative function, and that the power behind the bill was Banks Talley, Director of Student Activities at the University of North Carolina at Raleigh. And he can't be located.

Oh, well, the section won't be there when it goes to the Senate, and that's what counts.

Resolution

It's good to know someone sees to it that humor gets its due during such meetings as the National Student Federal Aid to Education Conference last Friday in Washington, D. C.

The keynote resolution, which for some reason never got acted upon, was this:

"Since the student community of the United States has unfortunately exercised little influence on the course of educational development and the evolution of the American political system, we petition the Congress of the United States to ensure that all surplus B-47's be turned over to the National Student Association."

Murdered Man Was A Martyr, Writer Feels

To The Editors:

I have a confession to make. Although I am 45 (and, some of my friends think, old enough to know better), I still get all choked up about martyrs. They are, after all, a rare breed of human beings, and I had feared they had become extinct in America.

Then William Moore died.

Regardless of his position in the racial controversy William Moore, to my mind, at least, is a full-fledged martyr. He died because of what he believed in, and even if he had died advocating my personal execution my hat would still be off to him, and my head bowed with respect and grief.

He was a man. He was an American. And when William Moore died, a little piece of America's heart died with him. For it was of such stuff as that of which Moore was made that a democratic America was made. In seeking to bring about a peaceful solution to the monumental problem that has plagued America since 1952, Moore was acting in a way that is as typically American as hot dogs and baseball. His slaying was like blasphemy in the face of high heaven.

May he rest in peace! Yea, God grant that he shall find in the Great Hereafter the love and harmony which he sought here but did not find! And may earth's loss be heaven's gain!

YAF Leader: Editors Used Poor Logic

To The Editors:

It is indeed sad that the present editors of the Daily Tar Heel have chosen to follow in the footsteps of their notorious predecessors. But, perhaps applause from the conservative side of the political fence was just too much for these aspirants to the tradition of Curtis Gans and Jim Clotfelter, and they found it necessary to sorrowfully return to the shrine of know-nothing Liberalism.

Specifically, the editorial of April 26, relating to the alleged national control of local chapters of Young Americans for Freedom, is about as bad as example of abuse of the truth, to say nothing of faulty reasoning, that I have ever seen in anything presuming to call itself a newspaper.

YAF has been accused of a lack of local chapter autonomy merely because we use signs prepared and distributed by our national office. The idiocy of such "logic" should be apparent to even the editors of the Daily Tar Heel. If it would contribute to their education, I would like to take this opportunity to inform them that it is cheaper to print signs by the thousands than by the tens, and that the YAF national office therefore provides this service to its constituent chapters. What all of this has to do with the issue of local autonomy completely escapes me.

Article 10, Section 2, of the YAF National By-Laws provides that all chapters have "full local autonomy," except that they cannot engage in totalitarian activities, or anything clearly contrary to the Sharon Statement (YAF's basic statement of beliefs).

The only means available to the national office, if it wishes to expell a chapter for violation of the By-Laws is repeal of the charter of the offending chapter, and such action can be appealed to the membership of YAF by means of a mail vote, the expenses of such vote to be paid by the national organization. (YAF By-Laws, Art. 10, Secs. 6&7).

As a matter of personal knowledge, I can state that no YAF Chapter has had its charter repealed in the two and one-half years of the organizations existence. Furthermore, I can also state that there has been absolutely no pressure of any kind brought to bear on the YAF Chapter at UNC by the national organization for as long as I have been associated with it.

I call upon the editors of the Daily Tar Heel to retract the falsehoods printed in the editorial at issue. I further call upon them to come out of the gutters of yellow journalism and resume their attempt to put out a fairly respectable newspaper.

The Negro At Carolina: How Integrated Are We?

The following article was written at the request of the editors by Kellis Parker, a junior from Kinston, N. C.

Parker recently became the first Negro elected to a campus-wide office at UNC, as one of several delegates to the National Student Association conference in Indiana this summer.

He has attended numerous conferences as an official representative of UNC and the United States and is a member of several campus organizations.

By KELLIS PARKER

It is the purpose of the University to perpetuate and enlarge the sum total of human knowledge, to disseminate this knowledge, and to cultivate a spirit of continuing critical inquiry. The University can best serve this purpose in a cosmopolitan environment, an environment in which it is a center for the conflict of ideas. Negroes throughout the Uited States are courageously confronting a "conflict of ideas" when they enter previously all-white institutions.

The University becomes an oasis of desegregation in a desert of segregation, where groups are thrown together, at times, unwillingly. They may at first find unpleasant incidents unavoidable, and unavoidable tensions unpleasant, but it is through regular confrontation with trying situations that many of these uncertainties are overcome, that misconceptions are destroyed.

UNC was desegregated in 1952 as a result of an NAACP suit demanding the admittance of two Negroes to the Law school. Another suit was necessary in 1955 when the first Negro undergraduates were admitted. Presently, there only thirteen Negro undergraduates at UNC.

This analysis of the life of Negroes at the University is centered on the experiences of Negroes in all facets of campus life. The ideal analysis would be one in which each of the thirteen Negroes in attendance described his personal activities at the University. Because of the lack of sufficient time and space, however, this is not only impossible but impractical.

Most of the Negro undergraduates now attending UNC are convinced that, as students, their primary responsibility is to attain a high degree of intellectual development.

On the whole, the professors have aided this development by being objective and indifferent. Their refusal to allow personal feelings to enter the class or to treat Negroes as "special students" has been a major asset in our adjustment to regular campus life.

The one instance where an instructor has given Negro students unsolicited and unwarranted guidance has had negative psychological effects on the students. As a result, none of the five Negroes who have been in his class have made a grade of "C" or better.

Assimilation into normal campus life has also been aided by the freedom with which students can participate in campus organizations. David Dansby, who participated in the Honors Program in Political Science, and Thal Elliot, a Goettingen scholar in 1959, were pioneers in the field of student activities.

Thal was secretary of the YMCA in 1959 when there were only four Negro undergraduates. David was a delegate to the State Student Legislature for two consecutive years. It was through their efforts that the YMCA, the Di-Phi, and student government had their initial experiences with Negroes.

Since that time, Negroes have participated in the Band, the Men's Chorus, the Debate team, the Tar Heel, and the Yack.

The most significant part of a Negro's tenure at UNC is the person-to-person relationships, the friendships gained through the "Y", Lenoir Hall debates, or otherwise. It is from these relationships that lasting friendships are formed. Mutual feelings that transcend race become the rule rather than the exception.

Some relationships are limited by race, but at least a mutual respect can be gained. Person-to-person contacts are best gained by participating in the various student organizations; however, the degree of Negro participation is limited by the small number of Negroes attending the University.

Although assimilation into normal campus life is no longer a problem, it is extremely difficult for a Negro to lose his identity, to forget that he is a Negro.

He might be reminded in a physical education class at All-Star Bowling Lanes when the manager tells him he cannot return when classes are not in session.

Invited to lunch by some of his classmates, he might be asked to show his student identification card upon entering the restaurant, or if they choose the wrong restaurant, he might be asked to leave. If he eats in Lenoir Hall, the ensuing conversations are inevitably on the "race problem."

Dormitory life has progressed with a minimum of incidents since Negroes were moved from the second floor of Steele Hall (the Book Exchange) into regular dormitories in 1958. After living with two white students this semester, I am convinced that a serious mistake is made when Negroes are forced to room with Negroes.

This practice deprives both whites and Negroes of a tremendous educational experience. Indeed, the recent decision to delete the word "race" from dormitory preference cards was a step in the right direction. This should give Negro students the opportunity to be fully integrated into dormitory life.

Basically, there is little difference between the life of Negroes at UNC and that of other students. Student leaders, the NAACP, and other concerned groups and individuals have made significant strides towards the achievement of equal opportunity in Chapel Hill. In 1959, Franklin Street was the epitome of the Old South, today it is the epitome of a South in transition.

Still, we must not become so contented with our gains that we forget that there are only 13 Negro undergraduates at UNC, that the athletic department refuses to recruit Negro athletes, that discrimination continues at Memorial Hospital.

We wonder why the University continues to cling to these vestiges of a decadent past.

National Student Identity: Is It Fact Or Fiction

By STEPHEN BINGHAM
Yale Daily News

It is commonplace today to read of the results of student action — Eisenhower cancels trip to Japan, Nixon is bombarded by rocks in Venezuela, violence shakes universities in Turkey, Mexico, Algeria.

Such activity has been soundly condemned by the American press, with valid justification, most believe. Behind the ostensible political ramifications of these student uprisings lies a strong sense of national student identity which many have charged is lacking in the United States.

It was 16 years ago that a group of American students, returning from a World Student Congress, decided that the American student community should combine in a national student union which would provide the collegian with a national and international voice, while at the same time aiding individual campus student activities.

Crucial Campus Role

Out of such a conviction grew the United States National Student Association, with a current membership of about 400 campuses. It is a non-partisan organization whose success depends almost entirely on the programs at member schools and the amount of individual participation in the plethora of multi-school conferences.

If the Senior Advisory Board wished to compare fraternities situations at different universities to determine whether any changes might be made at Yale, it could ask the United States Information Service, a subdivision of NSA, for the pertinent information.

USNSA recognized from the start that it would be impossible to bind together any large number of colleges and universities. One of the qualities of the American college is its autonomy and individual character.

Student Forum

Once each year, the mammoth organization is brought together for a two-week Congress. Over 600 delegates from most of the member schools will go to the University of Indiana this year.

The primary, although not publicized purpose of the Congress is to provide a forum for student ideas from the entire country to be heard. Incidental to this is the formation of legislation stating stands which the Association takes and action which it should conduct. This is the most widely known of NSA's functions and has been duly criticized.

The argument against such delegate action is that the students in no sense represent the campuses which sent them and even less do they represent American student opinion since only a small minority of American colleges are members of the Association.

Limited Representation

At the last Congress, it was voted to amend the Constitution to read "We, the members of the national union of students . . ." instead of "We, the students of the United States . . .," a move clearly limiting its representation.

Although the campus coordinator and/or student delegate to the Congress can bring back something substantive to his school from the Congress, it is not much. For this USNSA is very severely criticized.

The activist can point to an organization such as the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, currently registering Negro voters in the South. He asks why USNSA is not able to carry out similar programs. The prime factor is that USNSA has never been given such a mandate; nor is it likely that it will ever.

It is an associaton whch exists solely for the benefit of indivdual members. Each college can get as little or as much out of NSA as it wants.

'Seven Capital Sins' Of Interest As Morality Plays For Modern Times

By JOHN MEDLIN

"Seven Capital Sins" is an entertaining collection of little morality plays for modern times playing at the Rialto theater in Durham. The film is made up of seven short dramas, each taking as its theme one of the seven deadly sins. In quality they range all the way from admirable to pretty deadly.

Best of the lot — at any rate, the wildest — is "Anger," written and directed by Eugene Ionesco, whose "Rhinoceros" was recently produced by the Carolina Playmakers.

Ionesco Madness

Spiced with the unique tang of Ionesco madness, "Anger" begins on a note of insufferable optimism, with Parisians chirping "Bon dimanche" at each other, bestowing bouquets on total stangers, and generally finding illimitable silver linings everywhere.

Overheard on the sidewalk is the comment that so-and-so "is quite happy now; he's getting used to his paralysis." The viewer may wonder if an eighth sin called Idiocy hasn't slipped in somewhere.

But when a number of urban husbands ranging from an old cripple to an Orthodox priest find simultaneous flies in their soup, anger appears on the scene and all hell breaks loose. Beginning with soup flung in rage, catastrophes mount at a geometrical rate, and a television newscaster cheerily announces the end of the world.

'Envy' Dull

At the other extreme, "Envy" is dull and trite. An improbable-looking hotel maid goes about envying the jewels and glamor of a film star staying at the hotel. When she is not envying, she is repulsing the advances of the waiter, the owner of the hotel, and glamorous star herself, only to discover that there is a lot less to covet than she thought.

Nondescript

"Gluttony," "Laziness," and, disappointingly, "Lust" are all about as nondescript as "Envy." Despite their general inferiority, however, all three exhibit excellent photography. A delightfully daffy old hag and a volcanic car enliven the monotony of constant chewing in "Gluttony," and "Lust" is saved, not by any lurid examples, but by an engaging small boy who smokes eucalyptus cigarettes.

"Laziness" is about a well-to-do man who can't even exert himself enough to make love. The high spot of this unlikely little fantasy comes when the man discovers, to his horror, that his shoelace is untied.

Finally, the inveterate and eye-strained foreign-film fan will praise the excellently legible English subtitles.

As a whole, "Seven Capital Sins" seems to suffer from the sin of belaboring the point. The gluttons are just too gluttonous to be acceptable, even in suspension-of-disbelief comedy. And nobody, but nobody, is too lazy to take advantage of the situation our friend in "Laziness" finds himself in.

However, "Pride," "Anger," and to a lesser extent, "Greed," are well worth the price of admission. All the vignettes show flashes of that European sense of humor which seems to take the obvious one step further into a sort of antithesis of sublety.

In "Pride," a woman and man make love in a department store stockroom. When she tells him something to the effect that she has lost her head, the camera switches to a nude female dummy whose head falls off.

This same touch is seen in "Gluttony" when Valentin leaps from the car to gather some fruit, as it continues to rattle down the road. He is able to run back to it and hop in with a minimum of effort.

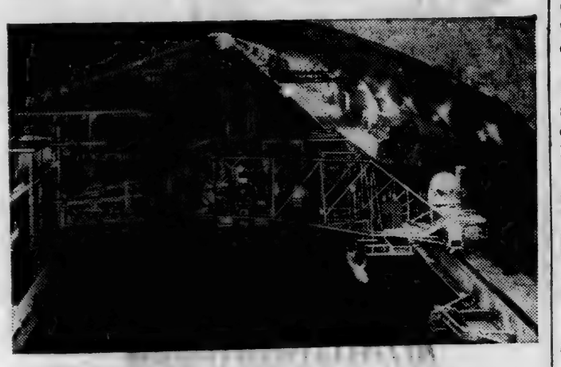
under one system of control," and are not succeeding, he said. The new nations of the world do not want to submit to any foreign power, he stated.



The U. S. seeks to create a "world community of peaceful states, each free to develop its own future within the framework of its own culture and its own history, each dedicated to concepts of individual and national liberty, each willing to defend its independence against totalitarian enemies, external or internal, overt or covert."

The success or failure of the U. S. in this objective will depend on a number of factors, he continued. The U. S. must realize its limitations and not attempt to shape the world to its own liking, it must seek to understand the new movements that are "lighting the hopes" of the underdeveloped world, it must understand the uses, limitations and dangers of military power, it must understand the purposes and priorities of foreign aid programs, and it must "come to grips" with the need to "improve and strengthen our own society."

The way in which these crucial questions are answered, he said, "will be decisive of for centuries to come."

The David Taylor Model Basin—a complex of four laboratories occupying 186 acres in a desirable suburb of Washington, D. C.—is an advanced facility for fundamental and applied research into SUBMARINE, SURFACE SHIP, AIRCRAFT and MISSILE design concepts; applied mathematics and operations research; and the design and development of related instrumentation. Each of these laboratories—HYDROMECHANICS, AERODYNAMICS, STRUCTURAL MECHANICS and APPLIED MATHEMATICS—is supported by some of the most advanced (and oftentimes only) facilities of their kind. There are large Towing Basins—one more than half-a-mile long for prolonged towing, another for testing hydrofoil and hydroskimmers at high speeds, and still another for generating violent environmental conditions . . . high-speed computer systems . . . means for conducting R & D on submarine structures at great depths . . . a wide range of vibration generators for ship structures . . . several wind tunnels ranging from subsonic to hypersonic velocities . . . and especially-equipped sea-going laboratories for full scale study in the field of weapons effects, vibrations, acoustics, flow, etc.

Thus, The Model Basin offers outstanding career development opportunities in each of these four laboratory areas. Planned professional development programs provide financial assistance and every encouragement to obtain advanced degrees. Several local colleges and universities are close by, and participate in these programs . . . with many classes conducted right at The Model Basin.

All career positions include the many real benefits of Career Civil Service . . . 3 weeks paid vacation (4 weeks after three years), 8 paid holidays and 13 days sick leave each year, partly-paid group life and medical insurance, and unusually favorable retirement policies.

BOOKS FOR THE JUNE GROOM

Yes, we said groom.

June brides are lovely creatures, and goodness knows we wouldn't say a harsh word to 'em, but when we think of all the showers and shindigs they get before they lead some poor chap to the halter, it does seem that us gents aren't working the mating racket properly.

And when we look around us, and see all the books that the masculine heart longs for, we positively weep.

And so we say HURRAH FOR THE GROOM! Let's give him a shower, let's give him a book! Now that we think of it, let's give him lots of books, from you-know-who.

BASEBALL HAS ARRIVED again and, declining in interest to pro football or not, a full summer lies ahead for the fan who enjoys following the stars of America's national pastime.

But the baseball fan may find it difficult to follow his favorite player if he does not check up on the winter trades. Many changes were made, and sometimes it's hard to imagine the diamondmen with their new teams. Such as:

Bill Skowron, a Yankee since goodness knows when, at first base for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Luis Aparicio playing shortstop for Baltimore.

Pete Runnels playing second base at Houston.

Duke Snider at New York — Mets, that is.

Gus Triandos catching for Detroit.

Al Smith in the outfield for Baltimore.

Dick Stuart at first base for Boston.

And Dick Groat fielding grounders for St. Louis.

Perhaps, at heart, the most difficult situation to imagine concerns not the players with their new teams, but the managers with their old teams. To be specific: Casey Stengel now in his second year as manager of the New York Mets.

No further comment.

Grady Cranks Time Machine

"EVER WONDER HOW the great figures of history would have sounded had they given interviews to sports writers? Sandy Grady of the Philadelphia Bulletin did, and here are his results from cranking up the time machine.

Napoleon exiled to Elba — "Sure, this is a shock, but I'll be back in the big leagues yet, boys. Remember, I had the club in the first place and woulda won the pennant if I had any bench at Waterloo."

Lee before Gettysburg — "Sure, the club's tired but we're up for the playoff. I'll pitch Longstreet, Hill and Early, with Pickett in relief. We're just playing 'em one at a time."

Jesse James — "Yes, I'm going for 100 steals this year, if my horse's legs hold out."

Hannibal after crossing the Alps — "One of the worst road trips of my experience. Frankly, the commissioner had better improve the schedule or some of the guys are quitting."

Gen. Custer after Little Big Horn — "You can't win against a shooting percentage like they had. It was a comedy of arrows."

George Washington at inauguration — "It's a real challenge to take over a new franchise like this. I can only promise the fans we'll have a young, hustling team that will build for the future."

Tennis Teams Have Won Share

STATISTICS DEPARTMENT:

Most tennis enthusiasts in the area know that Carolina tennis teams have won their share of matches during the past few years. But do they know exactly how successful the Tar Heel netters have been?

For example, UNC has won five straight ACC titles, four of them coming under Coach Don Skakle. Going into yesterday's tilt with Duke, Skakle-coached teams have posted a 75-13 over-all record and a 30-0 mark in conference action.

Incidentally, the Tar Heel winning trend is not recent, because since 1909 UNC netters have won 602, lost 72 and tied nine.

Will Beatty Ride In Derby?

Jim Beatty, called by his former coach Dale Ranson "the world's greatest distance runner," was laughing that his feats aren't always believed.

Jim, now a resident of California, was speaking at the "North Carolina Hall of Fame" banquet in Charlotte. He told of appearing before a class of third graders.

Jockey-sized Jim, who grinds giants to size, had been introduced as a superb track man; a holder of many track records, a track immortal.

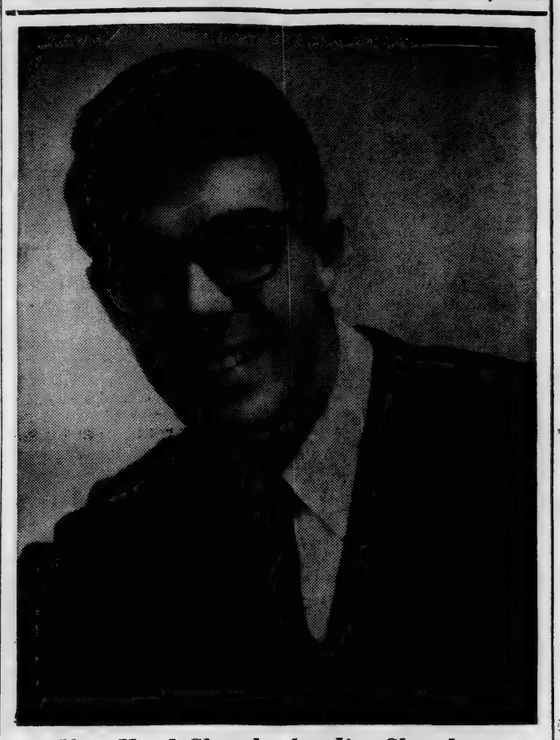
One eight-year-old in the back of the room raised his hand. He asked with solemn interest: "Mr. Beatty what's the name of the horse you ride."

Golfers Take Second Place In Tri-Meet

By HUGH STEVENS

Wake Forest's golfers topped UNC and Duke in their 54-hole stroke play tournament by adding to their lead in the final round Friday.

The Deacons, who took a 16-stroke lead into the last 18 holes, fired a team total of 535 for the victory. The Tar Heels had a 542 total and the Blue Devils 546. Friday's round was played over the long Duke Course.



The four-stroke margin over Duke posted by the Tar Heels enabled them to finish second in the tournament by a single stroke. Team totals for three rounds were 1,602 for Wake Forest, against 1,628 for Carolina and 1,629 for Duke.

Individual honors for the tournament went to Rich Basset of Duke and Jay Sigel of Wake Forest, both of whom posted total scores of 220, five over par. Low man for the Tar Heels was Skip Tucker, whose 228 gave him a tie for third place with Ken Folkes of the Deacons.

John Abernathy of Duke was low man for the final 18 holes with an even par 71.

Willard Goes Today As Heels Meet Pack

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina and NC State, two teams which are still trying to get started in the ACC race, will go about the business of their first baseball encounter of the season this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium.

Spence Willard will get his third starting assignment in eight days for Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels, who, in the coach's own words, have been "throwing away too many good scoring chances."

In their last four games, the Tar Heels have left a total of 41 men stranded on the bases. Eleven of them came in a 5-2 loss to Virginia last Saturday.

They enter the game against the Wolfpack with high hopes of breaking out of their current batting slump, and with the knowledge that, if they don't, it will probably write an end to what slim title hopes the team still holds.

The loss to Virginia was the fourth ACC setback in seven outings for UNC. Wake Forest, going after its second straight baseball championship, is now 6-1, and shows no signs of letting up. Even if the Tar Heels sweep through their last seven games undefeated, the pennant is attainable only if the Deacons lose at least three of their last seven.

The visiting Wolfpack is right behind UNC in the league standings with a 2-4 mark. Like UNC, State's only hope rests on a Wake Forest crack-up.

Willard, a right hander with a 2-1 record, went the distance in defeating Duke last Tuesday, but was the victim of unearned runs at Virginia Saturday, when he was tagged with his first defeat.

"Willard went only six innings against Virginia and he throws with an easy motion," said Rabb in explaining his starting choice. "I hope to use him again on Saturday, against Virginia."

Bill Dannemann is Rabb's tentative starter against Maryland here on Friday. Bill Haywood is counted upon for relief work in all three games, though he may get the starting call against the Terps.

Rod And Gun Competition Here Today

The Seventh Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet pits outdoorsmen from UNC, State Duke and Wake Forest against each other today here and at the Durham Wildlife Club.

Competition in archery, bait casting, target rifle and trap shooting begins at 2 p.m. Trap shooting will be held at the Durham Wildlife Club, the other three events will take place here.

Last year, UNC and State tied for the championship, and the two schools are expected to provide most of the competition again this year.

In case of rain contestants are asked to call the Intramural office (942-1758) after 9 a.m. for information as to whether the Meet will be held as scheduled or Tuesday May, 7.

EXTRA INNINGS . . . . . Co-captain Dave Pope underwent surgery at Memorial Hospital recently to correct a detached retina on the lower half of his right eye. First notice of the trouble came last Wednesday at the Georgia Southern game. Coach Rabb was about to call on Pope for pinch-hitting duty when the senior outfielder reported that he couldn't get his right eye to focus.

MORGAN SUES!

Dave Morgan, business manager of the Daily Tar Heel, announced yesterday he is suing the Daily Tar and its sports editor, Curry Kirkpatrick, for printing "false statements that have severely damaged my reputation."

Morgan, seemingly in a state of shock over statements attributed to him in an article appearing in Sunday's Tar Heel, said also he would refuse paying Kirkpatrick his weekly check of 38 cents for the remainder of the year.

"I have talked this over with my lawyer, Tony Harrington, and we have decided to take this action," Morgan said in his statement. "I was greatly offended by the untrue things that piker Kirkpatrick said about me. This kid is nothing but a lying, cheating thief, and I greatly resent his malicious defamation of my character."

"My attorney has assured me he will take this to the highest court in the land if necessary," Morgan concluded.

Kirkpatrick, told of Morgan's action, was not bitter.

"Just because he controls the purse strings around here doesn't mean I'm going to take this thing lying down," he said. "I need that 38 cents to pay off my bookies. This just looks to me like Morgan is shooting off his big mouth again. Besides, the editors will back me up."

Editors Garry Blanchard and Dave Ethridge, currently engaged in a lawsuit case against Kirkpatrick for a "derogatory" cartoon featuring them which appeared in an earlier issue, could not be reached for comment.

Wayne King, DTH managing editor, stated yesterday that "neither Morgan or Kirkpatrick would know the truth if it bit them on the leg."

Bill Wombatt, DTH Invective Editor, called the whole thing "a ridiculous stunt" by Chuck Erickson to get favorable publicity for himself and his department."

Duke Hosts Mural Games For Big Four

UNC goes after its fourth Big Four Sports Day championship today at Duke University when the Tar Heels tangle with NC State, Wake Forest, and Duke on the intramural level.

Competition begins at 1:45 at Card Gym on the Duke Campus for all events except bowling and golf. Bowling participants will meet at Sportland at 1:45 and golfers will tee-off at 11 a.m. at the Duke Golf Course.

UNC is defending champion in three events this year. First place finishes in badminton, handball and horseshoes helped account for an overall second place finish last year just six points behind defending champion N. C. State.

What hurt the Tar Heels most last year was fourth place finishes in golf, softball and volleyball. This year Wim Bilisoly, Dave Wysong and Gene Barrier have attempted to round out representative teams in those sports to bolster UNC point totals.

Managers

Managers for other sports are: Means Davis, handball; Mike Traynor, horseshoes; Larry Edwards, table tennis; Sam Applegate, tennis; Jack Rugheimer, badminton and Joe Garner, bowling.

All of the events will be played on a round robin basis, each team meeting the other. UNC meets Wake Forest in the first round of handball and table tennis competition, Duke in horseshoes and softball, and State in tennis, volleyball badminton and bowling.

In case of rain all participants are requested to call the Intramural Dept. after 9 a.m. to get information as to whether competition has been set back until Tuesday, May 7.

NASA To Give 10 Grants To Technologists

Winners To Begin Study Next Year

Winners of National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) grants to the University of North Carolina were announced yesterday by Kenan Professor C. Hugh Holman, Dean of the Graduate School.

Ten full-time pre-doctoral graduate students in space-related sciences and technology have received the grants.

The grants are worth $4,400 apiece for a full year of study beginning in September, 1963. The fellowships will be renewable up to a period of three years upon maintenance of academic qualifications in accordance with the University.

Recipients of the fellowships are: Oliver Clayton Todd of Chesapeake, Va., a chemistry student who will be in his first year of graduate study here next year; Lawrence Arnold Coleman, Meridien, Miss., who will begin graduate study in physics next year;

Joseph George Caldwell, Pittsburgh, Pa., currently a UNC graduate student in statistics; Mickey Dorian Miller, Hampshire, W. Va., who will begin graduate study in psychology next year; Thomas Allan Dowling, Omaha, Neb., currently a UNC graduate student in mathematics;

Nelson Franklin Page of Salisbury, currently a UNC graduate student in mathematics; Jeanie Byrd McMillin, Spartanburg, S.C., currently a UNC graduate student in biochemistry; Mrs. Anne Bowden McCrarry of Carrboro, currently a UNC graduate student in zoology;

Peter Hallock Campbell, Swarthmore, Pa., currently a UNC graduate student in botany; and Gary Curtiss Allen, Portland, Ore., who will do graduate work in geology.

5 Campused By Council

Four students received campusments, ranging from three to eight days, for violations of the Campus Code, in cases tried recently by the Women's Council.

In the first case, a student was 37 minutes late after a 2 a.m. late permission had been granted. The case was referred to the students House Council. Although a penalty for lateness is doubled on the night of a late permission, the actual minutes of lateness are not doubled. Therefore, since the student was less than an hour late, the case was returned to the House Council.

The second case involved two students who shined a flashlight out of their dormitory window during an attempted panty raid. Both were found guilty and given campusments of eight and three days, respectively. The difference in sentences was due to the degree and type of participation.

The third case was a student's sixth House Council offense for failure to observe a campusment. The student was found guilty and given a campusment of four days.

The final case concerned a student's sixth and seventh House Council offenses, twelve-minute and two-minute lateness, The defendant was found guilty and received a seven-day campusment.

'Lack Of Site' Reason

Sigma Chi Derby Will Not Be Held

The lack of a site has forced the cancellation of this year's Sigma Chi Derby, committee chairman Troy Smith reported yesterday.

"Construction in Kenan Stadium, the athletic department's refusal to grant us permission for the use of one of their fields and the prohibitive cost of erecting bleachers on the intramural field have left us with no place to hold the Derby," Smith commented.

Smith said "The intramural department had given us permission to have the Derby on its field adjacent to Woollen Gym. Dean of Men William Long later told us that if we had it there, we would have to set up bleachers and a retaining wall to separate the spectators from the participants to keep things from getting out of hand. We found that the cost of this construction would be prohibitive."

Smith and Sigma Chi fraternity president, Bob Murphy stated that next year's derby would be held in Kenan Stadium and that ads for this year's event would carry over. They noted however, that if requested refunds would be made.

Bowles: Indians Still Have Faith

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

The topic of discussion for Chester Bowles on Monday afternoon turned quickly to India, undoubtedly the subject uppermost in the mind of the newly appointed ambassador.

Bowles said that he had been back to India five times since he was ambassador there in 1953. "If you went there for the first time you would think the poverty overwhelming," he said, "but if you had been there before as I have you would be impressed with the great progress that has been made." Bowles reeled off a long list of figures that impressed the idea on his listeners.

"There is more confidence in India now about the future than there was a decade ago," the Abassador-designate said. "Ten years ago everything was moving rapidly, but the average Indian could see very little change," he continued. "Now you can see great changes."

He cited the $18 per year increase in the average income as an example of this. Bowles said that he was particularly impressed with the number of bicycles that could be seen in the villages in recent years.

Bowles recounted some of the stories about himself that were current among the people during his term as Ambassador. One tale told of the Russian Ambassador arriving at a formal dinner in a bullet-proof car and with a body-guard, while Bowles drove blithely up on a bicycle.

"Of course I never went to a dinner on a bicycle in my life," he said. "I never had time." The cause of such stories, Bowles thought, was that "they so desperately want us to be 'good,' want us to be right.

"It's the same all over the world. Jefferson is known to most college-age kids everywhere," he said.

"People know what we should be like, and when we aren't the 'kickback' is all the more sharp," he continued. Americans have the same reactions about India, he said. Most people in the U.S. associate India with Gandhi, and they were very disillusioned when India went into Goa.

Bowles commented on the attitude of Americans toward the 'emerging' nations. "Nations like India are concerned with trying to make things happen, while America seems to be concerned with keeping things from happening.

"We are a rich and powerful nation and feel like we have a stake in the status quo," he said. "Consequently the nations that want to be friends with us are often under the control of despots who would like to keep things the way they are.

"The American who has two cars in the garage and a large and comfortable house may feel that change is bad. He would like it to be orderly and nonviolent.

"Most of the remote areas of the world want change to the extent that they will resort to violence to attain it, however," he continued.

"The question is how we—a privileged people—can relate to an underprvleged world," he stated. Bowles thought that the amazing thing about the world situation was not the amount of violence, but the lack of it.

There is less hatred and bitterness than might be expected between the new nations and the old Colonial powers, he said. 32 new nations have been created in the last few years. Their formation should be compared with the violence of the Chinese and Russian Revolutions in the early part of the century, he continued.

He told of a discussion in Nairobi with Kenyatta, considered to be one of the most violent of African revolutionaries. When Bowles asked him what he wanted most, Kenyatta replied that he wanted to attain freedom most of all, but freedom that "would not scare the Europeans aways." "There is an extraordinary amount of tolerance for Europeans, in the African nations." Bowles said.

"The southern third can explode in a bloody mess, but on the whole changes have taken place with little violence."

"Can we adjust to a world of change?" he asked. "The world will get along without us if we don't—and I don't necessarily mean that it will be blown up if we don't. It just means that we wouldn't be relevant."

Bowles was optimistic about the evident change that was taking place in the attitudes among Americans abroad. He also praised the efforts of the Peace Corps in approaching the problems facing the underprivileged nations of the world.

"Too often the people of these nations have felt that the U.S. was condescending in its attempts to aid them," he said. "If they feel you respect them, you have a warmth, and it grows. THEN you can disagree and disagree quite vigorously."

Parents' Day Schedule Set This Sunday

Address By Friday Highlights Event

Open house in classroom buildings, residence halls and other facilities will highlight Parents' Day this Sunday.

A public address by Consolidated University President William C. Friday, in Memorial Hall at 2:30 p.m., and music concerts will be highlights of the day's activities. The UNC Glee Club and the Woman's College Chorus will present a joint concert in Hill Hall at 3:15 p.m., followed by a concert by the University band at 4 p.m. on the campus lawn.

Air Force ROTC units will pass in review at Fetzer Field at 1 p.m. A faculty reception will be held on the lawn of Graham Memorial at 1:30.

The following academic buildings will be open to visitors from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.: air science building, Ackland Art Museum, department of music in Hill Hall; department of radio-television-motion pictures in Swain Hall; school of education in Peabody Hall; school of journalism in Howell Hall.

Coker Building (botany); Wilson Hall (zoology); Dey Hall (modern foreign languages); Pharmacy Building; Venable Hall (chemistry), and Phillips Hall (physics).

Major points of interest also include the Morehead Planetarium, which will present three shows during the afternoon and evening; the Morehead Sundial; Morehead Patterson Bell Tower; Coker Arboretum; Graham Memorial Student Union; swimming pool at Woollen Gymnasium; the Forest Theater and Battle Park.

Open house will be observed in dormitories, Fraternities and sororities.

Alpha Phi Omega, the service fraternity at UNC, will maintain information booths at South Building and Graham Memorial Student Union for the assistance of visitors.

Meeting Here Said 'Unique'

UNC will host "one of the most unique conferences on human relations ever to be held in the South," according to conference administrator, Harry DeLung.

The meeting, which begins tomorrow, has limited delegates and speakers to natives of the 13 Southern states. Students and young people from over 50 colleges and universities and 30 organizations will attend.

"Although the topic will be human relations," said DeLung, "An open forum in which all opinions are expressed will be encouraged.

"We expect a broad range of ideologies among the delegates; from Mississippi, for example, we will have student government officers, young journalists, and students active in Negro voter regisration."

The four keynote speeches of the conference will be open to all UNC students and members of the Chapel Hill community. Dr. J. Clayton Fever, Chairman of the Religion department at the University of Oklahoma will give the first address Thursday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall. Dr. Richard Bardolph, a professor at the Woman's College, will speak Friday at 7:30 p.m.

Ambassador Turned Away At Cafeteria

Liberia To Protest Refusal

By CHARLES HOBBS and MARGARET ANN RHYMES

RALEIGH—"Did you want a job as a chef or waitress?"

This is the question that greeted the UN Ambassador from Liberia—one of the leading female UN statesmen—when she was refused service at the Sir Walter Hotel dining room here yesterday. She was earlier turned away from the S&W Cafeteria.

Dr. Angie Brooks told reporters that a formal protest will be made from the Liberian Embassy in Washington and that she is considering taking the matter to the United Nations. "I have never been refused service in any country," she said.

"We tried to avoid an incident at all costs, but the matter was provoked," said Al Lowenstein, UNC graduate and Assistant Professor of Political Science at N.C. State, who accompanied the group.

Also present were Grant Blair, co-editor of the N.C. State newspaper, the Technician, and Joseph Outland, Dr. Brooks' nephew.

The S&W Cafeteria closed its doors 45 minutes early after Blair asked the manager if the group would be served. Manager John Lineberger told him that the cafeteria "held the right to serve who they wanted."

Dr. Brooks requested that the refusal be given in writing. "I have diplomatic immunity," she said, "and I would like the courtesy of the manager to tell me to leave. Then I will leave."

The request was refused.

The group then moved to the Sir Walter where they had been told Negro Aldermen had been served.

"We do not serve Negroes," said Manager Arthur Buddenhagen when they arrived and added: "Did you want jobs as a chef or waitress?" The Ambassador presented her identification cards but was told by the manager that "the 48 states still have the right to serve whom they wish."

"It was obviously a put-up job," he told the press later.

Dr. Brooks spoke Sunday at N.C. State on a program with Ambassador-designate to India Chester Bowles. She addressed the Shaw University student body yesterday morning.

Dr. Brooks was chairman of the UN committee for Non-Self Governing Areas in 1956. She is currently the Liberian Assistant Secretary of State. Liberia became a self-governing republic in 1847.

World News In Brief

Investigating Team Sees Haiti Leader

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti (UPI) —A five-man investigating team from the Organization of American States arrived Tuesday to keep the heated dispute between Haiti and the Dominican Republic from flaring into open warfare.

The five-nation committee met with President Francois Duvalier Tuesday afternoon as several hundred Haitians demonstrated in the streets in support of the government.

The city was completely calm. There was no outward signs of military preparations. Political tensions of the weekend appeared to have eased considerably.

CENTO Hears Rusk

KARACHI, Pakistan (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk said Tuesday the entire free world is "still under the gun" of a wide-ranging Communist menace even with the "major threat" from Cuba removed.

Rusk told the opening session of the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) ministers' council that the two major new challenges to world security in the past year were the introduction of Soviet weapons in Cuba and the Communist Chinese attack on India.

Such events over far-flung geographic areas "underline the wide scope of the Communist threat," he said.

"Although the major threat from Cuba has been removed," he said, "all members of the free world are still under the gun."

May Day Boycotted

MOSCOW, Wednesday (UPI) — A U.S. Embassy spokesman said Ambassador Foy D. Kohler and the embassy staff are boycotting the Soviet May Day celebrations today in Red Square in which Cuban Premier Fidel Castro was starred.

It was the first such May Day boycott since the United States established relations with the Soviet Union in 1933.

The spokesman declined to state the official reason for the boycott. However, it was understood to have been sparked by the presense of Castro who took Cuba into the Communist camp under the nose of the United States.

Senate To Rescue

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate forces moved Tuseday to bail out the Post Office Department from deficit troubles and stave off a threatened cut in postal services.

Chairman Olin D. Johnson (D-S.C.), of the Senate Post Office Committee said he would push for passage of legislation that would raise parcel post rates to bring in an additional $70 to $100 million a year in revenues.

At the same time, Johnson told a reporter he hoped the Senate Appropriations Committee would restore a substantial portion of the $92 million which the House voted to cut from the post office budget for the fiscal year starting July 1.

Harriman Reorts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Undersecretary of State W. Averell Harriman brought President Kennedy Tuesday what he called reassurance that Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev intends to abide by his 1961 Vienna commitment on neutrality for Laos.

"He specifically asked me to tell the President that he had every intenton of fulfilling the agreement with him," Harriman said after reporting to the President for about 50 minutes on his talg in Moscow last week with Khrushchev.

Harriman said Khrushchev agreed to have the Sovet ambassador in the Laotian capital of Vientane "work very closely" with the U.S. and Brtish Ambassadors to restore calm to the area.

Congressmen Say Religious Issue Blocks Education Bill

By PETE WALES

(Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series on the National Student Federal Aid to Education Conference last weekend in Washington by Delegate Pete Wales.)

Most Congressmen agree that the religious issue is going to be the biggest obstacle to President Kennedy's National Education Improvement Act of 1963, H.R. 3000, now in subcommittees in the House.

"Federal aid to education is largely doomed by the religious issue," Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D-N.C.), an outspoken advocate of federal funds for education, told students last Friday.

Several other Congressmen said that civil rights and the states rights vs. federal control issue would also be brought up in debate on the education bill.

Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.), Rep. John Brademas (D-Ind.) and Rep. Leo O'Brien (D-N.Y.) all said Friday that these two issues would not be as important as the religious issue.

"The trouble is that there is no formed opinion of the people in this country on this issue," Rep. Brademas said. "We need more discussions among the people to gain a consensus."

"The religious issue came in last year and helped defeat the education bill (the College Academic Facilities and Scholarship Act)," Rep. O'Brien said. "The NEA (National Education Association) objected and injected the religious issue.

Sen. Edvin, like many others in Congress, feels that federal aid to parochial schools would be unconstitutional.

"One of the greatest rights we have in America is that we are not forced to pay taxes to support religions in which we don't believe," he said.

"It would be a great tragedy for the Church to have to rely directly or indirectly on the federal treasury."

Sen. Ervin brought up the amendment last year in the Senate excluding funds from parochial institutions and it passed. The bill later failed to pass the House because of the same issue.

Sen. Ervin also felt that aid to higher education should go directly to the institutions needing aid and that funds for secondary and elementary education should be administered through the states.

Rep. Thompson agreed. The problem, he felt, will be with the "states righters" who oppose federal aid in any form.

"States rights is a sacred cow that can't be violated, like God, mother and the family dog."

"The same people who scream about federal aid are also screaming about state aid to education," Rep. Brademas said.

Rep. O'Brien felt that the issues of states rights and civil rights were both being brought up by people who were opposed to federal aid to education anyway and didn't really have a stake in these two issues.

The conservatives throw in a civil rights rider to a bill and the southerner', some of whom are backing the bill, are forced to vote against the amended bill."

Rep. O'Brien pointed out that in the bill for aid to medical and dental schools, passed two weeks ago by the House, a civil rights rider was defeated and the bill passed because people realized the "true intention" of those proposing the rider.

Rep. O'Brien said that three of the four Negroes in the House voted against the rider so that the good part of the bill might pass.

Congressmen differed widely about what portions of the current bill would be passed.

"It's too early to tell," Rep. Thompson said. "The section on continuing and adult education has high hopes—also the sections on library expansion and improvement to higher education."

"I doubt seriously whether any bill will pass this session of Congress except the medical and dental bill which has already passed the House," Sen. Ervin said.

Sen. B. E. Jordan (D-N.C.) said that funds for construction for higher education would probably be the only thing to pass Congress this year.

Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D-N.C.) and Rep. L. H. Fountain (D-N.C.) were both non-committal. Rep. Fountain said that he had not yet read the bill.

Rep. O'Brien said that only the sections on higher education similar to the provisions of last year's defeated bill have much chance of passing.

Safety Officer Keeps Tab On Radiation

By MAT FRIEDMAN

At the west end of the long runway at Chapel Hill Airport lies a small, harmless looking fenced-in area. It is fnat you might call UNC's "radioactive graveyard.

About once a month, Radiation Safety Officer Raymond C. Pfleger will bury there carefully wrapped packages of some "hot" material from one of the 52 laboratories on campus using radioactive materials. It is his job to see that these materials are used safely and disposed of properly.

Mr. Pfleger's three-man office makes certain the radioisotope program is conducted within the regulations of the Atomic Energy Commission. "Misuse can be fatal," he says, "and this is what we try to avoid. Last year the University received the highest rating the AEC gives which means we are in 'complete' compliance with AEC regulations."

Radioactive materials are used on campus in many extremely useful and diversified ways. Physicians in Memorial Hospital may use them to locate and destroy cancer cells and they may "tag" compounds in the body with them; that is, place a radioactive material in the body and trace it to see where it goes. Iodine 131, for example, is used in this way to detect abnormalities of the thyroid gland.

They may also be used, as is being done here, to study cosmic rays for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, or, as Dr. Henry Thomas in chemistry is doing, to study their effects on various clays all over the world. Dr. Thomas' work may help find new and better ways to bury radioactive materials.

Mr. Pfleger's assistant, Charles Northcutt, makes sure that every area using these materials is checked at least once a month. Samples are brought back to the lab and examined with $25,000 worth of equipment to see that they are being used safely and with no danger of atmospheric contamination. Up to now, the department has a perfect safety record.

"We try to provide proper disposal for all radioactive materials," says Mr. Pfleger. "We dispose either by burial or incineration depending on what is being discarded. For example, if an animal from the medical school which has been contaminated in experiments is not big to incinerate, we can bury it. We carry certain things to the burial area in tin cans and other things in lead. It all depends on the material."

He points out that most objects are wrapped in plastic when they are buried in order to minimize escape of radiation. They are buried, in accordance with government regulations, at a minimum depth of four feet and a minimum distance of six feet apart. The entire area at the airport is about one quarter of an acre.

The buried materials will remain radioactive essentially forever, he says, but with decreasing activity due to their "half-life."

This means that a given material will undergo radioactive decay in such a way that over one-half-life period of time, the amount of activity will be decreased by one-half its initial amount. Therefore as time goes on, the quantity of radioactive material gets smaller and smaller.

Mr. Pfleger notes that since he came to the University in 1960, the amount of radioactive materials used here has tripled. He estimates that at least $20,000 a year is spent for their purchase, but sees them as very useful additions to science and feels there is no danger in their use, as long as it is done properly.

Mr. Pfleger points out that the University has a "broad coverage license" which gives it broad range in the purchase and use of radioactive materials. Only institutions with established reputations for safety are given this privilege.

He says that regular air samples are taken to determine the amount of radioactivity in the atmosphere and that to date, the amount of contamination in the Chapel Hill area has been below the national average.

Married and the father of three, Mr. Pfleger has a fallout shelter at his home here. "I know too well what a bomb can do," he says. He estimates that it would be necessary to remain in the shelter for two weeks in the event of an atomic attack. It is partially stocked with food.

The biggest user of radioactive materials on campus, he says, is the Division of Health Affairs. Most of them are purchased from Oakridge, Tenn. laboratories where they are made. Tritium (radioactive hydrogen), Carbon 14, and Copper 64 are three of the more widely used materials here.

The Health Affairs office distributes "radiation film badges" to all people exposed to radiation. These badges note the amount of exposure a person has had over a given period and help prevent them from exceeding the amount set by the AEC. No one here, says Mr. Pfleger, ever exceeds that amount. He points out that a person who receives too much radiation would not become "radioactive" as such, but would only be endangering his own health.

Our Coward-Quotient

Someone knows the identity of the "unknown parties" who turned this past weekend into a $400 spree of senseless destruction.

The question is, will that someone step forward as Campus Safety Officer Arthur Beaumont has requested him to and volunteer any information he has?

Better yet, will the people who wreaked the damage step forward and admit it?

The presumption in this line of thinking, obviously, is that the destruction was the work of some students on this campus. It is not an idle presumption. The evidence indicates that's exactly who it was.

The trail of damage begins outside a fraternity house at Pittsboro Street and Cameron Avenue, where a four-by-four light post was broken off; on to the Carolina Inn, where another light post was ripped off and four other lights smashed.

At Gerrard Hall a metal street lamp was ripped loose. And behind the Book Exchange the light post from the Inn was rammed through the windshield of a parked truck.

Diagonally across the campus, a door frame was ripped out and a water cooler in Bingham Hall was damaged. The trail of debris ends outside Winston Dormitory, where a car parked on the end of the street had its windshield and back window smashed.

As we said, it is not an idle presumption that this damage was done by students—students who, whether they know it or not, left behind several readable sets of finger-prints.

Now the question is: What's our Coward-quotient?

We think it's low — and that the people who know the "unknown parties", or the parties themselves, will step forward and speak up.

Such action will take far more courage than remaining silent will.

Co-op: A Good Risk

A recent series of DTH articles have discussed the problems surrounding the establishment of a student cooperative at UNC.

These articles concentrated on the past year's work toward development of a co-op, the present status of plans for a co-op, and on the problems yet to be solved.

Throughout the studies and plans so far made, however, there has been an inherent assumption which should now be stated and examined. This was that students here would receive financial benefits from a co-op, and that these benefits are needed.

We agree with both these assumptions.

The need factor can scarcely be questioned. Student costs are constantly rising. Next year, dorm rents probably will be raised by $10 a semester. The cost of books, clothing and food also continue to rise, with only Lenoir Hall's 40-cent student special remaining conspicuously constant.

There is little that can be done about dorm rents and tuition. If the legislators who provide UNC's money are willing to discard the low cost principle of public education, students can do little except voice protests. There is no escape from a monopoly situation in public education.

Costs can be cut in the non-institutional expenses of college, however, and the monopoly situation benefitting local merchants can be effectively combatted. A cooperative is the most, if not only, effective way of combatting this situation.

The savings a cooperative would provide would be dependent on many factors and would by no means be automatic. They would depend on adequate capital, careful management, and student support, with the student support dependent on the first two factors.

It should therefore be clearly understood that the establishment of a cooperative would be a risk. A cooperative is a store like all others, and Chapel Hill stores have gone out of business before.

Any student money involved in such a venture could therefore be lost in part or whole.

The potential benefits, however, are worth the risks.

They would provide a remedy to the present situation of students comprising a captive market with only their feet as a means of escape.

It would provide a remedy to the fair-trading of merchandise, by giving refunds on these set prices.

And it would help to eliminate the present antagonism toward town merchants which exists primarily because students have no opportunity for comparative buying in a store which emphasizes discounts and savings.

We do not begrudge high prices to those merchants so oriented, because they are usually justified by high quality.

But there is an alternative:

Establish a cooperative.

We cannot yet endorse any methods of organization but we make the following suggestions:

1. Any cooperative should emphasize savings on books, both new and used. These are the most necessary of student supplies and among the most expensive.

2. Any cooperative should be financed in part by student funds. This would insure both some student control over prices and rebates, and give each student a financial stake in its success.

Overall, we feel that plans for a cooperative should be pushed as fast as possible. Let's work to give ourselves a break.

SG Functions Need To Be Redefined

By CHUCK NEELY

Of late, the expressions, "student autonomy," "self-government," and "student responsibility" have been bandied around rather freely by assorted dignitaries: the Chancellor of the University, the President of the Student Body, and the editors of the Daily Tar Heel. Student autonomy, a rather vague shiboleth at best, has been held up to us as something as inviolate and pure as chaste maidenhood, and as something which must be violated—sometimes—by the University administration.

Taking the outmoded view that one comes to a university to learn, and conceding that one can learn about leadership and human nature through the devious twistings and twinings of student government, we are still drawn to the conclusion that student government can be judged useful only insofar as it proves effective in ameliorating the harsher conditions which surround the "student" at Carolina.

No matter how much its adherents may declaim that student government is a co-curricular instead of an extra-curricular activity, no matter how much one may feel that student government is a useful end in itself, in that it is a crucible for forming future leaders, no matter how old the tradition of "self-government" is at UNC, it still must be remembered that the primary purpose of a university is to supply an education in academic matters, that the experience gained through sudent government can be acquired through debating or study groups, and that the worth of an institution lies not merely in its antiquity, but also in its value to society.

Student government can be a great force for campus improvement. But it will become ineffectual, and indeed will hamstring itself if it persists in claiming that students at the University have complete responsibility for all actions outside of the classroom. This is a fallacious and self-delusory attitude.

Governments, all governments, do not exist just for the sake of governing. They govern so that they may improve the lot of their peoples.

Student government is no exception to this general rule. If student government is to have a raison d'etre, it must work for the betterment of the student body.

The turmoil of the past few weeks have demonstrated that student government assumes a posture of inanity when it charges quixotically at the windmills of the administration. True, the Honor Councils can refuse to enforce violations of the Apartment Rule. But can other needed actions of a positive nature be formulated and enforced by a student government lacking administration support?

Transportation from Craige and Ehringhaus, coed dorms and coed visiting hours, a student cooperative, quiet dorms, all were advocated during this past political campaign by the two major parties. Can these worthy ideals be put into effect without administration support? The obvious answer is no.

Finally, it must be remembered that it is the University which collects the fees which go to support the Yackety-Yack, the Daily Tar Heel, and Student Government. Can the solons meeting weekly in Phi Hall force the administration to collect those funds? Again, the answer is no. But without those funds, student government will die, and with it will die all of its past good, and all of the future good of which it is capable.

What is to be done?

Chancellor Aycock has said that the idea that Student Government is completely autonomous is false. He added that "this notion has always been false. It's false now, and it will continue to be false." The administration has made its point emphatically. Student government must either work with the administration, or not at all.

The sooner Student Government realizes this fact, the sooner it will be able to begin to work to achieve positive action — action that will uplift the campus and add to the proud tradition of student responsibility.

And that, after all, is the real purpose of student government.

Advisor System Approach Needs To Be Re-Examined

By CLYDE WILSON

One of the most notorious failures of the University is the well-known inadequacy of the General College advisor system.

All the many solutions offered (including those of the very enterprising Academic Affairs Committee) are likely to fall short because the weakness of the advisor system is part of a larger and more general failure in communication between faculty and stulents.

The professors look with equal parts of contempt and disappointment at the sockless and madras-shirted students who troop (sometimes) indifferently into their classes. The students look with suspicion and contempt on the stodgy professors who drone irrelevantly into their ears.

Seldom the twain do meet.

It is impossible for one professor to be an advisor in the full sense of the word to more than 100 students. In the past many freshmen have missed opportunities to take advantage of everything the university offered because their advisors lacked time or knowielge to inform them exactly what the jargon of the catalogue means in regard to departments other than their own.

We herewith advance a possible solution to both problems:

Would it be possible to assign each member of the faculty 10, 12, or 15 freshmen to oversee during their first year? The professors could then not only be effective academid advisors, but they could freshmen have missed opportuni-aspects of college adjustment. It is very easy for a freshman to feel like a lonely insignificant being of whose existence the University is not even aware.

The professors could act as orientation counselors for their charges and perhaps invite them into their own homes. This program, by having all faculty members participate, would help to bring the separate worlds of professors and students closer together.

What better way to acquire a respect for learning than to associate with learned men? Students would be allowed this association outside the impersonal, artificial situation of the classroom.

(When a professor laments that his students show a lack of the love of learning, he is, after all, admitting failure. It is a part of his job to bring it forth.)

Professors, too, would profit. They would learn more about the students than they ever have before. They would have the opportunity to demonstrate just how deep and sincere their often expressed enthusiasm for the educational process is.

More would be required of them than they have been accustomed to give. They would have to learn more about the University outside their own departments. They would have to give generously of their time. They would have to show a real interest in the students.

Such a program could elevate the intellectual atmosphere of the campus and at the same time draw together the two parts of a university that become more disunited every year.

". . . And Son, Remember, You'll Have A Tradition To Live Up To At Carolina."

Late Permits Needed For Future Jubilees

To the Editors:

If the past Jubilee weekend was intended to initiate an annual weekend affair for the ENTIRE campus, why are the coeds (who do participate in the activities) not permitted late 2 a.m. permission?

For the Germans' weekends, which is an activity of a limited number of persons, there is always late permission on Saturday night. But with a weekend which feasibly could involve everyone — the usual 1 A. M. rule is still in effect. For the CWC dance in March, late permission was also given. This too, concerned a limited number of coeds.

It seems advisable in the future that a successful all-campus weekend, which should be equal to or better than any other, have at least one night with late permission.

Of Pickets And Reds

To The Editors:

Yesterday I saw the S.P.U. boys marching before the College Cafe and I wondered:

1. What audacity possesser them to think that they—mere pip squeek untried college students—had the knowledge required to tell a successful business man how to run his business.

2. Why they thought that they had the right to suggest anything to me or any person. I'll not pay them any mind until they have each one individually proved themselves to be capable men and not misfits. Say another 10 or 15 years, and if they still feel that way then they still will have to show by their successes that they are more than a bunch of crackpots.

3. I ought to find out who they are, get photos of them and send copies to their parents and their home town newspapers.

Yes what right have they to act or speak as they do and what right do I have to speak against them: We both have the legal rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution, and what will happen if the communists take over?

There are no picketers in Russia. If the communists took over they could get rid of such as us as easily as we flush a dead mouse down the toilet.

The communists are fighting a war; look at Laos, Korea, Viet Nam, French Indo-China, Berlin, Hungary and Poland. If we disarm we die.

Life would be hell for us under Communism.

I am firmly convinced that our western civilization can survive for a few more hundred years—long enough to produce a new civilization. But we are going to be in for a very strict time of it until we start liquidating enough communists to convince them of the error of their ways.

Certainly our western civilization is the best thing that has happened thus far in history; let us preserve it.

Certainly we should refrain from making moral judgments of others. Judge not that ye be not Judged. Before you criticize the dust mote in your neighbors eye pick forth the beam from your arm—and so long as we are allowed to go about our religion in peace we should tolerate those of others, but should they try to destroy our way of life we must immediately and thoroughly defeat them.

Report Rakes US Education

"In the Middle West, the high school is a place where the band practices."

That's a typical quote from a new pamphlet by Robert M. Hutchins, President of the Fund for the Republic and perhaps America's best-known educator and educational theorist.

Yet this is only one of the acid comments in the pamphlet by Hutchins, famous as "the man who threw football out of the University of Chicago" when he was president of that institution. He now seems to believe that a good deal of contemporary U. S. educational practice should follow the football out the window.

Higher education bears the brunt of Dr. Hutchin's attack ("American college students aged 22 are about where the European student is at 18 or 19"), but he also levels some sharp criticism at the nation's secondary school system.

"The educational system has steadily deteriorated," Dr. Hutchins says, and has "turned into a program of accomodating the young until we are ready to have them go to work. The object of American education is to get everybody into schools and keep them there as long as possible."

"The freshman and sophomore years in college are a repetition of high-school courses," Hutchins said. While the last two American college years are a kind of specialization "by which one narrows the field of vision." The result is that the American specialist college graduate is a man who "knows less and less about less and less."

Dr. Hutchins added that "If I were to try to locate a single defect in the American character, it is the lack of respect for the mind." And he voiced a certain pessimism about the possibilities of improvement: "The sources of power are mysterious and remote.

"We don't even know how to find the people who are really making the decisions, and if we are lucky enough to identify the office, we would undoubtedly be told that the man who had made the decision is out of town . . . The only thing it is possible to do in a democratic country is keep talking and to seize every opportunity to talk."

Hutchins took issue with recent statements of Dr. James Bryan Conant, President Emeritus of Harvard, who has said that 85 per cent of school children are destined to learn "marketable skills" or useful trades rather than study the liberal arts.

Hutchins said that "Dr. Conant knows perfectly well that by the time they graduate the skills will be unmarketable. Either the skill will not be in demand at all, or it will be in demand at an entirely different level." Hutchins continued, "What is wanted from education is not a miscellaneous ragbag of remedies or helpful hints for current situations, because the one thing you know is that those situations are not going to remain current. . . . The job of education is to train the mind to cope with new situations and new complications, to develop critical judgments of new problems as they present themselves for solutions."

One University Defended

By JAY JENKINS
The Charlotte Observer

RALEIGH — Why is it necessary that North Carolina have only one state university?

That question, put by the House Committee on Higher Education, produced one of the most effective speeches during the 1963 General Assembly.

At the committee's request, Dr. William C. Archie, director of the State Board of Higher Education, undertook to answer it.

Once Archie had done so, the committee could hardly wait to stamp its overwhelming approval on the concept of a single state university as contained in the omnibus higher education bill.

Under the concept, only the University of North Carolina could offer the doctorate degree.

That bill also provides ways for UNC to expand to new campuses, boosts community colleges in Charlotte, Wilmington and Asheville to four-year status and sets up a statewide system of comprehensive community colleges.

"The single university concept," Archie began, "is intimately related to everything in the bill. The basic implication is that North Carolina should have only one university, capable of expanding at the right time to the right place.

"This is not an arbitrary decision, for it is only the university which can fruitfully and safely engage in PhD. programs.

"The university is different from any college in a number of ways, but the primary difference lies in the qualification, experience and interests of the faculty.

"The library holdings of a university must be quite different from that of a college. Of the 5,-200,000 books in all of our public and private institutions, more than half of the books are in three places — the University at Chapel Hill, N. C. State College (a UNC branch) and Duke University."

THERE IS also the cost factor. Archie said the University of Texas developed a formula for determining the cost of graduate and undergraduate instruction.

Texas found that the per semester quarter hour cost of giving instruction in the liberal arts at the undergraduate level was $10.85, at the doctoral level $66.67.

In science the range was from $10.88 to $95.83, in the fine arts from $18.67 to $86.67.

"It's very expensive to provide graduate instruction. It is very important that we continue this.

"We haven't supported the university we have adequately." He said the average pay of UNC professors is from $1,000 to $1,500 per year lower than at comparable institutions.

"How can we afford to run the risk of establishing doctoral programs anywhere else until we support our university adequately?"

Someone asked about future aspirations of colleges such as Appalachian State Teachers College at Boone and East Carolina College at Greenville.

Archie replied he has been told the ASTC faculty "voted 98 per cent to remain a four-year college. It wants to be the best state-supported four-year college in the state."

As for ECC, Archie said that President Leo Jenkins, the faculty and trustees don't feel the school now is ready to offer the doctorate.

"They don't want to be part of the university. They have ambitions to be, in Dr. Jenkins' words, the 'Davidson' of tax-supported colleges in North Carolina."

SOMEONE else wanted to know whether the state, if it raised UNC branches at N. C. State and Woman's College in Greensboro to full university status, wouldn't have three universities to support instead of one.

No, Archie said, it would be "one corporate university with three campuses, each carrying out specific functions, doing what they they are competent to do.

4 Students Produce Film On 'Weekend'

Four UNC students were at Morehead City last weekend producing a 45-minute film.

The film, entitled "The Weekend," was written and directed by Leon Capetanos, a graduate student in RTVMP. Working with him are Wayne King, DTH Managing Editor, Nina Davis, Neil Clark and Janice Duff, a student at Duke.

Capetanos, a native of Raleigh, describes the film as "a short poetic study of the restlessness of our generation and its conflict with a society that it cannot accept. Essentially, it is the story of one girl and her reaction to this problem."

Clark, a junior art-history major from Hickory, will play the male lead, and Miss Duff, a senior art major from Wenham, Mass., will play the female lead.

King is technical director of the film.

Alternates To NSA Will Be Selected

Interviews for the selection of four alternate delegates to the National Student Association's Summer Congress will be held this Wednesday-Friday, from 1:30-3:00 p.m. daily in the Woodhouse Room of GM.

Interviews will b conducted by a committee, established by Student Legislature.

Four qualified students will be chosen on a non-political and non-partisan basis to represent UNC at this summer's convention at the University of Indiana.

The purpose of the Congress is for the representatives to gain experience in student government and to meet with other student leaders.

In the past the Summer Congress has served not only as a leadership training program for UNC representatives, but also as a source of ideas and programs which have contributed to student welfare here.

The Congress will take place the last two weeks in August in Bloomington, Ind. Each alternate will receive $40, according to a bill recently passed in SL, which will cover about half the expenses involved. Delegates receive $90.50 each.

Members of the slections Committee include the presidents of the IFC, IDC, WRC, and Panhellenic Council.

Washington U Supports Pogo For President

Comic strip character Pogo polled approximately 1,000 votes for the office of student body president at the University of Washington, according to a recent story in the Daily Californian.

However, comic fans fell about 2,500 votes short of having their candidate elected, as Dave York won the election with a clear majority of the 3,500 votes cast.

Votes for Greselda, a 10-weeks-old pig which was a write-in candidate for the office of student body secretary here, were never officially counted. Griselda polled an estimated 700 votes in the election, but was easily defeated by Student Party candidate Bonnie Hoyle.

According to the Daily Californian York ran unopposed after his only opponent was eliminated due to a lack of credits.

Had Pogo actually polled more votes than York, there was a good chance Pogo would have actually been seated in office.

History major Paul Stanberry, who proclaims himself president of the Pogo Party, maintains that students who voted for Pogo voted for an idea or symbol of revolution and that the Pogo Party would fight to instate the "Pogo System" at Washington.

"Pogo", Stanberry said, "is a symbol of dissatisfaction, a revolutionary force that proves the students are fed up with the existing student government. The support exhibited for Pogo in this election is an indication of this dissatisfaction."

An editorial in the Washington Daily said a protest movement the size of the politically-oriented Pogo's, had never been seen on the Washington campus before.

The editorial called the conclusion "painfully obvious." "A lot of people got fed up with student government at the university that they stood in line, sometimes for half an hour, and scribbled in Pogo.

Edmisten Has Love For Soil

By DICK ROTH

"I'm a progressive with a huge slice of tradition. I'm an agrarian out of touch with my time."

This is how Rufus Edmisten, majority floor leader and "chaplain" of Student Legislature describes himself.

"I have a deep love for the soil," he said, "but in today's technical world, there is no room for such love. In this age we seem to forget everything comes from the soil.

"I am dismayed," he continued, "that many of my colleagues have never felt the earth and wondered about it, or planted a seed and watched it grow. I realize science rules, but mankind has gone overboard."

Edmisten may be an agrarian at heart, but he's a politician also. The tall, good-looking senior with the "appealing" voice has already left his mark on the political scene.

"Mr. Tradition," as he is called by legislative friends, began his political career early.

"I became interested in politics because I saw there were only a few others interested," he said. "Politics offered many opportunities, so why shouldn't I take advantage of them. Everybody oserns the politician, but would love to be one," he said.

"I guess I really became enthusiastic when I was about 12 years old. I started going to Democratic conventions."

In his early teens, he "was nailing up posters and running errands for the local politicians."

At 16 he began making the first of many speeches.

"I have made a number this year," Edmisten said. "I've been trying to tell the people of North Carolina what Democratic youth want for the future."

Last year, he worked actively for Hugh Alexander, congressman for the ninth district. "I was on his staff and worked hard to get him re-elected."

Besides his position as majority floor leader, he is on the Student Party Advisory Board.

"I believe I have served more terms in Student Legislature than anyone else in recent years."

Regarding Student Government he said, "This year we have been more vigorous and done more good than in any other year I've been at Carolina. All those attacks by the Di-Phi and Griselda's supporters are baseless. They really naven't looked in to see what we've accomplished."

Asked to comment on some other Carolina aspects, he replied, "What would you like, coeds or education? Both?

"Carolina coeds are not here for mates. With their teased hair and made-up faces, they just want to gain attention. I do consider them essential to university life. though.

"Concerning education, I disagree with the whole policy. The education system is wrong; it depends on what man can do overnight and what he can do under pressure and fear. We should rely more on oral rather than written communication in our education system."

Edmisten expressed a final political view.

"If one can succeed in the political arena here in Chapel Hill, there is a good chance he'll conquer all else."

Edmisten has succeeded in Carolina politics. His future? "I have hopes."

'Sunday And Cybele' Premiers At Rialto

The North Carolina Premiere of Serge Bourguignon's new film, "Sundays and Cybele," which won the Academy Award Nomination as the Best Foreign Film of the Year, will be today at the Rialto Theatre in Durham.

Bosley Crowther of the "New York Times" gave the movie a rave review, "How can one give a fair impression of the exquisite, delicate charm of this wondrous story of a magical attachment between a crash-injured young man who is suffering from amnesia and a lonely little 12-year-old girl?

"By saying that it is what 'Lolita' might conceivably have been had it been made by a poet and angled to be a rhapsodic song of innocence and not a smirking joke."

The movie stars Hardy Kruger, Nicole Courcel, and introduces Patricia Gozzi in the female lead role. The music is written by Maurice Jarre, who was the composer for "Lawrence of Arabia."

UNC Pitchers Send Pack Packing, 4-1

Tom Wright Brings Home UNC's Fourth Run

Willard, Haywood Give State 2 Hits

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Spence Williard and Bill Haywood combined their pitching powers yesterday afternoon, putting a two-hit hex on NC State, as North Carolina evened its ACC record with a 4-1 Emerson Stadium victory.

Wolfpack second baseman Pete Parham collected both of his team's hits, two singles off starter Willard, who had a no-hitter going through the first five innings.

The Tar Heels, now 4-4 in the conference, got all the runs they needed in the first inning, when they tallied three times.

Dickie Fleming, starting in place of Jim Speight, who is in the midst of a batting slump, ended the inning by grounding to third However, it was the little short stop's sacrifice fly which brought in the fourth UNC run in the third inning.

Wright led off that frame with a walk, advanced to second on Hull's second single of the game, and both runners advanced on Brown's sacrifice bunt. Ken Willard was intentionally walked to load the bases. Fleming followed with a high fly down the left field line, which State shortstop Allan Baker finally caught up with. But Baker, running away from the plate, was unable to make the tough throw in an attempt to nab Wright, who tagged and scored.

Spence Willard, starting his third game in eight days and his second in a row, was wilder than usual, but had the visitors stumped until Parham led off the sixth with a single.

After one was out, Willard walked Don Montgomery, and, when Prindle threw wild to first in an attempt to complete a double play on the next batter, Parham came in to score State's only run of the overcast afternoon.

Parham also led off the eighth with a single, and it was at this point that Coach Walt Rabb, feeling that Willard was beginning to tire, brought in Haywood from the bullpen. The fire-balling righty retired the Wolfpack batters without difficulty in the last two stanzas.

The victory boosted the Tar Heels into a fourth place tie with Duke, while the loss dropped State into the ACC cellar with a 2-5 mark.

EXTRA INNINGS—Ken Willard was robbed of his fourth homer of the year when NCS left fielder Larry Clary made a great catch of the big Virginian's drive to deep left in the fifth. Clary leaned over the fence to snare the ball. . . . Bernie Isgett, who was beginning to believe base hits don't exist, got his first hit since April 9, a hard smash to third in the second. The hustling catcher was robbed twice at Virginia on great UVA catches.

Fred Hobson

IF YOU GO down to Fetzer Field these days, you'll notice something seems to be different from what it used to be. The boys are still working out; the masager is still running around trying to get publicity for the track team; some tracksters are, as always, leaving early for more attractive pursuits. The old track, materially, looks the same. But there is something missing—and that something can be felt if you stay around the place very long.

You miss the silver-haired man who used to be on the track every afternoon. You miss the genuine interest that this man took in track, and in his boys. You miss the 40 years of experience, the 40 years of dedication this man has given to track.

You miss Coach Dale Ranson.

Coach Dale is in Duke Hospital recovering from a serious operation. He can't be down on the track every day. He can't take the squad around the country introducing his boys to the nation's best. He couldn't go with his stars to the Penn Relays this year.

He left the squad in the hands of a very able assistant—but no one can take Coach Dale's place. His ability and genuine dedication as a coach cannot be replaced.

* * * *

NO ONE KNOWS this better than a raw, rookie reporter from the DTH who went down to get a story on the track team the day before Coach Dale went to the hospital.

This was the reporter's first assignment and he wasn't really sure how to handle it. He walked down toward the track hoping he'd meet a familiar face. He did—Coach Ranson was down there. The green reporter walked up to the coach hoping for a few words on the upcoming meet. Only a few words—the reporter didn't expect more than that.

After all, Coach Dale's team was leaving for Maryland in two hours and he had to check on all the preliminaries. A couple of men were up at the gym waiting to speak to him. He had every right to give his interviewer a few broad statements and go on to more important things.

But Coach Dale did not brush aside the eager, young reporter. Instead he took him to his office in the gym, chatted informally with the rookie to make him feel at ease and then gave him more than enough information for a sufficient story.

* * * *

NOT ONE TIME did Coach Dale mention that he wouldn't be going to Maryland, not one time did he talk about himself. He only spoke of his boys and his hopes for them—how he hoped they would come up to their capabilities and give a good showing, as he knew they could.

He took an hour of his time to give the reporter a story that would make his first assignment a success. He thought only of his team and how he could help his questioner—and not at all of himself. That's the kind of man Coach Dale is.

I hope and pray that this man will soon be back on the track directing his boys—and, more important, molding these boys into men. He's the type of man that can do it.

I know—I was the reporter he befriended.

Tennis Team Hosts State; Stickers Play

UNC's tennis and lacrosse teams return to action today after a three-day rest. Both had contests Saturday, the lacrosse club dropping a 9-7 match to Washington and Lee here and the tennis team defeating Clemson, 8-1, on the road.

Coach Don Skakle's netters, 5-0 in the ACC and 15-1 overall, are expected to have little trouble today against N.C. State—one of the league's weaker sisters.

After today's "test," UNC has but two matches left before the ACC Championships Tournament which starts here May 9.

The lacrosse club 2-3, on the year with two of the losses coming in overtime, are at Charlottesville this afternoon for a return match with the Virginia freshmen. Coach Connie Steele's men lost the first meeting by blowing a 7-3 lead to eventually lose by 11-10.

Brown Chosen By Baltimore

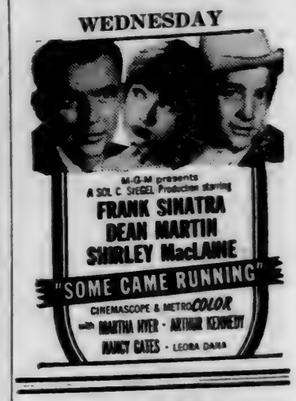
UNC backcourt ace Larry Brown was chosen by the new Baltimore club yesterday in the seventh round of the National Basketball Association's annual draft.

Brown joined four other ACC performers in the group of 63 who were picked. Duke All-American Art Heyman, Maryland's Jerry Greenspan, Wake Forest's Bob Woollard and N.C. State's Ken Rohloff were the other conference choices.

Heyman, as expected, was the first choice of the New York Knicks, while Greenspan went, in the third round, to Syracuse. Woolard was picked by New York i nthe seventh round, and Rohloff was the seventh choice of the St. Louis Hawks.

Mel Gibson, backcourt star from Western Carolina, was a surprise draft of the Los Angeles Lakers. The Lakers picked Gibson in the second round.

Others high in the draft were West Virginia's Rod Thorn (to Baltimore), Cincinatti's Tom Thacker (to Cincinatti) and Loyola's Jerry Harkness (also to New York).



Elements Nix Mural Games

Threatening weather forced the postponement of Big Four Sports Day yesterday. The mural get-together was immediately re-scheduled for Tuesday, May 7.

"The possibility of rain interrupting proceedings once they were underway was too great," officials at Duke said as they halted the events for a week.

All participants should remain in contact with the Intramural Department for any further developments.

100 Students Expected

Dr. Feaver Opens Relations Meeting

Dr. J. Clayton Feaver of the University of Oklahoma Department of Philosophy is the opening speaker for the four-day first all-South Youth Conference on Human Relations which opens here today.

Professor Feaver will speak at 8 p.m. in the Howell Hall auditorium. His address, which is open to the public, is entitled "Human Relations Involves Humans." Dr. Feaver is the David Boyd Professor of Philosophy at the University of Oklahoma.

The Human Relations Conference is being sponsored by the Consolidated University and the New York City Young Adult Council which represents 33 nationwide youth organizations for people of 18 to 30 years of age. Membership in these organizations is drawn from students and young professionals.

The conference is being dedicated to Dr. Frank Porter Graham, former president of the University who is now serving as a United Nations mediator.

Some 100 students from throughout the South will be attending the conference as representatives of national youth organizations. The students will attend daily workshops and a panel discussion including coverage of topics such as politics, education, economics, religion, and international affairs.

The conference will also feature three additional keynote speakers. Dr. Richard Bardolph, chairman of the Department of History and Political Science at Woman's College and author of "The Negro Vanguard," will speak at 7:30 p.m., Friday, May 3, in the Howell Hall auditorium. His address is entitled "A Hundred Years of Negro Advance: An Historian's View."

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York City, member of the Staff of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund of the NAACP, will speak at 8:30 p.m., Saturday.

The Reverend Will Campbell of Nashville, Tenn., race relations specialist with the National Council of Churches, will make the final address of the conference at 9:30 a.m. in Carroll Hall.

Grants for the conference have been given by two private New York foundations: The Field Foundation and The Foundation for Youth and Student Affairs. The conference is one of the first domestic programs ever organized by the Young Adult Council.

Members of the steering committee of the conference include Miss Anne Queen, official of the UNC YM-YWCA.

President Sends His Greetings

The first All-South Human Relations Youth Conference which opens today has received a warm greeting from President John F. Kennedy.

In a telegram addressed to the participants, the President sent his "best wishes for a stimulating and rewarding conference." The full text of the message follows:

"I am pleased to extend greetings to the participants in the first All South Human Relations Youth Conference.

"This generation of young Southerners faces a great opportunity. By your actions and your good will, you can help free our national life of practices which are harmful to our society, wasteful to our economy and—above all—wrong.

"Best wishes for a stimulating and rewarding conference."

Stubbs Named Atty. General Second Time

Buzzy Stubbs heads the list of proposed student government committee chairmen, according to an announcement made yesterday by student body president Mike Lawler.

Lawler's proposal will be read at tonight's session of Student Legislature and will be acted on next week.

Stubbs will head the Attorney General's Staff for the second year. Other chairmanship appointments include: Arthur Hays (Elections Board); Ed Brenner (Student Credit Commission); Jim Clotfelter and John McMillan (co-chairmen State Affairs Committee); John Ulfelder (Carolina Forum); Hugo Spechar (NSA Campus Co-ordinator); John Johnston (Student Audit Board) and Johnnsye Massenburg (Consolidated University Student Council).

* * *

Student Legislature will meet tonight to consider amendments to its by-laws and the general election law.

The first bill proposes that the SL clerk be appointed by the Speaker. The other empowers the Elections Board to levy fines, up to $25, for the defacement of University grounds or property by political campaign materials.

Art Entries Close Today

Entries close today for the fourth Annual Sidewalk Art Show which will be held Friday thru Sunday on East Franklin St. Entries must be turned in from 1-5 p.m. at the Graham Memorial porch. No late entries will be eccepted.

The show, which is sponsored by the University Art League, will feature an exhibition of oils, prints, etchings, watercolors and sculpture by residents of the Durham-Chapel Hill area.

The show will be held on the sidewalk and lawn area on East Franklin St. between Battle-Vance-Pettigrew dormitory and the Methodist Church.

All oils must be framed and all prints must be matted. A charge of a dollar per entrant will be levied. The maximum number of entries is ten per person.

Show hours will be 11 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday and 1-6 p.m. Sunday.

An estimated 10,000 people view ed last year's show where approximately $300 was collected on work sold.

In case of rain the show will be held the following weekend.

Ehringhaus Cafeteria To Be Open To Women

The Ehringhaus Dorm Cafeteria will be opened to women students on Monday, May 6, according to an announcement made yesterday by Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

King Takes Another Award: Second Place For DTH Story

DTH Managing Editor and former Editor Wayne King has won a Hearst National College Newswriting award for the second time this year, it was announced yesterday.

King's story on the Black Muslim movement (DTH, April 10) in Durham, placed second in the investigative/interpretive reporting category. The award carries a $400 scholarship grant.

Earlier this year King received $100 in the straight news reporting category for a story on the rioting at Ole Miss (Greensboro Daily News, Nov. 7).

King, a senior in the School of Journalism, has recently been selected as one of five intern reporters for Newsweek Magazine. He will work in the Atlanta Bureau of the magazine.

King served as DTH editor during 1961-62.

Coed On Probation For Lying Offense

A student was found guilty and placed on indefinite probation for violation of the Honor Code in a Women's Council open trial Tuesday night.

She pled guilty to a charge of lying to her housemother and graduate counselor about a house offense.

In the trial, the defendant said she arrived at her dorm one minute late on Friday night. A guest who was staying with her was also one minute late. The defendant testified she did not file the required late slip, but instead took it upstairs with her after filling it out. She said she told her guest to do likewise.

Upon reaching her hall, the defendant was summoned to the house phone to talk with her graduate counselor who told her that her late slip was not filed. The defendant replied that she had the slip with her, and that her guest "must have brought them upstairs by mistake."

The student and her guest were summoned by the housemother, who questioned them about the absence of the slips. The defendant repeated her story that the guest had mistakenly taken the slips upstairs. When the guest appeared hesitant to corroborate this story, the housemother asked the defendant if she were lying. She said she had not told the truth, and apologized to the housemother for her actions.

The defendant later repeated her story to her graduate counselor and the vice-president of the dorm. The case was referred to the Women's Council.

The student testified she could give no reason for not filing her late slip. The only reason she gave was that she "was just not thinking." She also said that she had lied to her graduate counselor and housemother because she said it was the first thing that came into her head on the house phone and was afraid to change her story.

CLOSED TRIALS

A student was found guilty and placed on indefinite suspension for violations of the Campus and Honor Codes in a case tried by the Women's Council Tuesday night.

The student was charged with staying out all night, lying to a member of the dormitory administration and violating the Fraternity Visiting Agreement.

The dorm vice-president and the guest were called as material witnesses. Both substantiated the story of the defendant, and it was established that the guest was not involved in any way, as she had no knowledge of the proper procedure for handling late slips or House Council offenses.

The defendant admitted guilt and expressed regret, but maintained that she could give no real reason for her actions.

The council imposed a penalty of indefinite probation, with the recommendation that it be lifted after one full academic semester. Under the sentence, the defendant must apply for reinstatement before the probation can be removed.

The Council also warned the student that she could expect suspension for any Woman's Council violation committed while she is an undergraduate.

Golden To Speak At Press Banquet

Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite, will speak at the Ninth Annual Press Awards Banquet of the UNC Press Club at 6:30 p.m. in Lenoir Hall, Monday, May 6.

Seven undergraduate scholarships for 1963-64, including two new ones, the Jake Wade Scholarship and the Mark Ethridge Scholarship, will be awarded.

Incident Not Staged, Says Lowenstein

Says Group Waited Before Press Came

By DAN DONAHUE

Al Lowenstein said yesterday that Tuesday's incidents in Raleigh were "definitely not put up jobs."

Lowenstein, a UNC graduate and assistant professor of Political Science at N. C. State, was describing the incidents in which Dr. Angie Brooks, UN Ambassador from Liberia, was refused service at the S&W Cafeteria and the Sir Walter Hotel Coffee House.

"We were at the S&W for at least half an hour, and had been refused service before the press was called," said Lowenstein who accompanied Dr. Brooks.

"We had worked together for years in the UN and had become good friends. Dr. Brooks came to speak to the Forum Committee of N. C. State on the problems of underdeveloped areas.

"I was talking with Dr. Brooks on Tuesday, and around noontime we decided to eat lunch. We went to the S&W Cafeteria, and when we arrived we sent word to the management so he would be able to make any special arrangements that would be necessary.

"He then sent word we would not be served and threatened us with arrest. We informed him of Dr. Brooks' diplomatic immunity, and she requested he tell her in person or in writing she would not be served.

"He refused, and then we called the Raleigh Times. We waited for about a half an hour to see if the manager would give us a personal refusal, and when he did not we decided to enter the line. They then closed the cafeteria.

"I was terribly embarrassed and asked Dr. Brooks what she wanted to do. She said she would like to eat. I know of no good place to eat that serves Negroes this side of Chapel Hill, but I remembered the Sir Walter had served Negro Aldermen, so I suggested we go there.

"By this time the newspapermen were with us and followed us to the Sir Walter. There we were also refused service, and Dr. Brooks was asked if she was looking for a job.

"A reporter from the News and Observer told the Sir Walter manager (Arthur Buddenhagen) that it was not a put-up job, and that the press had not been informed until the group had been at the S&W for half an hour. The reporter told Buddenhagen that he would be crazy not to follow a story like this.

"I just wanted to clear up the erroneous impression that we were traveling around with a pack of reporters, trying to stir up an incident. We were merely trying to get something to eat.

"Dr. Brooks is one of the leading female UN statesmen, and she has worked with the United States in dealing with the new African Republics. She has been a friend of the U. S., in UN matters, and she kindly consented to come here to speak to students of N. C. State.

"It would be extraordinary, under the circumstances to expect her to confine her visit to approved areas. How can we expect friendship and cooperation from African nations if we treat their delegates like this—asking them if they want jobs as waitresses."

Colleges To Include State Negro Schools In Admission Plans

Negro high schools will be included next year in the coordinated schedule of college — day programs used by all North Carolina colleges, according to a statement yesterday by the head of the body which schedules the programs for college recruiters.

William Brinkley, chairman of the High School Visitation Committee of the North Carolina College Conference, said, however, that Negro high schools must apply to his group for inclusion in the schedule.

Brinkley, head admissions officer at Duke, made the statement to Fred Wedler, chairman of the Academic Affairs committee here. Wedler's group in the past has conducted separate college day programs for Negro high schools which UNC admissions officers do not visit.

UNC Admissions Head Charles Bernard said yesterday his office would try to visit all high schools included on the list, regardless of race.

Wedler said Brinkley stated no Negro high schools had ever applied for inclusion on the list used by all North Carolina Colleges. Wedler said the statement came after two months of communication with Brinkley.

Bernard said he thought the inclusion of Negro schools on the list would affect public colleges more than private and church supported schools in the Conference.

"I feel the public schools will be forced to take the lead in recruiting at Negro schools," he said, "since many of the private schools neither want nor need Negro students."

He added that while UNC would probably be expected to lead in this recruitment, he felt it to be an equal duty of all state-supported schools.

Bernard said he had attended one Negro college day this year at a Winston-Salem high school, and that he had been the only white recruiter present, although others had been scheduled to attend.

The Academic Affairs Committee has been working on college day programs at Negro schools since 1958, Wedler said.

He added, however, that his committee had written to 24 Negro schools this year offering to conduct programs but had received no replies.

World News In Brief

Communists Show Power To Castro

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union displayed its military might Wednesday for Fidel Castro—including the type of missiles withdrawn from Cuba. But the May Day speeches were less fiery than usual, and there were no promises of military aid to Cuba.

Premier Nikita S. Khruschev, standing atop the Lenin mausoleum with other Communist leaders, raised Castro's arm aloft in a gesture of victory while chants of "Cuba si, Yanqui no"—Castro's battle cry—echoed through Red Square.

U. S. Ambassador Foy D. Kohler and his staff boycotted the parade for the first time since Russia and the United States established diplomatic relations in 1933. However, the proceedings were televised and they could watch it at home. Kozlov, Khrushchev's heir apparent.

Also noticeably absent was Communist Party First Deputy Frol But Kozlovs portraits were on display with other Communist leaders and heroes, and reports circulated he was ill and not in disfavor.

Groups Begin Walk

CHATTANOOGA, TENN (UPI)—Two groups set out Wednesday on memorial "freedom walks" and Alabama police—apparently in a preview of things to come—arrested the only group over which they had jurisdiction.

The second group, which left Chattanooga Wednesday morning with more fanfare, won't reach the Alabama line until Saturday. Gov. George C. Wallace has indicated this group will be arrested.

The contingent taken into custody Wednesday was made up of eight Negroes, five men and three women. They were picked up near Attalla, Ala., where civil rights crusader William L. Moore was found slain last week.

Integrationists have vowed to finish the Moore march. The Baltimore postman was fatally shot while hiking to Jackson, Miss., to deliver a segregation protest letter to Gov. Ross Barnett.

Highway patrolmen and local authorities cooperated in the arrests Wednesday. Those taken into custody were charged with breach of the peace and lodged in the Etowah County jail.

The group had planned to march over only a portion of Moore's route—the 60 mile stretch between Attalla and Birmingham.

Winnie Won't Run

LONDON (UPI) — Sir Winston Churchill announced Wednesday with "sadness" that he will not be a candidate for re-election to the House of Commons, thus bringing to a close the most remarkable career in the thousand-year history of the British Parliament.

The 88-year-old statesman advised his constituency of Woodford in Essex that he would leave the house after more than 60 momentous years because it is difficult for him to walk on the leg he broke in a fall at his Monte Carlo hotel a year ago.

"The accident which I suffered last year has seriously decreased my mobility and it has become difficult for me to attend the House of Commons as I wish," he wrote Mrs. Doris Moss, chairman of the Woodford Conservative Association.

"I need not tell you with what sadness I feel constrained to take this step."

Tension Drops

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti (UPI) —The tension which brought Haiti and the Dominican Republic to the verge of war dropped sharply Wednesday with a truce team from the Organization of American States seeking to heal the rift between them.

Haiti agreed Tuesday night to the Dominican demand that 22 political refugees in the Dominican Embassy in Port Au Prince be permitted to leave the country, and the decision further eased the crisis which erupted last week.

In Santo Domingo, meanwhile, a palace source said President Juan Bosch would have no further comment on relations between the two countries until such time as the OAS group completes its work.

Dependents of a U. S. Navy mission ordered out of Haiti last Friday, before the start of the Haitian-Dominican dispute, started leaving Port Au Prince quietly. Two families of the 34-man Marine Corps unit flew out Tuesday night on a regularly scheduled commercial flight.

Bean Birds Select 19

After having journeyed to the West Coast where they exonerated the name of all their feathered friends by dropping black eggs on the home of Alfred Hitchcock, the Beanbirds returned to Chapel Hill this morning to enlarge their number. Flying low over the campus and chirping joyously, they rousted 19 chicks from their nests, and egged them on to the mystic roost. There amid the flutter of frantir wings they feasted on kegged bird-seed.

The new fledglings are Ginger "Fan-Crested Dumpling Duck" McDavid, Trish "Clatter - Goose" Armstrong, Bee "Buff-Breasted Piping Plover" Pitt, Elva "Pintail Smee" Edwards, Diane "Broad-Tailed Hummer" Hardy, Susan "Great-Footed Meat Hawk" High, Tommy "Pectoral Fat-Bird" Baysden, Billy "Black - Capped Chuckle - Head" Martin, Robert "Yellow-Billed Chow-Chow" Rascoe, Tom "Big Chicken Hawk" Thayer, Rex "Golden Toad-Head" Teaney, Mike "Squatting Snipe" Javits, Sammy "Worm - Eating Swamp Woodchuck" Thompson, Jake "Coot-Footed Troop-Fowl" Fuller, Dexter "Gold-Crested Goggle Nose" Rumsey, Sybil "White-Throated Cherrybird" McCullen, Fuzzy "Speckled Wood - Cock" Cocke, Robin "Turkey" Gilliland, and Betsy "Clucking Hen" Lynn.

Also given an honorary pecking were Dean James L. "Floating-Fowl" Godfrey, and Spera "Moon-Fronted Jug Swallow" Dorton.

The chicks were chosen not only for their fowl looks, but also for their eggsistentialist views on life.

Integration Group Meets On Friday

The Committee For Open Business will meet Friday night at 8 p.m. at the St. Joseph's C.M.E. church, W. Rosemary St., to decide on concrete steps to be taken by the Chapel Hill community to end segregation at local restaurants.

"As long as some Chapel Hill restaurants open their doors to only a part of the Chapel Hill community, Chapel Hill cannot call itself the civil rights leader of the South," W. N. Hicks III, a University student and member of the committee, said Tuesday.

"The Committee For Open Business has grown out of the Student Peace Union boycott of 13 local restaurants who now practice racial discrimination," Hicks continued. "The Chapel Hill community is now shouldering their responsibility."

According to Hicks, the Committee For Open Business will coordinate efforts by students and townspeople to end segregation at local restaurants.

Harold Foster, a student at North Carolina College, will be one of the Friday night speakers. Foster, who has been active in civil rights action in this area, is a native of Chapel Hill.

Spearman, Durand Explain Duties Of Student Government

Student Body Vice - President Bob Spearman and Men's Council Chairman Whitney Durand explained the traditions and objectives of Student Government and the Honor System in speeches delivered to the Men's Orientation Counselors Monday night.

Spearman told the counselors that Student Government traditionally held original jurisdiction in matters of student discipline and that, historically speaking, the power of Student Government had been retracted only in cases of "grave irresponsibility" on the part of the students.

No one was questioning the right of the Chancellor or his Administration to "find authority and responsibility" in matters of student discipline, Spearman said. He traced the development of Student Government from the early beginnings of the Di and Phi in 1795-96. The value of Student Government is that it is practical, useful and consistent with democratic society. It serves an educational value in preparing students for responsible citizenship, he continued.

Spearman said that Student Government also served as a critic of the University, and sponsored projects for the welfare of the student. In touching on the present controversy over the role of Student Government, Spearman said that "as a matter of practice and tradition, students have original jurisdiction over all Campus Code and Honor Code violations." This is in accord with the Student Constitution, he said.

Spearman said that he felt the action of the WRC in eliminating the apartment rule was responsible. He said that the WRC was trying to eliminate the element of "hypocrisy" in the enforcement of Honor Code violations.

Whitney Durand told the group that the Orientation counselors must first make a committment to the Honor System before they explained it to their counselees. He said that the Honor System was a "good one in practice as well as in theory. The System cannot fail, because its principles are sound, but the individual can fail in the face of these principles," he concluded.

The next meeting of the Men's Orientation Counselors will be on Monday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. The topic of the meeting will be "group dynamics and group leadership."

Harvard Dean Will Give Baccalaureate

Dr. Samuel H. Miller, Dean of Harvard Divinity School, will be the baccalaureate speaker here on June 2, it was announced today.

A national leader in the parish ministry and in the field of pastoral theology, Dr. Miller came to Harvard in 1953 as a Lecturer on Pastoral Theology. He became a Professor in 1958. He became Dean of the Harvard Divinity School in 1959.

Prior to Harvard, Dr. Miller was minister to Baptist churches in Belmar, Arlington and Clifton, New Jersey. He became minister of the Old Cambridge Baptist Church in 1933, and was Adjunct Professor of the Philosophy of Religion at Andover-Newton Theological School from 1953 to 1957.

A 1923 graduate of Colgate University, Dr. Miller was awarded the D. D. degree by Colgate in 1953; Clark University conferred on him the Litt. D. degree in 1959.

He is a member of the Commission on the Arts and Worship of the National Council of Churches, of the editorial board of the Journal of Pastoral Care, and of the National Advisory Council of the Christian Faith-and-Life Community in Austin, Texas.

DR. SAMUEL H. MILLER

Dr. Miller has written on problems in science and religion as well as in Philosophy. His published works include "The Life of the Soul," "The Life of the Church," "The Great Realities," and "Prayers for Daily Use."

Room For Six More Remains On Plane

Six more students are needed to fill the quota for the GM Flight Two (June 18-Aug. 12) to Europe or the flight will be cancelled. Today is the final deadline and total cost will run $326.40. Students may apply at the GM Information Desk.

If the fight is cancelled, those already signed up may go on Flight One (June 11-September 10) or Flight Three (July 24-Sept. 11) or make their own arrangements.

Into The Mainstream

On behalf of the University and the people of the South, the Daily Tar Heel extends a warm welcome to delegates to the first annual All-South Human Relations Conference, which opens here today.

You have before you a difficult task, and only three days in which to accomplish it. That task is to catch up on history and explore the problems involved in moving the South into the mainstream of American life.

As President Kennedy said in his telegram to you yesterday, "This generation of young Southerners faces a great challenge and a great opportunity. By your actions and your good will, you can help free our national life of practices which are harmful to our society, wasteful to our economy and — above all — wrong."

The recent violence in the Mississippi delta and the mass arrests in Birmingham underscore the necessity and urgency for other Southerners of both races to emulate your actions, by sitting down and reasoning together.

It has become excruciatingly obvious that great change in the living patterns of the South will and must occur in our life-times. Whether that transition takes place with the spirit of Oxfords or of Clemsons is the real question all of us face.

We young people of the South have it within our power to influence the answer to that question, through reason and tolerance.

Many of us at the University are busy at the task here in our own backyard. We are attempting to put an end to the frightened, destructive thinking that prevents men of otherwise good will from doing as you are doing today — sitting down and reasoning together.

As a student body, a University and a town, we have been working at this for several years now. Many of our efforts have been successful.

You can go to either theater in town without fear of supporting by your admission fee the same prejudices you are combating with your hearts and intellects.

You can go to many of our fine restaurants with the same easiness of mind, but not to all of them.

Indeed, if your skin is dark, you will not be allowed to go into some of our restaurants and business establishments without fear of being arrested.

This is a sad admission for us to have to make. But that is the way things are.

Our consolation — and we hope it is yours — is that we are working to put an end to discrimination at these places too, as we have at others.

For your information, local establishments which practice discrimination include:

All Star Bowling Lanes.
Brady's Restaurant.
Carlton's Rock Pile.
Carolina Grill.
Clarence's Bar & Grill.
College Cafe.
Colonial Drug Store.
Howard Johnson's.
Oh Boy Drive-In.
The Patio.
The Pines.
Tar Heel Sandwich Shop.
Ye Olde Tavern.
Leo's Restaurant.

We hope this list, besides saving you possible embarassment, also serves to underscore the urgency of the task you begin today.

For it reveals that even in such a traditionally enlightened place as Chapel Hill, cobwebs of moral confusion still await the broom of reason to strike them down.

But you are all Southerners too, so no further introductions are necessary.

We wish you good luck.

Sigma Chi Derby Passes

For this year, at least, the Sigma Chi Derby has passed from the Carolina scene. The fraternity says it has been canceled because no suitable location could be found for the annual Spring rites.

There was talk last fall of ensorship of the Derby, but officially this had no bearing on its cancellation.

But whatever the reason, we mourn the passing of this Carolina tradition.

Where else could we see the best of Carolina's coeds performing the athletic feats the Derby demanded?

Where else could we see a "modern Venus" fully attired?

In short, where else but at the Derby ould we have an annual editorial field day, deploring the vulgarity of much of the Derby, and in turn laughing at the fact that students find it necessary to organize such vulgarity.

Alas, the Derby is gone but hopefully not for good.

Next year, we hope the Sigma Chi's recapture their spirit and stage a Derby worthy of that fraternity's reputation.

Say, at Myrtle Beach?

Apology

We would like to apologize to Dr. Angie Brooks and to the nation of Liberia for the rudeness and disrespect shown to them by certain of our fellow citizens the other day in Raleigh.

We deplore it when such a shameful act is committed against any of our fellow human beings, and we are doing our best to see that someday we will not have to put up with such nonesense.

But in the midst of the efforts of so many fine Americans who are working desperately to rid the nation of injustice and discrimination, an incident such as the one in Raleigh strikes us with astonishment and shame.

When similar problems crop up in Oxford, or in Albany, we despair; but when they occur in 'The progressive capital of a progressive state", we are simply appalled.

College Cafe Editorial 'Disgusting'

The College Cafe
Chapel Hill, N. C.
(Copy to Daily Tar Heel)

Gentlemen:

I salute you and your position regarding the conduct of your business as you see fit! The disgusting editorial in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel was an assault on all businessmen who conduct their affairs in a manner contrary to mob rule and opinion.

Rather than merely assuring to individual students the "right" to be served in whatever place they choose, the editors of the newspaper of our state university are advocating destruction (by mob pressure) of the right of an individual to control his own affairs, to operate his establishment as he sees fit, not as some pressure group would have him do.

I was not aware of the existence of your restaurant until yesterday, but in the future you may be assured that I shall dine with you whenever I am in Chapel Hill.

"I'd Like To Speak To The Head Of The House"

But Is It Permanent?

Winter's Back For Soviet Creativity

The author of the following article is a graduate student in the Political Science Department, specializing in Communist bloc affairs.

By A. J. VON LAZAR

The American popular press has discovered modern Soviet literature. This discovery does not necessarily reflect a pure interest in the literary values of contemporary Russian writers or poets. It is more than anything attributable to the fact that the poems and novels written by these writers became a matter of politics—a matter of conflict and convulsion within the communist orbit.

The names of Evtushenko, Solzenyicin and Vozhnesenski are known today even beyond the narrow circle of literary buffs. From serious scholarly journals to Life most every publication tries to interpret or explain 'the cultural and ideological battle' which rages in the Soviet Union.

The entire process of literary ferment started several years ago, after the death of Stalin and in the wake of the rebellious events in Hungary and Poland during 1956. Ilya Ehrenburg's much quoted novel The Thaw set the atmosphere and produced the impetus for the literary ferment. After the title of Ehrenburg's writing this post-Stalin era became known as the 'thaw'—or as Evtushenko phrased it in an interview with the West German magazine, Der Spiegel, the spring with all of its frostbites and warm spells.

Viewing the present efforts of the Kremlin to coerce and ideologically strait-jacket the young and old literary rebels, the question emerges whether or not 'winter' is returning permanently after the promising signs of the thaw. Apparently this is the point where one has to be extremely cautious and weigh properly the balance between some of the official actions of the day and the prospect of long-range developments.

* * *

On March 8th of this year, Khrushchev delivered an important and lengthy speech on the problems of literature and the arts. The fact that the Party addressed the intellectuals on matters essentially pertinent to the problems of creativity, artistic expression and style comes as no surprise: The Party has always considered itself as the ultimate arbiter of all affairs of social, political or economic significance.

Thus the very fact that the Party has addressed itself to the task of setting limitations of 'literary liberalism' does not appear as a novelty to the observer of the Soviet scene. The peculiar aspect of the Khrushchev speech was its substance and the depths of detail into which the criticism reached.

Khrushchev discussed in detail the activities and creations of writers, poets, painters, musicians, sculptors, artists of the stage and the cinema. The speech depicted individually some of the most objectionable (to the Party that is) works of art and the attitude of their creators.

The poet Evtushenko received a stinging criticism from the Party boss, especially in connection with his memoirs, which were recently published in the West—before appearing in print in the USSR. Evtushenko was branded as a politically 'immature' person who distorted Soviet reality and slandered Soviet life.

In a sense Khrushchev's anger was understandable. The young poet-laureate Evtushenko spoke with obvious contempt and skepticism about many of the sacrosanct facets of Soviet life and history. In the powerful poem Babi Yar he denounced with disgust the still dominant anti-Semitic tendencies of everyday Soviet life.

The Party lashed out at Evtushenko saying that he saw only the sufferings of the Jews in the hands of the Nazi hordes, but not that of the average Russian citizen. In reality, of course, the Party cannot tolerate the publicizing of anything like anti-Semitism: the 'fatherland of the toilers' is supposedly free from all prejudices and racial hatred.

Khrushchev strongly attacked the writers Nekrasov, Paustovsky and Vozhnesensky (who is probably the most talented poet of the entire young generation of Soviet literary rebels) for statements they made during their Western European tour. They were accused by the Party of being 'weak and falling for the cheap glitters of publicity.'

But abstract artists fared even worse than these writers. The artists in effect were called harmful and poisonous for the education of the Soviet youth. There is no place for them in Soviet artistic life, declared Khrushchev.

The list of attacks and Party objections is long and detailed—it does not spare the 'grey eminence' of Ilya Ehrenburg nor the music of Shostakovich. One may indeed be tempted to ask if it is 'winter and its frost' returning to the literary scene—and to intellectual life and creativity in general. Is the trend of ideological orthodoxy set during the past few months a permanent one?

* * *

One of the most significant factors in the entire conflict between the Party and the rebellious 'young Turks' of the Soviet intelligentsia is the fact that the Party felt and judged the impact of these developments as of such importance that it could not pass over it without taking definite issue in the matter. The Party had to realize that the poetry of Evtushenko and the new 13th symphony of Shostakovich had something to say to the Soviet people—something new and very real.

It is significant that the head of the Party himself addressed a meeting of writers and artists, thereby emphasizing the importance of the rebels and their activity. Fifteen years ago such matters would have been summarily dismissed or solved through 'administrative methods.'

Today the Party has to consider the matter of literary 'liberalism' and problems of control. Khrushchev cannot—and probably would not—summarily dismiss an Evtushenko or a Nekrasov. They are very much a part of the present new Soviet generation: For them revolutionary mysticism has faded behind the awsome spectacle of an inhuman era of Stalinism.

They speak of the hardships of life, the struggles of everyday existence (as a portion of Shostakovich's 13th Symphony depicts the hardships of the Russian women—text by Evtushenko); they want to find romanticism in the new and more pleasant aspects of life, in human dignity, creativity and versatility. And today the Party cannot dismiss them, because the vast majority of the young Soviet intelligentsia identifies with the posture and attitude of such writers and artists.

Fortunately or unfortunately, the young Soviet rebels live in an era and an atmosphere in which every manifestation of artistic beliefs can easily become a pawn in the East-West tug-of-war. Evtushenko and Co. have been hailed in the West as the representatives of the New and the Fresh in Soviet life—thus, in due time they obviously had to be denounced by the Party as 'naive' and 'falling for the propaganda tricks of the capitalists.'

Let us not forget that the same thing happened to Pasternak, after the Nobel award affair—but today the great Soviet writer has been rehabilitated de facto, although this posthumous act does not erase the tragedy of the entire affair.

The pressures of the Party to coerce the men of letters and arts into a submissive attitude will probably continue—but it should not be overlooked that the Party feels compelled to discuss these matters with the artists and do so before the entire Soviet nation. It is much harder today for the Party to label the young rebels as 'traitors' or 'dupes of capitalism.'

They are the best representatives of the modern Soviet generation—a generation which will provide the leadership of the future. To be sure, the young rebels are intensely patriotic, they are proud of their socialist country and they are avowed Communists—but in effect what they try to say is that they want to build Communism in a better, more 'human' way and in these efforts they feel they have the support of the entire young generation of Soviet men.

Spring has both its cold spells and its thaws; the more orthodox and less permissive Party leadership today is on the offensive. One can hardly see winners or losers in this contest between orthodoxy and innovation. To assess the Soviet intellectual scene in the terms of the popular press of having definite losers and victors is not only superficial but also highly misleading.

These developments are essentially long-range in effects and in regard to the direction they might take. The important fact is that there is a whole new generation growing up — intense, creative, searching young men of intellect. And let us not forget that time is on the side of the Evtushenkos.

Kerciu Painting Just Factual Reporting

By RALPH McGILL

Mississippi's never-never land has produced another instance of preposterous irony from her seemingly inexhaustible store of the same. G. Ray Kerciu, assistant professor of art at the University of Mississippi, was arrested, sued and harassed by students and townsmen because of a painting titled "America, The Beautiful."

Patient, long-suffering, decent men, members of the American Association of Professors at Ole Miss, came to his defense. But the city and state political power structures were against them. The values so strikingly advertised by Governor Barnett and the Ole Miss students who have cursed and harassed James Meredith, and the murderous mob at Oxford once more were on exhibition. If these values remain in evidence, then the university will be hard put to field a faculty worthy of the name when football practice begins next September.

Professor Kerciu painted a picture of a Confederate flag. Across it he printed some of the phrases and epithets shouted at James Meredith, the Ole Miss student whose presence has so offended the state. The slogans are, indeed, the more mild of the racist abuse flung at the Negro collegian. They included "Back Ross (Barnett)," "Yankee Go Home," "Nigger," "Never," "A Good Nigger is a Dead Nigger" and "Kennedy's Koon Keeper."

Factual Reporting

The painting is in fact, a factual piece of reporting. The Confederate flag was carried by members of the mob on the October evening that federal marshals were attacked with stones and gunfire. Two men were murdered by a hidden sniper. Adult toughs and students were reported as hoisting the flag in the midst of the mob. Some of those who charged the marshals carried small Confederate banners. Professor Kerciu's painting in no sense distorts the events which it commemorates.

A student leader, presumably one of those who represents the elite of the campus, took out a warrant charging the artist with obscenity and desecration of the Confederate flag. A Mississippi court solemnly accepted jurisdiction. Mr. Kerciu was released on bond. The student later dropped the charge, and Mr. Kerciu, in a succeeding interview, said he "felt good about it," but that does not blot out the spectacle.

The story is not without humor, but what laughter it contains is denied by what the action reveals — a coercive police-state atmosphere that demands conformity to standards and values that deny and sully the principles contained in the U. S. Constitution.

Who has desecrated the Confederate flag?

Is it Mr. Kerciu, who reproduced on canvas what had occurred? Or is it Mississippi and those of her citizens whose deeds and words are recorded in the painting?

Thursday, Bobby Kennedy went to Alabama to confer with the esteemed segregationist governor, George Wallace. Picketing against RFK was prohibited, and several would-be protestors were arrested.

Maybe Alabma is getting some sense, but the curbing of this freedom is a mistake, whether the victim is a member of the NAACP or the Ku-Klux Klan.

GM Interviews For Publicity Chairmen Set

The Graham Memorial Publicity Committee will hold interviews for its secretary, art, press and specials chairmen May 8-10, from 2-5 p.m. daily in GM, committee chairman Alice Anne Tucker announced yesterday.

The Publicity Committee publicizes all GM activities — the GM Series attractions, Free Flicks, Petite Musicales, Petite Dramatiques, and all GM-sponsored social events, such as Jubilee and Rendevous Room parties.

The Art Chairman directs the preparation of posters, serves as art director for the brochures, makes photographic assignments, and is in charge of other miscellaneous art work.

The Press Chairman serves as liason between GM and the Daily Tar Heel, local papers, WKIX and WUNC, by supplying information and articles on coming events.

The Specials Chairman is the editor of the GM brochures, and is also responsible for the Calendar backs, bulletin-board displays, slide shows, banners, and other publicity.

These chairmen will need artists, photographers, writers, layout artists, typists, and most importantly, people with bright, original ideas, Miss Tucker reported.

Parent's Day To Feature 2 Concerts

A full slate of activities has been scheduled for Parent's Day at UNC.

The annual occasion, to be held Sunday, May 5, will feature open house in residences and classrooms, an address by Consolidated University President William Friday and two concerts.

The Air Force ROTC will open the afternoon activities by passing in review at 1 p.m. on Fetzer Field. At 1:30, there will be a faculty reception at GM, followed by Friday's address in Memorial Hall at 2:30.

There will also be a joint concert of the UNC Glee Club and the Women's College Chorus at 3:15, and a UNC Band concert at GM at 4. Activities will close with a Faculty Tea at the Monogram Club at 5.

Frosh Coordinator Chosen

Judy Allen, a sophomore from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., has been chosen by the Women's Residence Council as the new Freshman Women's Coordinator.

This is a new office this year and was formed with the purpose of making the freshman women's position on campus more important and to strengthen friendships among the two freshman women's dorms, Spencer and Nurses.

Miss Allen will act as a tie between the new freshman and the many and varied campus activities.

"We are trying to establish positions for freshmen in such organizations as Student Government and the Y," she said. "We also are planning a program to encourage the freshman town girls to participate in more campus activities."

There will be approximately 200 freshman girls majoring in Physical Therapy, Medical Technology, Pharmacy, Nursing and Dental Hygiene entering UNC next fall.

Miss Allen will also have 24 orientation counselors working with her. These counselors will act as advisors to the freshman girls throughout their school year.

Women have "combed tangles" into their hair for 2000 years. Remember the dog-ears of the 20's?

To argue whether the teased hair-do is fashionable or unfashionable is to waste words.

The current issue of the hairdresser's trade journal, World, quotes the Salon of Finance in New York. "Some styles need it; some styles don't."

It is not fashionable to torture one's hair just to say "I tease it." But to use a comb (two fingers will do it) to coax a curl into place or subdue a stubborn strand is no less fashionable for Caroline Coed than for the wives of Henry VIII.

But take heed, Caroline; Henry picked his chambermaids plain, not sultry sophisticates under lacquer-sopped wigs.

And Dave Morgan holds the purse strings here. He is not to be defied.

Miss County Chosen Here

The Miss Orange County Pageant sponsored by the Chapel Hill Junior Chamber of Commerce will be held in Memorial Hall Friday night at 8.

This contest, in which girls from all over Orange County are eligible to participate is the successor to the Miss Chapel Hill Pageant, which was restricted to girls from Chapel Hill and UNC coeds.

There are ten entries for this year's pageant. They are: Beverly Leng, Delores Scott and Joan Archer of Chapel Hill, and Andrea Ray, Ann Clayton, Judy Hollis, Marie Minnis, Gayle Sims, Sylvia Worrell and Peggy Byrd of Hillsboro. This is one of the few years in which no UNC coed has entered.

Charlottean Ty Boyd, formerly of Chapel Hill, will be master of ceremonies.

Each of the entrants will compete in three divisions: bathing suit, talent and evening dress. As in previous years, the talent competition will count 50 per cent in scoring.

The current Miss Chapel Hill, Dorcas Henley, will crown her successor to represent Orange County for 1963-64.

The winner will receive a $250 scholarship, a wardrobe and a free trip to the Miss North Carolina Pageant in Greensboro this July.

Tickets are on sale at merchants stores in Chapel Hill and Hillsboro and from any Chapel Hill Jaycee member.

Top Junior Will Receive '63 KD Award

The Jane Craig Gray Award to the Most Outstanding Junior Woman will be presented at a tea Sunday afternoon at 4 in the Kappa Delta house.

The award presented annually by Beta Chi Chapter of Kappa Delta in memory of Jane Craig Gray, late wife of Gordon Gray, University President from 1950-55. It recognizes a member of the junior class who has proven herself most outstanding in character, scholarship and leadership.

Each year a junior's name will be engraved on the award plaque to be kept in the Kappa Delta house.

Mr. Charles Shaffer of the Office of Development will present the award following a speech by Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

Extreme Teasing Gives Way To Natural Styles Of Hair

By DONA FAGG

Chapel Hill beauticians and hair stylists agree extreme teasing is out. They state that the basis of a hair style should be mainly in the cut not in the comb.

"A few girls still demand that we tease their hair to the extreme," said Joyce Woodward, hair stylist at the Aesthetic Beauty Salon. "Most of the teasing we do is in spots for height and width but the trend is definitely toward naturalness. As you know over in the School of Nursing the Dean has ordered 'no teasing and no hair spray.'"

"If teasing is done correctly and in moderation it can't harm the hair," added Alice Stone, another stylist at the Aesthetic. "A lot of girls are 'pack teasing' their hair — taking a metal comb and packing and matting their hair down. This is the way they get split ends and the only way those can be taken care of is by cutting them off.

"Hair doesn't need to be sprayed stiff," she added. "It can be sprayed lightly each day but too much spray dulls and coats hair."

"If the coeds would take notice in the latest fashion magazines the big head look is gone, but it's like they said at our recent New York convention. Teasing didn't come in overnight and it won't leave overnight."

"The balloon head is out and I'm against the extreme teasing," commented Gene Bratcher, owner of Gene's Hair Styles. "Brush teasing in spots so you can't tell the hair is teased to add a little height is all right. The styles now emphasize fullness in the crown and closeness at the sides and not these tremendous heads of hair."

"The big heads of hair? They're terrible things, and if I get a customer who asks for it I won't do it anyway. If I do tease it, I comb it right out," said Joseph of Carolina Beauty Shop.

"We get girls up here who don't brush their hair from one trip here to the next," said Nancy Tempesta, owner of Town and Country. "The damage of the teasing is to the scalp more than the hair. We sell more dandruff treatments since teasing came in. If they don't brush their hair properly in between times and distribute the oil, they run into trouble."

All agreed the style was in the cut.

"Now the trend is toward the European cut with tapered, feathered ends. Height can be added without extreme teasing but with just a little," said Mrs. Stone of Aesthetic.

Although hair damage was an often cited evil of over teasing, Joseph touched on the emotional reason for naturalness. "I don't think the men like to see a woman's hair all out and up," he said waving a pair of scissors.

"Two years ago it was new. All right now it's gone!" was his final comment.

UNC Males Blast Teased Hair; Want Coeds To Change Style

By DIANE HILE

Picture this — soft lights, slow music, the Typical Carolina Ed and the typical coed. As the TCE whispers sweet nothings into the ear of the TCC, he puts his arm around her shoulder, her neck, and then tries to put his fingers through her hair. I say TRIES, not that he did.

"I firmly believe that spray net was created by someone with a deranged mind," said Walter Dellinger, an outspoken Charlottt senior. "Either it was invented by someone with serious sexual abnormalities or else it is a part of the insidious Communist plot. I come to this conclusion because nothing destroys a woman's sex appeal more than heavily spray netted and tipped hair.

"The only thing that can be said in favor of spray net is that the use of this product may be the solution of the world's population problem."

However, some members of this campus disagree with Walter.

"It is my firm conviction that women are ratting their hair and using spray net because of profound and deeply embedded inferiority complexes," said Dave Morgan, business manager of the DTH who is currently suing the sports editor. "Ratted hair covers up for woman's smaller brain and makes her look taller; the use of spray net is an attempt not only to displace through sense of smell her deep felt paranoic inferiority by advertising her 'enlarged' brain but also to 'fixate' in a catatonic state her illusionary equality. It is an outcropping of the basic neurotic nature of woman."

"I seriously question David Morgan's manhood," disputed Curry Kirkpatrick, sports editor who is suing Dave Morgan for defamation of character, "but I certainly do not question his right to comment on this subject of teasing hair. Everyone knows Morgan is a profound and deeply embedded inferior. His ratted face covers up for his smaller brain.

"Morgan's use of big words in his statement above is an attempt not only to displace, through a sense of importance, his deep felt paranoic inferiority by advertising his small brain but also to fixate in a catatonic state his fraudulent means of making a living. It is an outcropping of the basic nature of a warped personality with warped ideas, which Morgan possesses in abundance. I, personally, like Morgan's teased hair style."

FEW ATTACK STYLES IN MILDER TERMS

This cynicism — disregarding the personal aspect — toward and ratted hair-dos is typical of the many males on campus. Some are not quite so strong on the subject.

"I like teased hair on some girls, while on others I don't" said Larry McDevitt, a junior from Asheville. "I think the hair style should be becoming to the girl. If the style fits, wear it."

But, Jim Slaughter, newly elected head cheerleader, said: "A woman's hair-do should accentuate her beauty. No puffed up style is natural beauty. Instead of a beautiful woman, she becomes a walking hair-do."

"Terrible," "awful," "water heads," "gross," and varying shades of stronger terms were the majority of the comments. Many of the males asked "Do you want me to answer truthfully or should I say they look nice?"

"I often wonder what a girl is trying to hide when she teases her hair," said Dick Lewisohn, a junior cheerleader from New York city. "I can see a little bouffant, but not the extreme some girls go to."

"Puff ball hair-dos look like gilded basketballs," said Pete Wales a junior from the Virgin Islands. "They are completely unnatural and contrived. A girl should try to find a hair-do becoming to her features, not something manufactured in a wig mill."

GIRLS LOOK LIKE BIRDS

"I realize that most girls are birds," said Mike Putzel, a junior from New Haven, Conn., "but building birds nests on top of their heads accomplishes very little."

Haynes McFadden, a sophomore from Atlanta, Ga., had this to say: "I can illustrate my objection best by asking one question: Have you ever had to sit behind a girl with teased hair in a movie? Actually its not so bad because the hair is so thin on top you can see through it."

"Teased and sprayed hair is bad news," said Gerry Good, a junior from Hialeah, Fla. "I can't stand all that junk on a girl's hair. One day when I was home from school I threw out all my sister's hair spray."

"In general I think it looks terrible," said Sam Blumberg, a junior from Dotham, Ala. "The same thing for heavy eye shadow. They look like babies trying to look older but only making themselves look ridiculous."

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

YOU CAN SEE many interesting people and many interesting things at a UNC ballgame. You can watch the chicks with their tans and their shifts enjoying the game; you can watch guys like Cunningham and Sigmon and Edge and Cooke enjoying the chicks; you can watch the little kids chasing foul balls and enjoying Cunningham, Sigmon, Edge and Cooke. Or you can watch the game.

And if you watch the game, possibly the most entertaining thing you see all afternoon is the little clown in the navy blue suit frolicking down among the grasses on the diamond.

This is Lou Bello, and he is having a ball.

Lou Bello (or Bellow, or Bullo, as the case may be) is an official — an official of sports events. In the fall, it's football; in the winter, it's basketball; in the summer, it's baseball. Lou is usually around, and he is, undoubtedly, about as loved at the University of North Carolina as a Duke graduate could possibly hope to be.

Bill Haywood cuts down the cleanup man on strikes—AARRAAHH!! Lou shouts. Heywood Hull beats out a slow roller in the infield — NNOOHH!!! Lou screams and spreadeagles his arms. Dickie Prindle is tagged out sliding into second on a steal — YYEEAAHH!!! — Lou shouts to the skies and fires his fist forward.

From Athlete To Pilot To Ref

COHOCTON, N. Y. IS A small town outside the big city more noted for turning out criminals from its prison — Sing Sing — than umpires or referees from its confines. But here is where Lou Bello was born and grew up — well, almost grew up — and here is where he was a "fair" high school athlete in four sports: football, basketball, baseball and track.

Lou came South in 1940 to enter Duke and, as he was to find out a year later, start his career as an official. He did a little intramural officiating as a sophomore and also worked basketball at the Durham YMCA. But the war interrupted this, and Lou went off to call fouls on the Germans.

The enemy apparently didn't like some of his calls for Lou, as a youthful flyer, was shot down the following year and was benched for 10 months in a German prison camp.

He was one of the first veterans back on the Duke campus after the war and immediately resumed his officiating career. After college, Lou worked the Carolina Baseball League regularly for three years and then started teaching school in Raleigh.

After eight years at Needham-Broughton High, Lou found the mixing of his two careers didn't work too well, so he decided to quit teaching and concentrate on officiating. He has concentrated full-time now for four and a half years, and he loves it more than ever.

"Sure, I love what I'm doing," Lou says today. "If I didn't, I wouldn't be in it. I get a real charge out of officiating."

Lou Bello's career, unlike many other people in the public eye, has not had its ups and downs. It's all been up for Lou, and he admits this.

"I went to the top young and I went to the top fast," he agrees. "I've stayed there largely because of my love for the job and, I guess, because of the fact that I'm colorful."

College Basketball First Love

LOU HAS WORKED three NCAA basketball tournaments — at New York in '58, at Northwestern in '59 and at Iowa City in '62 — but was automatically exempt from last winter's rounds because of his connection with Duke.

"The rule says a guy cannot work any of his school's games. This includes the games of a tournament in which this school is involved. It's a good rule," he says.

The peak of his profession, Lou confides, is definitely a post as a major league baseball umpire. He has thought about it, but nothing has really come of it. Perhaps the main reason for this is Lou's first love — basketball, not baseball.

"I love basketball better than any of them," he says with a smile. "Maybe it's because basketball has been so good to me . . . I don't know. I've been real lucky with all the success I've gotten from the game. Actually, though, I think I've liked it best all along."

And Lou says rather emphatically that he thinks he has reached the top in that particular sport.

"I'm not interested in pro basketball. Tell me something. When do you blow the whistle up there? I don't know. It's the darndest thing I've ever seen in my life.

"Of course, now you can't do both pro and college ball. They won't let you. That's a good idea also because the two are so different."

Lou Too Griped At Officials

LOU BELLO IS also different. Very different from any of the other officials. He is loud. He is demonstrative. He is colorful. And he is entertaining.

"When I first played sports, I griped at the officials, sure, but only because they made a call that nobody had heard or understood. I vowed, when I first got into this business, that when I made a decision, everybody — but everybody — in the place would know what was coming off.

"I clown, I showboat, sure, but only to make the game more interesting. Somebody once said that the perfect official was the inconspicuous official. I disagree."

That, over the years, has become apparent. But has there ever been any misconceptions of Lou's crowd-pleasing role as an official?

"Losing teams, and players having an off night, sometimes take it wrong," Lou says. "But, on the whole, it has become accepted. Anyway, the ballplayers are my friends. I want it that way. I try to make it that way."

I didn't ask him about it, but Lou said so anyway.

"If I had it to do all over again, there's no doubt about it — I'd be an entertainer. When I first started getting attention, people would see me and say I was imitating Pat Kennedy (an old-time colorful official) and all the things he did. Why, I'd never even seen Pat Kennedy I wasn't imitating anybody. I'm myself. I'm Lou Bello."

And I'll go along with that.

"Ohio Fats," Arnie Favored

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)—Defending champion Arnold Palmer and Open and Masters king Jack Nicklaus were rated co-favorites Wednesday on the eve of the first round of golf's most exclusive event, the $60,000 Tournament of Champions.

Only 27 men in all the world qualified for this tournament, but even the other golfers in the all-star cast admitted that the bookies in this city of gamblers were right in tabbing Palmer and Nicklaus at 4-1.

"It's hard to go against those two," said John Barnum, at 51 the oldest man ever to win a major PGA event and thus qualify for this tournament.

The bookies got their first look at Nicklaus Tuesday and liked what they saw. The husky Ohioan fired a 2-under-par 70 the first time he ever played the Desert Inn Country Club course.

Tee Off Late

Because this is a gambling town where most of the spectators—and some of the golf pros—don't go to bed until dawn, first tee-off time is set for 1 p.m. with Palmer paired with Bobby Nichols. All play is in twosomes except the final threesome of young Raymond Floyd, attorney Dan Sikes and former champion Jerry Barber.

SOCCER SCRIMMAGE

Next year's varsity soccer team will meet a team composed of grad students and senior members of last fall's soccer team in a scrimmage match Friday afternoon, May 3.

Navy Field will be the scene of battle. Starting time is 4:30.

Netters Win 16th By 9-0

UNC Puts State To Pasture

By TED HOEHN

Coach Don Skakle's varsity netmen increased their season's record to 16-1 yesterday afternoon with a 9-0 victory over the N. C. State Wolfpack on the home courts.

The Tar Heels are now 50-2 over a three year span.

Defending ACC singles champion George Sokol had little trouble in polishing off 6-4, 220 lb. Jim Skidmore 6-4, 6-0. Sokol's booming forehand again proved to be his forte.

On the second court, Ted Hoehn lost only seven points in the first set but had to fight for his life in the second to win a lopsided 6-0, 10-8 match over Chuck Hyatt.

O. H. Parrish moved up to number three yesterday and promptly showed off his great potential by whipping his Big Four rival Lloyd Bost 6-0, 6-1.

The last three singles matches were played by Carolina's famous "Pit Crew." Pete Myers, the regular number seven man, outsteadied Walt Brown 6-1, 6-1. Number five man Kirby Jones, looking every bit as good as his walkalike John Karabasz of Miami, was the first man off the courts with a very decisive 6-0, 6-0 win over Doug Cooper. Sam Applecate rounded out the singles with a 6-2, 6-1 decision over Bill Marshall.

Skakle used the same players in the doubles with the exception of substituting Cocke for Sokol. The Hoehn-Parrish combo wiped off Skidmore-Hyatt with a fine display of serving and net play 6-0, 6-2.

"Mr. Doubles" Cocke and Myers defeated the number two team of Brown-Cooper 6-3, 6-0. And Applegate and "Norris Noneck" Jones downed the State duo of Bost-Smith 6-2, 6-2.

Only two matches remain on the schedule. Tomorrow the racketmen travel to Winston-Salem to take on a weak Wake Forest team, and Monday they entertain tough Presbyterian.

Fencing Tourney Under Way

For the past two Friday nights Roland Parker Lounge at GM has resounded to the call of "en garde" and the clash of cold steel as campus fencers competed in the first two parts of the All-Campus Championships. The foil and sabre competition has been held, and the epee championship this Friday at 7 p.m. will complete the competition. The public is cordially invited.

Because of the large number of entries in the foil division, two elimination pools were held. The top three fencers from each pool then fenced in the finals. The finalists were Bill Benton, Bob Bernhardt, Ed Caldwell, Bill Hart, Ken Simons and Tom Welch.

The finals resulted in a tie for first, and the winner was determined by a "barrage" or fence off. Winners were First, Bill Hart; Second, Tom Welch, Third, Bill Benton.

The sabre competition was conducted as a single "round-robin" pool. Winners were First, Tom Welch; Second, Pete Harkins; Third, Bill Hart.

Role Of NSA In Law Suit Is Explained

Shaul Says Group Is Intermediary

The U.S. National Student Association (NSA) is acting only as an intermediary in the law suit to admit two Negroes to the Huntsville extension of the University of Alabama, according to NSA President Dennis Shaul.

A Collegiate Press Service news release, which received national distribution last Saturday, announced that NSA was suing the State of Alabama.

"This is not a test case," said Shaul, who talked to the DTH from Philadelphia yesterday. "The test of whether they would be admitted was made before NSA entered the case. They were refused on technicalities."

Shaul said several civil rights organizations in the South asked NSA to enter the case "to show that American students are behind the admittance of all qualified persons to state universities."

"While we were thinking about sponsoring a law suit for the two," Shaul said, "the Field Foundation offered us a grant of $5,500 to cover the legal costs of the case."

The NSA President added, "By and large, there were other groups better prepared to take legal action than us." However, he said, "After discussions with foundations and the Justice Department, we decided that this would be the most effective way."

Shaul said of the decision to enter the suit: "We have reached the limit in what we can do in the area of seminars, mailings, and speeches on human relations. This is another avenue of non-activist expression of the policies established for the Association by the (National Student) Congress."

Students Not Symbols

"This case is a good way for us," he said, "to differentiate our role from more activist groups. These two Negroes are really students, and don't think of themselves as symbols of anything."

Shaul said he doubted that the case would be decided in time for the two to enter summer school. However, he said that he felt that if they were, it would make original de-segregation easier in Alabama schools.

"Huntsville is not the citadel of education in the state the way the main university campus at Tuscaloosa is," Shaul said. "I feel that the admittance of Negroes at the extension would be less charged with emotion than at the University, especially in the fall."

Shaul, who spoke at the International Students Symposium here last month, said he hoped to come to Chapel Hill again this month. He is a former student body president at the University of Notre Dame and a Rhodes scholar. He was elected NSA president at last summer's Congress.

Administration Forces Decision On Apt. Rule

By MICKEY BLACKWELL
And JOEL BULKLEY

University officials said yesterday that student leaders must choose between temporarily reinstating the old Apartment Rule while a compromise is negotiated, or force the Administration to impose and enforce a rule of its own.

The alternatives were posed at Thursday's meeting between student and Administration leaders and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

The first alternative would require the Women's Residence Council to withdraw its recent modification of the Apartment Rule and return to the old two-couple rule for the remainder of the academic year.

Meantime a committee of student, Administration and faculty leaders would consider the matter and either propose a new rule or negotiate a restatement of the old one.

The second alternative would involve the Administration acting unilaterally to see that a rule similar to the old one is both restored and enforced.

A decision on the two-fold proposal is to come from separate meetings of the WRC and the Women's Council within the next week.

The old rule, abolished by the WRC March 19 for all but freshman coeds, required two couples to be present when coeds visited off-campus living units.

Two days later Dean of Women Katharine Carmichael announced that she did not consider the rule-change valid and regarded only those rules contained in the 1962-63 Handbook for Women Students to be in effect.

The Women's Council has since announced it would uphold the rule changes as legislated by the WRC.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson issued a proposal for some decision to be made as soon as possible because "Honor Council cases arising from this new rule are bound to come up."

Dean of Men William Long cited three reasons for a decision to be made immediately: (1) women students should know which rule they living under; (2) there is not enough time left in the semester for further discussions to continue; and (3) there is obviously a great amount of academic pressure being forced on the student leaders involved in the apartment rule discussion.

Student body president Mike Lawler said the student representatives must confer with their respective groups before any decision could be reached. He added that he was hesitant to put off a final decision on the apartment rule matter.

Dr. James Caldwell, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, reported that the faculty and administration are interested in exploring the proper standard of conduct needed here. He added that he felt a study group should be set up to work out a solution to the controversy.

The outcome of this week's student meetings will be reported to Dean Henderson. He will then call another meeting of these leaders to discuss the decision reached by the WRC and the Women's Council.

During the early part of yesterday's meeting, outgoing Women's Council chairman Bev Haynes read a letter explaining the rationale behind the change in the apartment rule. She said the letter would be distributed to all women students.

Board To Fill Publication Jobs

Bill Townsend, chairman of the Publications Board announced yesterday persons are needed to fill the positions of business managers of the Yack, the Daily Tar Heel, and the UNC Quarterly for next year.

Interviews for all positions will begin Friday at the Publications Board office in GM. All selections will be made by the Publications Board. Interested persons should come by the office and make an appointment for an interview.

A business manager is also needed for the UNC News, the summer school paper, for both sessions.

"All these are paid positions," Townsend said. "The editors are salaried, and the business managers get a commission on advertising."

He said that the job of business manager consists of handling all business aspects of the publications, including paying bills, handling advertising, working with printer, and handling all business problems.

"The editor collects all material and is responsible for the deadline requirements," Townsend said. "They have complete editorial freedom."

Persons interested in one of these positions may contact one of the following for more information: Sam Applegate, Yack Business Mgr.; Dave Morgan, Tar Heel Business Mgr.; and Fred McConnell, UNC News and Quarterly Business Mgr.

Those interested in editorships should contact Louis Bourne for the Quarterly or Bill Waumett for the UNC News.

Marshall Tells Assembly

'N. C. Leads South In Granting Rights'

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Burke Marshall, U. S. Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights said Wednesday night that North Carolina is at the forefront of all Southern States in complying with the 1954 de-segregation order.

"But," he added, "I just don't understand the great difference that takes place when you cross from one state line to another."

Speaking at a dinner honoring McNeill Smith, outgoing chairman of the N. C. Civil Rights Commission, Marshall told a Carolina Inn gathering he couldn't see a difference in the appearance of the people of North Carolina, Alabama or Mississippi, but, "there is a great difference in the atmosphere" of these states "caused simply by a state line." He said the difference reflects in public leadership, economic growth and even upon men who had served as governor five or ten years earlier.

Marshall cited Alabama and Mississippi as examples of "this change in atmosphere."

"In the Meredith case, Mr. Justice Black, speaking for the Supreme Court, said that Meredith had the right to go to school. Once that order was handed down, it became the plain duty of everyone, especially those dealing with the law, to enforce the decision.

"Yet three days later, the Gov. of Miss. defied the law and called on all state leaders to join with him in defying it . . .

Marshall elaborated on a report prepared by Mississippi officials which accused Federal marshals and troops of brutality in dealing with the people who were jailed during the crisis.

"That report was a distortion," Marshall said. "Many people were trying to get on the campus with guns, long range rifles and other dangerous weapons. Circumstances were very trying for about 24 hours . . . these people had to be arraigned, but they were released as soon as possible. Concerning the charge that those arrested were made to stay in unfit conditions — well, there was just no room in the jail so they had to be placed in the basement of the Lyceum, but they were treated as well as possible under the circumstances.

"That report doesn't name any names . . . and the incidents set forth in it have no relation to what actually happened."

Marshall took exception to a proposal by the Civil Rights Commission to cut off all federal funds to Mississippi if they didn't comply with orders to integrate.

"Mississippi needs a lot of help," Marshall said. "Cutting off federal funds won't help the people of Miss . . . and they certainly wouldn't be any happier with the federal government if the govt. should cut off all aid to their state."

Marshall said that in Montgomery, Ala. "there is again a different type of atmosphere focused on the problem of breaking the ice" as far as integrating the schools is concerned.

"But the Gov. of Ala. has said he will take the same stand taken by Barnett of Miss. Should the occasion arise," Marshall said. "Gov. Wallace has said publicly that he will stand on the University steps if necessary to prevent integration of state schools.

"Wallace made these promises of segregation during his campaign and he still stick by them . . . and even after talking with the Attorney General he still sticks with what he said during the campaign . . .

"I question very seriously what can be accomplished through defiance of this nature . . . it's not good for the people, for race relations or for the economic situation," Marshall said.

He said he was well pleased with the way S. C. accepted Harvey Gantt when he became the first Negro to enroll in a Palmetto state institution.

"The way it worked in S. C. is the way it should work. No one is upset at Clemson . . . and Gantt is pursuing his studies right along. The entire matter was handled extremely well by state officials.

"The whole matter showed a basic respect for the law by the people of South Carolina.

"That's the way it should work," Marshall added.

Bardolph Keynotes Confab

Dr. Richard Bardolph, Chairman of the history department at Woman's College, will speak tonight in Howell Hall at 7:30. He is the second keynote speaker for the All-South Human Relations Youth Conference being held here through Sunday.

Bardolph, author of "The Negro Vanguard," will deal with the political aspects of human relations in the South. The speech is open to all UNC students and faculty.

This morning, the delegates will attend a panel discussion on the educational, religious, economic, international, and political factors in Southern civil rights. Members of the panel are: Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council; The Rev. Will Campbell of the National Council of Churches; Dr. Vivian Henderson of Fisk University; Leslie Rubin; and John S. Stewart, president of the Mutual Savings and Loan Association of Durham. The panel will be in Gerrard Hall at 9 a.m.

Workshops in the five areas of human relations began for the over 100 delegates from all 13 southern states. The meetings are being held in religious student centers off the campus.

Lyons Named Renaissance President

Kenan Professor of English Clifford P. Lyons is the new president of the Southeastern Renaissance Conference. He will serve until 1964. The 22nd annual conference of Renaissance specialists in the southeastern states has recently been concluded here.

Others to serve with Professor Lyons during the coming year are three Duke University faculty members, John L. Lievsay, who will be vice president; Simeon K. Heninger, Jr., secretary-treasurer; and George W. Williams, editor.

Prof. Peter G. Philias of the UNC Department of English is associate editor.

Daniel O. Price, professor of sociology and director of UNC's Institute for Research in Social Science, has received a fellowship from the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences located at Palo Alto, Calif., for a year of study.

Prof. Price has been awarded a year's leave of absence beginning July 1, 1963.

While at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, which is located on the campus of Stanford University, Prof. Price will divide his time into three areas of work. He will be completing a 1960 census written study on the Negro population of the United States. This study takes a historical look at the position of Negro population and includes a consideration of migration, distribution, employment, and education.

Prof. Price will also analyze data prepared on a study of the Aid to Needy Families and Children program, formerly called the ADC (Aid to Dependent Children) program. He will be investigating how long persons admitted to this program are likely to receive aid and how long before these persons will become self-supporting.

Recent developments in statistics will also be studied by Prof. Price, who teaches a number of statistics courses here.

The Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences awards fellowships to some 40 to 50 people a year to study there.

World News In Brief

Billy Sol Greets Freedom Walkers

RISING FAWN, Ga. (UPI) — Ten "freedom walkers" nearing a showdown with Alabama authorities were paid a surprise roadside visit Thursday by bankrupt Texas financier Billie Sol Estes who shook the marchers' hands and wished them luck.

Estes, an avid integrationist, is is the deep South making a series of speeches. He made a special trip out from Chattanooga along Highway 11 to intercept the marchers, and caught up with them just outside Trenton, Ga., where the group stopped for lunch.

Estes, who in his heyday put several Negro youths through college, drove up in a car containing three Negro men and two children.

As he was shaking hands with the marchers, an old model car drove by and someone shouted: "Nigger lover."

Estes continued to talk with the group for about five or ten minutes, then climbed back into the car, hoisted one of the children onto his lap and the car drove away.

More Secrets Out

LONDON (UPI) — A ban-the-bomb organization called "Spies for Peace" spilled some more of Britain's nuclear defense secrets Thursday.

A new pamphlet claiming to pinpoint the headquarters of a string of underground government centers which would run Britain in case of nuclear attack was distributed to newspapers.

The typewritten pamphlet described the exact location of the London headquarters and detailed its layout. It said this center would control communications with the underground bunkers throughout the country.

Nixon Will Move

NEW YORK (UPI) — Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon anounced Thursday he is moving from California to New York on June 1 to become a general partner in a Manhattan law firm.

Nixon, who missed being elected President in 1960 by a slim margin, said he will work mainly on Washington and Paris affairs for the firm until he can be admitted to the New York Bar Association.

He must live in New York for six months before he can apply for admission.

Nixon's announcement confirmed reports that he was anticipating such a move. It had been learned that a New York realty firm had been asked recently to help locate a new home for the Nixon family.

Protest Registered

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States charged Thursday that inflammatory statements by the Duvalier regime in Haiti have contributed to a "potentially explosive" situation that has endangered Americans there.

The State Department said it had "strongly protested" to the Haitian government an incident in which a U.S. Embassy employe at Port Au Prince was ordered from his car at gunpoint and searched by Haitian police. The department warned Americans to avoid "unneccessary travel" to the island.

Germany Blasts Off

CUXHAVEN, Germany (UPI) — West German scientists shot a three-stage rocket 65 miles in the sky Thursday and put the country back in the space race.

"I'd call it a partial success—I meant the thing to hit 93 miles high," designed Berthold Seliger told United Press International.

With the aid of West German army helicopters, Seliger's crew fired the 450-pound, 18-foot-high solid fuel rocket from a lonely stretch of nearby North Sea beach.

All three stages returned to earth by a newly developed parachute technique.

2 UNC Students Hurt In Accident

Two Carolina students sustained severe cuts on their faces in an accident last Tuesday night in Raleigh.

George Wells, of Atkinson, and Andrew Curl, of Creedmoor, were injured when the automobile they were in hit a parked car on New Bern Avenue in Raleigh. Wells was charged with failing to reduce his speed where a special hazard existed.

The parked car was knocked into a masonry wall on New Bern Ave., causing damages to the wall estimated at $75. Damage to the Wells car was estimated at $400, to the parked car at $200.

Both men were taken to Wake Memorial Hospital for emergency treatment. As of yesterday Curl was still in the hospital. Wells has been discharged.

Picture Is Representation Of Artist: Sloane

By LOUIS LEGUM

"No one would ever tell a surgeon how to perform an operation," according to Dr. Joseph Sloane, Chairman of the Art Department, "but everyone wants to tell an artist how he should paint.

"Most people feel that a picture should be a picture or representation of something. But why can't a picture be something in its own existence, bringing a new thing in the world? It is our privilege, if we wish, not to like modern art. But not liking it merely because we have not found out about it, is not our privilege."

It is Dr. Sloane's belief that there is no one comprehensive definition of modern art. "Many people consider that modern art began with the breaking up of the Renaissance painting by the Impressionists in the latter part of the nineteenth century. Others consider it to have begun with the twentieth century, while still others define modern art as only contemporary.

"Essentially modern art began when artists no longer found their subject matter suitable to Renaissance treatment. They were tired of doing the same religious and mythical pictures by the same formula. As a consequence, many artists turned to an examination of painting itself. This led to Impressionism and an experimentation with light effects. From this stage of development it was a matter of one style of painting developing as a reaction to another, until we reached the abstract expressionism that is popular today."

Dr. Sloane, however, feels that many other developments of the past century extraneous to painting have had a profound effect upon modern art. "For one thing, photography became so widespread that some painters felt there was no longer any need for representational paintings. Then we have to remember, too, that this has been an era of tremendous technical and social acceleration. The Freuds and Darwins brought changing values and precipitated a dissatisfaction with middle-class society. All these elements served to foster an atmosphere where the artist was free to experiment as he pleased."

It was pointed out to Dr. Sloane that modern art may be fine in its own right, but too many people don't understand what it's all about. Dr. Sloane responded quite definitely. "It is just as hard to understand a Renaissance picture all the way through, as it is a modern painting. Everybody always talks about the enigmatic smile of the "Mona Lisa," but I'll bet that nine out of ten people don't even know who the lady was that Leonardo painted or that the background is on two different levels.

"I will admit that it is more difficult to participate in a modern painting in the sense that it can't be as superficially appreciated. But if people don't want to be aware of and understand the problem of a picture, any picture, then they have no right to judge the solution. In modern art we have to have a receptivity to what the experimental idiom is going against and to what it is going towards. And the only real way to judge such work is to have a wide and lengthy experience with it. But lot of people just aren't modern anyway. About the only modern thing they want is a new dishwasher."

Sidewalk Show Of Local Art Opens Today

The University Art League's three-day Sidewalk Art Show opens today at 11 o'clock on East Franklin St. The show, which features an exhibition of art work by residents of the Durham-Chapel Hill area, will run through Sunday.

Show hours are 11 a.m.-5 p.m. today, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday and 1-6 p.m. Sunday.

No commission is charged for works sold at the show.

Scholarship Renewals Due

The Office of Student Aid has announced that all students currently receiving renewable scholarships through the University must come by 2 Hanes Hall and file renewal applications if they wish to receive their scholarships again next year.

These applications should be filed as soon as possible and must be filed before June 15, the announcement said.

Currently enrolled students who do not hold scholarships and who wish to apply for a scholarship for next year can pick up applications for scholarships at the Office of Student Aid, 2 Hanes Hall. Criteria for eligibility are an above average academic record and demonstrated financial need. Applications may not be submitted after the last day of classes of spring semester.

Radicals & Conferences

With Human Relations Conference taking place here this weekend and the recent report on the National Student Federal Aid to Education Conference last weekend in Washington, we would like to say a word about student conferences in general.

When next Tuesday's Tar Heel comes out with its final reports of this weekend's conferences, some students will undoubtedly scream "radicals."

It almost never fails—every time students get together to "formulate student opinion" on any given issue, the result is a series of resolutions proposing everything from rest-room integration to a revolution.

Witness the student aid to education conference. In a statement by the Conference Steering Committee, the conference was to be "strictly non-partisan both in its planning and execution."

Numerous organizations on both sides of the political fence were invited to attend, so that the Conference might "represent a cross section of American students" on this vitally important issue.

Unfortunately, the vast majority of delegates who came were from the more "liberal" organizations.

What was worse for the prestige of the conference was a "march" on the Capitol Friday morning, organized by members of the well-meaning Steering Committee and sprung on the delegates fresh off the buses from points all over the country. A number of the confused delegates half-heartedly joined the demonstration while several megalomaniac committee members brandished placards.

A TV camera was on hand, of course, and the publicizing of this "spontaneous" demonstration did much to obscure the good intentions of many of the delegates.

This action was censured almost unanimously Friday night in the first of many resolutions, but already Washington had formed its first impression of the conference.

Despite this and other minor grandstand efforts by certain delegates, much was gained in this conference. Students returned to their campuses to report the vast amount of discussion and material gained on the subject of aid to education.

Congressmen learned, through personal interviews and subsequent letters, the feelings of many intelligent students on this crucial issue. Many Congressmen responded enthusiastically to the students and were interested in hearing what they had to say.

There is a pattern that seems to be a matter of course in almost all student conferences and assemblies. For some reason the legitimate conservatives don't show up.

This means the liberal contingent becomes the middle, the moderate liberals are relative conservatives and the rafters on the left are infested with radicals—students with delusions of their own political importance.

Yet the conferences more often than not do achieve positive and constructive ends. Amid the shouts of "point of order," certain intelligent ideas always manage somehow to push their way to the fore.

Delegates to these conferences are largely students who think and are concerned. They have something to say and are ready to back it up. They need to be heard and their concern should be some sort of inspiration for the sedentary majority.

We do not anticipate any radical demonstrations from this weekend's well-planned conference. We do anticipate a great deal of constructive discussion and debate.

There will undoubtedly be the ever present radiicals, but we expect to hear much said that will be constructive.

We urge all UNC students of whatever political faith to participate in the conference by attending the workshops, listening to the speakers and reading the Tar Heel's reports.

Welcome Action

The picket line outside the College Cafe has finally sparked some positive action from several responsible leaders in the Chapel Hill community.

The Student Peace Union line, which is now a month old, appears to have been less successful than originally anticipated and understandably so.

First, many people who favored civil rights, refused to acknowledge the picket line because they were opposed to the SPU as an organization.

Second, the SPU often had difficulty obtaining non-member volunteers because many people were afraid to associate themselves with the group. This resulted in some picketers having to march for up to five hours a day.

Third, some of the town's respected civil rights leaders remained relatively silent because they were not directly associated with the action.

But now it appears that the campus and townspeople wish to present a united front on the discrimination issue in the local restaurants.

Utilizing the same plan they initiated two years ago with the Committee for Open Movies, these people plan to form an independent Committee for Open Business which will not be affiliated with any particular group or organization.

We feel that this is a good step. It will unify the movement on a local level and will gain the prestige of all of our locally-respected leaders.

We support the Committee for Open Business and hope they succeed in ridding Chapel Hill of its last remnants of obvious discrimination.

It worked at the theaters. We hope it will work now.

Joan Baez In Concert Not Dismayed

LINDA GRIFFITH

Folk music has been undergoing a great revival in the last few years, and according to Time magazine, three separate groups of folksingers have arisen. The Commercial category is occupied by such groups as the Kingston Trio and Peter, Paul, and Mary, who use clever arrangements and between-song patter that appeals to a teen-age and college audience.

At the other extreme are the authentic folksingers, the ones who actually live in the hills and learned songs from their parents. These singers often have terrible voices and twang away on tuneless guitars, but they have a certain primitive quality that makes them exciting.

Between these two categories lies a middle ground, and Joan Baez is the leading figure of this group. Like the genuine folksingers, she has no musical training, but she doesn't worry too much about authenticity. She adapts melodies and words according to her tastes and doesn't hesitate to use "composed" folk songs like Jacob Niles' "Black is the Color" and "Plaisir d'-Amour." But she differs from the commercial groups because of her simple arrangements, the lack of chatter or comic songs, and her emphasis on the meaning of the song.

Joan sings with a haunting beauty that is very rare, and her voice has been described as a "clear, pure soprano" so many times that it has almost become a cliche. She has her own personal style that transforms old standards like "Barbara Allen" into new and meaningful experiences.

Joan has recorded three albums for Vanguard, "Joan Baez, Vols. I and II" and "Joan Baez in Concert." These records feature mostly Anglo - American ballads and some Negro folk songs. Her selections range from archaic British ballads like "The Trees Grow High" to Woody Guthrie's "Pretty Boy Floyd," and from the American South's "All My Trials" to the Negro gospel hymn "Kumbaya." The first two albums have a bittersweet quality that is Joan's characteristic, and the songs illustrate the usual folk themes of foresaken lovers, girls gone wrong, heroes and their deeds, and death.

Her latest album for Vanguard is different in format, being a recording of a live concert. Although audience response may give the listener a feeling of participation, in this case it often interferes with the enjoyment of the music. Joan's singing weaves a certain spell which is broken by the applause following each number. The main attraction in other "concert" records has been the singer's comic patter between numbers and the audience laughter. Since Joan is strictly a singer, not a comedian, audience reactions here are unnecessary and distracting. "Concert" is different also in types of songs, for Joan includes a few lighter numbers such as "Copper Kettle," which discusses methods of moonshine manufacture.

Joan's appeal lies in her ability to project emotions without sobbing or shouting and in her gift of telling a tale. It's the old story of listener identification, and her records can create it. They stand frequent playing and require attentive listening—the mark of a true artist.

Jealousy is the fear or apprehension of superiority; envy our uneasiness under it.

Student-Faculty Segregation Is Threat To UNC Education

To the Editors:

These days when all we hear is discussion of the racial integration problem, a very serious campus problem is being pushed into the background. This is the problem of integrating the University faculty with the student body.

While the S.P.U. pickets march outside of a downtown restaurant, who is doing anything to better the student-faculty relations? No one could even imagine picketing the Monogram Club, which was taken from the students a few years ago to form a new Faculty Club. This club is now barred to students.

The only place remaining where students can sit down over a meal to discuss matters of mutual interest is Lenoir Hall and even there the faculty has picked out an area where they habitually go during a free hour for coffee. If a student were to come to one of these tables just to sit and listen or to discuss, how do you suppose he would be received?

This type of segregation is a campus-wide cancer which is threatening our whole educational system. There must be more to education than just attending lectures and doing private study. Of course a large state university can't then have the tutor system of Oxford and Cambridge, and perhaps it can't even have the system of house-masters which is so popular in the Ivy League, but there is a great deal more that we can do to bring the faculty back to the students.

Certain groups have been trying to face this problem: Churches, fraternities, and sororities, but what about the dormitories where the majority of the students live? Well, something is being done finally.

The Interdormitory Council is taking the first step, but it is up to the faculty to respond. All of the dormitories will be open Sunday afternoon, May 5 for the inspection of Parents and Faculty. Most dorms will have 'open-houses' all afternoon and evening on Sunday with the dorm officers welcoming guests. Refreshments will be served and some dorms are even offering some sort of entertainment.

This invitation is open to everyone, and I hope that the faculty and their wives will find the time to stop by the dorms. There are a lot of people in our dorms who are starving for a chance to meet you informally outside of class. Believe it or not, there are still many students left on this campus who are not willing to see Carolina turn into an 'educational T.V.' type of correspondence-course institution.

Campus life is more than just note taking, studying, and partying. There must be some provision made for a meeting of minds, informal discussion groups, or we might as well all pack up and go back home to take correspondence courses.

Sunday's teas will be followed up next Fall by I.D.C. sponsored receptions in the dormitories and planned discussion groups, but these need faculty support. If this is forthcoming the students will turn out in unprecedented numbers.

Vice-President
Interdormitory Council

To the Editors:

I note with some little amusement (though I know the matter is anything but amusing to you at the moment!) that you have already been accused of "liberalism."

Be not dismayed!

There will always be those — even in a university, the very name of which indicates UNIVERSALITY — who confuse the all-encompassing view with "liberalism."

Regard the appellation as a bouquet; that's what it is, really. The criticism indicates that you have assumed correctly the overall viewpoint best befitting the editors of a university newspaper, and especially a university newspaper which is respected by universities throughout the United States for that very reason.

Irate critics who bring down their unjustified wrath upon the heads of DTH editors should remember that it is the very "liberalism" which they criticize that makes such expression as they give vent to possible. And I have the feeling that should you narrow your view those same critics would be the first to criticize you for it!

To the Editors:

The plea for unity and closer association between the Southern states and the rest of the union has been worked over so often that it is a dead cliche, at best. This is unfortunate, sad, terrible and all of the other worn phrases especially in lieu of the fact that the basic problem has yet to be solved.

The problems of the nation are the problems of the South, and vice versa, and it is just about that simple. Yet this message has yet to come through to most, and we mean most, Southerners. The difficulties that are present in most areas of the Southland are more acute, desperate, demanding and widespread than in any other area of this fair nation.

Look at the area's education, health facilities, civil liberties and housing and the obvious need will blind even the most casual reader. Yet almost to the man, our Congressmen vote against those pieces of legislation that we need so badly. Why? Whatever the fear, real or not, let's urge our representatives to be more objective and less hyprocritical. Let's urge the South, of which we are a part, to re-join the Union.

To Lobdell: Try Being A 'Nigger'

By JACK TATE

On May 1 a letter by David Lobdell appeared in the DTH. In this letter Mr. Lobdell stated his opposition to S.P.U. picketing of the College Cafe by asking two questions: "What makes the members of the Student Peace Union think they have the knowledge to tell a successful businessman how to run his business?" and "What right do they have to suggest anything to any person?"

Let us examine Mr. Lobdell's questions.

First, do the members of S.P.U. have sufficient knowledge to tell a man how to run his business? This question assumes that the S.P.U. is attempting to tell the owner of a business how to operate it. Certainly this is not the purpose of the S.P.U. Instead, they are advertising the fact that the owner of the College Cafe practices discrimination against certain U.N.C. students.

The S.P.U. is also inviting him to join the twentieth century and to recognize that Negroes are human beings. Can these actions be interpreted as attempts to run or operate the College Cafe? The S.P.U. is trying to make the ideals of this nation a reality, not just something to talk about in high-sounding terms. If a group of American college students is wrong in wishing that the United States would live up to its ideals of freedom and equality, then Americans who believe in the dignity of man regardless of creed or color are no less wrong.

Mr. Lobdell's second question is. "What right does the S.P.U. have to suggest anything to any person?" In countries without freedom of speech this question might be pertinent, but in the United States there can be no doubt as to whether they have this right. However, this is more than a legal issue. Mr. Lobdell seems to feel that the S.P.U. is placing itself on a pedestal by daring to suggest that we boycott the College Cafe.

Finally, by implying that the S.P.U. has no right (other than legal) to suggest views which differ from his and his supporters, Mr. Lobdell is in effect saying that no one has this right. This University is based on a liberal tradition. Any attempt to shut out or crush new ideas by either ardent segregationists or by determined liberals presents us with an issue far more serious than the racial position of the owner of the College Cafe. I hope that the members of the S.P.U. will never be intimidated by those people who try to deny them their freedom of expression.

Mr. Lobdell concludes with a statement that if the Student Peace Union is trying to destroy our way of life, we should immediately and thoroughly defeat it. Surely no member of this organization would try to destroy something that is vital to the maintenance of our civilization; for our way and his way of life are basically the same. If the S.P.U., by making an effort to secure equal privileges for minority groups, is destroying our way of life, does this mean that our lives are based on racial discrimination? Certainly no responsible man, state, or nation bases its way of life on such narrow ground.

In conclusion, I believe Mr. Lobdell and his supporters should, for a moment, place themselves in the position of the American Negro. Let them be turned away from restaurants and cafes; let them be called "nigger;" let them be considered second-class citizens; and above all let them look to the future and see a seeming endless struggle for equality awaiting them.

Under these conditions I am sure that Mr. Lobdell and his supporters would realize why the Student Peace Union is promoting equal rights for minority groups.

Open Business Meet At 8

Dr. W. N. Bowers, Albert C. Higgins, and Harold Foster will be the main speakers tonight at an open meeting of the Committee For Open Business. The meeting will be held at 8 p.m. at the St. Joseph A.M.E. church, 506 W. Rosemary St.

Dr. Bowers, a member of the active in last year's sucessful drive U.N.C. Physics Department, was to end racial discrimination at Chapel Hill motion picture theatres, as was Higgins, a member of the Institute of Social Research, and Foster, a Chapel Hill native and editor of the North Carolina College newspaper, "Campus Echo."

Committee for Open Business has been formed to find and institute ways of ending segregation at Chapel Hill restaurants.

Lou Calhoun, a member of the Committee, said Thursday that students and townspeople were needed at tonight's meeting and urged all who could to attend.

"The Student Peace Union began a boycott of all segregated Chapel Hill restaurants over a month ago," Harold Foster added. "The community should now be willing to take up their responsibility."

Dr. George Vanderbilt Taylor, professor of History, has been named by the Junior class as the last in a series of "Teachers of the mosth."

Named By Juniors

Dr. G. V. Taylor Is Teacher Of Month

Dr. G. V. Taylor has been chosen Junior Class Teacher of the Month for April according to an announcement made yesterday.

The Professor of History has been at UNC since 1952. He received his B.A. at Rutgers in 1941 and his Ph.D. at Wisconsin in 1950.

Taylor said that the best students at UNC are equal to the best students at any other American university. "The caliber of students here has been rising constantly for many years," Taylor said. "This can be attributed to entrance requirements, which have had a humanitarian value by excluding many students who would be unable to meet the demands of the University.

"The better students are pushing me more with their sharp questions. However, the large majority of students are cautious and timid. They are afraid of failure," he said.

Taylor said students want precise lecture notes, but "they don't question the material or ask for further explanations.

"Here I have the privilege of teaching freshmen, sophmores, upperclassmen and graduates. When teaching freshmen, I have to master the problem of generalizing vast bodies of material, and this is an instructive kind of work.

"The graduate courses are intellectually stimulating and challenging and help me with my publications."

Taylor has received a grant to finish a book which he began ten years ago. French Capitalism at the End of the Old Regime will show that capitalism was too immature and too diversified to have been a cause of the French Revolution.

Concernng the major problems of historians today, Taylor said, "We are gong to have to work hard to meet the professional competition of other schools where there is more money for research and publications and a lighter teaching load.

"In these competng history departments, there exists less of a tradition of devotion to teaching than there is here. Therefore, we feel trapped by conflicting demands. We are expected to do a remarkable job of teaching and to publish a stream of high quality works.

"I like to present problems, raise questions, suggest elements of an answer, and above all attempt to communicate a critical attitude toward written history. People have too much confidence in what they read," Taylor said.

Dr. Morrison Writes Book On Daniels

"Josephus Daniels — Simpatico," an article on the personal and informal side of the Tar Heel ambassador's mission to Mexico, appears in the current issue of the quarterly Journal of Inter-American Studies. The author is Dr. Joseph L. Morrison, associate professor in the UNC School of Journalism, Chapel Hill.

While in Mexico during the 1930's, Ambassador and Mrs. Daniels set out to write a novel, "Malinche," based on Mexican history. This manuscript—unfinished and unpublished—was recently unearthed by Dr. Morrison, who has made it a key element of his article. Malinche, whom the ambassador called a Mexican Joan of Arc, was the Indian consort of Cortez, the conqueror of Mexico.

Dr. Morrison, who is at work on a full-scale biography of Daniels, shows that the editor's appointment might have turned into one of President Roosevelt's costliest political mistakes. Daniels and Roosevelt had headed the U. S. Navy Department in 1914 when the order was given to seize the custom house at Vera Cruz, with attendant bloodshed and forcible occupation of the Mexican port. The Mexicans had not forgotten.

Happly for the Good Neighbor Policy, Daniels quite simply fell in love with Mexico and its people, and the admiration worked both ways. Dr. Morrison writes: "No wonder the Mexicans loved this ambassador who could not speak Spanish: He never had to say a word because what he was was written all over him. In Spanish they called that quality simpatico."

HOW TO SEE EUROPE FOR ONLY $300 A DAY: NO. 2

Last week we discussed England, the first stop on the tour of Europe that every American college student is going to make this summer. Today we will take up your next stop—France, or the Pearl of the Pacific, as it is generally called.

To get from England to France, one greases one's body and swims the English Channel. Similarly, to get from France to Spain, one greases one's body and slides down the Pyrenees. And, of course, to get from France to Switzerland, one greases one's body and wriggles through the Simplon Tunnel. Thus, as you can see, the most important single item to take to Europe is a valise full of grease.

No, I am wrong. The most important thing to take to Europe is a valise full of Marlboro Cigarettes—or at least as many as the customs regulations will allow. And if by chance you should run out of Marlboros in Europe, do not despair. That familiar red and white Marlboro package is as omnipresent in Europe as it is in all fifty of the United States. And it is the same superb cigarette you find at home—the same pure white filter, the same zestful, mellow blend of tobaccos preceding the filter. This gem of the tobacconist's art, this prodigy of cigarette engineering, was achieved by Marlboro's well-known research team—Fred Softpack and Walter Fliptop—and I, for one, am grateful.

He introduced shortness to France

But I digress. We were speaking of France—or the Serpent of the Nile, as it is popularly termed.

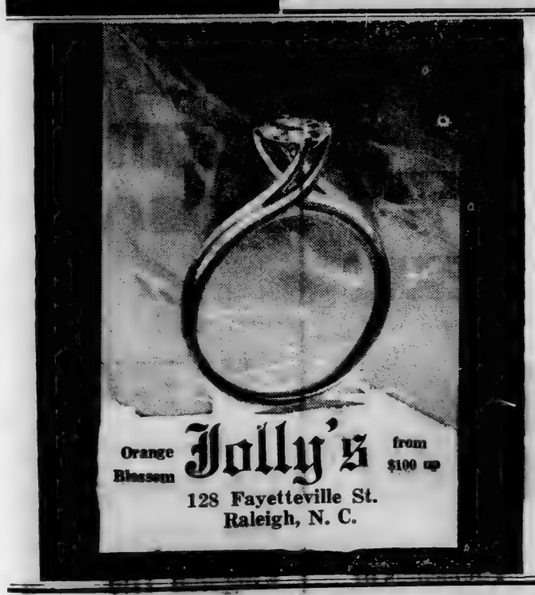
Let us first briefly sum up the history of France. The nation was discovered in 1066 by Madame Guillotine. There followed a series of costly wars with Schleswig-Holstein, the Cleveland Indians, and Jean Jacques Rousseau. Stability finally came to this troubled land with the coronation of Marshal Foch, who married Lorraine Alsace and had three children: Flopsy, Mopsy, and Charlemagne. This later became known as the Petit Trianon.

Marshal Foch—or the Boy Orator of the Platte, as he was affectionately called—was succeeded by Napoleon, who introduced shortness to France. Until Napoleon the French were the tallest nation in Europe. After Napoleon most Frenchmen were able to walk comfortably under card tables. This later became known as the Hunchback of Notre Dame.

Napoleon, after his defeat by Credit Mobilier, was exiled to Elba, where he made the famous statement, "Able was I ere I saw Elba." This sentence reads the same whether you spell it forward or backward. You can also spell Marlboro backward—Orobloram. Do not, however, try to smoke Marlboro backward because that undoes all the pleasure of the finest cigarette made.

After Napoleon's death the French people fell into a great fit of melancholy, known as the Louisiana Purchase. For over a century everyone sat around moping and refusing his food. This torpor was not lifted until Eiffel built his famous tower, which made everybody giggle so hard that today France is the gayest country in Europe.

Each night the colorful natives gather at sidewalk cafes and shout "Oo-la-la!" as Maurice Chevalier promenades down the Champs Elysees swinging his malacca cane. Then, tired but happy, everyone goes to the Louvre for bowls of onion soup.



The principal industry of France is cashing travellers checks.

Well sir, I guess that's all you need to know about France. Next week we will visit the Land of the Midnight Sun—Spain.

Next week, every week, the best cigarette you can buy the whole world over is filter-tipped Marlboros—soft pack or Flip-Top box—you get a lot to like.

D. C. STADIUM IS an imposing structure—a mass of steel, concrete and architectural know-how arising from amidst acres of asphalt parking lots. Our unimposing Carolina blue and white bus, fully equipped with built-in blaring radios and card-playing baseball players, circles the giant arena, finds a suitable parking place and comes to a halt.

Suitable parking places are not exactly hard to come by at the Washington ball yard, since the most frequent occupants are the Washington Senators, known for their on-the-field futility and their inability to attract crowds.

But the fact that the Senators are at the bottom of the American League and would probably remain there the rest of the year matters little to the occupants of the bus. They disembark with enthusiasm ready to see major league baseball, if in name only. The University of North Carolina baseball team has arrived.

It's a cold night in the nation's capital and the Tar Heels wrap themselves in their dark blue warm-up jackets as they head toward the press gate, where they would enter as guests of the Washington management (Chairman of the Board James M. Johnston is a native of Orange County).

There were pickets outside the stadium—the Brotherhood of Concessionaires, Local Something-or-Other — so the surroundings seemed somewhat familiar. There was also an old toothless chap of about 108, screaming at the top of his lungs: "Furrsh rowsted peenuds, last chence, no peenuds on sale inside, buy em her, last chence, peenuds!" We took our chances with this warning and hurried on.

Tar Heels Watch And Wonder

INSIDE THERE IS A beautiful greenish green ball field, smooth as a carpet. The visiting Minnesota Twins are taking batting practice and the Tar Heels watch intently. That is, they watch intently after the've rounded up four hot dogs and a soft drisk apiece.

Bob Allison steps to the plate and sends a couple of shots to the furthest confines of the park. Vic Powers is next. He's popular with the Tar Heels. He drags himself lazily into the batter's box and takes a few cuts at the ball. Now, everybody is looking for Harmon Killebrew, but the long-ball belter is no where to be found. Then someone remembers that Killebrew is back in Minneapolis nursing a knee injury.

Somebody spots Jimmy Roland standing by the batting cage. He's a 20-year-old kid who was pitching high school ball in Raleigh a couple of years ago. Just last year he was hurling for the Wilson Tobs of the Carolina League. And now, well he's a major league celebrity if not yet a star.

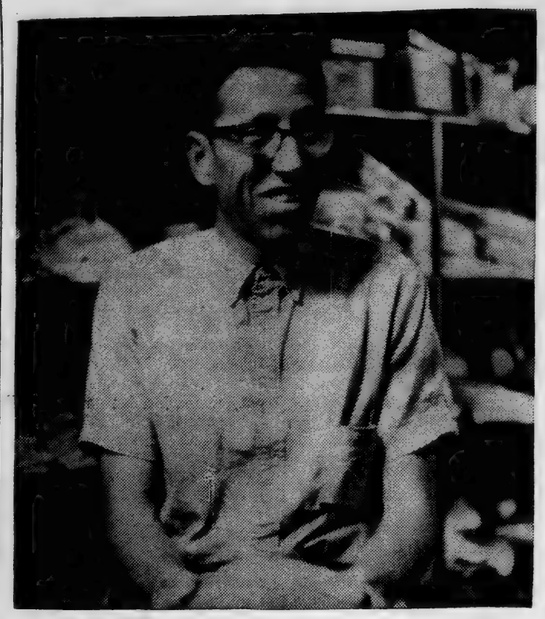
In his first start Roland pitched a three-hit shut-out against the White Sox. Yes, it's a short road to the top, if you've got the stuff. And you just know that some of these Tar Heel ballplayers, as they stare at Roland down there on that green grass with all that green ($50,000) in his pocket, are wondering if they too might have the stuff.

And all this time, while collegiates are dreaming, the pros go about their work. A seventh-string pitcher is hitting fungo flies to the outfield. Another spare is bouncing grounders to the infield.

Zorro Versailles goes after an easy roller, fumbles it, picks it up, drops it, and finally kicks the ball to Bernie Allen. Someone among the Tar Heels hollers "Speight!" and this is followed by a friendly roar from the rest of the team.

Senators Are As Bad As They Seem

NOW THE SENATORS are on the sidelines warming up. They've already had their batting practice, though they could undoubtedly stand a lot more. They wait for the Twins to finish their infield drill and then they swarm onto the field.



Why, there's old Minnie Minoso in left field. And Jimmy Piersall in center. A little past their prime, but still good ballplayers. Maybe the Senators really aren't as bad as they say.

And then you look at the infield. Who's that guy at second? After a perusal of your scorecard you come up with the name Lou Klimchock. And at short? Oh, that's Ed Brinkman, of Raleigh Caps fame. Then there are names like Larry Osborne, Dick Phillips, Chuck Cottier and Johnny Schaive. And they've even got Tom Brown, who played for Maryland last year. He carried a big bat in the ACC, but in the majors he's 0 for 14. You return to your first opinion—the Senators really are that bad.

And Jack Kralick proves it. Until Minoso slams a 2-2 pitch to right in the fourth, Kralick does not give up a hit. He does not give up another until the sixth when Brown, of all people, gets a single.

Kralick finishes the Senators off with a three-hit shutout, and the ballplayers of both teams call it a night's work and head for the warm clubhouse and a few brews.

The Tar Heels file out of the stadium, pile onto theis bus asd sing songs all the way to College Park. The next day they play the Maryland Terps, winning in 12 innings. The folks around Maryland wish they still had Tom Brown—even if he is just 1 for 15.

Stock Room Manager 'Sarge' Keller

Experience Counts, Says 'Sarge' Keller

By RON TUTHILL
And TED HOEHN

What is the biggest headache for the stock room manager of the UNC Athletic Association?

"Keeping everybody happy, from the students to the alumni," said John Joseph (Sarge) Keller, Jr., who handles approximately $150,000 worth of equipment in his Woollen Gym headquarters.

Keller and his right-hand man, Gerone (Joe) Craig, a good-natured Negro with 14 years stock room experience, issue everything from an old sock to a complete football uniform.

"We have no regular hours," said Keller. "We stay open according to what sport is being played. When there is a home basketball game we are sometimes open until nearly midnight."

Keller's father (Big Sarge) came to UNC in 1930 after five wars and 30 years of army duty. He operated out of old Emerson Stadium, which was the main storage building.

"Dad started breaking me in for this job when I was only nine," said Keller, "so I've really had more than 30 years experience. I actually took over as head man in 1945 when my father retired."

"Sarge" Keller, who was an air corps sergeant during World War II, comes from a family rich in military experience. Both his father and mother soldiered during World War I. His mother was a frontline nurse captain in France. It was there that she met Keller's father. Now 79, she lives with her son and his family at 13 Oakwood St., near Glen Lennox.

Athletics have replaced the military as a way of life for the young Sarge Keller and his family. His wife, Jean, has been running the Woollen Gym ticket office since 1948. And his two daughters, Fran, 11, and Barbara, 9, are avid Carolina fans.

When Sarge gets a day off, believe it or not, he goes to a golf course, bowling alley or the nearest stream. "I love all sports," he said, "I couldn't live without them.

"Since I've been here the enrollment has grown from 2,200 to nearly 10,000, and the methods for all sports have changed. Pete Mullis' two-hand set shot of 20 years ago was just as spectacular as Billy Cunningham's jumper of today. But don't get me wrong," cautioned Sarge. "Athletes are just as good today as they were in the 'Old Days.' You have to have it in the heart to be a real athlete."

Keller's father passed away two summers ago at the age of 88. Now "Little Sarge" is alone in carrying out the often tedious but always interesting job of serving the Carolina athletes.

Wake Forest Gets Dumped In 9-0 Rout

WINSTON-SALEM — North Carolina used only two of its big six tennis starters here yesterday but still swept easily by Wake Forest.

George Sokol, Charlie Shaffer, Keith Stoneman and O. H. Parrish all stayed home yesterday as Coach Don Skakle decided to use his "pit crew" most of the way. Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison were the only regulars in action as UNC had little trouble with its weak opponent.

Hoehn was the only Carolina player to be extended in the singles when he pulled out a 3-6, 7-5, 5-3 win over Paul Caldwell. Harrison, at number two, beat Lindsay Pratt easily, 6-1, 6-1.

Pete Meyers and Kirby Jones performed at number three and four, and each won his match by a 6-2, 6-2 count. Meyers beat Curt Dickson and Jones took Boyce Cox.

Sam Applegate and Stan Cooke rounded out the singles whitewash. Applegate coasted to a 6-2, 6-1 win over Ross Griffith while Cocke defeated Rich Hill, 6-4, 6-3.

Doubles:

Hoehn and Harrison (UNC) def. Pratt and Cox, 6-1, 6-2. Meyers and Applegate (UNC) def. Griffith and Hill, 6-3, 6-0.

UNC Meets Terps

North Carolina's baseball team, hoping to get above the .500 mark in ACC play for the first time this season, meet the Maryland Terrapins this afternoon at 3 in Emerson Stadium. The Tar Heels downed the Terps, 3-1, in a 12-inning battle at College Park a week ago.

Lefty Larry Jenkins (2-1) is the likely starter, though Coach Walt Rabb says he still may go with his original plans and start Bill Dannemann (1-1). Dannemann's throwing has been slightly hampered the last few days after he was hit on the right arm by a batted ball as the team took batting practice before Tuesday's game with NC State.

The Tar Heels have a 4-4 mark in ACC play and still are hoping for a possible shot at the pennant. Their hopes received some support Wednesday when Duke handed first-place Wake Forest its second ACC loss of the year. The Deacs, who visit Emerson Stadium on Tuesday, are now 6-2.

UNC also plays at home tomorrow — against Virginia. The Cavaliers took a 5-2 win over the Tar Heels last weekend at Charlottesville. Spence Willard (3-1) is the probable starter against UVA.

Candy Spots Is 6-5 Choice

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Candy Spots, a speedster with a white-splotched coat but the owner of an unblemished record, headed a field of nine entered Thursday for Saturday's running of the $125,000 added Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs.

Because he has racked up six victories in as many starts this year, Candy Spots was made the prohibitive favorite at 6 to 5 to add the Kentucky Derby to his ever growing list of stakes victories.

Named to run against Candy Spots, survivors of an original list of 129 3-year-olds, were Never Bend, No Robbery, Bonjour, Chateaugay, Gray Pet, On My Honor, Royal Tower and Investor, the horse that almost did not make it through the entry box, which was held open overtime, closed and reopened to enable Investor to join the field.

Sidewalk Art Show Termed 'Most Successful So Far'

By MARGARET FEWELL

"So far, this has been the most successful exhibit of all," stated Miss Peggy Crosier, secretary-Treasurer of the University Art League which is sponsoring its fifth annual Chapel Hill Sidewalk Art Show on Campus May 3-5.

"We didn't open until 11:00 Friday morning but by 10:30 large crowds were waiting to see the exhibits. There has been a constant stream of visitors and we expect more tomorrow when the word gets around."

"Student opinion has been very favorable," Mrs. Marlene Ginsburg said. "There have not been the usual student comments of 'I could do as well by gluing my luncheon sandwich on a piece of canvas' which are so typical of an exhibit of this type." Mrs. Ginsburg, a senior art student, has several works of her own on exhibit.

"One outstanding fact about this exhibit, continued Mrs. Ginsburg, "is the fact that you don't see so much of the sensational. These artists are really serious about their work. There is traditional as well as abstract," she said.

There is tremendous variety among the 400 entries. They range from fingerpainting through watercolors, oil paintings and etchings to pottery and sculpture.

The entries are for sale, Mrs. Ginsburg said, and the prices range from $4 to $1,000. The highest priced canvas is a large abstract oil entitled, "Space Tunnels" by Helen W. Daniel, a resident of Durham and a past student of UNC. "There has been an increase in student buying over last year," Mrs. Ginsburg said.

Although most of the work is current work done by present students at Carolina, entries have been submitted from as far away as Raleigh and Greensboro.

The University Art League is headed by UNC student Jeff Bayer, president, and Miss Crosier, Secretary-Treasurer.

UNC Gets Research Grant Of $6,000

UNC will share in about $250,000 in research grants to 22 institutions announced today as part of Eastman Kodak Company's aid-to education program.

The $6,000 stipend to UNC is for research in the graduate chemistry department.

William S. Vaughn, Kodak president, said the major portion of all the $250,000 is for unrestricted use in research programs and for new and improved facilities.

The allocations disclosed today range from $6,000 to $12,500 per institution. Since 1958, the Eastman company has given almost $4.5 million to higher education.

Beginning last year, the research grants were awarded on an annual basis to a selected number of graduate departments.

SG Leaders Don't Like Solution

Seek Compromise To Administration Plan

Student leaders said yesterday they are attempting to formulate a mutually acceptable compromise between the two alternatives laid down Thursday by the Administration for the solution of the Apartment rule controversy.

Student body president Mike Lawler and vice-president Bob Spearman, speaking at their weekly press conference, explained that they have reservations about both the Administration's alternatives as presented at Thursday's meeting between student and administration leaders and members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

They said their chief misgivings about the first alternative stems from the fact that the Women's Council would again be enforcing a rule which both they and the Women's Residence Council cannot in good conscience subscribe to.

The alternative provides that the Women's Residence Council rescind their recent modification of the old two-couple rule while the whole matter of the proper standard of student conduct is discussed and another rule negotiated.

On the second alternative—that the Administration impose and enforce a rule of its own—Lawler and Spearman said "We do not feel that negotiations have broken down to such an extent that unilateral Administration action is either needed or justified."

They did not specify the alternatives they have under consideration but said, "We will continue to consider alternative proposals."

They added, "We seriously question the wisdom of any unilateral Administration action that would contradict the spirit of development of student self-government."

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson has disbanded the Faculty Review Committee set up by the Administration following last fall's "Beat Dook" parade.

The faculty review committee was established by the Office of Student Affairs as a result of criticism of the reputed bad taste of the "Beat Dook" parade last fall. The Board was also set up to review Homecoming Weekend displays and the Sigma Chi Derby.

A small group of students attended Wednesday's meeting. In the discussion that followed Dean Henderson's talk, Lawler asked Henderson what the present status of the Board was and whether Henderson felt that such matters

Lacey To Help Train '64 U.S. Olympic Team

Trainer John Lacey

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday that John Lacey, head athletic trainer here for the past six years, has been chosen to serve on the 1964 Olympic Training Committee.

Lacey, a 46-year-old native of Wallingford, Conn., is one of only 10 trainers from schools across the country to be selected for the high honor.

He will take a leave of absence from his duties at UNC in the fall of 1964 to join the Olympic group on the West Coast. The term will probably extend six to eight weeks starting sometime in September. Lacey's Olympic duty will take him to Tokyo, Japan from October 10-24, 1964.

"I am very honored to accept this appointment," Lacey said yesterday. "To serve as a trainer for our Olympic team is something every trainer dreams of. It is one of the very strongest ambitions of eveyone in the business."

The first suggestion of such an appointment came in February when U.N.C. Athletic Director Chuck Erickson received a letter from the U.S. Olympic Committee inquiring about Lacey's availability.

Erickson informed Lacey of the letter, and, after conferring with Chancellor William B. Aycock, granted the trainer a leave from his University responsibilities.

Last month, Lacey received a formal invitation to serve as one of the ten U.S. Olympic team trainers in Tokyo.

"Mr. Erickson and Chancellor Aycock both realized this was a busy period for us here, since it came in the middle of the football season," Lacey said. "I am very happy to get their approval on the leave."

Where he will be sent on the coast for the pre-Olympic training period is a question as yet unanswered. Neither does Lacey know what team in what sport he will be handling.

"I don't think the site for the training period has been chosen yet," the trainer said. "It will probably be six months before I know where I will be sent."

Elmer Brown of Texas Christian and Bernie Biggs of Ohio State are the two other selected trainers known to Mr. Lacey.

"I will probably get more information on the appointment at our convention the beginning of next month," Lacey said. The National Athletic Trainer's Association annual convention meets in Cincinatti the second week in June.

Lacey holds the distinction of training three national championship teams—football (1953) and lacrosse (1955) at Maryland and basketball (1957) at North Carolina—in his wide background of training experience.

He was at Maryland for five years with the late Jim Tatum before coming here. Prior to that he was a trainer at Yale for four years and also trained three professional football teams in the old American League — the Chicago Rockets, New York Yanks and Baltimore Colts.

He attended high school in his home town of Wallingford and went to prep school at Tilton Academy in New Hampshire.

He studied at the Eastern School in New York under Dr. S. E. Bilik and the Junior College of Therapy at New Haven. He also was a student in the Yale University Department of Health.

Lacey is married to the former Barbara Kock of Wallingford, Conn. They have no children.

Old Well Taps 70 In Pre-Dawn Rites

(Editors Note: Because of a late-breaking news story which necessitated last - minute page-scrambling, the DTH was unable to run the names of Old Well initiates on the morning of the tapping, as is traditional. We run them belatedly today).

The Order of the Old Well conducted its 14th initiation early yesterday morning as 43 men and 27 women were tapped into the Order.

The Order seeks to honor those men and women who have devoted themselves to the growth of this University through unselfish participation in many facets of campus life.

Membership in the Order is based upon a high standard of service and leadership and is determined by point-system evaluation of tangible accomplishments.

Members of the junior and senior classes are considered eligible for membership.

The following persons were inducted into membership this morning:

Meredith's Lawyer To Give Keynote For Confab Today

Mrs. Contance Baker Motley, NAACP lawyer for James Meredith, will deliver the third keynote address to the All-South Human Relations Conference tonight at the Carolina Inn.

Her speech will be open to the public at 8 p.m. and will follow the Conference Banquet at the Inn.

Mrs. Motley attended elementary and high school in New Haven, Connecticut, where she was born. She received the A.B. degree from New York University, Washington Square College in 1943 and received the LL.B. from Columbia University Law School in 1946.

Mrs. Motley has been a member of the Staff of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People since 1946. Among the cases in which she has played an important role are: the Universities of Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Oklahoma, Georgia and Clemson College, South Carolina.

In addition to her prominent higher education cases she has served as counsel in public school desegregation cases; housing, transportation and restaurant cases.

Mrs. Motley, a member of Riverside Church in New York City, serves as a member of the Christian Social Relations Advisory Council, United Church Women and the Administrative Committee of the National Student Y.M.C.A. She has been the recipient of many awards for work in her profession and in community and religious activities; the most recent being Lawyer of the Year 1963, Frontiers Club, Newark, New Jersey.

Geologist Studies . . . Ice?

By MATT FRIEDMAN
DTH Science Editor

A geologist who spent three months floating around the Arctic on an "ice island," will speak at UNC Wednesday evening.

Dr. David D. Smith of the Research Triangle Institute will describe "Arctic Ice Island Research" May 8, at 8 p.m. in Room 112 New East.

Dr. Smith, whose studies have taken him everywhere from Cape Hatteras to West Pakistan, spent the summer of 1961 in the frozen wilderness of the North on "Arlis II," an ice island in the Arctic Ocean. He and ten other scientists studied the ice, climate, sea life, and structure of the island.

He pointed out last year that the Arctic is growing in political, military, and economic importance and that United States commitments there are making it a key area. He also observes that the vast land mass of the Soviet Union faces the U. S. across the polar sea.

Dr. Smith's group conducted studies on the sea water and ice to see how submarines and ships might fare in the northern waters. They were also concerned with how men might live there when the area's resources are finally tapped.

"Ice isn't just ice to a geologist," Dr. Smith said after the expedition. "Ice can be studied just like rocks. Arlis II, two miles wide, three miles long, and 80 feet thick, had at least four different kinds of ice, including gray glacial ice and blue sea ice which contained frozen dead fish."

Arlis, which drifted 275 miles during the summer, was isolated from the rest of the world except for radio signals and mail drops. Its colony consisted of a station leader, a cook, and two Eskimos, plus an occasional polar bear. The men lived in the cold, wet, and foggy weather in small huts insulated with glass wool.

"There were almost no bathing facilities," said Dr. Smith. "To wash your face, you'd break the ice on a 'melt pool.' The cook was the only one with hot water.

"It's essential to be particularly cautious working around deep water," he added. "If you fall in, you generally have three to five minutes to get out. After that, you're too numb to swim."

Formerly an assistant professor at Louisiana State University, Dr. Smith obtained his Ph.D. in geology at Stanford University. His polar and sub-polar research projects have taken him to such places as Greenland, Labrador, and Alaska. He is one of three United States scientists experienced in ice island work.

Carolyn Pinion Is New Council Head

The current conflicts between the student government and the University administration are of great concern to the new Chairman of the Women's Council.

Carolyn Pinion, a junior in nursing, was installed in last night's meeting of the student legislature.

"Generally we are trying to determine the relationship between the student government and the University administration. The trouble is that we have a relationship established, but do not know what it is," she said.

Miss Pinion said that she would serve as spokesman for the Women's Council in meetings with representatives of other organizations on campus in an effort to solve the problem. She also advocated future meetings with the University administration to clear up misunderstanding on the issue.

"Of course we have the apartment rule problem to straighten out," she said, "but we will have to take first things first. Our primary job concerns violations of the Honor System."

She said that she is looking forward to working with Mike Lawler, student body president, and other campus officials during her term in office.

Note To Home Folks

Dear Parents and Legislators:

It has always been the policy of the Daily Tar Heel to attempt to explain what's going at the University, and the current editors are not ones to ignore tradition.

Currently, the University administration has been doing its best to adhere to its conception of what you think is best for our moral standards in relation to the conduct of coeds with men students.

What the administration has said, in effect, is that your sons and daughters don't have the moral backbone it takes to conduct themselves like ladies and gentlemen when left alone in an off-campus apartment.

Now, as students who have come from home environments which failed to instill in us any sense of morality, and allowed us to view life as one big bedroom where we can gratify our sexual desires anytime no one is around to watch us, we realize the administration is doing its dead level best to keep us out of trobule.

You are very fortunate parents.

Some colleges actually allow the male and female students to be alone together.

Witness, for instance, the following statement by the president of Amherst College in his 1962 President's Report:

SOCIAL PRIVILEGES

Amherst College, along with others, has expected that its students should behave as gentlemen. It has been assumed that the conduct which befits a gentleman is known to one and all, and the fact that close studies of history might lead to some unacceptable behavior on an American campus has not been considered. In addition to expecting Amherst men to behave like gentlemen, there have been certain customs if not rules. These have permitted the entertainment of ladies in fraternities as long as there was no bed in the room — and no ladies were ever admitted to any dormitory beyond the ground floor common rooms. This has led to a retreat of fraternity beds to the attics to liberate a maximum number of studies with sofas for social purposes.

Happily, ladies are part of the world and developing men should accept them as humans and not as opportunities for gratification. This most major human relationship between men and women, when approached for the most significant reasons, is beautiful and wonderful; and when approached carelessly, casually, or for minor reasons of appetite, opportunity, and spontaneity can become cheap, superficial, and wicked. The great hazard on college campuses is the coercive situation which occurs on the rare houseparty weekend when men and women go further than they really want to go. The mere appearance of a lady can start a chain reaction of terrifying proportions.

It is our concern that the practices at Amherst might encourage excesses rather than assisting in development of our men. We would like them to understand their relationship to ladies without the pressures of a weekend prom or the sedation of alcohol. We do not pretend to solve this relationship, but we believe it can be made easier of approach. We do not believe that the changes we are instituting are a careless, permissive yielding to the pressures of undergraduates. We join with society in trying to see that some mistakes are difficult to make. We also want to encourage more positive motives for action than the negative fear of being caught.

Accordingly, in the spring of 1962, we allowed ladies to enter the dormitory rooms at certain times, roughly equivalent to those obtaining in the fraternities. It was our feeling that responsibility cannot always be deserved, and sometimes has to be thrust upon individuals. WE DO NOT WISH TO OVERWHELM OUR STUDENTS. WE KNOW WE LEARN TO MAKE DECISIONS BY MAKING DECISIONS. TO LEARN RESPONSIBLTY, ONE HAS TO HAVE RESPONSIBILITY. IT IS OUR HOPE THAT WE ARE NOT THRUSTING RESPONSIBILITY UPON A STUDENT SO RAPIDLY THAT HE LOSES HIS RESPECT, BUT RAPIDLY ENOUGH TO STIMULATE HIS GROWTH. Allowing ladies into the dormitories was a drastic change from previous practices at Amherst, but to date it has proven a constructive and worthwhile move.

Of course, the students here realize that Amherst Students are much more capable of taking care of themselves.

While most of us at UNC come from backward and permissive family environments which don't give us much training, the Amherst students have the advantages of good moral training by upright and concerned parents.

Some of you might have noticed in the Daily Tar Heel or elsewhere that some of the students here have protested the "apartment rule." (That's how most people here refer to the rule that a male and female student can't be alone together in the male's apartment.)

The reason for the protests, as most of you probably know, is not that we believe we are capable of policing our own morals, but because we don't want anyone to catch us.

Most of us don't really have any of the individual moral responsibility that we talk about so much — we're just trying to con the administration into letting us get away with something.

All of you know as well as we do that we never had any training in individual responsibility at home, and are naturally hell-bent on promiscuity, just like you were when you were young and in college.

So we'd appreciate it if you would write a letter to the administration and tell them how much you appreciate their giving us a good rule to use to replace the moral backbone we don't have.

Sincerely Yours,
The Daily Tar Heel

College Cafe Picketing Defended

To the Editors:

During the recent picketing of the College Cafe, a student made the remark that if the NAACP were picketing the establishment, he would respect it. But since the Student Peace Union was responsible, he would make a special effort to eat at the cafe at every opportunity. No doubt he did.

It has been said that picketing action on the part of the SPU was a tactical error, that vying for support in eliminating racial discrimination was an unwise move because of the prevalence of negative regard toward the SPU on campus.

Practically speaking, this may be true, but does an adverse opinion toward an organization justify such a blatant compromise of values? It is in no way reasonable that a person should violate his own principles to get back at an organization he should happen to disagree with. The mere antipathy of an individual toward an organization is a sorry excuse for patronizing a segregated establishment, when that individual is supposedly against segregated practices.

There are a number of ways to voice objection to the principles and ideals of a controversial organization without violating one's own principles. Or is it more important to show contempt for the SPU than make possible the fair treatment of all of our citizens?

The picketing, regardless of who sponsors it, is a legal expression against the unfair treatment of a portion of our citizenry. It is not an act of destruction or force: there are no weapons, blackjacks, bottles of acid, barking dogs, or instruments of brutality. If the presence of the pickets removes the atmosphere of serenity that privileged whites are used to slurping coffee in, that's tough. Compare that with the injustice in Birmingham.

It is certainly true that in this country a private concern has the right to conduct its own business. But it is equally true that certain responsibilities accompany this right. As long as private ownership maintains its right of exclusion on the basis of race, a condition that a person cannot change like a dinner jacket or tie, then the constitutional concept of equal rights for all continues to be devoid of meaning or fulfillment.

The picketing continues at the College Cafe. Let it be honored by all who desire to end the deprivation of a racial minority regardless of whether the signs are carried by the SPU, the NAACP, or the YAF and Barry Goldwater.

Resents Policy

The College Cafe
Chapel Hill, N. C.
(Copy to Daily Tar Heel)

Dear Sir:

As a resident of Chapel Hill and one of your occasional customers, I oppose your policy of discrimination (i.e. your policy of refusing service to Negroes).

Such a policy is contrary to what I, a native Southerner, born and reared in rural Wake County, have been taught and believe to be the American way. I believe in the equality of ALL men under the law and before God.

Morally, discrimination based on race or religion is wrong. This is a clear and positive teaching of the Christian Church. All branches of the Church—Anglican, Orthodox, Protestant, and Roman—have spoken positively on this question. As an Anglican, I accept and firmly believe this teaching.

I cannot in conscience give further patronage to your business until you begin doing that which you purport to do, namely serving the public. This means serving with discrimination based on a false and morally wrong concept.

A Letter From Ghana

American Race Relations: A View From Africa

Editor's Note: This letter was solicited by the All-South Human Relations Conference to be presented at the current meetings. Samuel Selkow is currently a member of the Peace Corps working in Ghana.

By SAMUEL SELKOW

American race relations pose a Gordian knot for the increasing numbers of Americans who come to Africa as representatives of government agencies, business communities and philanthropic organizations. Let us accept our involvement as one of the realities of American international life and consider how our race relations compromise or cripple our work in Africa.

One finds here, across the face of this continent, inquisitive human beings who have a vital interest in what they choose to call the American "color bar." Most are more shocked than angered by a curious situation in which the seemingly simple task of sending one's child to school requires the intervention and protection of the United States Army. In contemporary Africa where people seek an education with feelings akin to lust, there is great compassion for any man whose color denies him educational opportunities which are available to his white detractors. In African societies where marriage and the individual's gratification are simple matters of ritual and custom, American prohibitions against mixed marriages seem to be grotesque social strictures, somewhat similar to other forms of barbarism found in rapidly disappearing illiterate African communities.

Dissemination of information about American race relations is extensive here. Each newly independent African nation has its own national press and radio. The illiterate farmer sitting near his radio hears in his own language about the latest perils of his American brothers barred from one all-white university or beaten at another. In the national newspapers and magazines the names Barnett, Meredith and Little Rock are familiar and have become allchies in the public condemnation of the American color bar. From America itself news is sent by the international editions of Time, Life, and Newsweek.

Increasing numbers of Africans study in the United States and return home to assume responsible positions. Usually articulate and always respected, these young intellectuals return home with tales of segregated buses, schools and restaurants. With apparent good humor one young headmaster with a Masters Degree from Chicago advises his friends that it is easier to buy a sandwich in a Georgia restaurant when one wears an African cloth.

American race relations have grimmer consequences because there is a tendency to associate them with South Africa's apartheid, Rhodesia's white supremacy and Portugal's savage supression of Angolan freedom. An intellectual exiled from South Africa may recall and compare a visit he made to New York's Harlem. One issue of Time magazine which tells the vivid story of a lone Negro's vigil at the door of one all white university, also depicts the brutal murder of several Africans by South Africa's white masters.

The African tends to juxtapose both events. Both situations involve acts against Africans. Both represent white behavior. Distinctions between hostile South Africa and friendly America are lost in the passioned frenzy of universal condemnation of one race's inhumanity towards another. The African observer believes that the Alabama University registrar is as contemptible as South Africa's Minister of the Interior. The African identifies emotionally one with the other and condemns both with equal force.

The African's feelings about the American color bar frequently plague the American worker in Africa. Africans welcome the American presence because of the acute shortage of teachers, engineers, doctors and technicians. However, almost all Africans have serious doubts about the possibility or adviseability of developing continuing cordial relations as long as the American Negro suffers prejudice and dscrimination.

Many of the problems that face the American worker do not allow easy solutions. The Peace Corps teacher who wants to use American books is reminded by one African colleague that there are no pictures of Negroes in many American texts. Another teacher who wants to know why he is not invited to an African dance is greeted with mock surprise and is asked if Americans are allowed to dance with black women. The American engineer who tries to rush his African laborers to meet a contract deadline is chided and advised that the "black man is no longer an American slave." There is another situation in which it is found highly desireable to send a gifted young African to school in the United States. Although everyone is eager to see the boy go, his family has grave doubts about sending the boy into a racial tempest that spans the spectrum from calculated indifference to blatant and dangerous hostility.

In a way each American representative dealing with these situations is doing a job which he or his sponsor considers important to some American agency or community. That individual's racial tolerance is not examined on its merits. He comes instead into a situation in which his presence as an American evokes an entire set of emotional responses to the American color bar. As an American he is seen as an advocate or silent sentry of racial bigotry.

Although it is difficult to measure the contribution of the color bar to the problems of the American expatriate working in Africa, the relationship exists and should not be ignored or underestimated. Every American does his best job, but always with the nagging doubt that the world would be more satisfying and the achievements more considerable, if there was no color bar with which Americans could be identified.

Hypocrisy? Morality!

By BILL WUAMETT

"Hypocrisy" is a wonderful word, one that has been a boon to all college students of the last ten years. All evils, restrictions and bad guys can be incorporated within its definition.

The Apartment Rule, however, is a different matter. It cannot be denied that the rule is a hypocritical one, but there is a much larger issue at stake which involves a much larger word: morality.

The issue is not hypocrisy, not enforcement, not even student autonomy. It is morality, unobscured by any of these other words it has been hidden behind.

Nor is the moral issue at stake the one occasionally mentioned by some uninformed person who doesn't know about the need for solidarity on the student front. It is not involved in whether a woman's entering a man's apartment may lead to her chastity being endangered.

The key word is not may or will, but should.

Should a woman be taught that morality involves only one set of rules, and that all other rules for living are outside the concept.

Should a woman be allowed to question this set of rules.

Or should she, in an educational period of her life, be forced to question this set of rules — forced in that some time in her four years of college life, she has to make the basic choice between chastity and non-chastity — forced by placing her on a couch in a darkened apartment with only the words yes and no determining the future course of the evening.

Should, in short, a woman be allowed to recognize that other styles of behavior exist aside from that of Paul, and those of other religions which place great value on chastity.

And should she be allowed to make that choice for herself without endangering the continuance of her academic study.

Is it not the duty of a University to encourage all students, male and female, to make these choices for themselves.

Education is not learning to obey the rules. It is rather the acquisition of sufficient knowledge to formulate one's own morality.

Morality and education, however, are not separate but rather synonomous. They change, grow and mature simultaneously. Any attempt to legislate a student's morality is also an attempt to legislate his education.

The apartment rule is only one such limitation on the education of UNC students that passes under the protection of the status quo morality. There are many others.

Perhaps they are all absurd, but this rule is more absurd than most, and more worthy of oblivion.

But not for the official reasons.

Hypocrisy, then, is an essential word in the American language.

There is no other way to describe a discussion of the Apartment Rule which neglects the only basic question.

A Suggestion

While the Legislature is in an investigating mood, as indicated by the current interest in the Dixie Classic, we would like to suggest the following probes:

1. Coker Arboretum for nematodes.

2. Downtown Franklin Street for parking places.

3. The Old Well for fluoride traces.

4. Young Americans for Freedom for subversive elements.

5. Morgan Creek for traces of Duke Power Company and/or the Radial Road .

6. The whole of Chapel Hill for signs of fresh-cut trees.

Good hunting.

Professors Want Drastic Cut In 'Overkill' Funds

A group of college professors this week urged Congress to chop $22 billion off the $56.7 billion "overkill" defense budget of the United States for the coming fiscal year, according to a report in the Charlotte Observer.

Their presentation said that the United States already has the nuclear capacity to kill all the urban population in the Soviet Union 1,250 times over, even after allowance for a 50 per cent failure in delivery.

Seymour Melman, a Columbia University industrial engineer, wrote a preface to the professors' appeal to reverse the armament race, in which he answered the first objection usually raised to any proposal for one-way disarmament.

"To meet the challenge of a constructive American program in support of freedom, based upon the still-unmatched industrial system of the United States, the Soviets would be compelled to take disarmament far more seriously than they do now," Melman wrote.

"Otherwise, the continued strain upon their resources, making it impossible for them to meet a bold U.S. challenge to the world, could force the Soviet Union into a permantly second-class political-economic pisition."

In their presentation, called "A Strategy for American Security," the professors outlined a "maintainance of present forces" defense budget of $34 billion.

They would reduce the procurement funds of the Defense Department by $10 billion, from the 1964 level of $16.7 billion. Their theory here is that we already have enough nuclear power to destroy the world, and why add to it?

The Atomic Energy Commission program would be hacked by the professors from $2.9 billion to $.9 billion. Other savings would be made by eliminating military construction, Civil Defense, military assistance, and by switching research and development funds to a civilian agency.

There is reasonable doubt that the appropriations committees of Congress will be guided by the professors' "maintainance of present forces" budget.

But the presentation by Dr. Melman of Columbia and his associates could have a far-reaching rippling affect.

2 Spots Left On Seminars Abroad

Claude C. Shotts, secretary of the YM-YWCA and director of Seminars Abroad, has announced there are still two positions open for the tour this summer.

Seminars Abroad takes a group of 30 students into 12 capital cities of Europe and other cultural centers of the continent. The 66-day tour costs $1300, under $20 a day, half the usual cost of commercial tours.

The figure included a three-day seminar program in Washington, D. C., where the students visit the embassies of five major countries and the U. S. State Department. By asking for group rates, the students save one-half the individual cost on travel, theatres, meals and hotels.

The tour, according to Shotts, is arranged to explore contemporary Europe in depth. Seminars are arranged with student groups, government officials, newspapermen, members of parliament, mayors and people living in the Soviet bloc.

Once the Seminars Abroad group flies from New York to Brussels, they will spend less than 24 hours flying time between cities. Side trips by bus are planned from Paris, London, Florence and Venice.

The Washington seminar is designed to prepare the students for the climate of opinion they will meet in each country. The D. C. trip is the climax of four months seminar study on campus.

Seniors To Give Speeches

Six graduating seniors will deliver "parting shots" at the University in the form of "last lectures" Tuesday night at 8 in Memorial Hall.

Co-sponsored by The Carolina Forum and the Senior Class, the session will feature talks by Joe Craver, Beth Walker, Walter Dellinger, Wayne King, Mack Armstrong, and Bill Imes.

Each speaker will be presenting the thoughts he most wants to leave with the University, in this, his last, public moment.

"These parting shots are an outgrowth of the old faculty Last Lecture Series," Forum Chairman Henry Mayer, who will moderate and summarize Tuesday's program, explained.

"Instead of asking for a faculty contribution this year, The Forum thought the novelty of senior speeches would be an appealing and exciting one," Mayer said.

"There isn't enough student criticism in general," Mayer declared, "and hopefully, Tuesday's 'Parting Shots' will encourage students to become outspoken before they become last lecurers."

Mayer declined to comment on the specific content of the speeches scheduled for Tuesday, but suggested they would be "provocative and surprising."

Legislature Applauds GM For Jubilee

By FRED SEELY

Student Legislature Thursday passed a resolution commending those concerned with 'Jubilee weekend, and approved an amendment to its bylaws allowing the speaker to appoint the clerk of the legislature.

The "Jubilee" resolution, introduced by Neal Jackson (SP) for Mike Lawler, commended Inman Allen, past president of the Student Body; Bob Rearden, outgoing chairman of GMAB; Howard Henry, director of GM; and all others who worked on the program.

In other action, SL by-laws were amended to read "the clerk shall be appointed by the speaker but shall not necessarily be a member of the legislature."

The bill was introduced by Phil Baddour (SP) for student body secretary Bonnie Hoyle. The reasons given were that since there are a limited number of women students in the legislature, the situation could arise where no one would be qualified for the job, a strictly secretarial one.

Munny Yates objected to the bill, contending there are 15 girls serving in legislature and that there is no reason to pass such a bill. He also questioned the advisability of appointing the clerk, since the file clerk, who acts as her assistant, is an elective position.

It was pointed out by backers of the bill that it was aimed at possible future situations, and that the reasons for having the position appointative was that the clerk could be removed by the speaker if she was incompetent. If the position was elective, it would be necessary to institute impeachment proceedings to remove her from office.

Bill Straughn (SP) withdrew his bill to amend the General Election Law. The bill will be introduced at a later date, according to Straughn.

Bob Jones (UP) introduced a bill to give $60 to the Women's Residence Council to supplement its 1962-63 budget.

In other action, Paul Chused was named SL representative to the Student Athletic Council and Neal Jackson was appointed to the Carolina Forum. It was announced that the file clerk of the legislature would be elected at the next session.

Symposium Group Solicits Members

Applications for the chairmanships of five 1964 Carolina Symposium operating committees are now available at the Graham Memorial Information Desk and the Symposium office, 2nd floor, YMCA.

Interviews for the positions will be held late next week. Sign-up sheets accompany the applications.

Chairmen are needed for the publicity, related discussions, intercollegiate seminar, social and hospitality, and physical arrangements committees.

In urging qualified students to apply for the chairmanships, Symposium Chairman Dick Hesse cited these committee assignments as "the most crucial" in the over-all Symposium effort.

The Related Discussions Committee is responsible for pre-Symposium week seminars and meetings in living units, and coordinates the classroom visits of Symposium speakers. "The special requirements of this year's theme, "Arms and the Man: National Security and the Aims of a Free Society," will require a considerable expanded pre-Symposium educational program," Hesse noted.

Establishing and coordinating the participation of representatives from other colleges and universities in the symposium is the major responsibility of the Intercollegiate Seminar Committee. "This program has been an exciting and vital aspect of past Symposia," Hesse recalled, "and an expanded program is anticipated for next year."

The functions of the publicity, physical arrangements, and social and hospitality "are more straightforward, but I hardly need stress how crucial this work is," Hesse explained. Detailed descriptions of the work of each committee is available in the Symposium office.

Henderson said the committee was in operation. He said it was not a "censorship" board, however. The intent of the administration was to make sure a "responsible student" checked on the arrangement for such affairs and reported to his office in order to prevent the recurrance of any more incidents such as the "Beat Dook" parade. Henderson said the administration received more mail from across the state about that one incident than it had ever received before.

When Lawler said it was the duty of the president of the student body to take responsibility and that he would do so if the board were abolished, Henderson said, "All right, it's done."

Another question posed to the dean after his speech was: "Do you feel that the 1957 resolution passed by the Board of Trustees changed the organic development of Student Government?"

The resolution stated that the Faculty and Chancellor have "full and final authority in all matters of student discipline."

Henderson sad he did not feel the resolutio ntechnically changed student government's growth.

Rhine To Speak On Psychology

Dr. J. B. Rhine, director of the Parapsychology Research Laboratory of Duke University, will speak here Thursday, May 9, on "Progress and Problems in Parapsychology." The lecture is sponsored by the UNC Parapsychology Discussion Group.

Dr. Rhine's history includes preministerial work, the Marine Corps during World War I, and a Ph.D. degree from the University of Chicago in the field of Botany. In 1928 he was hired by Duke University to do research in the area of psychic studies, in the Department of Psychology. The Parasychology Laboratory was founded in the early 1930's.

His books include New Frontiers of the Mind, 1937, The Reach of the Mind, 1947, New World of the Mind, 1953; he is co-author of Extra-Sensory Perception After Sixty Years, and Parapsychology: Frontier Science of the Mind, the first textbook in the field.

Since his undergraduate work Dr. Rhine has studied with his wife, Louisa Ella Rhine. She is the author of Hidden Channels of the Mind, 1961.

The lecture is to be held in Carroll Hall and will be open to the public.

Unearned Run Gives Maryland 1-0 Win

Pennant Chances Blow Away In 10-Inning Pitcher's Battle

By PAUL HOUSTON

Maryland returned Carolina the favor of a lesson in extra-inning warfare Friday, with the Tar Heels obliging students and the Terrapins winning teachers, 1-0, 10 innings.

Carolina's diamonders had triumphed on three unearned runs, 3-1, in 12 frames against Maryland last weekend.

And the Terps similarly used an unearned run to win yesterday.

Top of the tenth, one out, and Bernie Walters singled to right field. Catcher Tom Moss rapped a tough grounder to second baseman Dick Prindle and shortstop Jim Speight dropped his toss on the attempted force out at second.

Thus, with two outs, Joe Marter went in as a "courtesy runner" for catcher Moss at second.

Speight smashed a lead-off triple to deep rightfield in the second inning, but was still standing on the sack after Bill Brown walked, was forced at second, and Tom Wright included Ken Willard in a double play.

Yes, Maryland righthander Klvac was ornery in taking his fifth win (1 loss).

Prindle's two - out single in the third and Brown's in the fourth went for nil. Then in the fifth it looked like a sure-fire thing when Wright led off with a single and Bernie Isgett bunted beautifully for a hit. But Larry Jenkins popped up an attempted sacrifice, Prindle flied out and Buddy Tilden fanned.

Bottom of the tenth and Willard's sharp grounder weasled through the shortstop. Wright sacrificed him to second. But Merle Kruer struck out, after pulling a long drive for home run distance—foul. And then Heywood popped out to the first sacker in foul territory to end it.

Jenkins, the Carolina starter, had hurled excellent one-hit ball for five innings, but the lefty walked the leadoff man in the sixth and had the next batter bunt for a hit, the Terps' first.

Coach Walt Rabb then called on the veteran, Haywood, and his first deed was to pick courtesy runner Charles Koeneman off second. He continued to retire the side and pitch sharply till ill fortune appeared in the tenth. It was his fourth defeat against as many wins.

Had Carolina won, bouquets would have gone not only to pitchers Jenkins and Haywood but also to fielders Wright and Willard.

Twice in the fifth, third baseman Wright, who paces Carolina stickmen, charged slow grounders, scooped them up and produced narrow outs on throws to the stretching Brown.

Again in the ninth, Wright gobbled a similar grounder and bullseyed Brown's target.

Leftfielder Willard crushed the heart of John Hannigan in the fourth when he spurted to the temporary fence, leaned against it, and speared the slugger's long shot with a brilliant effort.

But all of this didn't give what Carolina needed most—runs.

Nine Horses In Final Prep For Big Race

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Never Band walked, Candy Spots galloped but No Robbery apparently worked out a little faster and farther than desired Friday as the "big three" among the nine horses entered for Saturday's Kentucky Derby went through final preparations for the racing classic.

Rounding out the field for the $125,000 added race and primed to stage upsets, according to their handlers, were Bonjour, Chateaugay, Gray Pet, On My Honor, Royal Tower and Investor.

Candy Spots, an undefeated colt from California with a six for six record, remained the favorite at 6 to 5. Never Bend, the 1962- 2-year old champion, was second choice at 5 to 2. And No Robbery, another unbeaten speedster, was third choice at 3 to 1.

No Robbery was sent onto the Churchill Downs track for a half-mile workout designed to bring the son of Swaps to the peak of condition for the most important race of his life.

Under the supervision of trainer Woody Stephens and with owner Harry F. Guggenheim looking on, Never Bend walked around the track and was schooled in the paddock.

A GREAT AMOUNT of confusion has unfortunately arisen from the recent Chuck Erickson-Tom Crais controversy. In the heart of the confusion is a serious misunderstanding of the role of athletics in a university community. This misunderstanding stems from charges of "big-time" athletics at Carolina and a "win-at-all-costs" philosophy.

Critics of Chuck Erickson may do well to review their arguments and take notice of certain facts of life.

Just like a large percentage of colleges in the U.S., football and basketball are the sports by which Carolina's athletic department is supported. Why? Simple. Football and basketball are the most popular. Thus athletic departments must join the trend and try to field successful teams in the two sports.

Should Chuck Erickson suddenly declare that winning is totally unimportant, the entire athletic program at UNC would be in serious trouble. Why? Again, it's simple: Football almost by itself provides financial funds for the "minor" sports. That's a fact, whether anyone likes it or not. Producing teams that draw well at the gate assures proper equipment for such sports as track, golf, swimming and tennis.

People may be justified in criticizing this situation. But they should understand that it is not strictly the fault of the University of North Carolina. Emphasis on the major sports is what the American people want. It's a matter of taste and preference, just like school courses and food.

The majority of the people like football and basketball and wish to have good teams. Is Chuck Erickson wrong in carrying out these opinions?

Cousy, Boston Did It Again

THE BOSTON CELTICS have done it again.

Last month aging Boston defeated youthful Los Angeles in the world Series of basketball, thereby becoming the only club in modern history to win five straight National Basketball Association championships.

It was truly an incredible feat. The Celtics were old and not in good condition. Bill Russell (aching back), Bob Cousy (pulled thigh muscle) and Sam Jones (knee trouble) were among the injured Celtics.

Still, the Cousy-led pros turned back the challenge of their hated rivals on the West Coast. Cousy, slick as ever with his hand fakes and behind-the-back passes, ignited charges down court that LA could not stop.

Coach Red Auerbach summed up the win appropriately after Cousy was described as the greatest contribution to America since the Statue of Liberty.

"No comparison," said Auerbach. "She hasn't got the moves."

Sherman Hated To Run Up Score

SANDY GRADY OF the Philadelphia Bulletin appeared in this column the other day and predicted how the great figures of history would have sounded had they given interviews to sports writers. The response was terrific, so more of Grady's results from cranking up the time machine are listed below.

Cornwallis at Yorktown—"I don't wanna complain, but in this league the home court is worth 10 points."

Leonidas after being overrun by Persians at Thermopylae—"Their three platoons just outmanned us. I can't compete against these big clubs unless the alumni get out and recruit."

Warren G. Harding, before the Teapot Dome scandal—"Naturally we're investigating all rumors, but so far this is just a lot of silly gossip. Our league is as clean as a whistle."

Czar Nicholas after revolution—"I've heard of being hung in effigy, but this is going too far."

Julius Caesar, warned of the Ides of March—"Whadya mean, you hear I'm gonna get the axe? After all the good years I've had with this club? Well, if it happens, you can quote me as saying, "That's baseball!' "

Sherman after burning Atlanta—"I hated to run up the score on them, but the team was too hot to stop."

Track Team Hosts Duke

By FRED HOBSON

Carolina's cindermen, idle since last Saturday's conquest of Virginia, return to the track to take on a strong Duke squad here this afternoon.

The meet, which would have been a tough one, promises to be even tougher now. Charlie Little, the Heels' ace sprinter and miler, is out with appendicitis and will miss Saturday's competition.

"Little's loss will hurt us in many events, but we still expect a good performance," said Coach Joe Hilton. "They have a very well-balanced team, but we've looked strong recently. It looks like there might be some records broken Saturday."

Duke is especially strong in the weight events (shot and discus), where muscleman Dick Gesswein holds forth.

The boys from Methodist Flats also hold an advantage in the broad jump and hop-step-jump with leapers Dave Wheeler and Garry High big threats.

Sprinter Robert Kennen and hurdler Bob Hubbard are other bright rays in the sunny Duke picture.

"I was real pleased with Heath Whittle who went over 15 feet in the pole vault," he exclaimed. "Also, Jim Brown is doing exceptionally well in the hurdles. His progress this year has been outstanding.

"Despite Little's loss, I think we might come up with a top-flight performance Saturday and surprise Duke. We've got a bunch of hard-nosed boys who just don't quit," he concluded.

Rockefeller, Mrs. Murphy Are Married

Governor Wed In Closed Ceremony

POCANTICO HILLS, N. Y. (UPI) —Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and Mrs. Margaretta Fitler Murphy climaxed a secret romance Saturday with a surprise wedding at the home of Rockefeller's brother, Laurence.

A press release from Laurence's office put an end to months of speculation, rumor, "no comments" and denials.

The ceremony, performed by the Rev. Marshall L. Smith, of the Union Church here, was attended only by immediate members of the bride's and groom's families.

Rockefeller, 54, was divorced by his wife of 31 years last year. Mrs. Murphy, 36, was divorced April 1. The divorces and marriages were said to figure in the political thinking of experts weighing the odds on Rockefeller's presidential aspirations.

DR Forces Massed

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI) — The Dominican armed forces were massed Saturday along the border and at sea to invade Haiti should President Juan Borsh give the word. U. S. Marines also were reported ready to land if feared disorders break out.

Bosch told United Press International he would move "at the slightest indication" that order had broken down in the neighboring republic, jeopardizing the lives of Dominican citizens, other foreigners and the population at large.

Other Dominican officials said they had received word—presumably from Washington—that United States Marines were standing by for a landing in Haiti at the first sign of violence endangering the lives of more than 1,000 American residents.

U. S. May Relent

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson indicated Saturday that the United States may relent in its announced determination not to pay one penny more than its assessed 32.02 per cent share of U.N. peace-keeping costs.

He emphasized, however, that the final position would be governed by what money is paid in by U.N. members who are delinquent in their payments.

Under congressional pressure and public criticism that Washington put up close to 50 per cent of the costs of the U.N. Congo operation, the United States announced in March that it would pay only its assessed share in the future until members whose failure to pay ran the world organization's debt to $100 million made contributions of their own.

Hoses Used Again

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Police turned high pressure hoses on three thousand jeering Negroes protesting segregation Saturday when one of them threw a brick that landed near Police Commissioner Eugene Bull Connor.

The clash marked the third consecutive day of massive racial demonstration in this Southern steel city. More than 1,000 Negroes have been arrested, including about 50 Saturday—many of them teen-agers.

President Kennedy was reported "dismayed" by the events and the administration sent in two Justice Department trouble shooters in hopes of working out a truce.

Lloyd, Kirkpatrick Capture Awards For Sports Writing

Four Daily Tar Heel staff members have been named winners in the 1963 College Press Awards contest sponsored by the Charlotte Observer and News.

In the sports division of the contest, the DTH swept the awards with both first and second places.

Harry W. Lloyd, currently executive news editor of the paper, was first place winner in sports. Lloyd was sports editor in 1961-62.

Other prizewinners included Pat Stith, honorable mention in sports, and Mickey Blackwell, honorable mention in features.

The contest included entries in five divisions from college newspapers in both North and South Carolina. This is the first such contest sponsored by the papers.

Other first place winners in the contest included: editorials, Frank L. Gentry, The Tiger, Clemson College; news writing, JoAnn Coker, The Gamecock, University of South Carolina; features, Edward S. Rickards, David Newsome, Virginia Faulkner (group entry), The Duke Chronicle, Duke; makeup, The Chowanian, Chowan College.

Lloyd entered three stories in the sports writing category. They included a post-game interview with Coach Dean Smith after the UNC basketball game with N. C. State; a similar interview story with Coach Bones McKinney of Wake Forest after his victory over UNC here; and an account of the North Carolina-South Carolina football game.

Branon Takes Over As WUNC Manager

Rovy Frost Branon is the new manager of WUNC Radio, Don Schain, outgoing manager, announced Friday. Branon a second-semester junior from Charlotte, will assume his duties immediately.

Branon joined WUNC Radio as a Freshman in 1960, working on the continuity staff. A continuity writer is one who writes the scripts for programs. In his sophomore year, Branon became Continuity Director; and this past year he has acted as Program Director, responsible for the programs and program schedules of WUNC.

"Hillside Jazz" is the name of his own program. Every Thursday night from 10:15 until 11:00, the WUNC studio is alive with an applauding audience as jazz "from the Hillside" is broadcast.

A member of Delta Upsilon fraternity, Branon has a Jefferson Standard Scholarship, a 4-year scholarship awarded to prospective students in Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures. He is majoring in RTVMP, of course, but also in Political Science. He has been on the Publications Board for two years and was Business Manager of the Carolina Handbook. At the present time, he is on the Writer-in-Residence Committee. In spite of his outside activities, Branon has maintained a close-to-B average at the University.

When asked about future plans, the new manager stressed the necessity of WUNC Radio becoming more closely integrated with students and gaining a greater recognition by the University. The station, Branon pointed out, has a coverage area of a 100-mile radius around Chapel Hill is in reality the "Voice of the University of North Carolina." Branon also mentioned the possibility of WUNC's joining a network to bring more programs to the area.

New plans for WUNC Radio in the next two weeks include two spectaculars. An opera spectacular will be broadcast on Saturday, May 11. A jazz spectacular will be presented soon. The date is undecided.

Five Innocent Of Offenses

Three students were found innocent of Honor Council violations and two others innocent of Campus Code offenses in Men's Council closed trials Thursday night.

In the first case, the Council sustained not guilty pleas from two students for alleged ungentlemanly conduct at a girls' school.

Two students, charged with collaboration on a quiz, pleaded not guilty. Although a number of answers were similar, the evidence was inconclusive and neither student could be linked to the charges.

A senior pleaded innocent to a charge of stealing. He allegedly took a package, addressed to a

Oriental Art Is Exhibited

The largest collection of oriental works of art ever to be exhibited in North Carolina is currently on display in the North Gallery of the Ackland Art Center.

This exhibition of Asian arts and artifacts is on loan from the Asian Cultural Exchange Foundation of Washington, D. C., a non-profit organization established to promote interest in the peoples of Asia through the arts and crafts. The purpose of the Foundation is to establish Asian art collections in secondary schools, colleges, and libraries.

The collection was selected by Professor J. C. Sloane, director of the Ackland Art Center, and Mr. Simon Kriger, president of the Foundation, to introduce North Carolina to the peculiar and unusual beauty of oriental art. The artist of the Far East does not look at nature objectively as western artists do, but rather attempts to unite "objects and spirit" through intuitive enlightenment from within.

A wide variety of media and styles from China, India, Korea, Thailand, Tibet, Viet-Nam and Japan are represented. The media include bronze, human bone, lacquers, ceramics, ivory and jade dating back to prehistoric ers.

The works of art comprice Chinese and Japanese scroll paintings, a mother-of-pearl lacquer box, Tibetan carvings from human bones, a wide variety of jade carvings, ceramic and bronze sculpture from India, Thailand, China and Japan.

Non-C Frats Lose Status Under Rule

Amendment Up Before IFC Monday

By HUGH STEVENS

The Interfraternity Council will consider an amendment to its by-laws tomorrow night which would make it illegal for any person who fails to meet IFC scholastic requirements to affiliate with a fraternity.

The amendment will, if passed, expressly outlaw the "social affiliate," whereby a student who does not meet academic standards affiliates with a house and pays social dues only.

In part, the amendment states that "No student, excluding first or second semester pledges, who does not have an overall C average or who has not made a C average for the last two semesters, may not in any way affiliate with any social fraternity." The amendment would take effect in June, 1963.

"This amendment came about as the result of a test case put to the IFC court by one fraternity," IFC president Charlie Battle said yesterday. "This house tried the social affiliate system and was convicted by the court of violating the scholarship rule," he said. "The new rule clearly states the IFC position, and also prevents someone from affiliating with a fraternity who does not have a C average, even though he has never been a pledge."

Dean of Men William G. Long also said that the social affiliate is a direct violation of the IFC rules.

"It is obvious that a man who is disaffiliated by the IFC and then re-affiliated by his fraternity under another status is simply illegal," he said. "Such use of loopholes is the immature approach to the scholarship problem, and the new IFC rule will eliminate this loophole."

Both Battle and Dean Long commented that they did not think that the social affiliate practice was widespread.

"Where it is used," commented Dean Long, "it makes a farce of the scholarship rule."

Battle and Dean Long agreed that most fraternities were abiding by the scholarship requirements, but said the new rule would eliminate instances of fraternities trying to "get around the requirements."

Along the same lines, Dean Long stated that "the bull pledge is the real academic problem of fraternities."

He gave figures to show that only 22 of 112 pledges de-activated by the IF Clast spring became eligible for initiation this year. He indicated that such failures are one source of the social affiliate problem.

Putzel Will Edit Paper

The Publicaitons Board announced Friday the appointments of the editor and business manager for the summer UNC News and business managers of the Daily Tar Heel and Yackety-Yack for next year.

The UNC News positions will be filled by Mike Putzel, editor, and Fred McConnel, business manager.

Art Pearce will be business manager of the DTH next year, and Bob Spate will fill the post for the Yack.

Bardolph Says Negro Is Gaining Equality With Fellow Citizens

BI PETE WALES

"It is in the last stages of the effort to wipe out the color line that America is now engaged," Dr. Richard Bardolph, chairman of the history department at Woman's College, told students Friday night.

Dr. Bardolph, author of "The Negro Vangaurd," spoke in Howell Hall on the topic, "One Hundred Years of Negro Progess," in a keynote address to the All-South Human Relations Youth Conference being held here this weekend.

Dr. Bardolph cited two traditions in American history that have supported the Negro's advancement.

"There is the American liberal tradition of an open (or, achievement) society, where rank is determined not by birth or caste but by what one does. This tradition has worked powerfully on the Negro's side.

"Also the lebiral-equalitarian tradition has always been under enormous pressure to include the Negro because of his disposition to become a genuine participant in American culture, rather than establish a separate Afro-American sub-culture."

Dr. Bardolph also spoke on the "massive counterforces" pitted against Negro progress.

"For all our belief in individualism, we penalize individuality more than does any other democratic society. We are one of the most conformitarian societies in the world." The stereotype is another deterrent to Negro progress, Dr. Bardolph believes. The stereotype is "a complex folklore about differences in biology, temperament, intelligence, tastes, ambitions, and all the rest.

"Then it is buttressed by a pseudo-scientific mumbo-jumbo about cephalic index, cranial structures, and brain waves; and a pseudo-religion, with its tortured interpretations of the Hamitic curse and the confounding of tongues at Babel."

Dr. Bardolph noted also that the Negro has in many cases accepted this stereotype and "in time has come to doubt his own capacities."

The Negro's economic dependence on the white community was also cited as a deterrerent to his advancement.

Dr. Bardolph then spoke on the history of the Negro's advancement.

"In the emergenet franchise the historian sees one of the two or three most effective instruments of colored America's social redemption.

"There is the historic importance of the distinguished Negro, the achiever, who has done so much to demolish the stereotype about the Negro's incapacities.

"And, paradoxically, I am obliged to attach some importance to the excesses of rabid racists . . . who have excited for the racist's victim the sympathy of white America."

Dr. Bardolph cited also the importance of the development of the law and the new scientific and anthropolical discoveries which have helped to tear down racial prejudice.

The two world wars and the depression of the '30s were further "equalizing forces" by the fact that they were "common catastrophes" in which all America participated. The de-segregation of the armed forces after WWII also had its impact.

Dr. Bardolph also pointed out that in the ideological fight against Naziism and later Communism,

Parents Visit Campus Today; Friday Gives Speech At 2:30

William C. Friday, president of the Consolidated University, will give a public address in honor of UNC's annual "Parents' Day" being held here on the campus today.

President Friday will speak at 2:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Other highlights of the day will be a joint concert by the UNC Glee Club and the Woman's College Chorus to be held in Hill Hall at 3:15 p.m., and a University Band concert at 4 p.m. on the lawn by the Davie Poplar.

A faculty reception will precede President Friday's address and the music concerts. The reception will be held on the lawn of Graham Memorial at 1:30 p.m. Air Force ROTC units will pass in review at Fetzer Field at 1 p.m.

Open house will be observed in dormitories, fraternities, and sororities. Classroom buildings which will be open from 1 to 5 p.m. are: Ackland Art Museum, air science building, Hill Hall, Swain Hall, Peabody Hall, Howell Hall, the new Coker Building of Botany, Wilson Hall, the new Dey Hall of modern foreign languages, Venable Hall, Phillips Hall, and the Pharmacy Building.

Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity is in charge of "Parents' Day" and will maintain information booths at South Building and Graham Memorial Student Union.

The conference will conclude today with an address by the Rev. William Campbell, Race Relations Specialist for the National Council of Churches, in Carroll Hall at 9:30 a.m. The public is invited.

Integration Group Maps First Plans

By BILL HICKS

"We are here tonight to find out what happened to the integration spirit of 1960," Harold Foster, editor of Campus Echo, the studen newspaper of North Carolina College, told the first mbeeting of the Committee for Open Business Friday night.

"The Negro community must let the people of Chapel Hill know they are ready for equality and want a community with equality—in toto," the Chapel Hill native said. "We need a committee that will last as long as there is racial discrimination in Chapel Hill."

Pat Cusick, chairman of the Student Peace Union, opened the meeting and told the 57 people present of the SPU's efforts to end racial segregation in the Chapel Hill community.

"Although this is not as dramatic as the Open Theater movement of last year, ending all racial discrimination in Chapel Hill is more vital," Cusick deelared. "Our goal should be to work towards a community in which a person may be served at any establishment without regard to the color of his skin."

After Dr. Wayne Bowers, a member of the UNC Physics Department, gave a brief history of the integration movement in Chapel Hill, Foster brought up the problem of the UNC Negro student.

"The UNC Negro was 'integrated,' only to find himself segregated as soon as he crossed Franklin Street," Foster said. "Parts of this problem have been eliminated in the past few years, but much of it still remains."

Foster, who along with Father Clarence Parker, retired Episcopal minister, was elected co-chairman of the Committee, closed by saying the committee "must work to destroy discrimination in Chapel Hill."

The next speaker, Al Higgins, told the group "we need to 'bug' the bigots of Chapel Hill.

"Hard work is needed to crack segregation," Higgins, a member of the Institute of Research in Social Science, continued. "Past success of the Open Movies movement was due to the high quality of people involved, and to the moral fibre of Chapel Hill. Both elements are still in evidence today."

Dr. Dan Okun, a member of the Department of Public Health, followed Higgins. Okun told the Committee they must solicit support from all segments of the Chapel Hill community.

"Society must be made to look upon segregation as reprehensible, for only then will people see segregation as unjustifiable," Okun commented.

The Rev. W. R. Foushee, the final speaker, called for full use of present action and forces to end segregation.

Bennett Keeps Watch On Buildings And Budget

By HUGH STEVENS

"One of the beauties of this university is its surroundings. Someone said that the university looked as if it just grew here."

The speaker was J. S. Bennett, Director of Operations for the university, and he was commenting on the passing scene presented by Carolina during the last 42 years.

The vigorous, enthusiastic Mr. Bennett joined the staff here in 1921, and since then he has seen—and caused—a lot of changes.

"At the end of World War II, there were no brick walks on the campus," he said. "Since then we have added a little at a time, even though there is no provision in the budget for walks. We just add to them when we can, and I think we have made a lot of progress in adding to the beauty of the campus."

As Director of Operations, Mr. Bennett is responsible for the physical growth and appearance of the university, and as he himself stated, it is a job "full of headaches."

His responsibilities include plans and specifications for new buildings, the upkeep of old buildings, and the general picture presented by the campus.

"In constructing a new building," he said, "it is our job to coordinate the wishes of the department with the plan of the architect and engineers, and still keep within the budget."

Inspections Also

Later, Mr. Bennett's department must inspect the construction and make certain that the specifications are met. Then he must make provision for landscaping and beautifying of the new building. Always, of course, the first concern must be the ultimate beauty of the campus.

"An example of this," said Mr. Bennett, "was the situation involving renovation of some older buildings. We took Old East, South Building, and some others and gutted them completely without changing their outside appearance at all. We just left the walls standing."

"Now this," he continued, "was an expensive proposition, and economically it would have been cheaper to erect new structures. But our purpose was to preserve the beauty of the campus. Unless you can get the feeling of a situation like that, you just don't belong here."

Mr. Bennett looked at some past events which he recalls, including the occasion when the opening of school was delayed for a week for lack of water.

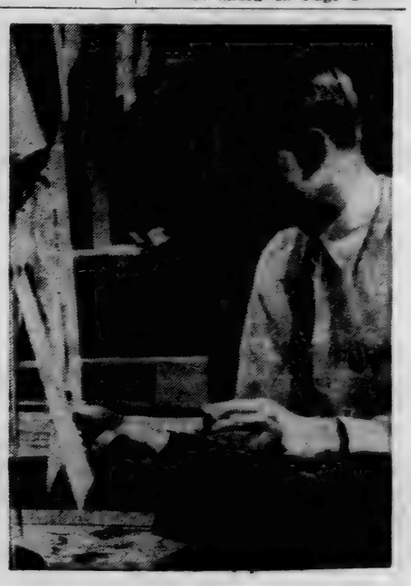
"In those early days, our water three miles from here, and one summer the weater just about gave out. We worked feverishly night and day to lay a pipe three miles in another direction so school could open. We had to lay it on top of the ground for speed. We used it for two years."

"A lot of things have changed around here. I remember when we had poles running across campus with these dinky little street lights on them. The policemen had to turn them on in the evening and off in the morning. They usually forgot, and it was not strange to have the lights burning all day."

"It's hard to believe," Mr. Bennett went on, "but Cameron Avenue was once a clay street. When it rained we put boards across it to walk on. Even when it wasn't muddy, it was dusty. It sutely was hard to keep a shoeshine in those days."

Plans for the Future

Turning to the present and the future, Mr. Bennett named some projected additions to the university.



"We are working on an addition to the power plant right now and of course we have the new nine-story dormitory in the planning stage. We have also begun planning for a new dining hall in the Ehringhaus area which will serve those dorms. It will be almost as large as Lenoir Hall."

Another point made by Mr. Bennett concerned the difficulty of preparing for new construction.

"We have to expand all the facilities for a new building. electricity, water, heat, and plumbing facilities must be able to carry the load of new construction. We can't just go out and throw up a building. We must be ready for

Really, Mr. Snow

Foolish remarks usually topple of their own weight. But sometimes they need a little shove from the people who know they are foolish.

With that in mind, we would like to do a little shoving in the direction of the Raleigh Times' city editor, A. C. Snow (UNC '50) who remarked on the current Apartment Rule controversy in his column this past Friday.

"The feeling is at Carolina," Snow wrote, "that young ladies shouldn't have to go in twos, threes or fours to visit young men in the apartments. They should go alone."

Such an inaccurate observation as this hardly befits a journalist of Snow's station.

No one is saying young ladies should go to men's apartments alone. Instead we contend, as should be clear by now, that young ladies SHOULD BE ABLE to go to a man's apartment alone WITHOUT AUTOMATICALLY BEING GUILY OF A TRANSGRESSION.

There is a difference.

Further on in his column, Snow notes that he asked a visiting Carolina journalist:

". . . what about the men in the dorms? Those blokes who have no apartments? The rule does not apply to them. Why?"

Snow quotes his visitor as replying, "Well, the boys might be running up and down the halls to and from the shower with a towel or less on. It wouldn't work."

Snow then asks his readers: "What about the boys in the apartments. Don't they take showers?"

We presume they do.

But is that the point?

Coed visiting privileges regarding dorms present a completely different problem than those for men's apartments.

So the point instead is that the Apartment Rule doesn't apply to men in dorms because they live in dorms, not apartments.

All of which means we are doubtful that Mr. Snow understands what's involved in the Apartment Rule controversy, in which case he is hardly in a good position to comment on it.

Birmingham, Alabama

The situation in Birmingham is beginning to take on the atmosphere of the theater of the absurd.

Indeed, if the city officials and their dogs continue to arrest all the non-violent demonstrators in the city, there won't be any Negroes left to integrate with.

Somehow, the Alabamians just don't realize that their sidestepping and backward approach to such problems doesn't bring solutions—just more problems.

They don't like what the Supreme Court has said, so they have disregarded the Constitution and the law and brought on court orders, riots, and demonstrators.

They didn't like a man walking across their land to talk to Ross Barnett about integration, so one of them shot him down and brought on ten more to pick up the trail.

They didn't like Negroes asking for their freedom in Birmingham, so they turned the dogs and fire hoses loose and threw the demonstrators in jail.

We would suggest to our fellow Southerners that they are headed for some problems far more serious than overcrowded penal colonies and a few scattered cases of rabies.

Bigots & Friends

We wonder how it feels to be labeled a bigot by a man you're trying to help.

The owner of the College Cafe probably doesn't realize it but he is insulting his customers.

In effect, he has branded everyone of them and himself as bigoted, ignorant and possessed of a most shallow mentality.

For he says his customers simply wouldn't tolerate eating in the same room with a Negro.

Why? Would the Cafe's fine food taste worse because there's a Negro in the room? Would it so disturb his customers that they get indigestion?

Or is it simply that the cafe manager is afraid his customers are bigoted, so he'd better go along with their dictates?

We wonder how it feels to patronize a business whose manager brands all his customers bigots.

An Observation

Apropos of the incident in Raleigh last week involving refusal of dining service to a Liberian diplomat:

Ackland Art Exhibit

By STEVE DENNIS

Review: Museum Purchase Fund at Ackland Museum.

The Museum Purchase Fund's collection of twenty-four paintings, now being shown at the Ackland Art Museum, represents an interesting, if debatable, method of encouraging recognition for modern young painters "who have not had adequate recognition."

Initiated by Gloria Vanderbilt in 1953, the Fund adds four new paintings to its menage each year and sells four to "established museums and art institutions." The fact of the exhibition's placement in the Ackland presumably indicates that the Ackland would be allowed to buy from the Fund's collection if it should wish to do so.

Disregarding momentarily the merits of the paintings, the exhibition has serious omissions in methodology. There is very little information about the purpose of the exhibition and nothing at all to explain what caused each painting to be chosen. This is the type of exhibit which demands some sort of explanatory material if it is to be successful.

Just why do these painters need the recognition they haven't received? Doesn't their newness of subject matter and technique merit an explanation to the uninitiated gallery-goer? How representative is each painting of its creator's special talents? Does the Ackland think it can build a desirable reputation for itself merely by filling its galleries with anything, especially such a poorly prepared road show? These questions are not answered at all.

The paintings run a broad gamut of styles and techniques, from a quasi-realism in Joe Lasker's "Recess, 1959" to the highly Japanese abstraction of Yutaki Ohashi's "The Festival, 1955." There is no apparent unity in the exhibition, however. The Museum Purchase Fund is unfortunately designed to sell paintings, and not painters, to its selected museums. How, then, can it claim that its patronage will help a strugglisg painter when his name will become significantly known in only the one museum which buys his painting?

Despite the many faults in the presentation and organization of this exhibition, it does contain several very interesting examples of contemporary American art—along with several which might have been allowed a judicious or even generous oblivion. Originality in significant ways is seriously lacking, but the examples of imitation of earlier painters in the movements of abstraction and expressionism are generally carefully and skillfully done.

This reviewer's two personal favorites were Ronald Jay Stein's "Mysterious Bird" and Hans Boehler's "Circe." "Mysterious Bird" contains a striking lyricism in its frame within a frame of pastel triangles. The shape and attitude of the bird, along with the technique and composition of the painting, are reminiscent of Marc Chagall. This picture glows with an almost childlike mysticism. The blue central figure could be some fantastic bird out of a Russian fairy tale.

Hans Boehler's "Circe" is one of the most colorful paintings in the exhibition. The title and subject are taken from the episode of Circe's Isle in Homer's "Odyssey." Circe is in the act of tempting Odysseus. Painted in incandescent colors, the picture contains figures whose limbs, outlined in vivid greens, make it look like a Rouait seen through green-tinted sunglasses. Voluptuous purple shadows, combined with the other colors, give this painting some of the qualities which a phosphorescent Gauguin would be expected to possess.

James Sterling's "Two Portraits in the Country" is unusual because in it the painter has tried to combine the two arts of painting and sculpture. The canvas is three dimensional. The eyes and nose of the woman in the picture, particularly, have been built up off the canvas with thick layers of paints. The rest of the painting is heavily textured with the marks of what might have been a spatula.

Humor has crept into one of the pictures. "Coots," by Bryan Wilson, is a long panel containing only one straggly bush at the left and four fat birds, each as large as the bush. The background is a neutral chocolate brown, and birds and bush both look like objects on a Japanese screen which has been allowed to get wet and to run slightly at the edges with a consequent blurring of outlines.

Letters To The Daily Tar Heel

New Left Answers Maupin: Negroes' Violence Misdirected

To the Editor:

Mr. Armistead Maupin, Jr., implied in last Thursday's TAR HEEL that American Negroes—because of their high crime rate, the dependence of unemployed Negroes upon relief checks, etc.—lack "the civic and moral consciousness that comprises first class citizenship." We feel that Mr. Maupin's article is a slanderous attack upon American Negroes.

To our way of thinking, civic and moral consciousness can only be construed as a passionate love for freedom and equality — the two values which our nation supposedly holds most dear—and a concomitant determination to defend and extend these values.

To say that American Negroes do not have this consciousness is to blindly ignore the facts. The Negro people have always been the most exploited and oppressed group in American society; and, consequently, they have always had the most motivation to fight for freedom and equality, to fight for social progress. At crucial moments in our country's history the Negro people have served as the backbone, the vanguard, of social progress.

Does Mr. Maupin know anything at all about the role of the Negro people in the American Revolution, when five thousand free Negroes served with exemplary bravery in the Continental Army? Does Mr. Maupin know that the first Revolutionary soldier to fall in battle was a Negro? Does Mr. Maupin know about the heroic struggles of the Negro people to free themselves from slavery and how these struggles transformed the Civil War into a Second American Revolution?

Is Mr. Maupin aware that the Union would never have been presrved in 1861-1865, the vacillations and treachetry of northern leadership would never have been overcome, but for the revolutionary impetus of the Southern slaves—who fled their masters en masse millions of them (thereby making Emancipation a social fact before Lincoln ever got around to making it a legal fact). Does Mr. Maupin know that during this war the Negroes organized sabotage, espionage, and guerrilla warfare all over the South? That they formed the backbone of the Union army? That they were praised by President Lincoln as being the bravest combat troops of the Union army?

Is Mr. Maupin aware that in winning their freedom the Negroes not only presetrved the Union but also removed the fetters of Southern Bourbonism from our infant industrial economy and saved the free laborrs of both North and South from the greatest threat that has ever been posed to their freedom and security?

Does Mr. Maupin know that during Reconstruction the Negro people formed a political alliance with the Southern white sharecroppers which, for a few short years, brought to the South the closest thing to a pure democracy that this nation has ever seen.

Does Mr. Maupin know about the role of the Negroes in the nineteen thirties, when the C.I.O. was being built? Does he know that the Negro workers, who were the first to be laid off and the last to be rehired during the Depression, banded together with white unemployed workers into great Unemployment Councils—and that these Councils were able to virtually halt the flow of scab labor into the basic industries during the great organizing drives. Does he know that even though the Negro workers were the most desprate and the most hungry victims of the Depression, they still did not scab—and that in not scabbing they set the loftiest example of labor solidarity and brotherhood that this nation has yet seen?

Even if Mr. Maupin is not aware of thes facts, he surely must be aware that in the middle of the nineteen fifties, in the middle of the black era of McCarthyism and militarism and "anti-Communism," the Negro students of the South launched a courageous movement for freedom and equality which shook an entire generation of American youth out of its moral lethargy and propelled it into a general struggle against the status quo.

If these deeds do not embody civic consciousness, then we would like to know just what the hell civic consciousness is! If this is not patriotism of the highest order, then patriotism is indeed nothing more than a catchword for the American Legion.

His pen quivering with hypocritical righteousness, Mr. Maupin offers as "proof" of the Negro's inferiority the high incidence of crimes of violence among urban Negroes. We ask Mr. Maupin: If you lived in a rat infested slum; if your children were undernourished; if you were constantly spit upon and discriminated against; if you were chronically unemployed or underemployed; if, whenever you found a temporary job, the boss kicked you around and paid you Lenoir Hall-type wages — don't you think you would also be inclined towards violence? And, more important, wouldn't the anger and hostility which motivated this violence be justifid? The worst thing, Mr. Maupin, that you can say about the Negro is that his violence is misdirected. He should direct it not at his fellow Negro workers, his wife, or the Puerto Rican gang on the next block—he should rather direct it at those who are the agents of his misery: the police who in both North and South and even in the West are beating a living record of brutality into his flesh; the employers who pay him the most miserable wages in the nation; the employers who, to be more precise, make four billion dollars a year in super-profits off the rascist wage differential between Negro and white workers; the politicians and businessmen who keep him segregated in order to protect this four billion dollars a year.

To be blunt about it: the Negro should direct his anger at American capitalism, that rotten economic system which feeds on rascism, exploitation, militarism, unemployment and other forms of human misery.

At crucial moments in our nation's history—the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, the 1930's—the Negro people have realized the need for class struggle and have thus directed their indignation into rational channels, directed it towards its true source. Whenever and wherever the Negro people have done this they have set a sublime record of courage and patriotism.

Overcrowded: Dorm Malady

By CHUCK NEELY

The announcement by the administration that all men's dorms except for Avery, Parker, Teague, Craige and Ehringhaus will have three men per room next semester is but one more result of a malaise which lingers over the University.

The illness is overcrowding and the growing pains associated with expansion. The cause is the great explosion in population in North Carolina and in the nation.

This malady can be cured in two ways. The first is by more rapid expansion of University facilities, keeping abreast or ahead of the flood of students. This is the policy which is not being implemented too successfully. In addition to the shortage of room space, athletic facilities in Woollen gym are woefully inadequate. This is especially true during the winter, when these facilities are most needed, but when the bleachers for basketball games are set up.

The bleachers themselves are another example of the overcrowding found at UNC. They won't seat half the student body, let alone the many guests who wish to see Carolina basketball events.

True, a new auditorium-gymnasium seating over 9,000 spectators is planned for the near future.

Scheduled for completion by 1965 at the earliest, this new building will do much to remedy the present situation.

But how about the future? How soon will it be before this new structure is outmoded? The University plans to have an enrollment of 13,000 by 1970. This expansion will ause a lack of seating space within five years of the completion of the new auditorium.

The University obviously cannot expand quickly enough to admit a proportionate number of the prospective students desiring admission. The funds necessary are just not forthcoming from the state. To carry out the rapid expansion policy without the state funds, a heavier and heavier tuition and room rent burden must be laid on the student. This will inevitably keep some students who are well qualified scholastically but not financially from attending Carolina.

We would submit that a second course of action would be much more productive and fruitful in the long run. This would be to slowly expand the University as funds become available for construction of new dorms, without increasing room rent or other levies upon the student. The number of extra students admitted would be determined by the amount of two-man dorm room space available. This plan would have the additional desirable effect of making it more competitive for admission to UNC, thus assuring a higher caliber of students and a greater record of academic sucess. It must be remembered tat quantity education is not necessarily quality education; the great degree mills of the midwest have proven this.

The policy of instituting three-man rooms again can only have unfortunate results. The dorms are crowded enough and noisy enough as they are now. It is folly to aggravate the situation. The three-man dorm room has proven harmful in the past, and will undoubtedly prove harmful in the future.

Carolina's greatness lies not in her growing size, but in her academic reputation. To lower the quality of the educational process by too rapid expansion of the student body would be fatal to that academic reputation.

A careful consideration of the results of the present policy should be undertaken before venturing further down the treacherous path of over-expansion.

DU Chapter 10 Years Old

The UNC Chapter of Delta Upsilon is celebrating its tenth anniversary this weekend with its annual Founder's Day activities.

Don Heacock, chapter president, presided last night at the chapter's banquet and awards night. The outstanding pledge, chapter scholarship leaders, and others were honored.

The North Carolina chapter was founded April 25, 1953, and was a pioneer of Delta Upsilon in the South. It grew out of a local fraternity, Sigma Delta, which was established in 1923. Since its founding the chapter has won numerous awards for progress and general excellence from the national fraternity.

After its early years, the local house grew rapidly, and in 1961 captured the R. B. House trophy as the outstanding UNC fraternity. Its pledge classes captured the Strum Award as the outstanding pledge class in both 1961 and 1962. Recent tabulations show the house first in scholarship among campus fraternities for the fall semester.

The local chapter received an award for pledge training at last year's national convention. Last month it was host for the Province V conference of the fraternity.

Yesterday's celebration was attended by all members of the house as well as numerous alumni and guests.

it."

This, he said calls for long range planning to insure enough facilities for the future.

"And still there are problems. Often what we plan for is out of date in five years."

"We are always seeking to improve our buildings," Bennett continued. "We spent a week or two in the larger universities looking at dorms before we built Craige and Ehringhaus. We wanted to see what students liked and needed in a dorm before we dicided what to incorporate in ours. The results, we feel, are two very well-planned dorms."

"Still," he said "we want to improve the next one, so we are asking residents of the new dorms to suggest improvements."

As to space for future growth, Bennett commented the university needs room to expand.

"We have just about filled in the basic plan of the campus, so it may be necessary to move some of the individual schools away from the immediate area in the future. This would be true of a school such as the law school, which is not dependent on the university."

Bennett concluded the interview with comments on the treatment of the campus saying that students "could do better" in taking care of the facilities.

"But if the care of the campus is not what it ought to be," he said, "it is better than it was. Generally speaking, the boys are more considerate than they used to be."

He reminded students that there are no funds appropriated for dormitory upkeep, and all repairs and improvements must come from dorm rents.

"We know the boys are boys and they are going to do things they shouldn't. All we ask is that they make an effort to take care of the university."

"That," he concluded, "is just one of the headaches. There are a lot of them. But it is interesting, and I enjoy it a lot."

UP Meets Wednesday To Elect Officers

The University Party will meet Wednesday night at 8:30 in Gerrard Hall to elect officers for the 1963-64 school year. The chairman, vice-chairman, secretary, treasurer, and sergeant-at-arms of the party will be chosen.

UP Chairman Mike Chanin said that the election procedure will consist of a two-minute nominating speech followed by a two to three minute talk by the candidate.

Chanin asked that anyone interested in seeking a party office contact him before Wednesday.

Craige Holds Polynesian Weekend

By LEWANEE OAHNU

A sign reading "Aloha to All" welcomed several hundred people last night to a "Polynesian Luau" sponsored by Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories.

The Luau, something new in the way of a joint dormitory effort, was termed very successful by Dick Westin, Craige president. "I feel certain that this will become an annual program," Westin said "That is, if we can judge things by the apparent success of this year's trial run."

The entire front lawn at Craige was transformed into a South Sea Paradise, complete with Chinese lanterns, Hawaiian leis, Polynesian punch, Japanese spotlights and American women.

The American women, special guests at the Luau, were from Cobb, Spencer and Nurses dormitoris.

Entertainment and fun were the themes of the evening. The "Country Gentlemen," a folk singing trio, and the Ivy Leaguers, a seven-piece combo from Raleigh, furnished the entertainment.

Coed Lynn Carr, who has appeared several times at the Jack Tar Hotel in Durham, serenaded everyone with ballads and torch songs similar to those of Joni James.

Many of the couples present were dressed in Polynesian costumes and everyone else was dressed quite informall. Many couples danced barefooted in the soft grass.

Refreshments included 50 gallons of Polynesian punch and watermelons stuffed with fruit.

Dave Rendlemen, president of Ehringhaus, and Val McWhorter, social chairman, said jointly, "The atmosphere was just great and we can't help but think that everyone had a great time. That's why we are almost sure something big like this will become an annual affair."

The party ended at 12:30 a.m. when the tired, sleepy, yet happy couples made their way back to their dorms. As they left, a big sign, bordered with flowers and bright decorations read, "Bon Voyage."

Chateaugay Is Derby Surprise

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Chateaugay, a big bay colt from the Darby Dan farm, swept into contention on the final turn at Churchill Downs Saturday and roared through the stretch like a runaway train to win the $151,400 Kentucky Derby by a length and one-quarter.

With Jockey Braulio Baeza in the saddle, the bright chestnut colt circled around three horses leaving the final bend and then turned loose one of the great stretch runs in the history of this classic to beat Cain Hoy Stable's Never Bend in America's greatest horse race.

Candy Spots, the spotted colt from California who went into the race with a perfect six for six record, was a neck farther back and On My Honor fourth in the field of nine of the country's greatest 3-year-olds.

Chateaugay, a son of Swaps, winner of the 1955 derby, faced an imposing task when he launched his surprise rally. For ahead of him when Baeza, a native of Panama and the second foreign-born rider ever to win this classic, asked Chateaugay for his best were the "big three" of this 89th classic.

Never Bend, No Robbery and Candy Spots each was ahead of him and each of whom had to be caught with the greatest prize in racing up for grabs.

One after another Chateaugay collared them, with Never Bend and Candy Spots battling desperately to match his final drive. But neither could stay with the thoroughbred, who flashed under the wire in 2:01 4/5, one of the fastest derbies on record.

Duke Trackmen Take Tense One Point Decision

By FRED HOBSON

Carolina's tracksters, definitely missing the services of do-everything Charlie Little, dropped a heart-breaking 72½-71½ decision to Duke here yesterday afternoon.

The Blue Devils came from behind in the thrilling meet by capturing the first two places in the hop-step-jump. Before that, the Tar Heels had dominated action before an estimated 500 sunbaked spectators.

Carolina's fleetfeet, in defeat, were not without their heroes.

Probably the most impressive was footballer Ronnie Jackson, who showed he's the same speed-merchant without pads as with. The fleet sophomore from Rocky Mount tied a school record with a dazzling 9.6 in the 100-yard dash, and finished a close second in the 220.

John McNinch, the other half of the Heels' dash duo, also impressed with a second in the 100 and a third in the 220.

Carolina's Tommy Henley achieved a personal high of 148-4 in the discus as he pushed Duke's Dave Gesswein.

Tommy Clark, as usual, wasn't pushed in the high jump as he sailed to an easy 6-3 victory. Clark upped his height to 6-6 in an unofficial post-meet demonstration. Joe Huffman provided the only competition for his teammate with a 6-2 leap.

Carolina's other noted airman, Heath Whittle, took the pole vault at 14-6 but couldn't match his 15-foot height of last week. He came close on one occasion, but the bar wouldn't stay up.

The last event of the afternoon broke another school record and almost won the meet for the Tar Heels. The mile relay team of Maurice McDonald, Jim Brown, Bob Hart and Jerry Stuver turned it on for a speedy 3-18. Carolina was six points behind going into the event, and their five point splurge was not quite enough to pull it out.

Jim Brown came through, as he has often this spring, with victories in the 330 intermediate hurdles and the 120 high hurdles. He ran the 330 in 37.9 and the 120 highs in 14.3.

Other Tar Heel winners were Jerry Stuver in the 880, and Bob Hart in the 440.

Duke took advantage of Carolina's weak weight corps for victories in the discus and shot. Devil strongboy Dick Geeswein hurled the discus 154 feet and threw the shot 55-3. Carolina sophomore Bill Graham placed second in the shot.

Duke superiority in the broad jump probably spelled the difference in the eventual outcome. They captured all three places with ace Dave Wheeler leaping 22-2½.

THINGS ARE BACK to normal again now that Warren Giles has balked on the subject om baseball.

Wayne Causey is leading the American League, and the green and gold Kansas City Athletics are in first place, and the Yankees are bouncing around .500 ball, and Clete Boyer is leading them in hitting. John Edwards of Cincinnati hits as well as Causey, and Walter Alston still explains defeats better than anyone, and the St. Louis Cardinals still play better than anybody in the first month.

Baseball has come back, fans. But it used to be such a simple game. No more. Ford Frick changed it to asteriskball two years ago; last season, Maury Wills made everybody conscious of the stolen base; and this year, Giles came up with balkball.

What's involved here, of course, is the pitching motion. The rule says the pitcher must come to a one-second period of motionlessness before he pitches. In past years a sliding pause was considered enough. Now certain umpires in the National League are getting strict. Certain umpires named Augie Donatelli.

NL President Giles told his umps in spring training to enforce the balk rule more strongly this season. He said at the time, "Base runners need and are entitled to the protection of a 'stop.'"

Donatelli has taken him seriously.

Warren Giles Tired Of It All

THERE HAVE BEEN upwards of 80 balks already this season in the National League. This is a world"s record. Augie Donatelli leads the league—or rather his group leads the league—with about half of those called. This is also a world's record.

Warren Giles—like Ford Frick—tired of having to change world's record books, finally called a halt to this ridiculous mess last week. But not before several people let him know what they thought of it.

Roger Craig, a man with a burden, balked twice in 233 innings last season. "I don't think I'll have any trouble with balks," he said before this year's opener—and then went out and balked twice in two innings. A guy who's 10-24 in one year deserves a better fate.

Craig's manager, who has also seen better years, blames not only Giles but his own pitchers as well. "It doesn't make any difference if it's right or wrong," said Casey, "it louses up the game.

"It's getting to be a damn joke. The pitching coach has told them to stop. Didn't I show them how to stop? It don't mean a thing."

Johnny Keane, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, has also taken exception to the rule. He has called it "a serious, dangerous thing that is disrupting whole teams and will cut down the effectiveness and rhythm of pitchers unless some consistency can be reached."

President Giles, obviously impressed at such eloquence coming from, of all people, one of his team managers, must have taken this speech to heart.

Conservative Rickey Very Rare

STANDING STEADFAST BEHIND the rule against the left wing of the baseball world is the bravest man in major league baseball, Branch Rickey.

Rickey, the founder of baseball's farm system and now an ancient special adviser for the Cardinals, does not agree that vigorous policing of the rule is detrimental to the game.

"The press of this country should write National League President Warren Giles and support him for enforcing the rule," Rickey said earlier this year. "The umpires are not calling enough balks."

Normally you would laugh at this kind of a statement. But Branch Rickey is 81 years old, so you ust shake your head and try to understand his situation.

But whatever the situation, you must admire this man's intestinal fortitude. For this is the same guy who, when hired by the Cardinals, immediately suggested that Stan Musial be retired.

Now, in St. Louis, this is somewhat akin to coming out against God, motherhood and Busch Bavarian. Everyone laughed except Musial. Stan almost fired him.

The whole thing came to a head the other day when the balk prevented the New York Mets from losing.

Rallying from a 0-2 deficit to the Dodgers with three balks, a wild pitch, two walks and a couple of errors, the Mets pulled one out, 4-2.

Giles couldn't stand this. "This HAS gone far enough," he said and immediately called a meeting with Frick and American League president Joe Cronin for this Tuesday, May 7.

Out of this should come a decision advocating, if nothing else, uniformity in the interpretation of the rule. And Roger Craig may finally get a break. God knows he needs it.

UNC Buries Cav Jinx, 12-4

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolint bombarded visiting Virginia with 15 hits yesterday afternoon in rolling up a 12-4 ACC victory. The UNC win also ended a five-game jinx held by the Cavaliers.

It was in the spring of 1960 that the Tar Heels last won a game from the Cavaliers, but the UNC batsmen left no doubt about the outcome this time.

The Tar Heels scored in each of the first six innings—and just about everybody got into the act. Buddy Tilden, Dickie Prindle, Heyward Hull, Jim Speight, Tom Wright, Ken Boykin and pitcher Spence Willard all collected two hits apiece.

Speight was the biggest gun with a triple and his second homer of the year. Boykin also connected for the distance—his first of the year.

Hull was the top RBI man with a two-run double and a two-run single.

Spence Willard, who went the full nine innings for the third time this season, struck a two-run triple in the third, and Prindle completed the extra-base barrage with a fifth-inning double.

For Willard it was his fourth triumph of the year. His only loss came at Charlottesville last Saturday, when these same Cavaliers beat him, 5-2.

The game was a nip-and-tuck scoring duel until the bottom of the third when UNC picked up three runs and went ahead to stay.

The Tar Heels took a 1-0 lead in the first on a walk to Prindle and Speight's triple, a well-tagged drive to right-center. But the pesky Cavaliers knotted the count in the top of the second. Gene Angle walked, stole second and raced home on Chris Tisdale's single to center.

Hull's two-out double returned UNC to the lead in the bottom of the second. The hit scored Boykin, who was hit by a pitch, and Tilden, who had walked.

Once again the Virginians tied it up—on Larry Tate's two-run homer to left in the top of the third. The circuit-clout, Tate's second against the Tar Heels this year, scored Lou Seabolt, who had singled.

But a Tar Heel outburst in the bottom half of that inning brought an end to the see-saw batting. Ken Willard walked, Wright singled and Spence Willard followed with his three-bagger, a sinking liner to right. He scored on Tilden's infield single.

Speight's lead-off homer in the fourth added another. The left-field blast came in the frist pitch thrown by Ryland Vest, who had replaced starter and loser Russ Wentz.

Four more came across in the fifth. Boykin started things with a homer to right. A walk to Spence Willard, a double by Prindle, Hull's two-run single and a sacrifice fly by Bill Brown completed the output for that inning. Singles by Wright, Spence Willard and Tilden, and Prindle's sacrifice fly brought No. 12 across in the sixth.

The Cavaliers scored once in the seventh on a tripl by Tisdale and an infield out.

The Tar Heels, now 5-5 in the ACC and 14-9 overall, meet NC State at Raleigh tomorrow night at 8. Bill Dannemann will be on the mound for UNC.

CLEMSON, S. C.—Wake Forest's big bats pounded out six runs in the eighth inning here yesterday to give the Deacons a 14-8 victory over Clemson and ample protection of first place in the ACC.

Wake, now 8-2 in the conference and 21-6 overall, came into this battle just one-half game in front of on-rushing Clemson. The Deacons finished it all but assured of their second league pennant in two years.

Wayne Martin, Don Metzger and Jim Israel all hit Wake home runs in the high-scoring slugfest. Metzger's two-run blast and Israel's three-run shot highlighted the Deacons' big eighth when they wiped out a one-run deficit.

For Clemson, Elmo Lam hit a solo round-tripper in the third, and homers.

Louis Howard, Wake's fine junior lefthander, worked from the fourth through the seventh to take his seventh win. He has lost two.

Playmakers Begin Run Tomorrow

By VANCE BARRON

The Carolina Playmakers' production of "The Cherry Orchard" opens Wednesday night for a five-day run.

Dr. Russell Graves, director of the production, said that it "is the most fascinating play" he has ever worked with. The play was written by Russian playwright Anton Chekhov.

"The Cherry Orchard" is a "beautiful picture of reality," Graves commented in an interview at the Playmakers' theatre yesterday. "It is the most 'honest' play — bar none — that I have produced. You never feel at any point that the playwright is trying to force anything for theatrical effect.

"This is not to say that the play is not theatrical," he added. "It is a picture of life, and life is theatrical." Dr. Graves said the audience should not expect to find an intriguing plot in the play. "If you look for reality, beautifully presented, then I think you will be delighted," he said. "It is a mixture of comedy and tragedy because life is such a mixture."

While Dr. Graves was speaking, he often broke off to shout directions to the Playmakers working on the stage set. A living room became a wooded scene in a matter of minutes as the sets were turned on their rollers.

"I am very pleased with the cast," Dr. Graves continued. "Most of them have not played major parts before, so it will be a fresh experience for the audience."

Fred Lubs, Edna Clark and Ed Grady will be seen in the leading roles. Dr. Graves said that there were no real bit parts, however, "The play is remarkaby well-balanced."

The story is a simple one, according to Dr. Graves. It takes place in Russia at the turn of the century. It portrays a family of aristocrats who are unable to cope with a changing situation, largely because of their training as aristocrats. The family estate, the Cherry Orchard, is to be sold at auction. The family strives in vain to prevent this.

Tommy Rezzuto, a veteran of many Playmaker productions, designed the set for the play.

The play will open Wednesday night at 8 p.m. at the Playmakers' Theatre and will run through Sunday night. A matinee performance is scheduled for Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are for reserved seats only. They can be bought in advance at Ledbetter-Pickard or at the Playmaker business office at 214 Abernethy Hall. Additional tickets will be available at the door.

The price for all seats is $2.

GMAB Heads To Be Chosen By Interview

The Graham Memorial Activities Board committee chairmen will hold interviews for committee members on May 8, 9 and 10 in Graham Memorial.

Sign-up sheets for the interviews will be available at the GM information desk and the interviews will be conducted from 2-5 p.m. each day. No previous experience is necessary for membership on one of the various committees.

The committees that will hold interviews are as follows: PUBLICITY COMMITTEE: publicizes all GM functions. Art, communications, press are only a few of the facets involved.

SOCIAL COMMITTEE: plans combos and other campus entertainment including the GM Jubilee weekend.

CURRENT AFFAIRS: provides students with education information, in the form of debates etc., on national and campus affairs directly affecting the student.

MUSIC COMMITTEE: plans various types of Petite Musicales that take place on the campus throughout the year. No previous knowledge of music required.

FILMS COMMITTEE: plans the films to be shown throughout the year.

DRAMA COMMITTEE: plans Petite Dramatiques and poetry readings and this year hopes to initiate a modern dance group.

Seniors Take 'Parting Shots' At University

By VIRGINIA CARNES

"I'm a Tar Heel born; I'm a Tar Heel bred, and before I die I'm gonna saw a few things," will be the refrain chorused in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. today as six graduating seniors fire their "parting shots" at UNC.

One co-ed and five men (true to UNC's ratio), whose thoughts are as diverse as their backgrounds, whose interests vary from football to Tar Heel, classics to chemistry, who hail from Minnesota to Florida, whose honors range from journalism awards to graduate fellowships, to Valkyries to Golden Fleece will share their last critical and enlightening thoughts with the University community.

The six — Beth Walker, Walter Dellinger, Wayne King, Bill Imes, Mack Armstrong, and Joe Craver — will each speak five to ten minutes on their views, feelings, and thoughts upon leaving Carolina in a novel approach to "Last Lectures", a previous Carolina Forum series involving UNC professors.

Following the speeches, Henry Mayer, chairman of Carolina Forum will present an analysis and summary of the program.

The lectures will be presented as an evaluation of UNC and the myriad facets of college life, not in the form of sentiment, as all are motivated by a love and concern for their university, but as an enlightened criticism.

Each of the speakers has made his contribution to Carolina through his sincere pursuit of knowledge and activities.

A history major from Rogersville, Tenn., Mack Armstrong has been an active campus Young Republican and, as an unusually versatile speaker, the captain of UNC's highly regarded debating team. Treasurer of the Carolina Forum, he is a member of the Order of the Old Well and Order of the Golden Fleece and has been a consistent Deans' List student. He was a member of the Freshman and Sophomore Honors Programs and a Morehead Scholar.

Joe Craver, of Shelby, N. C., is also a Morehead Scholar. An all-conference center, Craver was co-captain of this year's football team. He was a member of the '63 Toronto Exchange and is in Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. A member of the Order of the Old Well and the Order of the Golden Fleece, Craver will enroll in the UNC School of Medicine in September.

Recently awarded the Irene F. Lee Award as the most outstanding senior woman, Beth Walker has been active in many campus organizations. A political science major, she served as chairman of UNC's delegation to the State Student Legislature and was active in the UN Model Assembly. She is a Valkyrie, secretary of the senior class, and vice-president of the Panhellenic Council.

A former editor of the DTH, Hickory's Wayne King has been the recipient of two national newswriting awards and was recently honored with a Newsweek magazine internship. He is a member of the Toronto Exchange, the Order of the Grail, the Order of the Old Well and is currently managing editor of the DTH.

Bill Imes, who is reading for honors in classics, will return to his prep school alma mater, Phillips Exeter, next year as a Latin instructor. A native of Birchdale, Minn. Imes is a member of the Orders of the Golden Fleece, Grail, and Old Well and has played active roles in debating and the Caro-

Hundreds Arrested

B'ham Students Urged: 'Stay Away From Class'

(DTH staff members Mike Putzel and Joel Bulkley, who wrote the following report, were among four white reporters who managed to elude police and get in and out of the Baptist Church which served as the focal point of yesterday's demonstrations in Birmingham. One of the four, Barbara Demming, a reporter for The Nation, was arrested upon leaving the church.)

By MIKE PUTZEL
And JOEL BULKLEY

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. — James Bevel, a leader in "The Birmingham Movement," told an assemblage of nearly 1,000 Negro high school students Monday that the school boycott they have started will have "every school in the county closed by the end of the week."

Bevel, executive director of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and organizer of the school boycott, sent handbills Monday morning to all Negro students on their way to school, telling them to "Fight for freedom first, then go to school."

Unofficial reports indicated the boycott had been 50 to 75 per cent successful, as mass demonstrations and arrests continued here for the fifth straight day.

Some 200 of the students in the church left the four-hour meeting when they were told that if they didn't want to demonstrate they should give up their seats for those who did.

Bevel told the students that they had been asked to boycott the schools because over 1,000 of their classmates were in jail and that if one Negro couldn't go to school, none of them should.

He explained that the purpose of the demonstrations is to "fill the jails to overflowing."

"We must learn to love each other," he said. "We must practice brotherhood and stay together or the white men will trick us back into slavery."

The students responded by singing "freedom songs," then listened to more speeches from other Negro leaders.

Dr. Martin Luther King told the students theirs was "a struggle for freedom and human dignity.

"We can't forget our fellow schoolmates who are now in jail," King said, "but we must always use non-violent methods."

Dick Gregory, nationally-known Negro comedian, compared the Birmingham situation with the Berlin Wall.

"They call us Communists when we fight for freedom," he said, "but we can compare our struggle with the fight of the East German people against Communism.

"The Communists built the wall, and I say that the hoses and the dogs they're using here are just the same as the Wall."

After the speeches the students lined up and were given signs to begin their demonstration. They left the church in orderly rows, singing.

As they marched toward the courthouse in the downtown area with Gregory in the lead, they were arrested by police and hustled into waiting school buses to be taken to the city jail yard.

The name on a nearby movie marquee read: "Damn The Defiant."

UP Meeting Rescheduled For Tonight

The University Party will meet tonight at 8:30 in the Auditorium of Carroll Hall, instead of Wednesday as was previously announced. Mike Chanin, chairman, said the reason for the change was to avoid conflicts with scheduled meetings of the IDC and YDC and various chapter and committee meetings.

The meeting will be for the election of next year's officers. All party offices are open, and prospective candidates should contact Chanin before the meeting.

"Several persons have already expressed interest, and I have decided to seek a second term myself," Chanin said. "I have some new programs which I hope to accomplish in the coming year, and I hope that the membership will give me the opportunity to serve."

World News In Brief

Birmingham Police Arrest Over 850

BIRMINGGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Hundreds of Negroes, including comedian Dick Gregory, were herded off to jail Monday in the biggest civil rights demonstration the South has ever seen.

School buses and paddy wagons ran shuttle trips to the jails already jammed with Negroes arrested during the racial strife that has gripped Birmingham since April 3.

Scores of Negroes — most of them teen-agers-marched directly into waiting school buses with blankets, books and tooth brushes for the trip to jail as they emerged from the 16th Street Baptist Church following a mass protest meeting.

Police did not resort to the use of fire hoses or police dogs as they had done in previous demonstrations but strict security regulations were clamped on the area around the church and a command post was set up atop a nearby building to direct the mass arrests.

More than 850 arrests were made, including 717 marchers for parading without a permit and a white news reporter. An estimated 150 Negroes were arrested in the downtown area for picketing.

'Bev' Haynes Junior Of The Year

Beverly Haynes, a nursing student from Washington D. C., was presented the Jane Craig Gray Award for the most outstanding junior woman Sunday afternoon at a Kappa Delta tea held in her honor.

Miss Haynes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Marvin Haynes, has attended Carolina since her freshman year. She has maintained a 3.40 average while serving as chairman of the Women's Honor Council, secretary of the Carolina Symposium, president of Chi Omega Sorority, and orientation counselor. She has also been tapped as a member of both Valkyries and the Old Well.

The award is presented annually by Beta Chi chapter of Kappa Delta in memory of Jane Craig Gray, late wife of Gordon Gray, president of the University from 1950-55. It recognizes a member of the junior class who has proven herself most outstanding in character, scholarship and leadership.

Each year a junior's name will be engraved on the award plaque to be kept in the Kappa Delta house.

Mr. Charles Shaffer, a friend of the late Jane Craig Gray, presented the award to Miss Haynes following a speech by Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

7 Journalism Scholarships Are Awarded

Seven undergraduate scholarships, four financed from Journalism Foundation income, were awarded at the 9th Annual Press Awards Banquet of the School of Journalism, University of North Carolina, Monday, May 6, at which Harry Golden, editor, the Carolina, Israelite, was speaker.

Students receiving the four named Journalism Foundation scholarships were:

Paula J. Winstead, Durham, Beatrice Cobb Scholarship, $175 for fall semester.

Charles D. Mooney, Statesville, O. J. Coffin Scholarship, $175 for first term of the Summer Session.

The Quincy Sharpe Mills Scholarship for $350 was awarded Fred L. Seely, Asheville. A bequest to the School of Journalism from Nancy Sharpe Mills provides this award.

The Jake Wade Scholarship for $350 went to Curry Kirkpatrick, Lewiston, New York, rising junior and sports editor of the Daily Tar Heel. This scholarship is provided from funds contributed by friends of the late Jake Wade, sports publicist for the University.

NAACP Attorney Says Violence Can Be Averted

By GARY BLANCHARD

An NAACP attorney who playd a major role in desegregating Ole Miss and Clemson College believes there is "a real possibility" that Alabama can avert violence and the use of federal troops in the event Negroes are ordered admitted to the University of Alabama.

"I think there are some people working on the Governor," Mrs. Constance Baker Motley said in a question period following a talk Saturday night to the first All-South Human Relations Conference. The conference closed Sunday.

"Of course, you don't hear any names," Mrs. Motley said, "but people tell you this . . . they say that the Governor is just out there shooting off his mouth and he doesn't mean it.

"Maybe by the time the students are admitted, his attitude will have changed . . . we certainly hope so."

The governor, George Wallace, has said he will "stand in the doorway" of any Alabama school threatened with desegregation.

Asked about events in Birmingham, Mrs. Motley said:

—If Negroes are to achieve full equality, "what's happening in Birmingham is going to have to spread—that is, a real desire by Negroes for desegregation."

—"The demonstrators themselves are not the ones who engage in violence. The people watching are the ones who do it. At least, that's what happened last week."

—"I don't know of any cooperation" being received by Birmingham Negroes from organized labor in Birmingham.

—"Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth and the Alabama Christian Movement invited Dr. King to come in" and help overturn segregation barriers.

King is not there to use the situation as a means of repleting his movement's funds, despite news reports quoting an Alabama Civil Rights Advisory Commission official that King has said as much privately.

The lady lawyer predicted Negroes will make wider use of economic boycotts in the South in the future, with the result that restaurants and businesses "probably will be desegregated long before the schools are."

She characterized the desire of the Black Muslims, a Negro extremist group, for Negro withdrawal into a separate nation, as "an old idea" which is "ludicrous" and "realistically, not possible."

Dubbing Muslim leader Malcolm X "an extremist," Mrs. Motley said:

"It's very easy, what he does. He lists everything that's wrong. Anyone can do that. The difficulty is in deciding what to do about it. That's where we and most Negroes part company with him.

"A lot of Southerners like Malcolm X," she said. "He's talking about what they're talking about—segregation. A lot of Southern segregationists love him."

Mrs. Motley said the only way the NAACP can win sit-in cases now before the U. S. Supreme Court is "by showing that there is some kind of state action involved . . . the argument most likely to be accepted is that arrest and conviction constitute state action.

"There are indications that this will come," she said. "If we can get this broadening (of the concept of) state action, then we'll see private segregation struck down too."

In her address, she said the "real danger" facing the civil rights movement is the "widespread acceptance of a new compromise of rights guaranteed Negroes by the Supreme Court.

"We're in great danger of having imposed on us . . . 'tokenism' as the successor to 'separate but equal,'" she said, referring to the Supreme Court's 1895 decision which was overturned in 1954.

Citing North Carolina as the "author of 'tokenism,'" Mrs. Motley said:

"This is a real danger because the so-called moderates, north and south, have accepted 'tokenism' as compliance with the 1954 decision.

"The moderates are quite satisfied with what South Carolina has done—admitted a single Negro."

Without a new decision by the Supreme Court, she said, "the process of desegregating schools will continue for generations to come...

"At the rate we're going in North Carolina, we'll desegregate the schools by 2064. In other states with a grade-a-year plan, it will be a century after that."

A second danger facing the movement is "reluctance of Negroes to press locally for full implementation of their rights," such as taking advantage of desegregated lunch counters, she said.

A third danger is that "of having 'tokenism' accepted as national policy," she said, "because of widespread de facto segregation in northern cities."

She called for "widespread acceptance of the spirit of the 1954 decision, including reassignment of teachers and principals on a non-segregated basis."

Also necessary, she said, is "more willingness on the part of Negroes themselves to abandon their segregated way of life and enter the mainstream of American life."

Fire At Will

"Parting Shots," the program of 'last words' by six graduating seniors scheduled for 8 o'clock tonight in Memorial Hall, promises to be one of the most novel and stimulating events of the year.

These seniors have been asked to share their final critical thoughts about the University with the entire student community, and before we lapse into traditional year-end sentiment, such objective remarks will be welcome indeed.

What we hear tonight from six of our fellow students will be motivated by their deep love and concern for the University. However critical some of it may sound, it will be heartfelt and meaningful. It should be listened to and pondered with care.

The Carolina Forum (which has been responsible for a considerable amount of excitement this year) and the Senior Class are sponsoring tonight's affair, and we hope that such 'last lectures' become an annual affair.

Although no one has been able to get any information about the contents of the speeches, we have every reason to expect these parting shots to be noisy indeed. The students involved have raised their voices before during their careers here, and they will leave, we are sure, in a burst of glory.

Tool Or Juggernaut?

A small and what might be called a rebel band of serious-minded educators recently threw a grenade at basic American military policy, but the noise of their explosive package seemed to attract no more attention than the backfire of a delivery truck on Pennsylvania Avenue.

The situation has the makings of a cruel joke. The New Frontier is supercharged with intellectuals whose lines of communication are supposed to hum and throb with unorthodox ideas but so far, it appears, the would-be innovators have been unable to tune in on the Kennedy Administration wave length even to get their unusual proposals seriously discussed.

This is not to say that the educators, headed by Seymour Melman, professor of industrial and management engineering at Columbia University, have discovered a foolproof recipe to end the cold War, or guarantee the avoidance of a hot one. Their attack on the military budget, contained in a study entitled "A Strategy for American Security," is loaded with unanswered questions.

But the situation, in which their study got virtually no initial attention in the press or reaction from any branch of government, despite the fact that copies of it were delivered to every member of Congress, to key offices in the executive branch, to every state governor and to the Washington press corps via an open briefing on Monday, this state of affairs raises the disturbing possibility that the government and the country may be incapable of examining U. S. strategy with detachment. (The DTH carried the story this past Saturday, based on a Charlotte Observer dispatch.)

Is the momentum of our policy in proliferation of nuclear weapons so powerful that we can't pause to see where we are going? Has the overwhelming bigness of our defense machine set us in motion on a course which we did not intend? Can we, expert and layman alike, see only what our previously formed conceptions allow us to see?

If any answer here is yes then our military policy has become a juggernaut which we do not control and we must exert every effort to get back in command of it. If the concepts of the Melman group do no more than force us to face these questions honestly, their work will have been of great value . . .

The group does not propose disarmament. But it argues that there is a new instrument of power in the world which we are not using — industrial productivity.

And one main reason we are not using it is that we are stifling it with over production in defense.

The old concept that any addition to offensive capability increases military power or the deterrence of nuclear attack, is, these men insist, obsolete strategy. Why? Because of a new military condition which the Pentagon calls "overkill." They estimate that the U. S. now has about 3400 strategic weapons vehicles — bombers, missiles, Polaris submarines — capable of delivering nuclear warheads with explosive power equivalent to 22 billion tons of TNT — approximately seven tons for every man, woman and child on the face of the earth.

The Melman group calculates that "for the 140 major cities of the Soviet Union, the U. S. overkill capacity is 78 times, even allowing for a 50 percent attrition of carriers." Yet the size of our stockpile and the number of our delivery vehicles continue to increase. Where is the limit?

To the argument that we need more defensive systems to protect enough people to insure "an ongoing society," in case of attack, Melman replies that the Soviets possess overkill too and "if someone can destroy you 100 times over and you knock out 99 percent of his capacity he can still kill you" with that remaining one percent of overkill.

The study advocates what it calls a maintenance - of - present-forces budget of $34 billion or a cut of nearly $23 billion from the $56.7 billion the administration asked for military spending in fiscal 1964. The big cuts would be in military procurement, research and development. These experts do not believe that this "freeze" in our nuclear arsenal would encourage the Soviets to aggressive adventures but would instead influence them to take similar action — so powerful are the needs and demands of their domestic economy.

The study blames our "overkill" military strategy almost exclusively for the questionable state of our own domestic economy, for the steady drain on the dollar (in overseas military commitments) despite a favorable balance of trade, for our faltering technological growth. Indeed a New York Times Washington dispatch only today reported a dwindling of industrial research because great government demand has robbed civilian industry of scientists and techniians.

Obviously the Melman report does not begin to supply all the answers but it has posed great questions which the country should not let the government ignore.

Another View Of Academic Freedom

By DOUGLAS EISELE

"Academic freedom" is a nebulous doctrine. But if it means the unbridled philosophy that college professors can at all times promote what they believe, without reprisals, then it is wrong.

Such a statement will bring forth condemnation from the liberals, who from their ivory towers often fail to face the facts of life. They live in theory, or morals applying the most perfect rules to a most imperfect world. The two must clash.

And so they do in so-called academic freedom.

The goal of any state is self-perpetuation—the furtherance of its national integrity and of its way of life. Wars have been fought throughout history to defend it; diplomats struggle daily to assure it. Whether the state sought to be perpetuated is good or bad in the eyes of the rest of mankind is unimportant.

What does matter here is that an Ivory soap percentage in a given society believes strongly in its current social and political life. It believes it so fervently that thousands of men have died fighting for it. Its faith is so strong in the system that the society's wealth has been committed around the world.

There is justification, then, that this same society should fight to protect its system at home.

In Communist states, this protection is assured by the complete control of the system—social, political, economic, educational—by the state. There is no questioning its effect. The result has been not only to foster the Communist doctrine at home but to peddle it abroad wherever a disciple could be found.

The lesson in the Communist case is not that its philosophy is good. It lies in the fact that strong control is effective in perpetuating the state. And it follows that if strong control produces results in a highly regimented society, then some control would work to perpetuate the philosophy of a freer society. The question, and a serious one, is where to draw the line.

In our society, the control should be extended over public employees in those affairs which could be used by them to the detriment of the state. This includes control over the academician in some areas of political expression. It does not mean he is refused the privilege to expound the merits of a Communist economy, to condemn the CIA for its role in international politics, to curse the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

It does mean that he should conform to the broader concept of Democratic philosophy—so long as he is on the public payroll.

The justification for this conviction lies in the right of a society to determine its own course in political philosophy. It lies in a society's right to perpetuate itself. That same society should be able at will to cast from its employment those who disagree with the course selected.

This kind of feeling will bring from the liberals cries that what is proposed would make this a Communist state, not protect it from one. To the extent that some expression would be controlled, their cries would have merit.

But to equate such control with Communist regimentation is invalid. Rather, the control would work to perpetuate the society such that it could not slip silently and without notice into the Communist norm. It would, therefore, serve the best interests of the state.

It is feared that complete academic freedom in the hands of a few would be a dangerous tool by which control could be gained over the many. This is a more ghastly possibility than that some liberal thought would be offended by effective restraints. The result would be a relaxation into which the new thought — the currently unacceptable political thought—would pour. Then there would not only be restraints upon a small corner of academic freedom, but controls upon every area of human conduct.

The state should possess the privilege to perpetuate itself. It also should possess those tools necessary for the job. And if the tools are used inappropriately for the task at hand, the cries should come not from the ivory tower liberals but from that great mass of society which knows best how to promote its interest.

Given a choice, a free people will make the right decisions—even if they lag behind what others consider to be the right choice with all deliberate speed.

"Bah! You're Not Trying To Make It Grow"

Radical Right Obscuring Real Danger Of Our Times

By HERBERT P. HALBERG
The Collegian
Colorado State University

America's Radical Right is performing a grave disservice to the American people. The emphasis of the Radical Right propaganda on hate, destruction, suspicion, and distrust serves to obscure the real threat of our times. Hiding behind their slogan "better dead than red," the Radical Right ignores completely the very real problem of the international arms race.

Led by businessmen, fundamentalist clergymen, retired military officers, and professional patriots, the Radical Right is amply financed. Professor Alan F. Westic of Columbia University says, "A cautious estimate would show that the American business community contributed $10 million to the Radical Right last year." Financing on a scale such as that makes the Radical Right, no matter how irrational they may sound, a "formidable influence." The history of Hitler and the "big lie" is too very recent to completely dismiss the "line" of the Radical Right as rantings of deranged personalities.

Mr. W. P. Strube, director of radio and television for the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, is quite candid in stating that the Radical Right need not be encumbered by rationality. He says, "You don't have to be objective about narcotics, morals, or communism." Mr. Strube is correct in an unethical sense. Communism and socialism have unsavory connotations for many Americans. Liberal legislation is equated with socialism by spokesmen of America's Right in effort to discredit the legislation. Political figures are accused of being communists or "soft on communism for the purpose of smearing them. The Radical Right spokesmen exploit the American's inate hostility to left-wing ideas to the fullest extent.

Fred Schwarz, an Australian medical doctor turned evangelist, heads the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade schools. According to Fred J. Cook's article in the NATION, "These schools become exercises in revivalist emotion rather than exercises in logic. Schwarz leaves in his wake the atmosphere of the vigilante and the fanatic." With utter disregard for logic. Rear Admiral Chester Ward, USN Ret., thundered from Schwarz's pulpit, "We are at all times ready for war to keep the peace."

Without exception the message of the Radical Right is a consistent exhortation to hate communism. As far as the Rightists are concerned, communism represents the anti-Christ. Even now, they contend, we are engaged in a Holy War with Russia. The foregoing observation is illustrated by Schwarz's tirade, "Christians to arms! The enemy is at the gate . . . let us smite the communist foe . . . coexistence is impossible . . . we must hurl this thing back into the pit from whence it came."

From the west coast Henry W. MacFarland, Jr., echoes precisely the same irrational message of hate. He says, "If our republic is to survive . . . the forces of Hell let loose upon the world in October, 1917, must be destroyed." There can be no doubt about the views of the Radical Right. For them war with Russia is the only solution to world problems. Any effort by national leaders to seek peaceful solutions to problems is decried by the Rightists as tantamount to surrender to Russia.

Commenting on the Disarmament Agency Bill, Dan Smoot says, "Our danger lies in the fact that the Kennedy Administration is moving . . . behind a veil of deceit and propaganda about world peace toward the American Armed forces and American Sovereignty to a Communist-controlled United Nations."

In the same vein Smoot refers to the Council on Foreign relations. He says, "They (the Council on Foreign Relations) want the Constitution abolished so that the Presidency, which is in their control, can move quickly to socialize the economy of America and then surrender her sovereignty to a One-World Socialist System."

Historical facts are blithely disregarded by speakers of the far Right. Robert Welch, founder of the JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY contends, "In 1940, the most important thing in the world to Stalin was to get the United States into the war. For several years his agents had been scheming and lying and conniving to bring on world War II." There is not a word about the machinations of Adolph Hitler, only the inference that our national leaders were inept, duped and outwitted by a crafty Josef Stalin.

Our leaders are guileless while the Communist leaders are cunning is a theme that courses through the fabric of the propaganda from the Right like a red thread.

Joe Crail's FREE ENTERPRISE BUREAU circulated the following alleged statement by Nikita Khrushchev, "We cannot expect Americans to jump from capitalism to communism, but we can assist their elected leaders in giving Americans small doses of socialism, until they suddenly wake up to find they have communism." Senator Lee Metcalf, doubting the authenticity of the statement, employed every knowledgeable government agency to trace the quotation; to no avail. The Senator concluded that the statement was spurious.

Instead of a rational consideration of the consequences of war, the Rightist buries himself beneath the slogan "better dead than red." The slogan may have a heroic ring but it conveys no information. Thus, buried beneath a slogan the Rightist completely ignores the arms race.

Fanning the flames of hate, discrediting national leaders, and promoting suspicion and distrust of international institutions can serve only one purpose and that is to intensify world tensions. America's Radical Right is not only performing a disservice to the American people but to the entire world.

Erich Fromm in his book MAY MAN PREVAIL? adequately points out the effect produced by the Rightist's propaganda. He says, "Many still continue to believe that communism is the epitome of evil; and that we the free world . . . are the personification of all that is good. The result is a narcissistic and unrealistic picture of the West as the fighter for good, for freedom, and for humanity, and communism as the enemy of all that is human and decent . . . If projection is mixed with paranoid thinking, as is the case in the 'cold war', we have indeed, a dangerously explosive psychological mixture, which prevents sane and anticipatory thinking." It cannot be denied that the propaganda of the Right leads to stereotyped thinking which must ultimately result in war.

The inventory of destructive weapons extant in the world today is staggering. What would happen should these weapons be used almost defies comprehension. Norman Cousins paints a gruesome picture in his book IN PLACE OF FOLLY. He points out, in the event Russia launched a nuclear attack on the United States, military experts estimate that 95% of the population would be doomed. The estimate of casualties for Russia is less since their population density is less than that of the United States.

The real threat that confronts the world is the continuing arms race. Jerome Wiesner's prefatory remarks in the special arms control edition of DAEDALUS emphasizes the danger of the arms race. He says, "The concensus among the contributors to this special edition of DAEDALUS is that civilization is faced with an unprecedented crisis. If the arms race is allowed to continue, our country will have less security with each passing year. Both the Soviet Union and the United States have enough nuclear explosives to kill each other several times over. As a result, there is an ever increasing likelihood of a war so disatrous that civilization if not man himself will be eradicated."

The slogan "better dead than red" is an eloquent testimonial to the intellectual paucity of the Radical Right. Thinking, testing, and trying in effort to solve problems is the path followed by temporizing men. The path is difficult to travel. Like a wilderness there are no guide posts. Yet, if mankind is to solve his problems rather than eliminate them along with himself, that is the path he must travel.

Broke Or Rich, You Can Get To Europe Easily

By PETE RANGE

"Fan!" swore Bjoern, my cabinmate, in a typical sailor's greeting to the morning.

We staggered out onto the pitching deck crossed to midships, and ducked through two hatches into the crew mess. There sleepy seamen were drinking hot coffee from the heavy, old mugs and smoking hand-rolled cigarettes.

At seven, Bos'n stuck his head in and said, "Ok — Klocken syv; vi skal arbeider!" and we all tumbled out into the grey morning to begin work. Paint decks, splice cables, wash booms, scrape paint, make fast the cargo, and fifty other things kept us busy for eight hours.

At eight we stopped half-an-hour for breakfast. And at twelve there was an hour for lunch. We ate fast and then napped or played cards before pulling on our caps and boots again and attacking the salt and sea which slowly rusts away every ship in the water. Then thirty minutes for coffee at three. At five our work-day ended.

So it was for thirteen days between Genoa and New York when I came home this January, working as a non-paying, non-paid deckboy on a Norwegian freighter. So it was, too, last September, when I spent ten days deckboying on a Norwegian tanker bound from Egypt to Kuwait, only then we worked almost naked in the one-hundred degree heat.

Work-a-way travel is supposed to have gone out. And it almost has. But any ambitious, determined fellow ready to live the seaman's life a while can probably work his way to Europe if he wants to badly enough.

There are two tricks: Go only to ships from Scandanavian countries; and go straight to the captain, not to the agent or anyone else. Tell the captain you are a student with insufficient funds for passenger travel and would like to work on his ship.

Probably only a few students will voyage to Europe this way this summer. For girls work-a-way is more or less impossible. And if you can offord it, passenger travel is more comfortable anyway.

Passenger fare to Europe is available on freighters, where a maximum of twelve passengers live in first-class accommodations, dine with the captain, and enjoy the more intimate if somewhat quieter society of a small company during their crossing to Europe. Fares average about $150 one-way.

The disadvantage is that freighters travel slower and are not bound to their schedules. My first ship (a coal freighter upon which I was a passenger) left Norfolk five days behind schedule and took thirteen days reaching port in North Germany.

For the fun-seeking Daytona-type, twenty-four-hour-a-day social life, student ships are best. Usually an entire ship or, say the whole tourist class of a ship will be reserved for students at reduced rates (about $185-220 one-way).

To get there quick, avoiding seasickness and social life as well, one flies jet. In about eight hours you whiz from New York to London, or it takes sixteen if you travel Icelandic Airlines, by way of Reykjavik.

Reduced student rates start at about $320 round-trip. See Graham Memorial to take advantage of this possibility. The flight to London normally costs about $270 one-way.

For freighter travel you may contact any one of hundreds of freight shipping agents — for instance: A. F. Klaveness, 17 Battery Place, New York 4.

For work-a-way, go either New York or Norfolk and look for Scandinavian ships headed for Europe —and don't get discouraged!

These Seniors Have Cost the G.A.A. Money!

They have enrolled as members of the General Alumni Association for their first alumni year, taking advantage of the special offer now open to Senior (i.e. join for $1 now instead of the usual $5). Actually, it will cost the Alumni Association more than the special fee to mail these members of '63 their copies of "The Alumni Review" all next fall—not to mention the weekly football game reports in the fall. But they have sent their dollar to the Alumni Office (Box 660, Chapel Hill) and have been enrolled as members-in-good standing for the next 12 months. Here are the '63 firsts:

for $350 was awarded to Fred R. Harwell, Jr., Washington, N. C., a rising sophomore. Funds contributed to the Journalism Foundation by a donor who insists upon remaining anonymous finance this scholarship honoring Mark Ethridge, who will join the journalism staff next fall.

For the first time this year special Mark Ethridge cash awards were made to the academic leaders of the senior and junior classes. Financed from the contribution from the anonymous donor, a $100 check was presented to Wyatt Stephen Lee, Roseboro, whose 3.136 overall quality point average ranked him Number One among journalism seniors. Lee stood 137th in a senior class of 1,487 at the end of the fall semester. Virginia H. Carnes, Atlanta, Georgia, the Number One student in the junior class with an overall average of 3.333, was presented with a $50 check. Miss Carnes stood 121st in a junior class of 1,851.

Five students were initiated into Kappa Tau Alpha, journalism honor society membership which is limited to the top 10% of the School of Journalism.

They were Mooney, Clyde N. Wilson. Jr., Greensboro, and Miss Winstead, seniors, and Miss Carnes and Miss Fagg, juniors.

Three awards made annually by Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic society, went to Lee for outstanding scholarship; to Bertram Owen Bishop, Plymouth, N. C. and Mooney who tied for the award as the outstanding male senior, and to Frances Goins, Martinsville, Virginia, as the outstanding senior woman.

Bishop, retiring president of the Press Club, presided and introduced Club officers for 1963-64; Miss Fagg, president; Chris Farran, Winston-Salem, vice-president; and Cynthia Leonard, Ramseur, N. C., secretary-treasurer.

Appointment of Miss Leonard as editor of the UNC Journalist, the School's experimental laboratory newspaper, was announced at the dinner as were the appointments of Ronald E. Spainhour, Winston-Salem, Sharon R. Grosser, La Porte, Indiana, and William H. Wheeler, Jr., Union City, Georgia, to the Editorial Board of the Journalist.

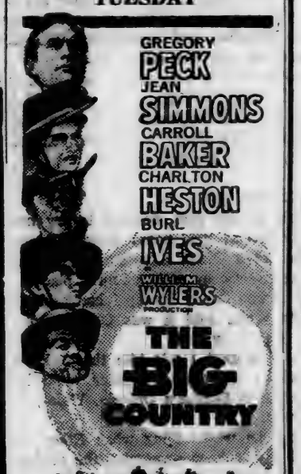
Yesterday's Answer

Alumni Drive Gains Speed



This week seniors are enrolling in the University's General Alumni Association at a special first-year rate of one dollar. The regular membership fee is five dollars.

The enrollment is being conducted by a senior class committee of which Charles Shelton and Betty McDonald are co-chairmen. Other members of the committee, appointed by Class President Richard Vinroot, are Bill Hoyle, Bruce Green and Mary Ruth Walters.

"The best way young alumni can keep in touch with the University is through membership in the Alumni Association," Shelton said yesterday. "Those who join the group help to strengthen the University, and membership means more and more to them as the years roll by."

Each member of the association automatically gets "The Alumni Review," official alumni publication, plus ten football supplements covering all football games during the year of membership.

Big Four Mural Athletes Try Again Today

By STUART BALL

A week's delay because of rain hasn't dampened the spirits of the Carolina participants in today's Big Four Sports Day at Duke.

"The delay has helped many of the teams strengthen themselves," said Walt Tuthill, Intramural Undergraduate assistant. "Many of the boys who couldn't make it last week will be able to participate today."

Competition between UNC, Duke, N. C. State and Wake Forest begins at 1:45 at Card Gym in all events except bowling and golf. Bowling participants will meet at Sportland at 1:45 and golfers will tee-off at 11 a.m. at the Duke Golf Course.

Championships in badminton, handball and horseshoes last year helped account for UNC's second place finish. The Tar Heels were six points off the pace set by defending champion N. C. State.

What hurt Carolina most was fourth place finishes in golf, softball and volleyball. This year Win Bilisoly, Dave Wysong and Gene Barrier have rounded out representative teams in those sports to bolster UNC point totals.

Managers for other sports are: Means Davis, handball; Larry Edwards, table tennis; Sam Appleyard, tennis; Jack Rugheimer, badminton and Joe Garner, bowling.

All events will be played on a round robin basis with each team meeting the other. UNC meets Wake Forest in the first round of table tennis and handball competition. The Tar Heels take on Duke in the first round of horseshoes and softball and State in tennis, volleyball, badminton and bowling.

Transportation will be provided to those not having rides. A bus will leave Woollen Gym at 1 p.m. Those having rides should meet in front of Card Gym at 1:45.

The Seventh Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet pits outdoorsmen from UNC, State, Duke and Wake Forest against each other today here and at the Durham Wildlife Club.

Postponed from last Tuesday because of rain, the meet features trap shooting, target rifle, skish, and archery.

Competition begins at 2 p.m. with all but trap shooting being held here. The Durham Wildlife Club will handle trap shooting.

Last year, UNC, and State tied for the championship and the two schools are expected to provide most of the competition today.

Anyone interested in participating in archery, target rifle or skish for UNC can enter the events at the time they are held.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK — Sports Courier

JOHN MONTAGUE, the horseplayer's horseplayer, collected a cool nine bucks Saturday afternoon when he used the quickest hands this side of Bill Mazeroski to pick the name "Chateaugay" out of a paper bag.

It was the DTH's first annual Kentucky Derby pool instigated by Dave Etheridge and myself but manipulated (it seemed) solely by Dave Etheridge.

Assistant Managing Editor Sam Himes, on the desk that day, chose first and cooly picked No Robbery. He smiled his Palm Beach smile, knowing he had a darn good choice and a darn good dark horse.

Joel Bulkley, the Connecticutt yankee who currently reigns as student confusion editor, picked Bonjour and also smiled, knowing HE had the dark horse — if in color only.

The editors picked, and it was then that I suspected something sinister. Etheridge, being from Louisville and having sounded out all his bookies, had proclaimed all along that Never Bend would lap the field and win in a breeze. He "got stuck" however with Candy Spots, the 6-5 favorite.

He tried to sell his ticket all afternoon, but nobody was taking — especially for the going price of $2. At post time, he was still begging his wife to buy the ticket.

Meanwhile, Garry Blanchard, who knows as much about horses as he does about gnus, picked Never Bend from the bag. This meant the editors held the two favorites, and some screaming ensued.

But the selecting went on.

Mike Putzel, also an assistant managing editor (this place needs two assistant managing editors to assist in editing the managing of the managing editor), chose Investor, and immediately uttered words that will go unprinted because they are unprintable.

This is the horse that got into the Derby only after a technicality was ironed out by the officials. They moved up the registration time for Investor after they decided that the horse might, after all, come in ninth. He was 100-1, and Putzel knew it. But he took the ribbing good-naturedly after crying fix for ten minutes.

Diane Hile Chose Honorably

DIANE HILE, the lone female in the pool, decided to try her luck and came up with On My Honor. The name brought many horse laughs from the boys who know Diane Hile, but her mount fooled everybody by just missing the money with a fourth place.

Fred Seely came in and said it was Candy Spots; I had said all along it was Candy Spots; Pete Wales said it was Candy Spots, but promptly picked from the bag, Gray Pet.

He was feeling pretty low about it until I told him that I knew Avelino Gomez (Gray Pet's jockey) to be a fine rider when he was at Fort Erie, a Canadian track in Southern Ontario. Wales, to my surprise, then felt even lower.

Bill Waumett was investigating the whole thing when Etheridge mysteriously disappeared — probably to keep screaming the praises of Never Bend and to try to sell his Candy Spots ticket.

As post time grew nearer, tension mounted. But Montague also had to leave — to go cover the UNC-Virginia baseball game — so he grabbed a transistor and took off.

He came back two hours later not knowing any more about horses but nine dollars richer because of it.

Who did I pick? I had sneakily chosen early and craftily picked Royal Tower. Oh, did I cry about that. I was hoping he'd be scratched, but no such luck. The horse was a 50 to 1 shot, and, after the race, I could have shot him 51 times. He finished ninth in the nine-horse race. The stupid nag probably would have finished ninth in an eight-horse race. Even Investor beat him. And Putzel laughed.

UNC Fans Will Get ACC Treat

ALONG WITH THE marriages of governors, the race rumblings in Alabama, and the wars in the Carribbean, headlines this week will also go to three athletic events which wind up their respective seasons in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The ACC Championships Track and Field Meet starts here Saturday with a cast of thousands. Maryland brings its perrenial powerhouse and should win easily. The battle will be for second place.

The opinion here is that UNC will be the team to place behind Maryland this weekend. Duke will show.

Beginning Thursday, the ACC Championships Tennis Tournament will feature South Carolina and Wake Forest seeing who can score the least.

George Sokol is back to defend the singles crown he won last year as a sophomore; Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison are back to defend the doubles crown they won last year as sophomores; and Keith Stoneman, Charlie Shaffer and newcomer O. H. Parrish are waiting around ready to bounce anybody. Both titles seem to be up for grabs.

Meanwhile, back at Hot Springs, Va., the conference golfers will be trying to catch Ken Folkes and Jay Seigel of Wake Forest in that tournament. Folkes and John Abernathy of Duke are defending title holders. UNC's challenge should come from Abe Andes, Skip Tucker and Tommy Arnold. Wake, though, is the team to beat.

PEANUTS

Tennis Team Knox (8-1) Presbyterian

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina completed tennis preparations for this week's ACC tournament by defeating a strong Presbyterian College team, 8-1, here yesterday.

The Presbyterians from Clinton, S. C., who entered the contest with a 17-2 mark, were fired up and had hopes of pulling an upset. But overwhelming Tar Heel power in the singles prevented such a feat from happening.

Carolina jumped to a quick 3-0 lead as Keith Stoneman, O. H. Parrish and Bitsy Harrison triumphed over Presbyterian's number six, number five and number four netters respectively. Stoneman and Parrish smashed Harold Hope and Bill Tyson by identical 6-1, 6-1 scores, while Harrison beat A. Letzring, 6-4, 6-1.

When Dodge Frederick edged UNC's Charlie Shaffer 7-5, 6-4 on No. 3, Presbyterian chances were still alive.

But George Sokol assured a Tar Heel win by turning back Tony Wilson's determined effort on No. 1, 6-3, 8-6.

Ted Hoehn concluded singles action as he finally subdued Bob Harris in a two-hour battle, 8-6, 4-6, 6-4.

Presbyterian Coach Gordon Warden, though naturally disappointed, was in high praise of the Tar Heel netters. "Besides Miami, UNC is the best team we've played," said Warden. (Note: Miami defeated Presbyterian 8-1 earlier this year.)

"We don't have Carolina's dept," continued Warden. "But I think, with a break or two, two of the first four singles could have gone either way." He was referring to Sokol's and Hoehn's close wins.

"But I'm glad it's over. I've seen enough of Carolina for one year," Warden concluded.

Bill Haywood Fires Against Deacons

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Bill Haywood gets his first start in more than two weeks this afternoon when Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels host the toast of the ACC—Wake Forest's league-leading Deacons.

In his last start, Haywood, a 25-year-old ex-Marine, lost to Clemson, 8-3, on April 20. Since then the flame-throwing righthander has turned in several brilliant relief performances, against Maryland, Virginia and N. C. State. His record is even at 4-4.

The Deacons have indeed been the demons of the diamond so far this season. Led by homer king Bill Scripture, the Deacs are rolling along at 8-2 in the ACC. In an earlier meeting at Winston-Salem, Wake trimmed UNC, 13-1.

Going into last night's game with N. C. State, the Tar Heels were 5-5 in the conference and 14-9 overall. After today UNC has only two more ACC games — meetings with South Carolina and Clemson in Emerson Stadium this week-end.

EXTRA INNINGS—Merle Kruer is still bothered by a jammed forefinger on his right hand. Bernie Isgett and Ken Boykin have been handling the catching chores in his absence, and both have looked good with the stick . . . Jim Speight's parents were on hand to cheer as the blond shortstop smacked a triple and a home run against Virginia on Saturday . . . Spence Willard has started the most games — seven—for the Heels this year. Larry Jenkins is second with six, followed by Bill Haywood (4) and Bill Dannemann (3) . . . Coach Rabb's forces finish up their season a week from today, against Virginia Tech at Blacksburg, Va. . . . For the second time this season the Tar Heels played errorless ball.

Tug Is High On U.S. Team

SAO PAULO, Brazil (UPI)—The Pan-American games showed that these things will happen in next year's Olympic games in Tokyo:

—The United States Olympic team will be America's "strongest ever." In fact, "a lot stronger" than the U. S. squad that finished second to Russia in the overall team competition in the 1960 Olympics in Rome.

—Russia's days of dominating the sport of gymnastics, which has been the clue to Soviet overall team victory in the last two Olympics, "are over."

—South American athletes have improved tremendously and "will be heard from" in the Olympics.

Stickmen Rip Blue Devils

DURHAM—North Carolina closed out its 1963 lacrosse season here yesterday with an 11-2 pounding of Duke as Bud Adams led the way with four goals and two assists.

Tall Jeff Parker scored three times and contributed three assists as UNC rolled to a 4-1 halftime lead and then broke it open with five goals in the third quarter.

Dorm Rent Hikes To Be Protested

By VANCE BARRON

An organized demonstration against increased dorm rents and 3-man rooms is being planned for Thursday night by the University and Student Parties.

Don Curtis, coordinator of the rally for the two parties, said yesterday that the rally would be "planned and orderly."

Curtis said that the rally will protest the principle of building new dormitories on a 100% self-liquidating policy. "This would raise dorm rents $20 to $25 to even $30," he commented.

The rally will also protest 3-man dorm rooms, said Curtis who explained that 3-man rooms are "disadvantageous to conscientious academic pursuits."

The demonstration is scheduled to begin at 9 p.m. on the road between Ehringhaus and Craige Dormitories. It will then proceed in an "orderly fashion" past Avery, Parker and Teague, by Winston, Alexander and Joyner and up to the Upper and Lower Quards, according to Curtis.

From there the demonstration is expected to proceed past the women's dorms and stop at the corner of Franklin and Raleigh Streets. "There will be speeches by students," said Curtis, "and instructions will be given on how students can make their protest more effective."

Call for Telegrams

The students will be asked to write or phone home and ask their parents to wire their state representative or senator, protesting the increase in dorm rents.

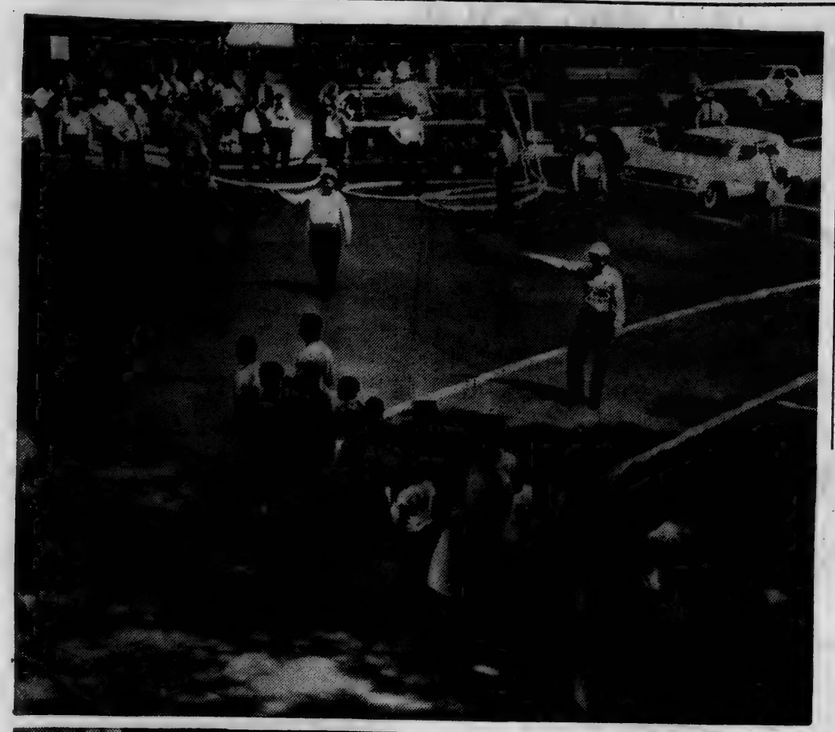
"Public opinion telegrams can be sent at a reduced rate," Curtis continued. "It will cost only about $2.50 at the most to call home and send a telegram. If it is effective, it could save $17.50 or more on room rent next year."

Curtis said that the reason the rally is being held at this particular time is because the bill affecting dorm rents will come before the General Assembly before the end of the week.

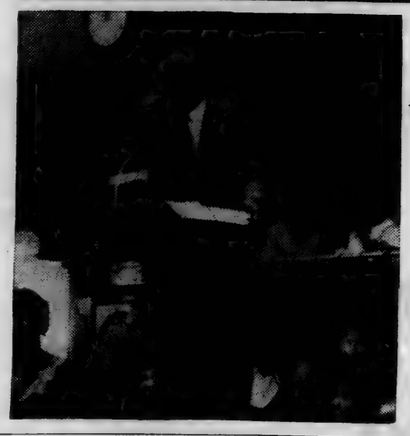
"The University wants to build a new 900-man dorm, but the state General Assembly seems to think the state doesn't have the money," he commented.

"If the money is not appropriated, the University will have to build the dorm on a self-liquidating basis, which will mean a dorm rent increase of $20 a year from now to infinity. We are afraid that it will set a precedent."

"To be effective, this rally must be an orderly display of student opinion," Curtis continued. "Any ungentlemanly-like display could destroy the effect and harm our efforts."



Curtis said that he planned to notify the state papers and television stations of the plans for the rally to bring the issue to the attention of the state.



Lawler in Favor

"We had a meeting yesterday to

Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. (left) tells over 1000 students assembled in the 16th Street Baptist Church that "a new sense of dignity and destiny shall be derived here from this movement." Before the volunteer picketers were sent out on the street, they were given instructions on the use of non-violent tactics and "brotherhood."

Upon leaving the church, the students singing "We Shall Overcome" (above), encountered fire trucks and police pointing to paddy wagons and school buses a half-block away, where they were arrested and taken to jail.

Spectators (right) stand behind police lines and watch the demonstrators march from the church. Some sang along. Many just watched.

2 Professors Winners Of Guggenheims

Two members of the English Department, Associate Professor O. B. Hardison and Associate Professor James B. Meriwether, have received fellowships from the Guggenheim Foundation for 1963-64.

The John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation annually awards a number of fellowships to unusually productive scholars and artists in order to assist their research and artistic creation.

Professor Hardison has been teaching at UNC since 1957. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin and taught at the University of Tennessee and at Princeton University before coming to Chapel Hill. His special field is the literature of the Renaissance and general literary criticism.

Besides publishing a number of articles on Shakespeare, Milton, Robert Lowell, and modern criticism, Professor Hardison had edited an anthology of Modern Continental Criticism. Last winter the UNC Press published his book "The Enduring Monument," a scholarly study of Renaissance literary criticism.

A second anthology, "Renaissance Literary Criticism," will be published by Appleton-Century-Crofts during this month.

Professor Hardison is also active as a poet. He frequently participates in programs of poetry readings, and a number of his poems have appeared in magazines and poetry collections.

He was a Fulbright Fellow in 1953-54, when he studied for a year in Italy. During the year of his Guggenheim fellowship he will work on a book-length study of the origins of medieval drama.

Professor James B. Meriwether, a native of Columbia, S. C., holds an M.A. and the Ph.D. from Princeton University. He has been teaching courses in modern American and British literature at UNC since 1959.

Although Professor Meriwether has written many articles on a variety of contemporary novelists, such as Faulkner, Cozzens, and Joyce Cary, his main scholarly interest is in William Faulkner.

His first book, "The Literary

Mangum Captures Top Dorm Awards For Scholarship

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Mangum dormitory copped scholaroship honors for the fall semester by placing first in two categories. Mangum had the highest freshman average and the highest over-all average for men's dorms.

The dormitory grades were released yesterday by Dean of Men William Long. He said they did not include fraternity men who live in dorms.

Not only did Mangum have the highest freshman average but they had the highest percentage of freshmen making a "C" average.

Mangum has 20 non-fraternity freshmen who compiled a 2.955 averege. Eighty-five percent of the Mangum freshmen made a "C" average, 13 percent better than second place Manly. Manly's freshmen were second in grade point average with 2.465.

Lewis dormitory was last in freshman standings. Their freshmen had a 1.698 average. Alexander was last in the percentage of freshmen making a "C" average with 38.5 percent.

Of a total of 990 non-fraternity freshmen, exactly 50 percent made a "C" average. The overall average for the class for 1.956.

In overall dormitory averages, Manly again placed second to Mangum. Mangum compiled a 2.409 overall average. Manly's average was 2.381.

Third place went to BVP with 2.365. Parker took fourth with 2.316 and Avery placed fifth with 2.272.

Only three dormitories had below a "C" average. They were Grimes 1.983, Craige 1.981 and Ehringhaus 1.941.

BVP had the highest upperclassmen average with 2.365. Manly was again second with 2.359 and Old East third, 2.316.

There were 1,866 non-fraternity upperclassmen living in dormitories last semester. Their average was 2.205 and 64.7 percent of them made a "C" average.

The upperclassmen and freshmen total is 2,856 students, 59.6 percent of which made a "C" average. The overall dormitory average was 2.118. Long stated again that these averages were for non-affiliated men only.

Fraternity grades were released last week. Fraternity freshmen had 47 percent making "C" average compared to 30 percent of the dormitory freshmen.

Long said he had not had time to review the information thoroughly, but "it is obvious that fraternity pledges are not doing as well as the overall freshman class," Long said.

Long stated he could not say that fraternities are hurting pledges, "but it is impossible to say that they are helping them as far as their grades are concerned," he added.

Barefoot Seniors Open 3-Day 'Week'

Barefoot Day, a party at the Patio and free movies for all seniors highlight today's activities as the three-day Senior Week moves into its second stage.

Official permission has been granted for seniors to attend classes with naked feet, Senior Week committee chairman Judy O'Grady reported yesterday.

Reduced rates on beer will be available from 4-11 p.m. at the Patio.

The Carolina and Varsity theatres are offering free movies for seniors after 6 p.m. Half-price rates will also be available at the All-Star Bowling Lanes and Mike Rubish's Golf Center.

On Thursday all seniors will be allowed free class cuts. The class will assemble in Memorial Hall at 2 p.m. to elect Mr. and Mrs. Alumnus and the permanent class officers.

Graduation procedures will also be explained and "free beer" passes for the picnic that afternoon will be distributed.

At 3 p.m. the seniors will journey to Hogan's Lake for the annual senior picnic.

There will be free beer and pretzels, softball and swimming for those attending.

That night the final event of Senior Week will take place.

Lee Ferrell and The Trojans will play at a party to be held at the Patio. Senior girls will be given late permission until 12 p.m. for the occasion.

Deane Talks On The U.N. Tonight At 8

Phillip Deane, director of the United Nations Information Center, will speak tonight at 8 in Carroll Hall on "The UN—Who Needs It?" His speech is sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

Deane was appointed director of the United Nations Information Center in Washington in August 1961. Prior to that time he was a foreign correspondent covering Washington and the U.N. for the London Observer.

Phillip Deane is the pen name of Gerassimos Theodoros Christodoulo Svoronos-Gigantes. He is a Greek national. He studied in Paris at the Lycee Janson de Sailly and at Athens College, Athens, Greece.

When the Germans invaded Greece in 1941, Deane escaped to Egypt and reached England where he entered the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth. He was named the year's best cadet and thereafter served in the war as a sublieutenant in the Royal Navy.

After the war he returned to Greece and served as the Director of Information for the Greek Ministry of Coordination. In 1948 he joined the London Observer.

He went to Korea as their correspondent in 1950. After 13 days he was taken prisoner by the North Koreans and was held for 33 months.

After his release from Korea, Deane served as Observer correspondent in French North Africa for several months and from December 1953 to April 1956 in India and South Asia.

World News In Brief

U. S. Dependents In Haiti Urged To Evacuate Country

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States Tuesday ordered the evacuation of all dependents of American government personnel in Haiti and urged private American citizens to leave too.

An airlift of chartered commercial planes was scheduled to begin ferrying the dependents Wednesday morning from Port-au-Prince, the Haitian capital, to Miami.

The State Department said the evacuation was prompted by the "continued deterioration of the situation in Haiti and the difficulty of insuring the lives and safety of U.S. citizens."

About 220 dependents of U.S. personnel were to be evacuated. There are an estimated 1,300 private American citizens in Haiti. How many of these would want to leave, the State Department said, could not be determined immediately.

There are about 160 U.S. government personnel in Haiti. They are attached to the U.S. Embassy, to a military assistance advisory group, an Air Force mission and a naval training mission. The naval group has been ordered to leave by the Haitian government. It has halted its operations but its 30 members have not yet departed.

Bosch pledged he would not resort to force against Haiti unless that country further abused Dominican rights. But he kept the country on a war footing.

In New York the United Nations Security Council was summoned to meet Wednesday afternoon to consider Haiti's complaints of Dominican agression. The Haitian position was said to have strong backing of the powerful U.N. African bloc.

Princeton Riots Involve 1,200

PRINCETON, N. J. (UPI) — Princeton University President Robert F. Goheen said Tuesday that 1,200 students who rioted through the town and through the night were guilty of nothing less than inexcusable "hooliganism."

He warned of "severe disciplinary action" against all who are apprehended, including the 14 students who landed in jail.

Goheen used strong language at a news conference 15 hours after a howling, spring-struck mob of students left a path of destruction that stretched from the campus to the mansion of Gov. Richard J. Hughes, a quarter of a mile away.

Damage ran in the thousands of dollars in the wild, explosive melee, in which the students blocked and stoned a passenger train, staged a panty raid, bombarded Hughes' mansion with cherry bombs, and rolled a one-ton compressor machine downhill into Princeton traffic.

Anderson Cut Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara personally recommended that Adm. George W. Anderson be dropped as chief of naval operations, but his reasons were still a mystery Tuesday.

McNamara was in Honolulu for a conference on Viet Nam Monday when the White House announced that President Kennedy was not reappointing Anderson. Gen. Curtis E. Lemay was named to a second term as Air Force chief of staff, but for only one year instead of the usual two.

McNamara returned to Washington Tuesday as reporters questioned his chief spokesman, Arthur Sylvester, on the surprise shakeup in the military high command that jolted the Pentagon and Congress alike.

War Threats Eased

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI)—Dominican President Juan Bosch eased his war threats against neighboring Haiti Tuesday as 20,000 government workers walked out in a general strike against the Dominican government.

Faculty OK's New Division Of Fine Arts

UNC General Faculty has approved the establishment of a new Fine Arts Division to be added to the already fixed divisions in the University's College of Arts and Sciences: humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences.

The proposal for a new undergraduate degree, the bachelor of fine arts degree, is now subject to the approval of the Board of Trustees of the University and the Board of Higher Education.

The new division affects selected departments of the University: art, dramatic art, music, and radio, television and motion pictures (RTVMP). Students planning to make their careers in the performing arts are enrolled in these departments. Such talented students will benefit from the new division.

Students working toward the proposed B.F.A. degree will be enabled to take more courses in their major field of interest while they are at the freshman-sophomore level in the General College. At the junior-senior level, these students could take up to more than half of their courses in their field of major interest.

The new division will in no way affect curricula of other divisions of the University. The proposed degree would appeal only to those students wanting professional orientation within the total complex of the University.

Keynote Speaker Called Away

Conference On SE Asia Almost Too Up-To-Date

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of reports from UNC delegates to the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference on Southeast Asia.

By STU EIZENSTAT, BRICK OETTINGER

The Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference (NAFAC) on Southeast Asia, held from April 24 through April 27 was certainly a timely Conference; it was so timely, in fact, that the man who was to be our keynote speaker, Averill Harriman, was called away at the last moment to Moscow to discuss the Laos Crisis, a sore spot in our Southeast Asian affairs.

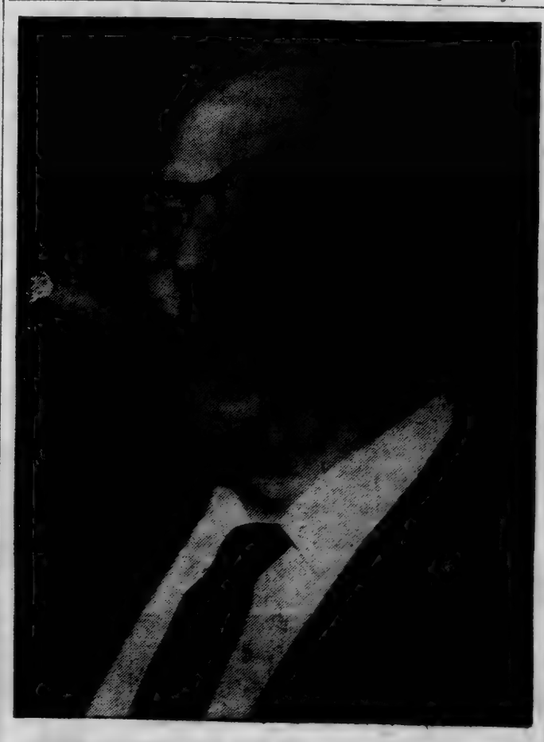
The students from almost sixty colleges and universities, ranging from the University of California to the University of North Carolina, were divided into eight roundtable discussion groups, each studying a particular area in Southeast Asia. The two roundtables to which the University of North Carolino delegates were assigned were the Nationalist China, Philippines and Southeast Asia Roundtable, and the Burma, Thailand, Malaya Federation, and Singapore Roundtable.

It was the job of each roundtable, in their six hours together each day, to study the problems of the countries included in their roundtable, and to make specific resolutions on how these problems might be altered or alleviated; we thus were, we felt, foreign policy makers. This would be good practice, too, for most of the delegates were going to make foreign service a career.

Each evening, the whole group was addressed by distinguished citizens and members of the State Department, at what were called "Plenary Sessions." After the address, there was a brief question and answer period preceding a reception. It was at the reception that the delegates could really match their wits with the distinguished guests.

The keynote address was given at the First Plenary Session by U. Alexis Johnson, Deputy Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs. Mr. Johnson was slick, lucid, tactful, and careful of every word he said.

Many of the delegates felt that the tone of Johnson's speech to us was too "party-line"—the United States interested in freeing the starving masses, and the bad old U.S.S.R., interested in subjugating them. This student audience would have none of it and actually laughed at some of Mr. Johnson's more obvious "propaganda."



Johnson told us that Southeast Asia was merely a geographic expression and little else. Within each nation in this area, intense local patriotism had made for intense internal strain.

The tradition of western colonization has given the Communists an opportunity effectively to wave the banner of anti-colonization. Secretary Johnson stated that since SEATO's inception, there had been no open military action by the Communists. It seemed to many of the delegates that he overstated SEATO's present importance.

"United States interests in Viet Nam," said Johnson, "were to gain its full freedom and help them achieve their material well-being, not to dictate their form of government or ally them to any power block; thus, our sole concern here was to let them freely make their choice."

He cautioned us against hoping for a quick, spectacular victory there, but stated that since the inception of the "strategic hamlet program," whereby the people are tied closely to their government and the Viet Cong is isolated from supplies, there is reason for some optimism.

(Tomorrow: Second and Third Plenary Sessions.)

HARRY GOLDEN, editor of the Carolina Israelite and one of the last spokesmen for personal journalism, was the keynote speaker at the 9th annual UNC Press Club banquet Monday night. Pleading for the cause of integration Golden quipped, "the question should not be 'Would you want your sister to marry a Negro,' but 'Would you want your sister to marry Ross Barnett.'"

Young Democrats To Meet Tonight

The UNC chapter of the Young Democrats Club will elect its new officers at a Gerrard Hall meeting Wednesday night at 7.

Candidates for president unofficially include Don Curtis, a senior and Lane Brown, a law student.

Brown has announced his candidacy officially. Curtis said yesterday, "At this time, I am considering the possibilities of seeking this office; however, I have yet to reach a final decision."

Outgoing president is George Kornegay.

Other officers to be elected include two vice-presidents, a secretary, treasurer and seven executive committee members.

Upon Reflection

A campaign is currently underway to save the financially faltering Reflections Magazine, and keep it from passing from the Chapel Hill scene.

As we have previously stated, we feel Reflections is well worth saving. It is one of the few quality literary magazines coming out of the South, and the fact that it comes from Chapel Hill can only enhance the intellectual reputation of the community and the University.

Aside from that, the magazine provides another outlet for talented young writers here at Carolina, and such outlets are hard to come by.

The organization created to help save Reflections is called Reflections Fund. It wants no control over the editorial policies of the magazine, only token control of the financial policies to insure that contributors get their money's worth.

Donations to the fund can be made through Jim Wallace at the Continental Travel Agency on Franklin Street.

Chapel Hill needs this kind of magazine and we hope the students and townspeople will strongly support it.

Duke & Tradition

Generally speaking, we are always slightly pained to see tradition toppled. Usually there ensues a period of trying adjustment to the seeds of a new tradition, and one is not always sure the change will prove to be wise.

But over at Duke, 125 years of tradition is in the process of crumbling and we feel not pain but relief.

Duke has at last begun to practice what she has supposedly been preaching all these years—humanity, tolerance, and respect for the rights, dignity and potential of all individuals.

Five Negro students have been accepted into Duke's undergraduate school for the fall semester, thus completing, at least tokenly, the process of desegregation which began two years ago with the admission of Negro students to the graduate and professional schools.

For long now, Duke's segregated status has been a serious blot upon its rightfully strong over-all reputation.

What has made the situation worse is Duke's staunch affiliation with the Methodist Church, wose sole purpose in existing, supposedly, is to spread the teachings of Christ by word and act.

In short, as in so many other similar cases, Duke's segregation has been hypocrisy of a very serious order.

Thus we are pleased to see this devilish compromise coming to an end. We are pleased to see that Duke's blot is being erased, as we are pleased that the blot upon our own reputation also is being erased.

Now what remains is for both of us to erase it completely, and we invite Duke to compete with us in doing this speedily and effectively.

Color of skin has no place as a criteria of anything at institutions such as we and Duke purport to be.

Marriage By Sample

The great national pondering over whether or not Gov. Rockefeller's political fortunes have been adversely affected by his recent "surprise" wedding is, it now seems, rather superfluous.

According to our agents, who are legion and usually possessed of much inside-dope, the New York governor had a probability sample run on the likely effects of his getting re-married.

The sample showed that any adverse effects would fade away within five months, meaning the Governor could continue his apparent plans to run for President next year without losing any sleep over the matter.

But what interested us in this whole affair was imagining how the Governor proposed.

Can't you just imagine him, on bended knee, saying to his bride-to-be: "Darling, on the basis of a probability sample I've had taken, I want you to be my First Lady . . ."

Actually, we wish the Governor and his new missus well and join with those who hope that the American electorate will decide whether the Governor is presidential timber or not on some other basis than his matrimonial misadventures.

Thanks Wally

In expressing our appreciation to Walter Dellinger for his astute and timely inquiry regarding the dreadful hair situation in Chapel Hill, we have found to our surprise that this shocking trend is nation-wide. It is indeed commendable that Mr. Dellinger has proved to be so all-inclusive a critic of the time.

We would like to bring to Mr. Dellinger's attention an article by Cynthia Lowry, "Hair Stylist Scorns 'Teasing' ", found in the Sunday edition of the Raleigh News and Observer:

"Alder's candidate for the television star with the most interesting hair is Faye Emerson: 'You can do anything with it and it looks well.'

"His most nerve-wracking job was on a famous Broadway musical comedy star.

"She has mistreated her hair dreadfully with dye jobs, and the morning of a show she woke up and found all the hair on one side of her head had broken off—right there on the pillow."

"Adler patched her up with false hair pasted on and swirled the long hair from the other side of her head over the disaster area—and she received fan mail on her new hairdo."

In behalf of all the Carolina Coeds, we would like to express our deepest gratitude for Mr. Dellinger's saving our heads from the dreadful fate of having our hair desert to the pillow.

Sincerely,
"On Guard" McAdoo
"Scared to Death" Parrott

Sir Walter

To the Editors:

The latest incident at the S&W Cafeteria and Sir Walter Hotel is the most revolting news I have heard in a long time. All my life I have heard that North Carolina led the South in liberal attitudes, and so, it is rather disillusioning to find that this state is no further along the road to true Americanism than several of the deep South's states.

What ever happened to our spirited claims of democratic freedoms which to date only Great Britain has ever approached in integrity. How can we, as Americans, hope to persuade the world that democracy is a good and just way of life if we continue to prove that there is justice only for "whites" under democracy.

There still exists among many of our citizens a "all-men-are-equal, but - I'm-more-equal-than-you" attitude. We fought World War I "to make the world safe for democracy:" We fought World War II "to end all wars:" must we fight World War III because we cannot tolerate people who do not look the same as us? I am a citizen of Raleigh, North Carolina, and of America. I am proud of my city, my state, and my country and sincerely believe in our constitution and freedoms. If Americans show that they don't believe in this, how can we expect others to believe it.

If establishments refuse to serve Negroes, why should they serve Indians, Japanese, or any race other than "white." If these business' excuse for their actions is that they wish to avoid the patronage of what they would term "trouble-makers and common-laborers," let me suggest that they post a notice at the entrance of their dining rooms to the effect that certain standards of dress and behavior will be expected of the patrons under penalty of expulsion.

If this article's readers have other suggestions which might aid our state in solving the race problem, I appeal to you to write a letter or a post card with your ideas in care of this paper. America has become great because citizens have taken time to "do it themselves." Don't let others do this: do it yourself!

Neely Knocks Phelps As Exploiter Of Negro

By CHUCK NEELY

Although the motives of Mr. Armistead Maupin, Jr., in writing his column of Thursday, April 25, are debatable, there can be no debate on the facts he put forth, or on the conclusions he reached.

Although we are in almost total disagreement with Mr. Maupin's rather unenlightened racial views, still it must be said that in his last column, he put forth a lucid, logical argument against the irresponsibility of certain segments of the Negro leadership.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for the illogical attack on Mr. Maupin by Larry Phelps, chairman of the Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club.

Mr. Phelps has assailed Mr. Maupin for committing a "slanderous attack upon American Negroes.

He states with the usual Marxist intermingling of truths, half-truths, and outright lies, not only that the Negro has a "civic consciousness," but that Mr. Maupin implied that the Negro lacks a "civic consciousness." Mr. Maupin did not say this. Although he did state that many Negro leaders advocate policies inimical to Negro "civic consciousness," he did not by any means make a full scale condemnation of the Negro race.

Mr. Phelps goes through the "history" of our country, distorting many events, and completely fabricating others. He states that the first American soldier killed in the Revolutionary War was a Negro. Correction: A Negro was killed along with ten other Bostonians in the Boston Massacre of 1770, when a mob of rioters attacked a detachment of British soldiers.

The Negro could hardly be called a soldier and the quelling of a mob six years before war commenced could scarcely be termed a bona fide engagement of the War for Independence.

Mr. Phelps further states that "millions" of Negroes fled their Southern plantations and formed the backbone of the Northern Armies. If Mr. Phelps would study his history a trifle more closely, he would find that rare indeed was the slave who left his plantation before the end of the Civil War. It was their loyalty to their masters, most of whom were far from being Simon Legree's, which enabled the South to carry on the war for four long, bloody years.

"The closest thing to a pure democracy" that Mr. Phelps alludes to, formed by "the Negro people . . . with the Southern white sharecroppers" during Reconstruction, is no more than a figment of Mr. Phelps' lurid imagination. Anyone with a clear-minded view of history realizes that Reconstruction was nothing more nor less than a tyranny of a few white Southern renegades and a number of ex-slaves, supported by the Freedman's Bureaus and the might of the Northern military.

Mr. Phelps states that Negroes did not scab during the Depression of the 1930's. Has it ever occurred to him that most industries were far too complex to be operated by the basically unskilled Negro laborer so that there were really few opportunities to act as strike breakers?

Finally, Mr. Phelps offers as a justification for the Negro crime rate, the rebellion of an oppressed people. Here he would almost seem to have a valid point until one remembers that the Germans, Poles, Irish and Italians were exploited and oppressed when they first came to this country. And yet, by dint of hard work and single-minded devotion to the task of improving their lot, these people have advanced to such a point that only a few generations after their immigration, one of their number has become President of the United States. If they could accomplish this remarkable feat, so also can the Negro. But to succeed, one must have determination and a will to succeed in spite of all obstacles.

Mr. Phelps concludes his argument, "To be blunt about it: the Negro should direct his anger at American capitalism, that rotten economic system which feeds on racism, exploitation, militarism, unemployment and other forms of human misery."

At last the truth outs! Mr. Phelps has placed himself in the ranks of those who would use the Negro for their own ends. It is these people who are the real exploiters of the Negro. Powell would use the Negro to advance his political aims. Phelps would use the Negro to bring about the overthrow of the United States. By allowing Marxist polemics to creep into his article, Phelps has irretreviably damned himself as a biased, self-seeking, traitor to the ideals which made this country great.

N. Y. Liberals: Democratic Kingmakers?

By CLYDE WILSON

In this age of conformity it should be comforting to know that in the last Presidential election 615,363 Americans who exercised their sovereign franchise did not vote for either Kennedy or Nixon. If less than one fourth of these people had voted for Nixon he would have exceeded Kennedy in the popular vote.

Of the non-conformists, 214,000 voted for a States-Right ticket under the name of Governor Faubus (who supported Kennedy). Another 116,000 voted for the slate of unpledged electors which carried the state of Mississippi.

Then 46,000 cantankerous diehards in 11 states voted for a Prohibition ticket headed by a Mr. Decker of California. Enthusiasts of the class struggle to the numbers of 46,000 supported the Socialist Labor Party in 15 states. Another 39,000 voted for the Socialist Workers Party in 11 states. Most socialist votes were recorded in New York, New Jersey and Illinois.

Some 1,064 rugged individualists in Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, South Carolina and Texas took the effort to make a write-in vote for the candidate of their choice. At least 10 other candidates for the supreme honor of their country got the allegiance of voters ranging in number from 19,000 to 31.

These included the Conservative Party, The Industrial Government Party, the Independent American Party, The Tax-Cut Party of Michigan and the Independent Afro-American Party of Alabama.

Surprisingly, 113,000 Americans who voted did not vote for anyone for President, according to statistics in the "World Almanac." They turned in ballots which were blank or improperly marked.

Kennedy's margin over Nixon was about 118,000. Curiously enough, all of the 113,000 "blank and void" ballots were recorded in the States of New York and Massachusetts.

Most Americans will be amazed to learn that the Democratic ticket of Kennedy—Johnson received almost 300,000 fewer votes than the Republican ticket of Nixon-Lodge!

The catch? Kennedy-Johnson got 406,000 votes as the nominees of a leftward organization known as the Liberal Party of New York. It was these votes which gave Kennedy his plurality in the popular vote of the country and carried the state of New York for him. If Nixon had received the electoral votes of New York instead of Kennedy, Nixon would have been elected.

Liberal party votes in New York have carried that state for the Democratic nominee every time the Democratic nominee has won the state in recent years.

It could be that those 400,000 Liberals in New York have more sayso about the platforms and candidates of the Democratic Party than millions of other voters less strategically placed.

Class Togs

Student attire, or lack of it, came under examination of the Student Council at Tulane University recently. One of the Council representatives from the Law School alleged that New Orleans' semi-tropic geographic location notwithstanding, classroom atmosphere is influenced by the attire of those attending. The Council finally passed a motion recommending to the faculty that it require students to wear "shoes, socks and long pants" to class.

Three Dorm Men Tried By Court

Two cases involving three dorm residents were tried by the IDC Court Monday night.

Two dorm residents pled guilty to participating in a water fight, using a fire extinguisher and creating a disturbance. The Court found the defendants guilty and issued a COURT REPRIMAND and DORMITORY PROBATION to each. The probations are in effect until February 1, 1964.

In another case a student pleaded guilty to breaking a light fixture and creating a disturbance in a dormitory. The defendant was given a COURT REPRIMAND.

W. C. Students To Be Invited To '64 Jubilee

Plans are now underway for UNC women's dormitories to invite girls from Women's College and Greensboro College to Chapel Hill for next year's Graham Memorial Jubilee Weekend, the Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday.

Similar plans were undertaken this year, but did not succeed because short notice was given, according to student body president Mike Lawler. He said that about a week before this year's Jubilee weekend, letters were written to the W.C. student body officers. "Their reply stated that plans could not be arranged on such short notice," Lawler said.

Coeds May Be Named Men's Council Aides

The Men's Council may have a coed element next year, chairman Whitney Durand said yesterday. Following an experiment tried last summer, the Council is accepting applications from both men and women for the positions of clerks on the staff.

Two women students kept the records last summer, Durand said, and the results were so impressive that the practice may be followed both for this summer and next year.

Applications will be accepted from any undergraduate who can transcribe verbal testimony at a rapid pace.

Shorthand experience will be desirable but not required.

Interviews for the two positions on both the Summer and Fall Councils will be held today-Friday, 4-6 p.m. in the Council Room, second floor GM.

Over 200 Grad Grants Offered

More than 200 graduate fellowships offered by foreign governments, private donors and universities are available to qualified American graduate students for the 1964-65 academic year. The grants, for study or research in a dozen or more foreign countries, are administered by the Institute of International Education.

The scholarships, which generally cover tuition and full or partial maintenance, are available for study in Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Israel, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland and Yugoslavia. U. S. government travel-only grants are available to supplement the awards offered by Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Israel, Italy and the Netherlands. Forty special English language teaching assistantships are available in French secondary schools and teacher-training institutes.

General eligibility requirements include U. S. citizenship at the time of application, a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the time of departure, ability to read, write and speak the language of the host country commensurate with the study project, and good health. The age limit is generally thirty-five years, but for certain grants, a lower age limit is specified. Although married persons are eligible for most of the fellowships, the stipends are adequate to support only the grantee.

Students now enrolled at a college or university should consult the campus Fulbright Program Adviser for further information and application forms. At-large applicants may secure additional information and forms from the counseling division of the Institute of International Education, 800 Second Avenue, New York 17, New York, or from the IIE regional offices (see letterhead).

All requests for application forms must be postmarked by October 15, 1963. At-large candidates must submit their completed applications to IIE by November 1, 1963. Enrolled students must submit applications to their campus Fulbright Advisers by their respective campus closing date.

The Institute of International Education is the largest, private, non-profit agency in the field of international educational exchange. IIE administers exchange programs between the U. S. and more than 100 other countries.

Career of William Faulkner" was published by the Princeton Press in 1961. A second critical study on the Chronical Novels of Faulkner will be published next year, while an anthology of Faulkner criticism which Mr. Meriwether is editing is scheduled to appear later this year.

Besides such critical studies of the novelist, Mr. Meriwether has undertaken several textual studies of the editions of Faulkner's works. He has been editorial consultant to Random House, the publishers of Faulkner's last novels. At present he is engaged in writing a "Textual Bibliography of the Writings of William Faulkner," for whose completion the Guggenheim Foundation has awarded him a fellowship.

plan the demonstration. Both political parties are cooperating fully.

"We hope this constructive student effort will express our concern over the continued rise of dormitory rents over the past 5 years. It is possible that if the individual is made to assume this continual rising cost of education, we will deprive some of our younger citizens of an education.

"Besides the question of the effect of rising costs on the individual is the question of whether, in the long run, that 100% self-liquidation is the most economical method.

"In a sense this demonstration is also our support for President Friday's efforts against this policy."

Chairmen Announced

The appointments of nine more student government committe chairmen were announced yesterday by student body president Mike Lawler. Student Legislature will act on all 17 presidential appointments at its session this week.

Proposed committee heads for 1963-64 include: Pete Range (University Abroad); Borden Parker (Orientation Reform); Doc Fields and Jack Harrell (Editor's Roundtable); Fred Seely (Communications); Bob Jones (Co-op); Allison Webb and Bill Graham (National Merit Scholarship); Don Curtis (Campus Affairs); Jeane Yeager (Honor System Commission) and Kellis Parker (International Students Board).

John Hammett Named Monogram Club Head

The Monogram Club has announced officers for the 1963-64 school year.

They were elected at a meeting Thursday night.

Elected were John Hammett, dent; Richard Zarro, secretary; president; Bob Bennett, vice-presi-Dick Esposito, treasurer; Ronnie Jackson, sergeant-at-arms; Jim Alderman, representative to the Athletic Council; and Tommy Clark and Jim Speight, social co-chairmen.

Beach News

Just Wear Your Shirt

MYRTLE BEACH, S. C. — A place to get away from it all, a place to rest and a place to have a good time.

Myrtle Beach is this and more. It is informality personified. Old men who wouldn't be caught dead in Bermudas at home think nothing of taking the family to dinner in their shorts. As one restaurant billboard sign says, "Just wear your shirts, please."

The Traffic Is Heavy

One of the first things you learn in Myrtle is that you can walk almost as fast as you can drive. If you do drive, there is hardly a parking space to be found. From daybreak to daybreak, the processions of cars continues. Some are sightseeing, some are looking for parking space, others are looking for a motel, some are coming into town, others are going home.

The main attractions at Myrtle Beach are, of course, the ocean, the sand and the sun.

The sunbathers are out on the beach with the morning sun. By 9 a.m. the sand is a quilt of bright blankets, towels and beach umbrellas.

By mid-afternoon the beach crowd diminishes, hot sun, ceaseless wind, glaring white sands and the pounding of the high tide take their toll. The visitor decides it is wise to retire to the cool confines of the motel. Some soothing sunburn lotion for the male, a quick hairdo for the female. However, as soon as the sun goes down, the tempo quickens again.

Everyone heads for the pavilion and the amusement park. The cars are lined up for blocks, searching for the non-existent parking space. The crowds walk slowly, almost tiptoeing to avoid stepping on the person in front.

The girls wear shorts and blue sweatshirts with their names sewed on the front. Boys wear football jerseys and sweatshirts with "mate wanted" on the front.

"B-16" rings out from among the numerous bingo games. The pin-ball machines and miniature bowling alleys light up with the continuous click of dimes, nickels and mounting scores. "Bang, bang" is heard from the shooting galleries. Test your skill is the universal challenge.

To the Wee, Small Hours

On the second floor of the pavlion a rock 'n' roll combo begins to blare out a twist number. A bop number follows, and then a long, slow song is played. Then the routine is repeated.

On the midway, the bright red, green and white lights blink, the rides go round and round and the kids and grownups yell and scream.

A few people leave the festivities unexpectedly when the ever watchful police spot a flask.

At 11 p.m. your legs begin to get tired. Your stomach churns at the thought of another stick of cotton candy. At midnight the party is over. At 2 p.m. you fall into a restless sleep. At 4 p.m. you wake up to the sound of exploding cherry bombs thrown from a passing car.

At 8 a.m. the cycle starts all over again.

Carolina Derails Derelict Deacons, 11-8

UNC's Tom Wright Beats Throw To Plate

by

Fred Hobson

The best high-jumper ever developed in the South.

A worthy successor to Jim Beatty in Carolina's track tradition.

A good bet for seven-foot jumpdom.

These are only some of the superlatives being tossed around by experts to describe Carolina's new track sensation — high-jumper Tommy Clark.

What does Tommy himself think about such rave notices? Does he think he can live up to them?

To get the answer, I talked to Tommy after he'd jumped 6-6 and swept the field against Duke Saturday.

"I just hope I can keep improving," said the lithe leapster from Greensboro. "With the proper training I think I can go higher — I know I haven't gone as high as I can."

When asked about that dream (or haunt) of all jumpers, the seven-foot spectacle, Tommy (who has cleared 6-9) replied, "Sure I'd like to jump seven feet. It's too late for this year, but maybe in the future. It's hard for a jumper to tell when he's reached his peak, and how much higher he can go.

"I'm planning to work with weights this summer and next fall, and keep on practicing. I'm definitely shooting for seven feet," he emphasized with a quiet determination.

Track Chosen Over Baseball

If it weren't for a Japanese student teacher who helped him in the ninth grade, Tommy Clark might have never become a high jumper.

One day after baseball practice he was "fooling around with jumping" when the teacher came up, saw that Tommy had potential and showed him a couple of the sport's finer points. After a couple of western rolls, this would-be diamond prospect was persuaded — the budding baseball star became a track enthusiast.

At Grimsley High ("It was Greensboro Senior then," he stressed.), Tommy stuck with track. He ran the 440, anchored his mile relay team — and managed a 6-2 jump before graduation.

The next fall he landed at Carolina.

"Tommy was good when he got here," says Coach Joe Hilton. "But what impresses me is the progress he's made since. We get a lot of boys who have gone 6-2 or better in high school, but most of these boys don't develop like Tommy has. In three years he's increased his height almost eight inches. That's blossoming."

Tommy, a junior math major, says his toughest competition came at the National AAU meet in February, in which he was competing against the world's best — Valery Brumel and John Thomas.

"I jumped 6-8 but it was good for only fourth place in this meet," he said. "Brumel went 7-3½ and Thomas made it at an even seven. That was pretty good company."

'You Must Feel Life In Legs'

After college Tommy either plans to teach or go into business—and keep jumping while he works.

"I'll probably work out by myself," he said. "Jumpers usually improve more if they work individually, rather than with a club. Jumping isn't something you practice every day like running is. A jumper doesn't — or shouldn't — have to have somebody to push him in practice."

What does a jumper concentrate on as he approaches a seemingly insurmountable bar that's higher than he is?

"You concentrate on getting drive into those last three steps and pushing off as strong as you can," said the guy who ought to know. "You've got to really feel the life in your legs, and have confidence you can beat the height."

Coach Hilton added a bit to Tommy's explanation. "More than tremendous spring makes him an outstanding jumper. He has a natural jumping technique, remarkable muscle control and exceptional timing. We think he can go higher—we just don't know how much."

So both coach and athlete agree that Tommy has a future in the track world. Maybe the '64 Olympics, maybe another shot at Brumel and Thomas, maybe a berth in the 7-foot elite. Maybe. . . .

But all that's in the future, and Tommy thinks about the present now.

"I guess I'd better run and get another workout before I dress," he said. "I've got to go higher."

And as he hustled off, the raven-haired lad with the graceful gait looked like he probably would.

Wake Goes To Sleep While UNC Tallies Unearned Runs

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina scored five times in the second inning, did it again in the eighth and walked off with its third straight ACC victory, a sweet 11-8 conquest of league-leading Wake Forest.

The Tar Heels managed only six hits off two Deacon hurlers, Jerry Pardue and Lou Howard, but they made the most out of Pardue's second-inning wildness and the Deacs' eighth-inning defensive collapse.

Jim Speight led off the second with a scratch double off the glove of third baseman Bob Worrell. Pardue then walked the next four Tar Heels, forcing in two runs.

Howard was called to the rescue and pitcher Larry Jenkins, who picked up his third win against one defeat, greeted him with a sharp single down the first base line, scoring Tom Wright from third and Ken Willard from second.

Merle Kruer went from first to third on the hit, and, after Tilden flied to right, raced in with run No. 5 on a beautiful squeeze bunt by Dickie Prindle.

The eighth inning uprising was even wilder. Wright started it by drawing a base on balls off Howard. Willard followed with a grounder to Worrell which the third sacker booted for a two-base error, Wright stopping at third.

After Kruer struck out, Bill Haywood, who had relieved Jenkins in the sixth, was intentionally walked to fill the bases.

Buddy Tilden sent a hard grounder down the third base line, which Woolard made a good stop on. But the third sacker threw over catcher Wayne Martin's head on the attempted force-out on Wright at home, and before the ball had been retrieved Willard had also come across.

Pitcher Howard then tried to throw out Tilden, who was heading for second. Instead he fired the ball into centerfield, allowing courtesy runner Bill Taylor to score from third.

After Prindle had grounded out, Heyward Hull sent a routine grounder to second, but when first baseman Jim Israel let Dave Miller's throw get by him, Tilden scored from third and Hull ended up on second.

Howard, his nerves a little shaken now, uncorked a wild pitch which moved Hull to third and Speight followed with his second hit of the afternoon, a bloop single to short center which tallied Hull.

Bill Brown finally ended the inning by flying to center.

The summary for the inning: five runs, one hit and four errors.

The Deacons did some scoring of their own, especially in the sixth when they got three and in the ninth when they picked up four more.

Jenkins retired the first two men in the sixth and was coasting along with a two-hitter and a five-run lead when the Baptists broke loose with five singles and a walk. Two of the hits came off Haywood, who was called in from the bullpen.

Haywood had to be rescued himself—in the ninth inning when the Deacons reached him for four runs on four singles and a double. Spence Willard came in and retired the last two batters without difficulty.

The Tar Heels, now 7-5 in the ACC and 16-9 overall, scored their other run in the fifth on Brown's sizzling double to left.

Monday night the Tar Heels rallied for a 6-4 win over N.C. State. Haywood was brilliant in relief, striking out twelve in five and two-thirds innings.

UNC And State Tie At Rod And Gun Meet

UNC and N.C. State provided all the action in the Seventh Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet yesterday as the two schools ended in a 16-16 tie for the second year in a row.

Duke failed to enter a team in any of the events and Wake Forest competed in target rifle and trap shooting only.

Carolina and State divided the four championships at two apiece. State took first place in skish (bait casting) and archery, and UNC won target rifle and trap shooting competition.

Points were awarded on a 5-3-2-1 basis. The final scores were UNC 16, State 16, Wake Forest 4, DUKE, ZERO.

Nobody Plays Nobody Now —But Soon

All's quiet today on the UNC athletic front, but it's only a lull before the storm.

For, starting tomorrow, action picks up hot and heavy with coach Don Skakle's powerful tennis team defending its ACC Championships Tournament crown here.

The tourney will continue through Saturday and will run subsequent to the ACC Track and Field Championships also here this weekend.

Meanwhile, coach Ed Kenney's golf team will be playing N.C. State in a dual meet which will serve as a warm-up for the ACC tournament in Hot Springs, Va.

UNC's baseball team also will play this weekend, winding up ACC action with games against South Carolina and Clemson.

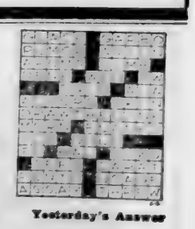
N. C. State Wins Mural Day

By ETADIN MOLADNU and LEWANEE OAHUOE

DURHAM—North Carolina State successfully defended its Big Four Mural Day championship here yesterday with a climactic win in bowling which gave the Wolfpack a 1½ point decision over UNC.

State's final victory gave it 31 points to Carolina's 29½. The Wolfpack, which won four first places (to UNC's three), went into the final event trailing Carolina by one-half point. But State took the bowling title and the five points that went with it to clinch its second consecutive title.

Duke, whose lone first place came in the golfing event, scored 23 points to Wake Forest's 15½. The Deacons took a first in volleyball.



N.C. State won the handball, softball and horseshoes competition in addition to its bowling win. Carolina firsts came in badminton (Jack Rugheimer, manager), tennis (Sam Applegate, manager) and table tennis (Larry Edwards, manager).

Nuclear Tests To Be Opened, Kennedy Says

JFK Pessimistic Over Chances For Treaty

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An openly pessimistic President Kennedy said Wednesday he believes the United States and Russia will renew nuclear experiments if a test ban treaty is not signed in Geneva. He said this would be a "great disaster."

The President told his news conference he was "not hopeful at all" about the prospects of a test ban agreement. He said he believes that if a treaty is not signed this year, there may never be one.

Both nuclear powers got down to renewed negotiating in Geneva after finishing their last round of atmospheric tests. But Kennedy said there has been no movement in the Soviet position since December, when Russia offered to accept two or three on-site inspections per year on Soviet soil as a means of detecting clandestine underground explosions.

The United States has been insisting on seven a year provided the inspection arrangements are adequate. The negotiations have been stalemated on this point since then.

200 Are Evacuated

PORT-AU-PRINE, HAITI (UPI) — The United States evacuated nearly 200 Americans Wednesday and moved its Caribbean naval forces to within eyesight of Port-au-Prince, heightening tension in this Negro republic.

The evacuation of the Americans, most of them dependents of U. S. Embassy and military mission personnel, was orderly. But a U. S. Army warrant officer breathed a deep sigh of relief, saying he was glad to get his family out "before skulls start getting split around here."

The United States formally notified Haiti that American warships had been moved to within eyesight of Port-au-Prince but outside the six-mile territorial waters that Haiti claims.

Haitian officials were reported to have told U. S. Ambassador Raymond Thurston that Haiti considered the American action "an unfriendly act." But the officials indicated, according to the reports, Haiti would not make a formal protest since the integrity of its territorial waters had been observed.

Haiti Makes Charge

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Haiti charged Wednesday that the Dominican Republic is attempting to destroy "the only black republic in North America."

"We know we are defending the cause of the black peoples who also are working to show their faces to the peoples of the world," Haitian Foreign Minister Rene Chalmers told the Security Council.

The council plunged into debate on the Haitian-Dominican Republic crisis with no attempt being made to obtain a postponement to give the Organization of American States OAS time to act.

The United States said Tuesday that it believed the crisis should be dealt with by the OAS and pointed out that the U. N. Charter enjoins members to seek settlement of disputes in regional organizations before referring them to the Security Council.

Preliminary consultations, however, apparently confirming a voting line-up that would have blocked the sevn-vote majority necessary for a council postponement. Russia, Morocco, Ghana, Brazil and Venezuela were understood to favor a hearing here for Haiti without awaiting OAS action.

Miller Has Hope

publican National Chairman William E. Miller said Wednesday the only thing which can defeat the GOP in future national elections is the disunity existing in party ranks

Miller spoke at a dinner meeting of the Capitol Press Club here.

"We have too many people in our party who want it all their own way, or they won't play at all," Miller said.

'We have the strength now, and we have the issues. Are we certain of victory. I wish I thought so. But one thing can defeat us, and that is the inability of Republicans to unify and to stay unified."

Miller called on all Republicans to unite around the "fundamental areas of agreement" common to all who follow the GOP banner. He listed these areas as —Opposition to "big government."

—A belief that private enterprise can accomplish more things better than government.

YACK — 1963 Yackety Yacks, fresh off the presses, roll into Graham Memorial yesterday afternoon from a delivery truck. The new Yacks will be given out starting Friday at 1 p.m. from the windows behind GM. ID cards will be required. —Photo by Jim Wallace

Yackety Yack Issue Opens Tomorrow

The 1962-63 edition of the Yackety-Yack will be distributed Friday afternoon beginning at 1 p.m., editor Louis Legum announced yesterday.

ID cards are needed to pick up the books at the window behind GM.

There are several new features in the 1963 edition. Among them is a beauty section which includes a train, an airplane, a jail, and a graveyard as beckgrounds for twelve of UNC's more appealing co-eds.

The Yack beauty court layout comprises part of a new, stylized section, "Carolina: The People and Events," which is a chronicle in pictures and words of the events of the past year. Some of those featured include last spring's Miami tennis match, the UMOC contest, and the Buckley-Mayer tussle.

In an effort to give the Yack an intellectual dimension, the open-section features a commentary on Carolina life by John Justice with representative photographs.

Last year's Yack placed a dormitory section in the book, and this year's has expanded it to a 14-pages. Another feature is preparation of the football copy to blend a Winston Churchill-war motif with the advantages of Jim Hickey's gladiators. Also, new introductory pages have been added for each section to give the reader a helpful reference.

The cover is black this year with gold lettering. Within the book the color scheme is primarily black and green.

Birmingham Says, 'We Welcome You'

By JOEL BUCKLEY

A sign, erected by the Chamber of Commerce on one of the main arteries into the cities, said, "It's nice to have you in Birmingham . . . ;" a policeman said, "this area is closed to all whites and especially members of the press" and a Negro said, "Give us Freedom, Freedom, Freedom."

Monday, May 6, began like any other day in Birmingham, Ala. The usual people were doing the usual things. In the heart of the city Negro high school students were on their way to school. Outside of the Negro schools, handbills urging students to "Fight For Freedom First, Then Go To School" were being distributed. The text of these announcements read "Join the 1000 in jail who are making their witness for freedom. Come to the 16th Street Baptist Church now and we'll soon be free. It's up to you to free our teachers, our parents, yourselves and our country."

Students began to group together outside the school buildings and head in the direction of the Baptist Church. It was 9 a.m. and there still weren't many people on the streets. About an hour later a large crowd had formed outside the church. Motorcycle policemen and newspapermen and photographers had begun to arrive.

A Negro lady said the church was filled to capacity with students who were waiting to learn the plans for the day's activities.

The police told DTH reporters to move up to 17th St. because "we would be safer there."

Negroes sitting in front of houses across from the church were told to move away or face arrest by the local authorities.

Negroes sitting on park benches diagonally across from the church were ordered away by a cop on three-wheel cycle.

Exodus of Spectators

A few moments later three or four hundred students left the church and began walking through the park on their way home. A police radio blared "Keep 'em moving, don't let 'em stop and talk."

One of students in the group leaving the church said he left because he didn't want to demonstrate.

Meanwhile park development employees were scouring the area looking for broken glass and sticks which remained as reminders of Saturday's melee in which spectators and police battled for three hours.

Little patches on the back of overalls worn by the Negro leaders said "Give me liberty."

Inside the church Negro leaders, Rev. James Bevel, executive director of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), comedian Dick

'Self-Liquidation' Proposals

Cost Burden Faces Students

By BILL WAUMETT

The University of North Carolina and public education in general are based on the principle of low tuition and costs, so that education is available to all students qualified for such training.

Before the General Assembly at present is the general appropriation bill for higher education in North Carolina. This bill does not contain any money for new dormitory space at Carolina.

The Legislature proposes instead that UNC build a new 900-man dorm on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis, meaning that all costs of the dormitory will be paid out of student dorm rent over a forty-year period.

To finance this project, University officials have proposed an increase in dormitory rent of $10 a semester, bringing the total dorm rent per occupant to $190 a year.

This hike represents an increase of 1.6 per cent in estimated student costs, an increase perhaps not too significant at a school such as UNC, where a third of the student body maintains cars.

Implications Significant

The implications of the rent increase are of great significance, however, because the legislature appears to be adopting self-liquidation as an accepted method of financing new construction. Similar projects are now proposed for ten state-supported colleges.

The immediate implications for UNC have been well stated by Business Manager A. J. Branch, who says:

"We feel the University is fast approaching the maximum amount that can be charged for dormitory housing. The University may be in danger of pricing itself out of the housing market."

Poll Results

In a random sample of over one hundred dorm men, 9 per cent indicated they would move out if the rent were increased $10 a semester as is now proposed.

Twenty-eight per cent said $20 would be too high and 27 per cent gave $30 as the cut-off point.

Thirty-five per cent said they would not move.

Fifty-eight of those polled also indicated that noise was the worst factor of dormitory life. This seems indicative that the quality of UNC dorms is lacking because of the restrictions on money available for construction.

Avery, Parker and Teague dorms, for example, have inadequate insulation on ceilings and between rooms. Thus the noise level is high.

A survey of dormitories at 18 universities in 1958 indicated that UNC was seventeenth in the amount of floor space provided each resident. The average here was 80 square feet compared to a high of 190 square feet at the University of Virginia.

State Money Limits

One reason for the unfavorable comparison is a limit imposed by the state on construction cost per occupant.

The national average cost per occupant is $4400, while North Carolina limits its schools to $2750 per occupant. A special easement of this rule had to be acquired to put sidewalks and lawns around Avery, Parker and Teague dormitories.

These dormitorics, plus an addition to Spencer dorm, were the first units built here on a completely self-liquidating basis. Dorm rents were increased at that time to $170 a year.

Craige and Ehringhaus, on the other hand, were built without rent increases due to partial financing by the legislature.

In a report on dormitory housing by the Educational Facilities Laboratories of New York, a passage on self-liquidating housing reads:

"One of the more persistent myths about housing finance is the widely held, wishful belief that college housing is entirely self-liquidating.

"Revenues alone," the report continues, "were pledged as security for only 37 per cent of the 425 loans made through the College Housing Loan Program in fiscal 1957-58."

But while the report doubts that all 37 per cent of these projects were completely self-liquidating, this type of finance has been successfully used at Carolina.

The question is whether this practice should be continued in a time of rising student costs and with an anticipated mushrooming of college enrollment.

The arguments against complete self-liquidation include these questions:

Should students be expected to pay for capital improvements to the physical plant of the University, which will last long after they have left school?

Does self-liquidation violate the democratic principle that the public at large should share the costs of public education regardless of benefits to the immediate taxpayer?

Should the dormitory student pay for capital improvements while the student living off-campus does not?

Will this particular increase, or further increases, make off-campus housing competitive with dormitory housing?

The first two questions must receive opposite answers.

If the dormitory student should pay for capital improvements, then a long tradition is violated and the low cost principle of public education is apparently discarded.

A program of the scope proposed by the legislature seems to mean there is no limit to the costs that students may be asked to bear.

The third and fourth questions are also related. If the town student does not share in dormitory costs, it means that more dorm rooms will be available, tending to keep down the demand for off-campus housing and thereby keeping apartment rents down.

At the same time, a raise in dorm rent means off-campus housing may become competitive with none of the restrictions placed on dorm residents.

The University administration has argued against self-liquidation, but its passage is now probable.

More dorm housing must be built, as evidenced by the planned three-man rooms for next fall.

There is a limit to three-man rooms, however, in that the last five dorms have been constructed with fixed furniture, making impossible the addition of a third resident.

The University has a further problem in that current regulations provide that all increases in rent in dorms with outstanding loans must be used to pay off the debts on those dorms alone.

Thus increases in Avery, Parker, Teague, Spencer, Craige and Ehringhaus must be used to pay off loans on those dorms alone.

An attempt is now being made to change this law so that increases in rent on all dorms could be used to pay off the new 900-man dorm.

The proposed dorm bill is expected out of committee in the General Assembly at the end of the week, and the self-liquidation principle will probably be settled by then.

Still unsettled, however, is the original question of Business Manager Branch, "How much higher can dorm rents go before we price ourselves out of the housing market?"

Mass Demonstration Threatened

King's Arrest Stops Temporary Truce

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — A "truce" called in the racial struggle here only a few hours earlier collapsed late Wednesday when Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was convicted on a parading charge. Negroes threatened the "biggest mass demonstration this city has ever seen."

Only a few hours earlier President Kennedy made the Birmingham situation the first item of business at his press conference and hailed the easing of tensions.

The President referred to an agreement announced by Dr. King and the Rev. Fred Shuttleworth.

They said a halt had been called in massive segregation protests of recent days because "we feel the possibility looms that a settlement might come within the next 24 hours."

More than 2,200 Negroes have been arrested since the civil rights demonstrations first started April 23.

The truce was abandoned when City Court Judge C. H. Brown convicted Dr. King, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy and 25 others on a parading without a permit charge. The charge stemmed from a protest march King led on Good Friday.

Get Maximum Terms

All 27 were given the maximum sentence—180 days in jail and $100 fine. They were immediately jailed.

King, R. B. Fulton and Rev. Abernathy were held on $2,500 bond each.

King's brother, Rev. A. D. King, announced that the truce was off.

"This makes it obvious. City officials are not willing to cooperate. The negotiations are off and plans are being made for the biggest mass demonstration this city has ever seen," Rev. King said.

Negro leaders indicated, however, that the big push would not come until at least Thursday.

Wyatt Tee Walker, King's top assistant in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, told a hastily called news conference that as a result of King's jailing "we are calling off limited demonstrations that we had planned for this afternoon and we will spend tonight and tomorrow morning planning our next move."

The original truce announcement had about the same effect as snipping a fuse from a sputtering powder-keg.

President Points To 'Ugly Situation'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy pointed to the "ugly situation" in Birmingham, Ala., Wednesday, as a sign to all areas that barriers to equal opportunity and treatment of U.S. citizens must be removed.

The President also hailed Birmingham businessmen for pledging to take "substantial steps" that "would begin to meet the justifiable needs of the Negro community." He had equal praise for Negro leaders working with the white businessmen.

13 Initiated Into Society

Thirteen students were inducted into the Amphoterothen Society, second oldest honorary on the campus, in ceremonies Tuesday afternoon.

The new members are: Robin Britt, Haywood Monroe Clayton, Harry DeLung, Whitney Durand, Rufus Edmisten, Tony Harrington, William Imes, Michael Lawler, Larry McDevitt, James Reston, Gil Stallings, William Sullivan and Grant Wheeler.

Founded in 1912 to further the art of extemporaneous speaking, the Amphoterothen Society has for the past several years concerned itself with honoring those students whose public speaking abilities have been demonstrated in many fields of campus life.

Active undergraduate members this year included Mack Armstrong—Janus, Walter Dellinger—Recorder, Inman Allen and Dwight Wheless.

Graduation Guests Get Free Rooms

Ehringhaus To Be Used For Housing

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Parents, relatives, family friends and visiting alumni will be housed in Ehringhaus dormitory free of charge during graduation commencement exercises.

In making the announcement yesterday, Assistant Dean of Men Dallas Cameron said the vistors would stay in Ehringhaus from May 30-June 3.

Cameron said that any student who wishes for his parents or close friends to attend the ceremonies should tell them about the arrangements. Parents should then contact the Housing Office for accomodations.

Cameron said that parents of graduating seniors will be notified of the special arrangements.

"On arrival in Chapel Hill, the parents should drop by the Alumni office at the Carolina Inn," Cameron said, "where they will be assigned their room." He said that if any parents or friends had to fly down, then there would be someone at the Inn to drive them out to Ehringhaus.

Cameron said that in addition to free housing, free linen would also be supplied.

Class Reunions Planned

Much of the housing space in Ehringhaus will be used by alumni holding class reunions.

According to Mrs. Lynda Best of the Alumni Office, seven class reunions are being planned. In addition to these, the Old Students Club plans to hold a reunion. The Old Students Club, composed of some 790 members, dates from 1912 on back.

Mrs. Best said that so far only 12 of the old timers have said they would be here. "But there is still several weeks left," she added.

She said that 109 letters had been sent out to members of the class of '13. They will be celebrating their 50 year reunion.

The class of '18, composed of approximately 200 members will have their 45th reunion.

Three hundred fifty-five people have been contacted and asked to attend the reunion of the class of '23.

Mrs. Best said that beginning with the class of '33, the alumni office "had to send invitations to people that we thought would come . . . the classes started getting larger around this time and now it's just impossible to contact everybody." She said that 550 invitations had been sent out to the class of '33.

The class of 1938 will have its 25th reunion. "This is the big shindig of the year," Mrs. Best said. She said the 25th reunion usually has the most elaborate planning and is the feature attraction. She said there were 809 known addresses of the class of '38.

The class of '43 will have its 20th reunion and the class of '53 will hold its 10th.

She said she couldn't even guess how many past graduates would return "since so many of the reservation cards haven't been sent back."

State Department Official Says

Public Opinion Can Influence Foreign Policy

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of reports from UNC delegates to the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference on Southeast Asia.

By STU EIZENSTAT and BRICK OETTINGER

At the Second Plenary Session, we were addressed by William Jordan, Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs and a specialist on the influence of public opinion on foreign policy decisions; Charles DeLeuw, a businessman with interests in Southeast Asia, Dr. Frank Trager, a member of the Department of Political Affairs of the National War College since 1961; Admiral Arthur Radford (Ret.), former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. Jordan felt that public opinion does influence foreign policy, and much time and energy has been spent studying it. Over the last 20 years, 70 per cent of the 90 per cent of the public who had an opinion felt we should take a positive role in foreign affairs. He stated that there was general support by the public for the Laos stand.

Mr. DeLeuw, a lively old man, said that the countries of Southeast Asia needed foreign investments to increase their income at a faster rate then their population growth. He stressed the need for more lenient taxes and greater guarantees against risks. It seemed to the delegates that he wanted his cake and to eat it too, as a businessman must be willing to take certain risks for his profits.

When asked for his definition of a Communist, he brought the house down by stating that a Communist was anyone who played "footsy" with Khrushchev.

Dr. Trager, an extremely articulate man, mentioned that United States interest in Southeast Asia had been on a low key previous to the Communist takeover in China. He felt the 1963 Geneva Treaty over Laos was a disaster since you can't have a fine coalition government with Communists in it. He stated emphatically that the way to defend Saigon was to penetrate, threaten, undermine, and attack Hanoi.

Admiral Radford, speaking on the role of the military in foreign matters, felt it had a direct, pronounced, and great influence in shaping foreign policy. Since the inception of the National Security Council in 1947, the Presidents have been able to see all views before deciding. Radford felt that the chances of success for any foreign policy were low if the military wasn't fully consulted; this was the reason for the Bay of Pigs fiasco. Thus, while no military man on active duty feels himself an architect of foreign policy, he does feel that attention must be given to his advice. Trager bleakly forecast that we could expect to face a show down in Southeast Asia within the next few years.

I am quite sure that the speaker at our Third Plenary Session wished he had stayed at home. Mr. William Cleveland, the suave Executive Vice-President and Director of Esso Standard Eastern, Inc., presented to us "An American Business Looks at Southeast Asia."

In his speech, he underlined the importance of private enterprise in the region. One of his statements, in particular, was an unfortunate one. He said, "It is contrary to our objectives for the United States Government to lend money or to make grants to governments which persist in policies that discourage private investment."

One of the delegates asked Cleveland if actually it was contrary only to United State private business interest, not the United States Government? After apologizing, for not having looked at the speech previous to his presentation, he stammered and finally agreed that it was contrary only to United States private enterprise to make grants to countries which persist in policies that discourage private investment.

Roger Helsman who served with Merrill's Marauders in Burma gave the concluding speech at the last Plenary Session. His speech seemed more realistic than most of the others we had heard. While mentioning the recent succession in Viet Nam, he stressed the long, hard road ahead. When asked about Laos he was the picture of despondency, as he said he never had much hope for it and he had not changed his views.

The Rising Rent

Many questions remain unanswered in the hassle over dorm rent hikes and future self-liquidating dormitories, and we think some clear exposition of the problem is needed before we students are able to take any type of effective action.

Dorm rents have been climbing at quite a fast rate in recent years, almost tripling since 1947. This is completely out of line with rises in other costs of education in the same period.

Currently, dormitory costs are figured on a per occupant basis that is applicable to almost all schools. The national average expenditure per occupant in dorm construction is $4400, while here in North Carolina, state law prohibits any outlay of more than $2750 per occupant.

Therefore North Carolina falls way below the national median in square feet alloted per occupant, as well as services furnished, such as social rooms, laundry facilities, typing rooms, storage space and so forth.

All of this while comparative studies show us to be well up on the rent scale.

These rent increases all stem from the problem of self-liquidating dormitories.

At present the University is paying for Avery, Parker, Teague, Craige, Ehringhaus, and the additions to Spencer and Nurses.

North Carolina state law provides that any increase in the rent must go to retire these debts before any new dorms can be paid for.

The Chancellor has asked the Attorney General to draw up an act repealing the law so that any debt on a new dorm will not be encumbered with the present debt.

The reahon the Chancellor has asked for the repeal of the law is that the Advisory Budget Commission has recommended that the state provide no money for the proposed dorm construction.

The Commission's reason for this seems to be that many small schools are able to support self-liquidating dorms, and we should be able also.

The fallacy here is that the smaller schools don't have to build the $2,500,000 goliaths we do, and total costs when interests are included are much smaller.

The interest and reserve requirements for the projected $2,544,000 HHFA loan would run to almost $4,000,000 over the planned 40 years of self-liquidation, thus raising the total cost of the proposed dormitory from $2,544,000 to $6,544,000.

Dorm residents must pay this $4,000,000 interest and reserve requirement.

The new dorm will house 925 men bringing the total spaces to 6,222.

With the projected enrollment of 13,500 students in 1970, the University would need 7,425 spaces to house the same percentage currently enrolled.

This means that in addition to the proposed 925-man dorm, the University would need two additional 600 man dorms or a mammoth 1200 man dorm by 1970. If these additions were also self-liquidating, the University would effectively price itself out of the market for many North Carolina students, and fail in its primary function to provide low cost, subsidized education for its citizens.

Several proposals have been put forward for easing the burden placed on students by this policy of 100% self-liquidating dormitories.

First: The General Assembly could assume all or part of the maintenance and repair costs to dormitories.

This would free all but that part of the men's rental fee used in paying off the construction bonds.

This system is in use in other state-supported schools.

The second proposal, and the one recommended by the Student Legislature Emergency Dormitory Rent Committee in 1958, is for retention of the self-liquidating plan under a percentile basis, allowing state appropriations to pay part of the construction cost, and using bond issues to pay another part. Several institutions have found this to be an easily administered and workable plan.

We feel that the Advisory Budget Commission has lost sight of the responsibility of the University, and that their short-sighted dorm-finance policy could seriously endanger the future of UNC.

There is some constructive action that all students who have a stake in this can take.

Call your parents and explain the current situation concerning possible dormitory rent hikes, and urge them to send a Public Opinion telegram to their State Senator or Representative requesting that the state appropriate the money for this dorm, rather than making dorm residents pay for it.

And do this now.

Right Cause Wrong Tack

To the Editors:

For the past several years we have defended the position of the Negro leaders in the United States who have been struggling to establish a small beach head of dignity for their followers. We did this because we believed that, while men are not created equal, each man should have the opportunity to secure for himself, by application of his individual abilities, a place of honor. We still believe this, but we can no longer intelligently defend the position of these leaders.

They have over-stepped the line which separates a righteous struggle from a dangerous battle. The cause remains just, but the tactics are wrong. Reverend King is an intelligent and well educated man leading millions of inadequately educated Negro men and women into a contest with the white people and both sides are destined to lose if the present trend continues.

The Negro has never been hated in the South. It is true that he was looked upon as an inferior being by many southerners, but he was, in fact, inferior to his white counter part in many ways. He was poorly educated, his economic status was inferior, and in many more ways the Negro was, as a race, inferior. He was, however, a human being, and his innate sense of personal dignity rebelled against this deplorable state. He began to pull himself from the dust by his bootstraps.

The Negro has never been hated in the South, but gray clouds of hate are beginning to gather over many southern cities. Reverend King is leading his Negroes into a battle of hate. He has begun to practice that which he preaches against. He has begun to tell his followers to disregard the personal rights of businessmen throughout the South. He understandably wants what is best for the Negro, but he is attempting to win by tactics which push the two races further and further apart.

The Black Muslims are seeding the clouds of unrest. They openly teach a doctrine of hate and incompatibility with the white race. Other minor voices fly into the winds which gather below the clouds, adding to the turmult.

Eisenhower once found a young officer shouting harsh orders to a group of enlisted men. He took the trembling captain into his tent. Pulling a small piece of string from his pocket, Ike stretched it across the desk before them. "Now, push that string across the desk," said the older veteran. Of course the string only bent. The young officer looked quizically up at the general. "Now son, try pulling it across." The soldier pulled the string across the table and handed it to Ike, who was smiling broadly. He winked and said, "Dismissed."

Reverend King and all of the other Negro leaders should try to lead their people into dignity and peaceful compatibility with their white neighbors, and not push them over the brink of righteousness into the void of hate.

Peter Pan On Negroes

To the Editors:

Although it depresses me to see racial discrimination and I am well aware that it is wrong, spiritually, morally, or any other way in which it may be considered; I, most likely because I am a Southerner, a stereotype not much less ridiculed and not much easier to shake off than that of the Negro, feel funny inside when I see two figures, one black and one white or both or either color, with witty placards stoically pace before the College Cafe or the Varsity Theatre, or any other business establishment. I have never carried a placard to aid the Negro in his quest for freedom, and although I believe in his quest, I probably never will overtly stand up for his rights.

As I view the placard-bearers, often friends of mine, and feel uneasy, wishing there were some other way, a quotation from a book written by Patrick Braybrooke about James M. Barrie, the beloved author of Peter Pan, comes to mind:

"For were men really equal, there would be no reason to devise artificial means to make them so."

Khrushchev On Standards Of Ideology And The Arts

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Nikita Khrushchev's March speech on "High Ideological Standards and Artistic Mastery" is a spirited and comprehensive debunking of de-Stalinization as it relates to literature.

The speech, made to a meeting of party officials with leading Soviet artists and writers (including Yevtushenko, Soviet poet slated to appear at UNC this spring until the party forced him to cancel his American visit) is printed in the April Current Soviet Documents.

In last Thursday's DTH A. J. Von Lazar discussed the implications of this speech and the overall Russian effort to control the arts, within the context of contemporary Soviet creativity. Here we will go with more depth into the speech itself and its relationship to the Stalin "personality cult."

The Russian premier manages a defense of the Stalin era against "misrepresentations" and "one-sided arguments" by current Soviet realism" and Party control over literature and art. "Art belongs to the sphere of ideology," Khrushchev said. And: "Our party has always stood for partisanship in literature and art."

* * *

On Stalinism, the premier told the assembled artists:

The Stalin years were "no period of stagnation in the development of Soviet society, as our foes imagine they were . . .

"Writers who assess from a completely lopsided angle that particular stage in the life of our country, trying to make out that nearly everything was bad, to paint everything black, are doing the wrong thing . . .

"Mighty productive forces were created and a cultural revolution was carried out in the country" in those years . . ."

Khrushchev then went on to claim that Stalin faithfully carried out the ideals of Lenin. Khrushchev even referred to the Stalin innovation of "Socialism in one country" — a major deviation from Lenin's desires — as a "Leninist policy."

The premier concluded, on Stalinism, with:

"The Party pays due tribute to Stalin's services to the Party and the Communist movement. We still maintain today that Stalin was devoted to communism, that he was a Marxist, and this cannot and should not be denied. His fault was that he committed gross mistakes of a theoretical and political nature, violated the Leninist principles of the state and Party leadership, and abused the power entrusted him by the Party and the people.

"At Stalin's funeral many, including myself, were in tears. These were sincere tears, for although we knew about some of Stalin's personal shortcomings, we believed in him."

* * *

The main body of the 44-page speech is devoted to the glorification of "protection literature", as directed and controlled by the Communist Party. "We are against peaceful coexistence in the ideological field," the premier said, in a reiteration of traditional Soviet policy.

The main targets for Khrushchev's abuse were abstractionists, all schools of "formalism" within literature, architecture, art and music.

Realism of a non-socialist tinge was hit: "Some representatives of the world of art judge reality only by the smell coming from the latrines; they portray people in a deliberately ugly way . . ."

Sholokov ("And Quiet Flows the Don") was praised as an artist whose "artistic individuality" was "promoted by his communist committedness."

Yevtushenko was criticized for his defense of abstractionism. "This poet," Khrushchev said, "apparently fails to understand much in our Party's policy, he wavers, displays instability in his views on artistic questions."

Only the abstractionists themselves: "They are . . . perverted people whose brains are, so to speak, upside down, with their disgraceful potboilers that are an insult to people's feelings."

On modern architecture: "The Soviet Army Theatre is probably the craziest building erected."

On modern music: "Maybe I am old-fashioned, am getting on in years," Khrushchev admits, with something of the sad bewilderment of an Eisenhower — he objects to the "kind of music that gives you a feeling of nausea and a pain in the stomach. . . ." And: "The so-called modern fashionable dances are simply something indecent, frenzied, and heaven knows what!"

* * *

But Khrushchev is very serious about non-deviation in literature — however much he may reminisce and joke.

"The enemies of communism pin their hopes on ideologically subversive activities in the socialist countries," he told the Soviet artists (sounding very much like an inverse reflection of Congressman Francis Walter . . .) "He who is not with the workers is inevitably against them."

Khrushchev said many of the "bad" Soviet writings in recent years sprang from the de-Stalinization effort. He again emphasized his abhorrence of the "personality cult." ". . . But this in no way means that we let things take their own course after the denunciation of the personality cult, that the reins of government have allegedly been loosened, that the ship of society is drifting in the sea and that everyone can be self-willed and do as he likes. No. ". . . In questions of creative art the Central Committee of the Party will demand from everybody — from the most honored and renowned worker of literature and art as well as from the young budding artists — unswerving abidance by the Party line."

And there lies the de-Stalinization of literature — for the time being, at least.

GREATEST NEED

The world's greatest need . . . is mutual confidence. No human being ever knows all the secrets of another's heart. Yet there is enough confidence between mother and child, husband and wife, buyer and seller, to make social life a practical possibility. Confidence may be risky, but it is nothing like so risky as mistrust.

A Talk With Mrs. Motley

By FRED SEELY

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, lawyer for the NAACP, sat quietly in the lounge of Graham Memorial Saturday night.

She sat in the midst of a gay atmosphere. The students from the Human Relations Conference were singing and laughing in the background, singing the integration songs that have become popular in the last few months.

They were songs of freedom, and the students, white and black, joined hands and formed a huge circle as they sang, "Keep your eyes on the prize, Hold on, hold on." Mrs. Motley smiled as she looked on.

"This kind of conference is very good. It lets people from different states get together and discuss their problems", she observed. "Sometimes I get very depressed about the way things are going, but this makes me happy."

She became solemn when she spoke of the future.

"I'm due in Birmingham on Tuesday, and then in Savannah on Thursday. We hope to settle this Birmingham thing quickly, but you never can tell . . ."

She smiled when she spoke of James Meredith.

"He's a nice boy, a sincere boy. He's the kind who searches for a cause, and he found it when he decided to become the first Negro to enter the University of Mississippi.

"James works out problems for himself, and then he tells others. He wanted to prove himself, and no one can deny that he did."

Mrs. Motley, a graduate of Columbia University Law School, has been a member of the NAACP legal staff since 1946.

"We employ nine lawyers in the New York office, and we hope to add two more within a month. Several hundred more across the country work for us on a part-time basis.

"We wait for a court order before we move into an area. Then we play it by ear, as there's no telling what's going to happen.

"Things may go well, as they did at Clemson. But, sometimes . . .

And one could see the memories of Oxford and Jackson and Birmingham on her face.

She is not a bitter woman. She faces each problem with realism and hope, and she knows that it will be many years before all she has been fighting for will be realized. And as she talked, Mrs. Baker reflected in her words what the young people were singing:

"Keep your eyes on the prize, Hold on, hold on."

Stars And Bars Desecrated

By RALPH McGILL

One of the more melancholy stories of our times is what has been done to the Confederate flag. The honored banner has become the symbol of various organizations devoted to violence and defiance of law. It is carried by the sordid remnants of the long discredited K.K.K.; White Citizens Councils of Mississippi and Alabama, aptly described as white-collar Klans, have used it in meetings and demonstrations. It flutters from hot-rod cars driven by leather-jacketed toughs.

The brave men who fought under it and gave it honor would not be seen in the company of most of those who today betray and degrade the flag by making it a part of their particular brand of hate and lawlessness. Certainly there was nothing in the noble character of Robert E. Lee that would condone such shabby uses of the flag he so often saw his troops take into battle. Whatever the hates of politicians and civilians, the federal and Southern troops in general did not hate one another. The best official act — a present-arms by the Union troops to the last of Lee's command at Appomattox, was eloquent testimony to the conduct of honorable men.

ROTC Holds 'Weekend At Kenan'

Lt. Col. Kage Conducts An Inspection

Cadets 'On The Double' Run Across Kenan Field

Jr. Cadets Readied For Summer Camp

Kenan Stadium, scene of many successful invasions by visiting football teams, was invaded by the Carolina AFROTC the weekend of April 19-21 to prepare the corps' junior cadets for their upcoming summer camp.

Each Air Force Cadet is required to attend a Summer Training Unit between his junior and senior years in order to qualify for a commission upon graduation.

Last summer, this year's senior cadets set what is probably a record when three members of their class took top honors, and over 75 per cent placed in the upper half of their respective STU's.

In hopes of having this year's juniors repeat this performance next summer, a Mock STU was held. Senior cadets under the command of Cadet Col. William Holderness ran the operation with help from Air Force Detachment Officers. Cadets who had been rated as "outstanding" last summer played the roles of Tactical (TAC) Officers, the man to whom the cadet is responsible at STU.

The main idea behind the Mock STU was to give the juniors a taste of what they could expect this summer. Also included were "short cuts", learned the hard way last year, and five hours of academic instruction.

The juniors were placed in a "pressure situation", under constant supervision from "reville" at 4:30 a.m., until "taps" at 9:30 p.m. Physical fitness received special stress, as all STU formations must be met at "double time".

Sunday afternoon, 44 well conditional and well worn junior cadets trudged slowly back to their dorms.

Seniors, Winners Awarded As 300 Attend WAA Picnic

The Women's Athletic Association recognized those who have contributed most to UNC women's sports and awarded the winners of all the WAA events for the past year Monday night at their annual picnic in the tin can.

WAA President Karen Nelson presented the following awards:

Outstanding Seniors are Judy Newton and Meredith Patton of Whitehead Dorm and Carol Clayton and Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta.

Outstanding Representatives are Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta for sorority division and Zannie Poplin of Spencer for the dorm division.

Outstanding Club Members are: Kay Van Doren of West Cobb and Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta for Basketball Club; Jeanne Sorci of Kenan Dorm for Golf Club; Karlee Arey and Hughes Harned of Kappa Delta for Splash Club; and Vivian Conklin of Kenan Dorm and Heather Humphrey of East Cobb for Tennis Club.

The WAA also awarded certificates to the Outstanding Graduate Students for the first time in the history of WAA. The awards went to Vivian Conklin, Bessie Johnson and Nancy Kendall, all of Kenan Dorm.

The All Sports Trophy, given to the dorm and the sorority with the most points won over the year, went to Kenan Dorm with 463 votes and Alpha Gamma Delta with 545.

Intramural winners were also presented with certificates.

They are: Jane Engle for Spencer Dorm in the Badminton singles; Whitehead Dorm for Basketball; Jeanne Sorci for Whitehead Dorm in Golf; Margaret Snead for Kappa Kappa Gamma in Table Tennis; Bonnie Loving for Kappa Kappa Gamma for Tennis singles; Bonnie Loving and Margaret Snead for Tennis doubles; and Kenan Dorm for Volleyball.

US Needs Female Engineers

CHICAGO (UPI) Americans must change their attitude toward women engineers if the United States is to offset a shortage in the field and keep pace with the Soviet Union, a woman engineer says.

"In our society, girls who show an interest in mechanics are usually chided for being unfeminine," said Dee M. Holladay, associate professor of engineering at the Chicago Undergraduate Division of the University of Illinois.

In the United States, "less than one per cent of engineering graduates are women, compared to 39 per cent in the Soviet Union," Mrs. Holladay said.

Most engineering jobs do not require a woman to don fatigues and a safety helmet or to crowl over rough terrain, she said.

"Seventy-five per cent of engineering jobs in the country are desk jobs in research, development and design. The other 25 per cent are field and shop jobs."

Most female engineering students "come from the poorer social classes and of foreign parentage where there is no idealized feminine picture being held up to them every time the girl moves," she said.

Girls who want to be engineers should expect to be discouraged, will be "happy they overcame the opposition" if they persevere, Mrs. Holladay said.

Mrs. Holladay was graduated from the University of Illinois in 1930 with a degree in architectural engineering. She has been on the University's faculty here since 1946.

"Off we go . . ." to the Angel Flight National Convention. There in Buffalo last week "Little Colonel" Nancy Tillman became "Little General" and the top Angel in the country.

Nancy is a member of the UNC Angel Flight, an auxiliary to the Air Force ROTC.

Nancy went to Buffalo representing UNC's Arnold Air Society, East Carolina, State, Duke, A&T in Division 2, and the other divisions in Southeastern Area B as their "Little Colonel."

The United States AFROTC is divided into ten areas A through J and sub-areas numbered 1, 2 etc. Arnold is in Area B Division 2.

At Buffalo Nancy and the "Little Colonels" from every other area stood before the "Joint Chiefs of Staff" where her three P's — that's poised, pretty and personable — and her knowledge of Angel Flight, marched her to the head of the class and pinned the General's star on her uniform.

Nancy is a sophomore education major from Raleigh.

At the Conclave which ran May 1-5 in Buffalo three national competition scholarships were awarded. One of these, $100 from Air Insurance, Inc., went to UNC Angel Shelia Sherrill.

Shelia is administrative officer —secretary for the rest of us — for Area B-2. She is a junior math major from Charlotte.

By the way the Angels' Squadron, Arnold Air Society, has been named best in Area B.

Miss Staples To Retire Leaves 'Her Boys' Behind

By DONA FAGG

"Oh, dear. I don't want to be interviewed. I've kept my name out of the paper these many years so I'll have to say not to an interview," chirruped Miss Julia Staples.

Miss Staples is secretary to the student government officers and is known to anyone who wanders up to second floor of GM. She occupies the right hand corner of the student government office where there is a flurry of constant activity.

Miss Staples patted her silvery hair and began to type once again. "I have a fight with the Yack every year to try to keep my picture out of the Yack. There's nothing interesting about me," she said.

MISS STAPLES

Immediately there was protest. "Oh now Miss Staples you know that's not true," Dick Ackers, student government vice-president interrupted.

Since Miss Staples declined to speak for herself the people who work with her spoke enthusiastically for and about her. Miss Staples, who officialy retired six years ago, is retiring completely this June from her 3-hour-a-day job with the student government.

"Miss Staples is the only person who is a carry-over from year to year. She has to straighten out each administration every year on the files and records," Ackers said.

"What has impressed me most is her maternal, helpful manner. She calls officers from past years 'her boys'," Ackers added. "When she has time she will go out of her way to help with a project."

One of her "boys," Mike Lawler, president of student government, commented, "I remember when I was a freshman and working in legislature; I went up to the student government offices to look up some information. Miss Staples knew exactly where to go in the files without hesitation. That's what impressed me then," he said.

"She gives student government continuity," Lawler said.

"Miss Staples always remembers people, who they are and where she met them. That's an important thing," Bonnie Hoyle, student government secretary commented.

"She is really good at answering questions," said Bill Harriss, student body president, 1961-62. "She does a lot of locating people Besides that she adds a certain dignity around the office," he added.

When the reporter appeared again in the doorway of the student government office, Miss Staples objected, "Oh, no, I'm not going to let you know any of my peculiarities."

With that she threw on her hat and coat and picked up her umbrella.

"Who's going to lock up?" she asked. Miss Staples is usually the last to leave.

"She's going to be really hard to replace. It's going to be difficult to find another Miss Staples," Ackers commented.

—Birmingham—

Gregory, Ron Foreman, executive secretary of SNCC and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. were speaking on the importance of the peaceful demonstrations planned for Monday.

Outside Theopolis Eugene (Bull) Connor had ordered fire trucks stationed at each corner of the park to prevent a continuation of Saturday's outbreak of violence. Firemen, wearing their heavy black uniforms, sweltered in the sun with high-powered water hoses poised and ready.

Some Spectators Doused

They lofted some spray on a group of spectators who, according to authorities, were "not acting in a peaceful manner." The dampened spectators and reporters retreated to the lawn area in front of nearby houses, leaving the street area clear of everyone but police and firemen. Roadblocks had been set up at every nearby intersection to detour traffic.

About 1 p.m. the first group of 20-30 demonstrators, with Gregory in the lead and posters in their hands, began marching down the steps of the church. They went about 25 yards before being stopped. An officer then read them the local civil code and asked them if they had a parade permit. They were then charged with parading without a permit and failure to obey a state court injunction outlawing public demonstrations in Birmingham and were carted off to the jailyard in school buses and paddy wagons.

Demonstrators continued to move from the church, singing "We don't got nothing 'cause we don't got freedom,—We want our freedom now," and other freedom songs. The students were still singing as bus after bus left for the jail.

On the side streets white workers on their way home jeered and taunted the Negro students as police took their signs and herded them off.

Negro leaders later announced the day's demonstrations were over—850 had been arrested by that time. Firemen rolled up their equipment and moved on.

Negroes returned to their homes as the whites applauded and cheered the departing police.

Colombian Exchange Is Open

Plans are now complete for the establishment of a student exchange between the University of Antioquia and the University of North Carolina. Up to three room, board and tuition scholarships will be given to selected Carolina students. Three students from the University of Antioquia, which is in Medellin, Colombia, will be on this campus next year. The purpose of this exchange is to further understanding and increase communication btween the two countries and the student communities.

Established in 1871, the University of Antioquia now has an enrollment of 1800 students and is divided into faculties, schools and institutes. The academic year begins in February and ends in November. While the University has a large technical curriculum, it also offers a wide variety in the humanities, specifically courses in philosophy, literature, economics, political science, law, and education.

The selections committee for the Exchange reported yesterday that applications are not being received at the expected rate and encouraged students to apply.

Application forms are available in the Y office or in GM until May 11.

Interviews will be held on May 13 and 14. For further information contact Ben Newlin at 968-9073 or Jim Scott at 968-9177.

BA Honorary Initiates 16

Sixteen students in the UNC School of Business Administration were initiated into Beta Gamma Sigma, national honor society in business administration this week.

Initiation into the society is the highest scholastic honor a student in business administration can attain. The society is organized to reward scholarship and accomplishment in the area of business studies, and recognizes honor and integrity as the highest principles in the conduct of business.

The new members are: Charles S. Chinnis, Raleigh; Robert B. Des Jardins, Witchita, Kansas; Christopher B. Espy, Hendersonville; Jerald B. Long, Monroe; Samuel W. McNairy, Greensboro; Steve F. Moore, Raleigh; Morgan R. Pinney, Newcastle, Pa.; Leslie A. Rubin, Atlanta, Ga.; Robert D. Skees, Greensboro; Samuel H. Smith Jr., Charlotte; Larry C. Somers, Reidsville; Leonard L. Stewart, Brookville, Pa.; Kenneth E. Tutterow, Greensboro; and Richard F. Wacht, Hampton, Va.

Professor Rollie Tillman Jr., of the faculty of the School of Business Administration was initiated as faculty member.

Sophs Sell At Robbins

Residents of Chapel Hill and students of the University have the perfect opportunity to complete their spring shopping during Sophomore Merchant Week.

The sales will continue through Friday. Members of the Sophomore class will serve as salesmen.

Today, the scene shifts to J. B. Robbins where free punch and dancing will be added attractions.

Merchant Week winds up Friday at Kemps from 6 until 9 p.m.

A free door prize will be given away each night. Skirts and pants will be given from the clothing shops. Kemp's will give away a guitar.

Many items will be on sale according to a spokesman for the class.

Proceeds from the sale will go to the Sophomore Scholarship fund, which was set up by Bob Spearman when he was freshman class president. The class of '65 will award a scholarship to a member of their class at the end of his or her junior year. The recipient will be determined by the Scholarship Committee and the class itself.

Seniors who pass the buck . . .

Six seniors of the Class of 1963 gave "parting shot" addresses at a class meeting in Memorial Hall on Tuesday evening. Criticism of complacency, self-satisfaction, regimentation, curriculum, administration, "Carolina gentlemen" and other complaints rang through the night air.

Yesterday a number of seniors mailed to their Senior Alumni Committee their $1 together with enrollment cards in the Alumni Association. They will be receiving the "Alumni Review" as part of membership during the next 12 months—wherever they go. In short, as parting messages, they passed the buck. Names of new alumni paid-up members:

UNC Opens Tennis Title Defense Today

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina, a team beaten but twice in the past two seasons, begins what should be a methodical march to its fifth straight ACC Championships Tennis Title here today.

Coach Don Skakle's team, which has won 41 matches over the last two years to more than compensate for its two defeats to Miami, goes into this tourney assuming no more than that it will win — and win easily. The only question remaining is which of its members will come off with the individual trophies.

Singles action starts on the varsity courts at 9:00 this morning with doubles beginning soon thereafter in a complicated setup that promises confusion for the first couple of rounds.

But when it's all over, and it is reported that officials may try to end the tourney Friday afternoon, there will be no confusion. Only one in singles and two in doubles will remain, and UNC is heavily favored to come away with all the marbles.

Skakle, in his fifth year here, has yet to lose an ACC title or individual match, and, as has been overwhelmingly proven, again has the horses this year.

His number one mount is of course George Sokol, a blond, 5-9 stockily-built kid who has performed on the feature court ever since he joined the varsity last year.

A junior from Czechoslovakia by way of Bryn Mawr, Pa., Sokol was 22-1 last season, losing only to Rod Mandelstam of Miami. This year, he again lost to Mandelstam and dropped two other matches on the road — to Rollins' John Lawrence and Michigan's Harry Fauquier.

But Sokol has never lost an ACC match, and he is this tournament's defending singles champion. He must rate again as the man to beat this weekend.

Skakle has juggled his lineup considerably this spring and he, himself, probably is not sure of just who can, or who will do what in this final tennis fling. His men are ready to show him.

Perhaps Sokol's toughest competition will come from his teammates, five of whom are very capable of winning it all.

John "Bitsy" Harrison, the 6-7 Virginian, is the colorful one, the crowd-pleaser. His big serve and remarkable timing make him a threat at all times.

Ted Hoehn, the red-headed junior who formed, with Sokol, the brilliant one-two freshman punch a couple of years ago, must also be reckoned with.

Combining with Harrison to win the ACC doubles crown last year, Hoehn went into this season with high expectations, but took a tough break when sidelined early with an appendectomy operation. He is just now rounding into previous form and, when right, possesses possibly the best repertoire of the entire group.

Charlie Shaffer, Keith Stoneman and soph O. H. Parrish round out the top six, and these three are the darkhorses in the race.

Shaffer, a quick, strong remarkably-agile athlete, seems to have shaken off the injury to his knee and has played the big game better than anyone on the team this spring.

Stoneman, lone senior and an ACC doubles champion in 1961, plays the smooth, steady game and is definitely a man to watch this time out. He lost just five matches in his three-year career here.

Parrish, like Harrison from Richmond, Va., will be making his first tournament start today. A very heady player, the sophomore broke the starting lineup and moved as high as number three during the past season.

Bob Bettis

The tennis warriors resume battle today.

The occasion is the 1963 Atlantic Coast Conference Tennis Championships, and netters representing eight schools will converge on Chapel Hill for three days. Tennis enthusiasts are provided with an excellent opportunity to watch the ACC's best display their talents.

But to the casual observer, such a meet may appear drawn-out and complicated, especially if one is new to tournament competition. Thus before hearing UNC Coach Don Skakle comment on how he expects the teams to fare, it is best to get some background information on what the tournament means and how it is set up.

It should first be understood that whatever happens during the next few days has nothing to do with the conference championship. North Carolina has already won that (for the sixth straight year and ninth time in 10 years) by posting a 7-0 mark against their ACC brothers this season.

The tournament, then, is for two purposes:

(1) To determine a champion in the singles and doubles.

(2) To award a trophy to the team accumulating the most points over-all.

Each school is allowed to make eight entries in the singles and four entries in the doubles. Everytime a player wins his match he adds one point to his team's total.

The John F. Kenfield Trophy, a beautiful award that stands over three feet high, is presented to whomever captures the most points over-all. UNC has won this trophy for the past four years.

George Sokol will defend the singles crown that he won last year and Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison will do likewise for the doubles.

This, in essence, is how the ACC tournament is set up. It is something that stands out from the regular season. It is more of an individual effort than a team effort, though a team can win over-all, and it proves once and for all who is the best in singles and doubles.

Athletic department members are delighted that Mr. E. T. Penzold, Jr. of Norfolk, Va., a member of the Executive Committee of the Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association and one of the leading figures in tennis in the south, will act as official referee for the event.

About 600 more seats have been set up about the regular stands at the Varsity Courts. Match play starts at 9:00 a.m. on Thursday and Friday and after lunch on Saturday.

Coach Don Skakle and his Tar Heel netmen are faced with a challenge, and the team is well aware of that fact.

"They're all gunning for us," Skakle explained. "They know we're a heavy favorite and they would love to spring an upset."

Who will field the strongest teams, besides Carolina?

"Clemson, Maryland and Duke should give us the toughest competition," replied the coach. "Actually, the outcome of the draw (held last night) may greatly affect anyone's chances. (Note: If a school should get a bad draw, several of its best netters may be pitted against each other.)

This season UNC experienced little trouble with conference opposition. Will that affect the team to the point where it views the tournament as a big bore?

Skakle summed up the Tar Heel attitude appropriately:

"A boy can help himself because this thing is centered around individual glory. The fellows know that by playing well they can help themselves. And they have pride in representing the school and conference.

"UNC has some tournament players, meaning they play best when the pressure is on. We should be up for these matches."

The pressure is indeed on as seven revenge-minded teams take aim at Carolina's number one ranking.

Wright Leading UNC Batters

With three games remaining on the UNC baseball schedule, Tom Wright, following right along in his father's footsteps, leads the Tar Heels in batting with a .355 mark.

The junior third baseman from Shelby is the son of Tom Wright, Sr., who played a few games for the Boston Red Sox back in 1948-49, and is best remembered around the Tar Heel state for his great 1946 season in the Carolina League. That year Tom, Sr., playing for the Durham Bulls, socked the ball at a .380 clip, good enough to win the league batting crown.

Tom, Jr. began the season on the bench, but took over the hot corner job on April 9 against Wake Forest, socked a triple against the Deacs, and has been in the lineup ever since.

Coach Walt Rabb also has three other regulars above the magic .300 mark. Two are seniors—outfielders Heyward Hull (.333) and Buddy Tilden (.311)—and the other is junior shortstop Jim Speight (.303).

Soph second sacker Dickie Prindle leads the team in at bats (102), runs scored (22) and hits (29).

Speight sets the pace in doubles with six and is tied with Wright for the lead in triples with three.

Lack of the long ball has plagued the Tar Heels this season. Ken Willard and Bill Brown are tied for the team homer lead, but each has only three round-trippers.

UNC's pitchers are faring a lot better than the batters. The team's two aces, Spence Willard and Bill Haywood, both have earned run averages under 2.00. Willard's 1.76 is a shade better than Haywood's 1.85. Together the two have logged more than half of the innings pitched for the Tar Heels.

Brilliant Parker Scored 25

By KONO PONTIAC

Brilliant Jeff Parker finished his freshman campaign on UNC's lacrosse club with 25 goals in seven games, figures showed yesterday. Coach Connie Steele's club was 3-4 on the year.

Parker scored three or more times in each of the seven matches, getting five against the touring Amherst team.

Tom Thayer wound up with 15 tallies and Bud Adams got nine to finish behind Parker in the scoring derby. Thayer, along with Parker, scored in every match.

UNC's three wins came against Randolph Macon (14-6) and Duke's supposed freshman team (10-2 and 11-2). The stickmen lost to the Virginia frosh twice (11-10 in overtime and 11-10), Washington and Lee (9-7) and Amherst (11-8 in overtime).

Students Demonstrate 'Peacefully' Against Higher Rents, 3-Man Rooms

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

UNC students protested three-man rooms and dormitory rent increases Wednesday night as they marched through the campus and then on downtown Chapel Hill shouting, "Wake up Legislature;" "eighty-six, fifty or fight;" "ninety-six, fifty, hell no;" and "Three man rooms, hell no."

The demonstration was sponsored by Student Government and was held without repercussion. Some University, student and police officials had feared it might develop into a panty raid similar to the one held earlier this year.

The march began at Craige dormitory at 9:00 p.m. It passed Lenoir Hall at 9:15 and people begin shouting, "Come on Winston." They called to each dorm as they passed it.

The parade gained its largest momentum and support when it passed the upper and lower quads. This was a crucial point since the demonstrators had to march by the road leading to Cobb Women's dorm. But there was no mention of a panty raid and the march continued.

Over 20 cars were in the caravan and as many as 12 men were on one small foreign car.

When the group passed Alderman dorm, several women students joined and were greeted with an enthusiastic reception.

The demonstration was halted between the Northeast corner of Spencer dorm and the left side of President Friday's house.

Here student leaders led by president Mike Lawler, vice-president Bob Spearman and legislative whip Rufus Edmisten told several hundred students that the best way to take action on these "vital" matters is to call or write their parents immediately and have them in turn see their legislators this weekend.

Spearman said if the line were not drawn on room rent increases, then "there's no telling how much we'll be paying in a few years." He said that room rent had gone up $80 during the past seven years and this was due to the last five dorms built on a self liquidating basis.

"Enrollment here is increasing year after year," Spearman said, "and if something is not done now, then self-liquidation will follow self-liquidation."

Lawler said that everyone should support President Friday who is trying to persuade the state to pay for half of the proposed 925 man dormitory.

Friday is in Raleigh almost daily plugging for the Higher Education Bill, budget requests and other matters affecting the greater University.

Lawler said there was "less space per individual per dollar at UNC . . . This means," he said, "that UNC students pay more money for less dormitory room space than any other institution.

After the speaking rally broke up, the students then marched en-masse on Franklin Street. They continued by Big Fraternity Court, by Whitehead dorm and then to the Bell Tower where the crowd dispersed.

APPOINTED SECRETARY

Sarah Broadhurst was appointed yesterday as Secretary to Student Body Vice-President Bob Spearman.

All Student Costs Have Risen Recently

Rents Follow Pattern

By BILL WUAMETT

The proposed increase in dormitory rent is the first in five years, but it is only one in a series of increases in both dorm rents and other student costs since World War II.

In 1947-48, for instance, the dorm rent was $63. Since that time, rent has increased by $110, going to $75 in 1948, $100 in 1951, $130 in 1955 to pay for the first self-liquidating dorms, and to $170 in 1958 to pay for Craige and Ehringhaus.

The present proposal would raise dorm rent to $190 a year, representing an increase of over 200 per cent since 1947.

Student costs, however, include much more than dorm rent. This rent represents only 14 per cent of the estimated total costs of $1,338 for in-state students for nine months at Carolina.

Tuition costs have also risen—from $81 in 1948 to the present rate of $150. Fees have also increased, from $65 to $104. Costs to out-of-state students have risen from $373 tuition and fees in 1948 to the present $704.

These costs are at least partially responsible for the obvious fact that many students at Carolina could not afford to come here without some sort of assistance.

These forms of assistance include scholarships, jobs, loans and teaching assistantships.

According to figures compiled by the Student Aid Office and presented to the Advisory Budget Commission of the Legislature last November, 631 students now hold part-time jobs in the University. These figures do not include teaching assistantships, which many graduate students hold.

The figure also does not include jobs held outside the University in areas such as clerking in uptown stores, work in fraternities and sororities and other part-time jobs in the area.

Student Aid figures also show that 1,010 students now hold scholarships of some sort, not including Morehead Scholars and athletic grants-in-aid. Last year, these grants totaled $304,500.

Loans also constitute an important form of support for students. Over $530,000 was loaned to students during the past year.

These figures show that many of the 9,600 students here have financial difficulty in attending school. On the other hand, there are over 3400 student cars registered with the Dean of Men's Office.

It must be noted, however, that 6200 students here DO NOT keep cars, or almost two thirds of the 9,600 enrollment. At least 1,000 of those cars here are owned by married students, for whom a car is often a necessity of life.

Freshmen are not allowed to keep cars here, and sophomores must maintain a C plus average to do so.

The statistics on rent, tuition, financial aid and cars lead to several conclusions and questions.

First, student costs have risen drastically since World War II.

Second, a substantial number of students here, over 1500, receive some sort of financial assistance in their school expenses.

Third, the affluence of some students, those owning cars, in no way lessens the financial burden on those students who work and-or hold scholarships or loans.

The present proposed increase in dorm rent represents a significant increase in student costs. Dorm residents are presently paying $70 a year to retire a bonded debt of $4,875,000 which has already been used to build dormitories.

The new increase would mean they would be paying $90 a year for construction of living facilities, meaning that in 4 years a student would make a compulsory gift of $360 to the University building fund.

Thus the basic question for the proposed increase is this: should students, many of whom cannot attend school without financial assistance or part-time work, be expected to completely pay for capital improvements to state property, namely, dormitories?

And how can this fact be reconciled with the American tradition that ALL of the citizens share in the cost of public education?

Further, will this increase add momentum to a perhaps established precedent of putting more of the costs on the individual student, thus eventually making ability to pay a condition of admission to the University?

These are some of the questions now being decided in secret sessions by a sub-committee of the joint House-Senate Appropriations Committee.

The answers should be known within a week, as precedent indicates that the sub-committee's recommendations are usually followed by the parent Committee and then by the two houses.

Treasurer Akers Explains Reasons For Hike In Rent

Treasurer of the Student Body Dick Akers said yesterday that lower dormitory rents should not take precedence over maintaining the quality of the University.

He said that feelings have run high over the proposed rent increases and that the students should know the other side of the story. In a statement, Akers listed the factors he feels would favor 100% liquidating dormitories.

The text of his statement follows:

Feelings about the proposed dormitory rent increase have run high recently, and I, along with the DTH editors, President Lawler, and others, must confess to participating in spreading these feelings.

However, I feel that it is time that the students here knew the other side of the question concerning self-liquidating dormitories.

Recently, Gerry Good, Ralph Mosley (of the IDC), and I met in Raleigh with Senator Tom White, Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee and a member of the Advisory Budget Commission.

We presented the existing arguments against 100% self-liquidating dormitories. Senator White listened politely and then began giving us facts; facts which, when taken collectively, seem to preclude any possibility that the Appropriations Subcommittee may change their minds.

1. Although there will be $2.5 million in self-liquidating physical improvements built at Carolina during the next two years, there will be an additional $8.75 million in improvements financed by direct appropriations. These improvements include such items as renovations to Wilson Library, a 1060 capacity cafeteria in the Craige-Ehringhaus area, an undergraduate library, and others.

2. At all state supported colleges, there will be $27.5 million spent for new dormitories and student unions, all of which will be 100% self-liquidating, except for small amounts at Pembroke State College, Winston-Salem State Teachers College, and Fayetteville State Teachers College, which will be partially self-liquidating (not because the colleges are smaller, but because of the very nature of the colleges themselves).

The effect at the other colleges of setting a precedent for Carolina can easily be visualized.

3. A motion was made (by Sen. White) and passed out of the Advisory Budget Commission which called for an additional $784,000 to be allocated to Carolina for increases in faculty salaries and equipment over and above that requested. This money will be appropriated in an attempt to bring faculty salaries at Carolina up to a point where we can better compete with other schools for the services of top professors.

Sen. White strongly implied that there is little chance for us to get a state appropriation for the proposed dormitory, but he modified his statements with two cogent factors:

a) A bill which he intends to introduce into the Senate (already introduced?) tomorrow would allow the sale of state bonds for the construction of dormitories, there-

U. S. Goal In Southeast Asia —Keep Nations Independent

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of reports from UNC delegates to the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference on Southeast Asia.

Since we were on only one round table each, we can only tell you about the speeches, discussion, and resolutions in which our round tables were involved (though a final report of all resolutions is being sent by the Naval Academy in a few weeks).

The Moderator of the Burma, Thailand, the Malaya Federation and Singapore was George F. Gant, the Program Director of the South and Southeast Asia Program for the Ford Foundation, Overseas Development Program. We started with these General Resolutions:

RESOLUTIONS

Our ultimate goal in Southeast Asia, as in the rest of the world, is to insure popular government and national independence in a peaceful and prosperous world. However, in the area this goal cannot be achieved amidst the tension of a bi-polar power struggle. Hence, our present policy in Southeast Asia must be designed to maximizing the security of the free world. Southeast Asia then, is a strategic area in the cold world struggle in view of: 1) its geographic location; 2) its economic potential as a prosperous area which must be maintained in the ranks of the free world, and which cannot be allowed to fall into the hands of the Communist Bloc.

In view of the importance of this area to the interests of the Free World, then, we do not feel that any nation in this area be disqualified from American support because its political and/or economic system differs from the American model. Nor should support be withheld from a nation which does not choose to align itself with either of the power blocs.

Burma presented the first problem. Burma, though having a very viable economy, is the most provincial nation in terms of its international relations in Southeast Asia. Under the strong rule of General Ne Win, who overthrew V Nu in 1962, all political parties have been banned, and such private foundations as the Ford Foundation have been told to leave. Her policy has taken a turn toward the far left, though she considers herself a neutral. Burma is not anti-American, she is simply afraid of antagonizing her neighbor — Red China.

We were addressed at one round table by Mr. U On Sien the Burmese Ambassador to the United States. He stated that their socialism was neither Marxist nor democratic, but Burmese socialism, a mixture of everything from Marxism to Buddhism. U On Sien said that Ne Win's regementation is needed because public opinion was not mature. He mentioned that they had had much trouble with Communist guerillas but wanted to suppress the rebels themselves. He emphatically denied that Red China supported these guerillas. When the Ambassador stated that "Burma wants to be the friend of every country," he meant it; the Burmese are frightened about their national security. Thus, the Roundtable came to the following decisions about Burma:

Burma

The ultimate aim of the United States is to maintain Burmese indendence and to encourage its economic development. We do not consider it a realistic policy to expect Burmese alignment with the West at this time. Consequently, we consider a neutral Burma as the favorable policy alternative open to the United States.

1. Upon request by the Burmese government we should furnish bi-lateral economic aid for specific development projects, in order to prevent Burmese economic dependence upon the Communist bloc. The United States should also support aid to Burma through an international or regional organizations which eventually would be of a non-political nature.

2. It would be to the detriment of American foreign policy to withdraw support from the Ne Win government which, despite its autocratic nature, appears to be the only institutional vehicle able to further Burmese economic development at this time.

Next in the series: Thailand and Malaya.

Dick Gregory Says He Has Been Beaten

Negro Comic Puts Blame On Police

By JOEL BULKLEY

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Nationally known comedian Dick Gregory said yesterday that he had been whipped and beaten by police during his three-day stay in the county jail here.

Gregory was arrested Monday afternoon for parading without a permit after leading fifty student demonstrators from the 16th Street Baptist Church toward the City Hall.

He was released today on $300 bail allegedly put up by the Birmingham movement."

Gregory said that he was whipped and beaten Tuesday afternoon outside his cell by five policemen, who used hammers, billy clubs, and a sawed off pool stick. He indicated that he had undergone medical treatment today after his release from jail for bruises on his arm and shoulder.

He failed to say whether or not he planned to bring legal action against the city.

Gregory also noted that he received no food until after he had been in jail for twenty-four hours, and that the food he did get "tasted like garbage." He added, however, that by the time he got the food, "It was almost like home cooking."

Gregory reiterated his earlier statement that he would stay in Birmingham "until the situation is cleared up."

Also in Birmingham yesterday, Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. announced that at least two and possibly three of the Negroes' demands had been granted by a bi-racial negotiating committee of five Negro leaders.

The demands granted, said King, were: desegregation of downtown department store facilities such as lunchcounters and fitting rooms; equal employment opportunities for Negroes; and possibly the dropping of charges on all Negro demonstrators.

Of the more than 2200 demonstrators arrested, about 1000 remained in jail yesterday. King also said that if all four of the Negroes' demands were not granted, demonstrations would begin again today.

The fourth point, which King did not mention, was the demand that a permanent bi-racial board be set up in the city to iron out Negro grievances.

Yack Goes On Stand Today

1963 Yackety Yacks will be distributed this afternoon from 1 to 5:30 p.m. behind GM. Books will also be given out at these same hours next week Monday through Friday. ID cards are needed, as well as 35 cents for students wishing to purchase a special book cover.

Substitute Measure For Apartment Rule Adopted By Council

The Women's residence Council said yesterday it has passed a resolution favoring a temporary substitute for the controversial apartment rule.

The Council voted to accept a slightly modified ruling that a coed could enter a man's apartment only if accompanied by at least one other woman.

The original rule struck down by the council and subsequently re-instated by direct action of Dean of Women Catherine Carmichael stipulated the presence of two couples in an apartment.

WRC President Nancy Culler said the new proposal would be put in effect by the council only if the administration agreed to reconsider the issue at a meeting in early June.

Student Party President Mike Lawler and Vice-President Bob Spearman issued a statement on the proposal emphasizing the temporary nature of the concession.

The two SG heads said the temporary ruling would provide a time period to take the issue out of the "crisis" context.

They indicated a cooling-off period was needed "in order for both sides of the controversy to consider the conflict more rationally."

The administration has not yet accepted or rejected the proposal, but Lawler indicated a meeting would be set sometime this week.

He said he felt both parties, the administration and the students, recognized the shortcomings of the old two-couple rule and will work toward a "more realistic" one.

Spearman said student government now favors some possible alternates to the old apartment rule and will probably push for the approval of one of them if and when faculty-student discussions resume:

—A permission system which would enable coeds to visit off-campus apartments alone if agreed to by the parents. Permission would be granted for a full year.

—A plan similar to the one struck down by Dean Carmichael earlier. This would make the apartment rule applicable only to freshmen women.

Spearman said he felt these or some other compromise solution would win faculty approval.

Vinroot Selected

Richard Vinroot was selected to head the Class of '63 as its permanent class president at a meeting of the senior class yesterday.

Vinroot has been president of the class for the past two years. Other permanent officers selected at the meeting were Inman Allen, 1st vice-president; Larry Brown, 2nd vice-president; Joe Craver, terasurer; and Beth Walker, secretary.

The duties of the permanent class officers will be similar to those of the regular class officers, except that the 2nd vice-president will have special responsibility for class-wide activities.

Vinroot and Miss Walker made the elections a clean sweep by being selected as "Mr. Alumnus" and "Miss Alumna."

They were chosen from a field of 15 candidates nominated by a special committee of seniors.

Miss Walker was recently named "The Outstanding Senior Woman" by the Dean of Women.

The candidates were nominated as people "whose campus careers recall qualities which symbolize the 'good alumnus' and the 'good alumna'," according to the nominating committee.

Walker and Vinroot will be honored by the General Alumni Association with certificates to be presented at the annual Alumni Luncheon on June 3 which many seniors, parents and alumni will attend.

Open Business Group Meets Tonight At 8

The executive committee of the Committee For Open Business will present proposals for a course of action in the coming months tonight at 8 p.m. at St. Josephs C. M. E. church, 508 W. Rosemary St.

The five-member committee will also be expanded.

The committee first met last Friday, at which time the executive committee was formed and the picketing and boycott activities, began by SPU, were transferred to CFOB leadership.

Clarence Parker and Harold Foster, a student at North Carolina College in Durham, were elected co-chairmen of the executive committee, which will suggest policy, carry on negotiations and research, and take emergency action.

Other members of the executive committee include the Rev. W. R. Foushee, pastor of the St. Joseph's Church, Hilliard Caldwell, president of the Chapel Hill Young Adults Improvement Committee, and Lou Calhoun, president of the UNC Wesley Foundation.

Fred Lubs, Male Lead in "Orchard"

Review Of 'The Cherry Orchard'

Part Of The Blame Lies With Anton

By STEVE DENNIS

"The Cherry Orchard," by Anton Chekhov; Playmakers Theatre May 8-12; directed by Russell Graves; setting by Tommy Rezzuto; Costumes by Larry Randolph.

Every theatre can expect to have an occasional production which falls down on almost every significant factor, but the Carolina Playmakers, in "The Cherry Orchard," seem to have labored to provide a statistical necessity.

Written by Anton Chekhov about the dissolution of the Russian upper classes at the turn of the century, "The Cherry Orchard" is in many ways applicable to any society which is undergoing great social upheavals.

The theme of the substitution of one social structure for another is not new with the play, and it was treated with far more electricity and vitality in Bernard Shaw's "Heartbreak House," written shortly after "The Cherry Orchard."

A Russian noblewoman has returned to Russia from Paris to superintend the sale of her estate and cherry orchard to pay debts on the estate. The estate is bought by a former serf of the estate who is the type of the striving bourgeoisie. The action is intended to show why the former owners of the estate are no longer fit, financially as well as morally and socially, to own the estate.

Early in the play, one character says, "The sun has set, ladies and gentlemen." Later, someone adds, "Yes, life in this house is ended. There won't be any more." The obvious symbolism of statements like these produces a play which cross-cuts between reality and symbolism.

"To possess living souls, that depraved all who lived before and who are living now." This is the explanation of one member of this modern Job's family for the "catastrophes" attending them. The possibility that this production has a "message," particularly one based on the above statement, is slight. Had the director been able to decide more clearly what he wanted to do with the play, there could have been a clear theme of social responsibility.

Much of the acting was self-conscious and plodding. Anne West as Dunyasha, a maid, furnished the one really bright spot in the entire production. She was at times sensitive, hilarious, and poignant. She has delightful zest about her acting which is noticeably lacking in some of the other cast members.

Fred Lubs, as Yermolay Alexeyevitch Lopahin, the male lead, was dull, awkward, and unimaginative. He overplayed the ineptness of the peasant lad who managed to buy the estate where he was once prohibited from entering the kitchen. His inability to make himself acceptable to the social classes which he conquers financially could have been extremely dramatic, but it is ignored in the welter of personal relationships on stage.

Edna Clark, as Lyuboff Andreyevna Ranevskaya, was weak. She never presented the personality of someone who has had power and realizes she is losing it to those over whom she once held it. Her total weakness makes it hard for us to believe she was ever strong.

Janice Moore as Anya made a constant attempt to look youthful and energetic—as a consequence looking awkward. Patricia Lynch as Varya played several very nice moments. She was the most realistic of all these "real" people.

The setting, by Tommy Rezutto, is excellent. A realistic indoor scene which briefly becomes an almost surrealistic summerhouse, it furnishes the most valid drama of the play—how the Playmakers manage the transition on their handkerchief-sized stage. The costumes by Larry Randolph are also extremely successful. Both setting and costumes manage to create a heaviness which is not without a certain elegance—the expression of a society which must reflect its coexistence with serfs and poverty by somewhat primitive solidness.

The set is perhaps most remarkable for the way in which it creates an illusion of real depth on the small stage. This is done in part by the use of black curtains at the back and by different elevations within the set itself.

Not all of the responsibility for this unfortunate production lies with the Playmakers, though. Part of the blame is Chekhov's. He has tried to combine symbolism and reality in this play, and the two do not blend well here.

"The Cherry Orchard" is the first Chekhov to be staged in Chapel Hill in several years. After Wednesday night, it will probably be the last for several years. This would be a shame.

Quality AND Quantity

Perhaps the most heartening—and in the long run, the most effective—factor involved in the current discussion over dorm rent hikes is the attempt by students to speak and act responsibly concerning the subject.

Wednesday night's rally, aimed at protesting both the rent rise and the three-man situation, was conducted with restraint.

The remarks of Student Body President Mike Lawler were equally restrained. He made it clear that we are not objecting to self-liquidation features in the building of stadiums or student unions.

Rather, he pointed out, "We question whether the state, as a policy, is beginning to place basic necessities (such as housing) in the category of a luxury."

In yesterday morning's Tar Heel, reporter Bill Waumett (after a careful survey of all pertinent information) posed some searching questions as to the advisability of building much-needed dormitories on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis.

Now Student Body Treasurer Dick Akers has spoken up on the matter—with restraint and out of a sense of responsibility.

We happen to think he is wrong (see his statement on page one), but we are glad he has the courage of his convictions.

We think Akers is wrong because he assumes that providing money for higher faculty salaries and other much-needed improvements precludes the state from being able to provide any money for new dormitories.

He is saying, in effect, that the budget pie is just so big and it must be cut with an eye to quality, not quantity.

We agree with this to a certain extent, which is why we support the University Administration in its request that the state pay only half the cost of new dormitories and that students pay the other half.

This is a highly unpalatable compromise for us to have to make, but it is a necessary one. It is a concession to reality. North Carolina is not a rich state.

But she will get no richer if she short-sightedly insists on pricing education out of the market for effect of continually climbing costs the many, which is what the end must eventually be.

So where we differ with Akers, and Sen. White, and those who agree with their point of view, is that we cannot have quality and quantity too.

This is not a debatable point. We must have quality; but we cannot, as a state institution designed to serve all the people, avoid having quantity.

The painstakingly-thorough Carlyle Commission report is proof of this. The Commission recognized that the baby boom is almost upon us and we must prepare to meet it or be engulfed in it.

This means, as the Commission's report said, that we must build more schools to absorb the influx of education-hungry students, and we must do this carefully so as not to dilute the quality of the schools already in existence.

Thus the Commission recommended that a system of Community Colleges be built throughout the state, while the University works at expanding itself to include other campuses without compromising its standards.

And thus the Commission recognized that the real problem facing higher education in North Carolina is not quality or quantity but quality and quantity.

What we at UNC are presently faced with in regard to dorm rent hikes is an aspect of this same problem. We must have both quality and quantity.

And here there can be no equivocation.

The state must do all it can—if for no more noble reason than that such action is in its own best long-range interest—to curtail the existing tendency toward making ability to pay a requirement of admission to the University.

The state, through the General Assembly, can only do this at present by agreeing to pay half the cost of new dormitories—not by making them entirely self-liquidating, which would add momentum to the price-rise trend; nor by paying for them entirely, which the budget will not stand.

The General Assembly, in short, must act on this question as we have endeavored to—reasonably. We have strong hopes that it will.

But just to help insure it does, call your parents and explain the present situation to them. Urge them to send a Public Opinion telegram to their State Senator or Representative requesting that the state appropriate at least half the money for the planned 900-man dorm, rather than making dorm residents pay for it by themselves.

Eventually, we hope, as North Carolina's financial position improves, the trend toward higher student costs can be stopped completely, as indeed it must be if the University is to fulfill its chartered function of adequately serving all her citizens.

US Students Politically Unconscious

By ANDREW ORLIN
The Michigan Daily

United States education does not foster a socially and politically conscious student class. In fact, it does not stimulate any type of student class at all.

This point was dramatically driven home at the United States National Student Association's regional conference held last week at Wayne State University. On one side of the room sat students educated under the European system of education. They were from Australia, Brazil, Morocco, Iraq and the Congo. On the other side of the room sat student leaders from the University, Marygrove College and WSU. And the foreign students stumped the Americans with one question: "What have you done?"

The foreign students have been educated in a system where students and universities are shown great respect. They are from societies where students form powerful political and social units.

These students were now questioning an alternative system. The mute fact that only three schools out of nine in the Michigan region bothered to attend spoke for itself.

* * *

WHILE the foreign participants could point to vocal and effective student actions in their countries, American students could only point to impotent telegrams sent to Attorney General Robert Kennedy over the Oxford rebellion.

John Felix Koli of the Congo noted that students form an intellectual elite in his country and "when we say something, the government must listen; we act just like a political party."

In Iraq, a teacher slapped an insolent child. The child happened to be the son of a government official's son and consequently the teacher was dismissed. After student demonstrations and strikes, the teacher was reinstated. Besides mild student protests, no such action ever occurs in the United States.

* * *

WHILE STUDENTS and universities hold high places of distinction in Europe they, hold no comparable positions in the United States. Here, colleges are portrayed as ivory towered castles which are apart from the society in which they reside. Professors are supposed to write academic treatises but are prohibited from speaking out against Kennedy's policy toward Cuba.

Within this cloistered framework, American students absorb knowledge but take no part in the politics surrounding them. Some students become campus leaders and, while they are aware of student apathy, they do nothing about it. They resemble in no way the active and forceful leaders in the European and Latin American universities.

USNSA is a nice passtime for these students. The summer conference is great fun. But USNSA is a powerless group by European standards.

* * *

HERE AGAIN a foreign student, Mustapha Fazazi of Morocco, asked "What has it done?" Neglecting the national scope of the organization, he wished to know what it had done on the campus and regional level. After many hems and haws, a WSU student leader admitted that even at the campus level nothing very much had been done.

But this lack of accomplishment is not solely confined to WSU. Recently a University leader came to The Daily and asked the paper to "play big" the newly established Campus Travel Board. The board is important because it is one of USNSA's direct benefits to students here on campus, she said.

Foreign travel can be of great educational value. But what else does USNSA do to influence students at large?

CHAIRMAN of the Michigan Region Howard Abrams noted that USNSA's broadly based membership makes it nearly impossible for the organization to become anything like its European and Latin American counterparts. By ridding USNSA of fringe groups, this organization would no doubt become smaller but also more active.

Across the South, colleges belong to a more conservative organization than USNSA. This group stands firmly behind the doctrine of "states rights." Their beliefs differ greatly from those held by USNSA. In that they are united behind a cause, this group comes closer to Europe's National Union of Students than NSA.

Students could be made more politically conscious through an organization which actively tries to implement its goals. When American student leaders can point to accomplishments of their respective organizations, then students will become more interested. When these organizations actually do something, American leaders can proudly answer a foreign student's question of "What have you done"

Letters To The Daily Tar Heel

SPU No Longer Operating College Cafe Picket Line

To the Editors:

On Friday, May 3, at the organizational meeting of the Committee For Open Business, the Student Peace Union officially ended the boycott and picket line against establishments practicing racial discrimination in Chapel Hill. At that time, the Committee For Open Business took two actions. One was to form a provisional executive committee which is to be expanded into a permanent committee soon, and which has the responsibility to decide upon actions to be taken against Chapel Hill establishments practicing racial discrimination. The second was to vote by an overwhelming majority to instigate a picket line against the College Cafe and a boycott of all Chapel Hill restaurants practicing segregation.

In other words, every thing is the same, EXCEPT that the SPU is no longer operating the College Cafe picket line or the general boycott. This should end the criticism, however unjustified, that the SPU has no business in civil rights.

One problem remains, however. The Committee For Open Business needs support. Though the SPU has stepped out officially, its members, as individuals, are still supplying many of the working hours.

It is time for the many people who support integration efforts verbally to become activists — yes, activists. It is not enough to just respect the boycott — though doing so is a start. Unless there is an active, concentrated, campus-community effort to end discrimination in Chapel Hill establishments, the boycott will fail.

Failure here may not seem too important. True, there are more dramatic spots to work for desegregation than Chapel Hill. However, if we are not willing to achieve desegregation here — now —when and where will we be willing to do so? If we are not willing to desegregate today, are we not going to make Malcolm X and James Baldwin prophets?

The CFOB needs pickets. It needs more people at the next meeting — Friday, May 10, at St. Josephs C. M. E. Church. It needs suggestions as to possible action. It needs people willing to carry out these actions. I know exams are coming up, but the people picketing, and the students at the meeting last Friday night, have exams too. They took a little time out. Will you?

View From The Hill

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

When the Manifesto appeared in the TAR HEEL last Sunday we were distressed.

It is, after all, no frivolous matter when an organization as influential and respected as the Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club sees fit to publicly question one's intentions. But one must learn to bear the burden of public disgrace as best one can and to carry on with a stiff upper lip.

It seems that our column of April 25 has upset the Progressive Laborers — more specifically, the chairman of that esteemed body, Mr. Larry Phelps. In fact, we venture to say that Mr. Phelps hasn't been as upset since the American government kept him from a trip to Cuba this Christmas.

The article in question, with which Phelps has taken issue in a monumental letter to the editors, was written to point out that discrimination is not the only social problem that confronts American Negroes. Many Negro leaders, we felt and still feel, ignore the shortcomings of their race and foster an irresponsibility that only increases racial antagonisms. Honest racial compatibility cannot be achieved until these leaders have made a critical evaluation of the situations of which the white man so often speaks. Race relations are not a one-way tsreet.

Having branded our article "a slanderous attack upon American Negroes," Mr. Phelps launches into a lengthy and mildly amusing Marxian history of the American Negro. But when he wanders onto the subject once more, the effect is devastating. Listen to this: "His pen quivering with hypocritical righteousness, Mr. Maupin offers as 'proof' of the Negro's inferiority the high incidence of crimes of violence among urban Negroes."

The quotation marks around "proof" are a clever touch—particularly since the word never appeared in the article. Nor did any mention of "inferiority." But the real masterstroke of the paragraph comes to light in Phelps' brilliant justification of the high Negro crime rate: "The worst thing, Mr. Maupin, that you can say about the Negro is that his violence is misdirected. He should direct it not at his fellow Negro workers, his wife, or the Puerto Rican gang on the next block — he should rather direct it at those who are the agents of his misery: The police who in both North and South and even in the West are beating a living record of brutality into his flesh . . ."

By George, you've got it, Phelps!

What could be a more glorious demonstration of civic consciousness than an armed uprising against the American police forces?

But, without doubt, Chapel Hill's own Red Terrorist Doctor saves the best till last. "To be blunt about it," he says, "the Negro should direct this anger at American capitalism, that rotten economic system which feeds on rascism, exploitation, militarism, unemployment, and other forms of human misery."

This is stretching the limits of human endurance. To be labelled a slanderer is bad enough, but to be called a money-grubbing capitalist is more than a human being can take.

It's almost enough to make your pen stop quivering.

Girls Abroad Can Hitchhike Too—And Do

By PETE RANGE

Helmi and I sped across the flat Dutch countryside, making good time in the cool evening. A stop in an old Dutch tavern for refreshment, a call to our friend in Amsterdam, then another fifty kilometers travel and we turned our VW-bus off into a neat, small woods. In ten minutes we had turned around the back seat, blown up air matresses and climbed into our sleeping bags spread out in the back of the bus. The June sun and chirping birds were already up by the time coffee was ready the next morning, the back of the bus now serving as our kitchen, then as washroom, then as trunk. And on we rolled towards Amsterdam.

That's how a German student and I lived for sixteen days on a hectic three-thousand mile circuit through seven European countries last June. We scraped together $550 from friends, bought a 1957 VW-Bus with a new exchange motor in it, and made the trip. One repair and a new tire — $45. Back in Goettingen we washed and polished our beloved "Papagena" (so we had christened the dear bus) and tried for two weeks to get $600 for it. Finally we sold her for $550 —not bad.

This story illustrates one way to travel in Europe cheaply. Of course we had an especially good deal, language fluency, and plenty of time on our side. And Helmi is a born businessman.

There are sundry other ways of traveling in Europe. One can take advantage of the buy-and-resell deals offered by certain automobile companies, notably in London and Paris. Complications are fewer, language fluency is not required, and travel is comfortable. And don't forget — though small-car mileage is better, gas prices in Europe are almost double those of the U. S.

Back last March I invested $110 in a used motor scooter and got back $85 on the resale after five months of good-and-bad service from the machine. New scooter prices start at about $250 fi bought from the factory in Genoa, Italy, and then go up according to size of the scooter and location of the dealer. Though I had luck with my scooter, it would be wise to invest at least $150 in a good used scooter.

Good German motorcycles are going for beans with the new car-craze (American-inspired) in Teutonia. For $95 I purchased a fine, 1957 BMW motorcycle, with a 250cc engine, and traveled 3000 miles from Germany to Athens, Greece. in four weeks. I carried a heavy load of camping gear throughout the trip and a second passenger for awhile. In Athens I parted with my motorcycle for $185, selling him to an American soldier there.

But before I began such luxury travel last March I had hitchhiked about 5,000 miles around North and Central Europe, the means of transportation of any poor student. I found things went very speedily, though there were many other students hitchhiking at the same time, Two cardinal hints: carry a small American flag along (say, 14 x 12 inches), and use a sign showing your destination. Common dress is shorts, blue jeans, or wool pants if the weather is cold, sandals, sweater, and jacket. By far the best luggage is a simple camping knapsack.

Female students may be reading all this wondering "What about us?" Well, what about you — so far as most of these suggestions go, you are no different from the boys. In Oslo I was standing outside the youth hostel when two girls drove up on a scooter they had bought in London. Girls doubling with a boy on his scooter is as common as baseball in springtime. Girls can hitchhike, too, with another girl or with a boy. Often one meets students in youth or student hostels with whom one can travel for a few days or weeks if you both have the same destination. Ambition, imagination, maturity and self-confidence—with these no girl is limited in her travels in Europe.

New Society Selects 40

Forty campus followers, a YMCA advisor and a Graham Memorial flunky were conked in High-Noon ceremonies recently into the Order of the Dirty Old Men.

A spokesman for the order said the conking ceremony was held at noon "because we're not as crazy as some people who get up at four in the morning."

The ceremony was highlighted by a speech by national president D. O. Mann, entitled "How to be Lecherous in three easy lessons."

The certificate of achievement reads in part ". . . has shown great ability in perservering to extend and/or fracture the barrier sometimes referred to as the limit of decency and good taste. Therefore, the executive committee feels him worthy of the title DIRTY OLD MAN."

The newly initiated DOM's are: Dick Akers, J. Wiley Ballard, Spencer Barnes, Marshall Bellovin, Mickey Blackwell, Gary Blanchard, Latta Bauom, Steve Boretsky.

Also, Jim Carr, Mike Chanin, John Cornell, Bruce Cooper, Don Curtis, Roger Davis, Jim Daniel, Harry DeLung, Dave Ethridge.

Also Dick Ellis, George Fitzgerald, Charlie Gordon, Gerry Good, Gary Crosboll, Horace Johnson Jr., Chip Lenz, Steve Mazoff, Braxton Matthews, Solon Minton, W. Jack Nelson, also David Orcutt, Bob Payton, Bill Poteet, Dick Sayre, Bob Spearman, Buzzy Stubbs, John Ulfelder, J. D. Wellborn, Bob Wicks, William F. Wall, Richard Westin.

Also Jim Wallace.

Two honoraries were conked. Archie Copeland of Graham Memorial and Tom Davis of the YMCA, were inducted because they are "a vital segment of the University spectrum anyway."

Tardy Trophy Added To Cadet Collection

Cadets from the University of North Carolina have just received a new trophy to add to their collection — one that arrived a month and a half late.

The AFROTC Rifle Team earned it last March in the National Rifle Association Tournament at The Citadel, Charleston, S. C. They couldn't take the trophy then, however, because the Furman University team contested UNC's high score.

The disputed shots were so close that officials could not decide which came closest to the bullseye. The entire target had to be sent to National Rifle Association Headquarters in Washington, D. C., where a magnifying device was used to determine which was the winning bullet.

—Akers Explains Rent Hike—

by easing the self-liquidation load.

b) A bill which he intends to introduce soon would equalize dormitory rents in state-supported schools (We now pay much higher rents than most other schools, such as ECC and WCC). This would tend to greatly slow down increases at Carolina as new dorms are built in the future.

To me, the most important aspect of the conversation was this: With a limited income (N.C. is chronically below 40th in per capita income in the U.S.) the Legislature has adopted a long-term policy of trying to maintain the quality of the University, for it is upon the faculty, library and equipment that the University rests it reputation, not upon its housing (even if private capital be lured into the housing business here—a not totally undesirable thing).

I agree with this policy.

Jane Wilson Given Bost Scholarship

Jane Wilson, a student in UNC's Graduate School of Social Work, has been named the second recipient of the School's Annie Kizer Bost Scholarship, it was announced today by Arthur E. Fink, dean of the School of Social Work.

The scholarship consists of a one year's tuition award for the academic year now in progress.

Floyd Evans, director of Public Welfare, Wayne County, Goldsboro, graduate of the UNC School of Social Work and president of the School's Alumni Association, presented the scholarship to Miss Wilson.

Miss Wilson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Wilson of Kannapolis, formerly of Charlotte. She attended the A. L. Brown High School in Charlotte. She is a June, 1962 graduate of Woman's College where she majored in sociology and was active in student government.

The Annie Kizer Bost Scholarship was set up as an endowment by the School of Social Work's Alumni Association in the spring of 1958. The fund has been growing since that time and is continuing to increase in the form of contributions from many interested persons throughout North Carolina.

The fund represents a tribute to the late Mrs. Bost, State Commissioner of Public Welfare from 1930 to 1944. The fund provides for scholarships to further the education of promising younger persons in the field of social work.

This year's scholarship recipient worked as a psychiatric aide at the Highland Hospital in Asheville last summer.

She has just returned from completing social work field requirements in a state hospital in Maryland.

Tyree Named Editor Of Chem Magazine

Dr. S. Y. Tyree Jr., UNC professor of chemistry, has recently been chosen editor of Inorganic Chemical Syntheses.

He was selected from 20 associate editors, including some of the top inorganic chemists in the world. The publication presents new and better methods of synthesizing inorganic compounds.

Dr. Tyree was also chosen to serve as a representative of inorganic chemists of the Council of the American Chemical Society, the governing body of the ACS.

He will also continue to serve on a monthly journal put out by the Society's Division of Chemical Education.

Seniors Can Get Special Bargain Now

"It's a sure thing we'll soon be alumni," Charles Shelton said yesterday in discussing plans for the enrollment of seniors in the UNC Alumni Association.

Shelton and Betty McDonald are co-chairmen of a senior class alumni committee appointed by Class President Richard Vinroot to help enroll their classmates as members of the Association.

A special first-year token membership fee of one dollar will give any senior a full one-year membership. As a member, he or she will automatically receive "The Alumni Review," official alumni publication, plus ten football supplements covering all football games during the year of membership.

Members are also entitled to vote in the election of alumni officers and are placed on the association's roster of those invited to class reunions and local alumni meetings.

"Whether a senior graduates or not, or whether or not he enters a professional or graduate school, he is counted a member of the Alumni Class of 1963," Shelton said.

A letter from the committee to all seniors offers the one-dollar membership for on-campus enrollment. The association's regular annual membership fee is $5.

Creative Writing Grants Offered

UNC is among the 15 colleges and universities in the country now offering the newly established MCA Inc. Fellowships in creative writing, according to an announcement made by MCA board choirman Jules Stein. MCA is the parent company of Universal Pictures, Revue TV Productions and Decca Records.

The MCA scholarship or graduate fellowship in Creative Writing will be awarded to a student at UNC, male or female, who shows exceptional promise in the field of creative writing for the performing arts the legitimate threatre, motion pictures or television. The selection of the students to receive the grants will be at the discretion of the respective universities.

The fellowships will cover both tuition and living expenses for a full academic year.

Arrangements to award the fellowships have also been concluded with Stanford University, Brandeis University, University of Michigan, New York University, Yale University, Rutgers University, Carnegie Institute of Technology, Catholic University of America, University of Iowa, Northwestern University, University of Texas, University of Wisconsin, Cornell University and Sarah Lawrence College.

Mighty Maryland Heavy Favorite In ACC Championships

By FRED HOBSON

The biggest and the best in track talent will be on display at Fetzer Field this weekend as Carolina's Tar Heels play host to the Tenth Annual ACC Track Championships.

A star-studded cast including such notables as Carolina's Tommy Clark, Duke's Dick Gesswein and Maryland's John Belitza will be shooting for an array of records in the cinder derby.

Powerful Maryland, perennial ACC champs, will come down from College Park in quest of an eighth straight crown. The mighty men from the North haven't tasted defeat in ACC tourney competition since Carolina won in 1955.

The Tar Heels, even without the services of Charlie Little (who is recovering from an appendectomy), have come on strong in recent meets. Tommy Clark and Joe Huffman provide exceptional strength in the high jump, Heath Whittle is outstanding in the pole vault, and Tar Heel sprinters have impressed of late.

Duke's Blue Devils, featuring a strong weight corps and elated over their impressive victory here last Saturday, are definite threats. Louis Van Dyck (mile and 880), Gilman Kirk (220 and 440) and Gesswein (shot and discus) are Dukes to watch.

Clemson is especially strong in sprints and jumping events. Wes King (120 and 330 hurdles), Cater Leland (broad and triple jumps) and Richard Dobbs (shot and discus) are outstanding Tigers.

Especially interesting events should be the mile, 100 yard dash, shot, pole vault and high jump.

The mile run will pit Duke's Van Dyck against Carolina's durable duo of Art Maillet and Bob Bennett. Van Dyck outgunned the two Heels last Saturday, and they will be out for revenge.

The 100 pits the Tar Heel hero of last Saturday, Ronnie Jackson, against Clemson's Jimmy Wynn, winner of the event last year. Maryland's Bill Grey and South Carolina's Bruce Byrne provide other threats.

Duke's Gesswein is expected to encounter strong competition in the shot from the only man to beat him this year, Clemson's Dobbs. The Blue Devil strongboy set meet records in both the shot and discus in last year's meet.

Trials get under way today at 3 to determine who competes in the finals. Saturday's action, which will determine the winners, begins at 1:30.

"THIS SHOULD BE the best all-around track competition since the A. C. C. has been formed. The track is fast, the competitors are among the nation's best, and the determination to win is terrific."

With this glowing statement Joe Hilton, UNC track coach, described the Tenth Annual A. C. C. Track Championships which begin at Fetzer Field this afternoon.

Hilton continued, "I believe our team is ready to give one of its top performances of the year. This is what we've been shooting for all year — I hope we've hit our peak at the right time.

"We've had a good season despite a couple of bad breaks along the way. Actually our record is better than I honestly thought it would be at the first of the year. We had a good nucleus coming back, but we didn't think we had the depth to show up consistently strong. However, the effort and determination have been tremendous, and through sheer hard work we've come up with some good performances."

Indeed they have. The Tar Heels have won five dual meets, losing only to invincible Maryland and (not-so-invincible) Duke in a closely contested affair here last Saturday. The Tar Heels were runers-up in the Florida and South Carolina relays and took third in the highly competitive Furman Relays.

'We've Had Pleasant Surprises'

"We've had some pleasant surprises this year," Coach Hilton continued, "and I guess these boys are principally responsible for our success. Most of these boys are sophomores and we weren't sure what they could do in varsity competition. But such performers as Joe Huffman, Tommy Henley and Art Maillet have really come through.

"Huffman gives us great point potential in the high jump. Of course he's been overshadowed by Tommy Clark, but he's had some spectacular performances." Joe has gone 6-5.

"Henley has made great progress in the weight events. Just last Saturday he threw the discus 148 feet and almost beat Duke's Gesswein. Bill Graham and Bill Hunter, also sophomores, have helped us in the shot — an event we needed help in.

"Ed Boyd and Nick Street have come along fast to give us a strong team in the javelin. They're both throwing in the 190's now and are still improving.

"Emit Baugess is another soph who gives us strength in the hurdles. He was injured during the indoor season but he seems to be fine now."

Then Hilton got around to his most noted yearling, footballer Ronnie Jackson. "You can tell a sprinter when you first see him, so the fact that Ronnie can run has been no surprise to me. This is his first year of actual track, but he's come along real fast for an inexperienced boy. He tied a school record with that 9.6 in the 100 against Duke."

Terrific Performances Predicted

Other outstanding sophs for the Tar Heels have been Harvey Whitley, Jerry Smith, Lloyd Roghelia, David Radford, Dick Jonas and Bill Warren.

"We lose some real good seniors," the coach continued, "but with this nucleus of sophomores and a strong freshman team this year, we should have a bright future."

Then, turning to the matter at hand, Coach Hilton discussed the big weekend meet.

"Maryland, of course, must be favored but I don't think they will run up such an impressive score. Since there are eight teams entered, no one will dominate action. There will be terrific individual performances — some of the best in the country. There are no hurdlers around better than Maryland's Chris Stauffer and our Jim Brown. And the sprints should be very fast.

"Our track is in the best condition it's been in years. You can be sure it'll be all ready by track time. If the weather's good — look out!"

With that ominous warning, I sensed it was time to go. The pensive coach had to map some strategy for his sophomore-studded Heels to unleash on those mighty Terps.

But the coach had one last parting shot. "Get the fans down there and we'll give them a show," he concluded.

UNC Roars To Early Lead

ACC Golfers Open Tourney In Hot Springs

By ETADIN MOLADNU

HOT SPRINGS, Va. — Golfers from eight conference schools tee off here today in pursuit of the Atlantic Coast Conference golf crown which Duke has worn for the past two years.

The Blue Devils, who set a 4-man, 36-hole record of 572 in 1961 and followed it up with a second straight title last year, are not figured to do as well this weekend.

The odds-on-favorite is Wake Forest whose two big men, Ken Folkes and Jay Siegel, are strong threats for the individual title.

Folkes, North Carolina amateur champion, shared this tourney's individual championship last year in Winston-Salem with Duke's John Abernathy while Sigel currently reigns as Pennsylvania amateur king.

UNC, Maryland and Duke are expected to give Wake the most trouble in the run for this year's title.

The Tar Heels' chief threats are Abe Andes, and sophs Skip Tucker and Tom Arnold. Maryland returns last year's first round leader—Pete Rivera — Ron Richter and Ron Scales.

Duke's hopes lie mainly with Abernathy, Rich Bassett and Jack Saalfield.

The tourney will run today and tomorrow with all participants playing two rounds and 36 holes. The low four scores from each school will count toward the team total.

Folkes and Abernathy shot identical 73-71—144 scores last year at the Old Town Country Club in Winston. The 36-hole record is held by Ron Thomas, Wake's star of 1961. Thomas' mark is 70-68—138.

UNC has won the crown twice in the past 10 years, in 1956 and 1958.

Sokol, Stoneman Parrish Winners

By CHARLIE KIRKPATRICK

George Sokol, O. H. Parrish and Keith Stoneman moved brilliantly into the quarterfinals here yesterday as North Carolina roared into the early lead of the ACC Tennis Championships.

Sokol, the stocky top-seeded blond who is going for his second consecutive singles title, beat down two opponents in his bottom half of the draw, losing only four games in the process. He defeated Virginia's Bill Brown and Maryland's Bob Flax both by 6-2, 6-0 scores.

Parrish, the Richmond, Va. sophomore, and Stoneman, veteran senior from Greenville, S. C., both played three matches under the hot sun yesterday and both came through with surprising victories.

Parrish turned back Tom Watson of Virginia in a 6-2, 6-2 early decision and then played brilliantly for a 5-7, 6-4, 6-4 upset win over teammate and fifth-ranked Bitsy Harrison. O. H. then practically waltzed past Jim Cheek of Duke, 6-1, 6-1, to earn his quarterfinal turn.

Stoneman, also displaying some magnificent tennis, beat N. C. State's Bill Marshall, 6-1, 6-1 and Duke's Al McIntosh, 6-2, 6-4, before squaring off with third-seeded Doug Stewart of Clemson in what was billed as a struggle. But big Keith easily chewed up Stewart on the third court with a 6-0, 6-1 win that went in short order.

The doubles matches had not advanced substantially yesterday, but singles contests through the quarterfinals were reaching a climax at presstime.

In the top half of the draw, Parrish will today play the winner of yesterday's Ted Hoehn-Jim Busick match. Busick, a Maryland boy who drew second seed, beat UNC's Hoehn in a tense 10-8 first set yesterday. Hoehn had previously beaten Fred Craft of Clemson, 6-2, 2-6, 6-1 and Walt Brown of State, 6-2, 9-7.

Stoneman, also in the top half, will play yesterday's Bruce Farrell-Paul Caldwell winner. Farrell, eighth-seed from Virginia was favared over his Wake Forest opponent.

Evans, seventh seed from Clemson, was favored over UNC's Applegate, a surprise 1-6, 6-2, 6-3 winner over teammate Pete Meyers.

BULLETIN

Jim Busick of Maryland, seeded number two in the ACC tennis tourney, outlasted Carolina's Ted Hoehn, 9-7, 2-6, 6-4, late yesterday.

Charlie Shaffer, seeded number four, defeated Eddie Crow of Clemson, 6-4, 6-2. Virginia's Bruce Farrell stopped Wake Forest's Paul Caldwell, 6-4, 6-1.

Clemson's Malloy Evans, rated number seven, set back the Tar Heels' Sam Applegate, 6-3, 6-1. George Sokol and Keith Stoneman initiated doubles action for Carolina by shutting out Marshall and Evans of N. C. State, 6-0, 6-0.

UNC Nine Entertains USC

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Still clinging to a chance of copping the ACC crown, North Carolina's baseball team plays host to two invaders from the Palmetto State this weekend — South Carolina today and Clemson tomorrow.

These two games will be the final home games and the final ACC games for the Tar Heels, who hold a 7-5 record in the conference. Currently in a third-place tie with Duke, UNC will be keeping an eye on the activities of league-leading Wake Forest this weekend.

The Deacons, 8-3 in the ACC, visit Virginia today and Maryland tomorrow, and close out their conference schedule against N. C. State at Winston-Salem on Tuesday. The Deacs must drop two of these three contests in order for the Tar Heels to have a shot at the pennant. And of course, it is imperative that Coach Walt Rabb's crew sweep both of their weekend games.

Bill Dannemann or Joe White will get the starting call against the Gamecocks this afternoon at 3. Spence Willard is due to start against the second-place Tigers tomorrow afternoon at one. Bill Haywood will be ready for relief work in either game.

Frosh Blasted

Three Wilmington Junior College hurlers teamed up to pitch a no-hitter against the UNC Frosh here yesterday, while Seahawk batters were ripping three Tar Baby pitchers for 17 runs on 13 singles, 2 doubles and an assortment of walks and errors.

Righthanders Jim Braxton, Wray Ware and Sam Page joined in the gem, though ten Tar Babies were able to reach base on six walks, three errors and a hit batter. Starter Jim Harrington took the loss, but Danny Walker and Beattie Leonard were hit the hardest.

Results of Ninth Annual Individual Campus Fencing Championships

To Read Results: Beside the fencer's name appears the number of touches made upon his opponent. The column number at the top of the particular column indicates the number of the fencer against whom the hits were made. Five hits win a bout, thus the noumber of times the number appears beside a fencer's name indicates the total number of bouts won. Then fencer winning most bouts places first, next most second, and so on.
In the event of ties in bout score the total touches received is used to break such tie in favor of fencer with fewer touches received.

4 Seniors Named For Yack's Frank Graham Award; Given This Year For First Time

The Yackety Yack announced today the inauguration of the Frank Porter Graham Award for Outstanding seniors. The first recipients of the award are Joe Craver, Walter Dellinger, Henry Mayer, and Bill Sullivan.

The Graham Award is an innovation of the Yack and its recipients will be named and featured in the Yack every year.

"To honor the achievements of Dr. Frank P. Graham as President of the University, U. S. Senator, and special UN mediator, the Yack is proud to distinguish the award with the name of this humanitarian.

"A committee of juniors acting with the editor of the Yack and selected by him, determined the recipients on the basis of academic excellence (a minimum 3.0 average), campus participation, and personal character. The award is not limited on the basis of sex.

"As structured, this award is to be presented to no more than four seniors annually. In its insistence upon highest quality, the Yack hopes to make the award truly meaningful and representative of the greatness of Dr. Graham."

Craver, from Shelby, was captain of this year's football team, and an All-ACC selection. He is also a Morehead Scholar, and a member of the Order of the Golden Fleece and the Order of the Old Well.

Dellinger, who lives in Charlotte, is reading for honors in political science, and was the past chairman of the Men's Honor Council. He is a member of the Order of the Golden Fleece, the Order of the Grail, and the Order of the Old Well.

In the history honors program, Mayer, from Washington, D.C., has distinguished himself as chairman of the Carolina Forum and as news editor of the DTH. He is also in Phi Beta Kappa, the Order of the Golden Fleece and the Order of the Old Well.

Sullivan, from Knoxville, Tenn., is a Morehead Scholar and a member of Phi Beta Kappa, as well as the Order of the Golden Fleece, the Order of the Grail and the Order of the Old Well. His campus activities include service as president of the IFC.

Council Suspends Two Men Students

Two students were found guilty and placed on suspension for violations of the Honor Code in two Men's Council trials Thursday night.

One student was charged with stealing books from Lenoir Hall, selling them to the Book Exchange, and lying to an employee of the Book Exchange.

He pled and was found innocent of lying, but was found guilty of stealing the books.

The council's report said that due to the seriousness of the offense and because the student had been previously suspended for the Honor Code violation, he was given a sentence of indefinite suspension with the recommendation that he never be readmitted to the University.

In the other case, a student pled and was found guilty of stealing a considerable amount of money from another student.

When first confronted by his accusers, the defendant had declined to comment, but turned himself in to the Dean of Men's Office the following day.

He was placed on definite suspension for one full academic semester.

Subversion Charges Lodged Against 3 Indiana Students

BLOOMINGTON, Indiana—Three Indiana University students, all members of the Young Socialist Alliance, were indicted recently under the provisions of a 1951 state anti-subversive act.

The Monroe County Grand Jury, which brought the indictment, charged that the three students assembled on March 25 of this year "for the purpose of advocating or teaching the doctrine that the government of the United States or the State of Indiana should be overthrown by force, violence, or other unlawful means, voluntarily participating therein by their presence, aid or instigation, and as officers of a Trotskyite Communist organization called the Young Socialist Alliance, the youth group of the Socialist Workers' Party."

The students named in the indictment were Ralph Levitt and James Bingham of Indianapolis, and Tom Morgan of Terre Haute, Ind. The three are free on bail. The trail will probably not come for months, as the American Civil Liberties Union and other interested parties plan to enter Amicus Curiae briefs, which may take months to prepare.

The YSA's troubles at Indiana began last October, when a number of YSA members joined in demonstrations against the blockade of the island of Cuba by the Kennedy Administration. The demonstrators were jostled and threatened by a crowd of thousands. The Monroe County prosecutor, Thomas Hoadley, announced that he planned to investigate the YSA to determine if they had incited a riot.

The YSA charged that Hoadley dropped charges against two non-students also involved in the October disturbance. One of the two released is alleged to have hit a policeman, and the other to have slugged a YSA member.

Hoadley publically suggested that the Indiana University administration throw the YSA chapter off campus in a letter to a local paper in February. Joseph Ewers, assistant to Indiana University President Elvis Stahr, said that the Hoadley statement on the YSA was sent to the papers before the university was notified of it.

Samuel E. Braden, a vice-president of the university, issued a statement saying that "it is very difficult to understand why the prosecuting attorney, if he believed he had discovered a violation of the law, decided not to bring it to the attention of the university, but instead issued a statement to the press."

IU President Stahr requested the State of Indiana Attny. Gen. to issue an interpretation as to whether or not the YSA is in violation of the 1951 statute. The AG has yet to do so, and the university is continuing to recognize the YSA as a legitimate group until proven otherwise.

But the story really broke when YSA national secretary LeRoy McRae spoke in Bloomington at a meeting attended by about 125 persons. It is charged that the specific violation of the state anti-subversive statute occurred at that meeting. The content of McRae's speech centered around the civil rights struggle of the American Negro.

Some months ago the Indiana campus was hit by a narcotics scandal, several students being arrested for illegal possession of narcotics. Prosecutor Hoadley declared that the YSA "might" have been using narcotics to attract new members. A YSA spokesman said that the narcotics charge went before the grand jury, but could not be checked since no list of names of YSA members existed.

The YSA has also charged that Hoadley has said that a Moscow-trained man and wife team was sent to the IU campus to organize the YSA. The YSA has pointed out that no Moscow agent could possibly be sent to organize a Trotskyite group.

Indiana University took the position over the weekend that the three IU students indicted on charges of subversive activity would be considered innocent until and unless proven guilty. A spokesman said the students would remain considered in good standing.

The students were charged with having violated a state anti-subversive law by attending a meeting where the speaker advocated the forcible overthrow of the U. S. government. All three, Ralph Levitt, James Bingham, and Thomas Morgan, are officers of the IU chapter of the Young Socialist Alliance, youth division of the tiny Socialist Workers' Party.

"The important thing in this case," said County Prosecutor Thomas A. Hoadley, who obtained the indictment, "is to get this organization off the campus. The university is a department of the state government."

Meanwhile, Robert Risk, head of the Indiana Civil Liberties Union, asserted that the state statute the students were charged with violating is unconstitutional. The law forbids advocating the overthrow of the U. S. or Inidana governments.

Risk cited a 1956 Supreme Court decision overturning a similar Pennsylvania law on the grounds that federal law prempts state law in matters of national security. Risk said that his organization will enter the case.

The YSA this week denied that the purpose of the meeting, held at the student union, was to advocate the violent overthrow of any government. The group called the move a "witch hunt" and an effort by Hoadley to enhance his political career.

Chanin Picked UP Chairman

Mike Chanin was elected to serve a second term as Chairman of the University Party at its meeting Tuesday night. Also re-elected were Bo Edwards as vice-chairman, and Dick Jonas as Treasurer. Wendy Cook was elected Secretary and David Rowe was elected Sergeant-at-Arms during the same meeting.

Chairman Chanin said he was pleased to be working with Edwards and Jonas again because they had shown themselves to be very capable in the areas in which they worked last year.

He added, "Miss Cook should bring much experience into the position of Secretary as she was President of the student body at the school she attended before transferring to Carolina. She has many ideas on how women students may play a more active role in Student Government."

Byerly Finds Community Papers Taking Big Gain

Community newspaper — daily and weekly — in the 10 largest metropolitan areas of the United States have grown 30 times faster in circulation since World War II as have big city dalies in the same areas. That is a finding by a veteran publisher and professor of Journalism here.

Prof. Kenneth R. Byerly of the UNC School of Journalism and former publisher of newspapers in Montana and Wyoming has announced findings which reveal a 17-year circulation increase for community dailies and weeklies at 89.9 per cent. That is almost 30 times as great as the 3.0 per cent growth for metropolitan dailies in the same area.

The same trend seems to be continuing, stated Byerly, since 1962. Circulation of community newspapers has grown twice as rapidly as the population of the metropolitan areas in which they are located.

The 10 areas studied are designed by the principal city in each area: Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco, Washington, D.C.

Prof. Byerly has taught news writing here since 1957. He is author of the textbook "Community Journalism" published by Chilton Co. of Philadelphia in 1961. He owns a small daily in Montana and The Tidewater News, a semi-weekly at Franklin, Va. with his two sons.

At Last, At Long, Long Long Last

Raleigh OKs Name Change For State

RALEIGH (UPI)—The General Assembly gave final approval today to a long-range program for higher education in North Carolina after a compromise on a controversial name change for N. C. State College.

A conference committee composed of three senators and five House members reported out the compromise name today. The name decided on was "North Carolina State of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

The House had approved the bill with the name "N. C. State University of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh." The Senate approved the bill with the name N. C. State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh.

The name change had blocked adoption of the omnibus bill which would create a statewide university system, upgrade three junior colleges to four-year institutions and set up a system of community colleges.

The name finally adopted was a victory for the administration and the UNC trustees. The change in name followed their final recommendation except for the change of a comma to an "of".

The Senate approved the name without objection after Sen. Robert Lee Humber of Pitt urged passage of the "compromise name."

Both Woman's College and State will be able under the bill to admit both male and female students and grant undergraduate degrees in liberal arts as well as in the specialized courses at the schools.

The University of North Carolina becomes under the measure the capstone of higher learning in the state.

House members who dissented from the conference report were Reps. George Wood of Camden and Ashley Murphy of Pender.

Murphy told the House today "I promised my folks I would stick with them" on the name change. "However, the way feelings were of some it might defeat a good education bill," he said.

"And I know six kids who might never see the inside of a college if they couldn't go to Wilmington College," which would be brought into the state system under the bill and upgraded to a four-year school.

SL Refuses Appointment Of Roundtable Chairman

By FRED SEELY

The Student Legislature went against precedent Thursday night and refused to confirm the appointment of Jack Harrell for co-chairman of the Editor's Roundtable, a student government committee.

The appointment was included in a list of committee chairmen proposed by President Mike Lawler for approval by the legislature. All other proposed chairmen were aproved without debate.

Lawler said that he wished to reserve comment on the matter at the present time.

The Editor's Roundtable, as reorganized this year, will coordinate the dorm newspapers and enable the dorm editors to meet and exchange ideas. It would in no way effect the editorial policy of the papers, but merely perform any service that could otherwise not be obtained.

Richard Westin (Ind.-DMI) led the drive against Harrell, citing his performance as president of the freshman class.

"Harrell has not shown leadership in this position, and I feel that a man's potential alone is not enough to justify our approval of this appointment", commented Westin.

Phil Baddour (SP-DMII) spoke in debate for Harrell.

"Jack has done a good job this year, and he would be a definite asset to the Roundtable", he said. "He has the drive to make this committee becomes a definite asset to the campus."

In ensuing debate, Lanny Shuff (SP-DMII), Munny Yates (UP-THII) and Hugo Spechar (SP-DMIV) spoke for the appointment, while Bo Edwards (UP-TMIII) and John Ulfelder (UP-TMIII) spoke against it.

The final vote, which was non-partisan, was 20-19. It was the first time since 1957 that a legislature had refused to confirm a presidential appointment.

In other action, the legislature unanimously passed a bill introduced by Bob Jones (UP-TMI) to appropriate $60 from the unappropriated balance to the WRC. The money will be used to cover a deficit arising from the WRC-CWC banquet this year at the Carolina Inn.

Arthur Hays (SP-DMIV) gave a detailed report on the budget for the coming school year. Time did not permit completion of the report, and further discussion will be held in the special session Monday night. The legislature will vote on the budget item by item after the completion of the report.

President Lawler asked for legislative approval on his appointment of Dick Ellis as presidential assistant and also for a seat on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors. This will be acted upon next week.

Speaker Bob Spearman announced the appointment of Gayle Hagland (UP-TW) as clerk of the legislature, Jeff Davis (SP-DMI) as representative to the Carolina Quarterly and Bob Jones as representative to the Publications Board.

Legislators absent were Clark Brewer (SP-DMI), Bill Pitts (UP-DMI), Rufus Edmisten (SP-TMIV) and Danny Edwards (SP-TMIV).

Final Authority Is Administration

Student Government Offices yesterday issued a clarifying statement saying that the administration had full and final authority in matters of student conduct if it wished to "make and enforce its own rules."

The statement, coming from a previous press release, outlined the duties and powers of the Women's Residence Council.

The complete text of the statement follows:

In the past few weeks there seems to have been a certain amount of confusion concerning the authority of the Women's Residence Council to legislate rules for women students.

According to the Undergraduate Bulletin (pg. 87), the "Women's Residence Council is the body of student government which formulates all the rules for women students which pertain to their social standards and welfare. . . .

"The Council works closely with the Women's Council to interpret with accuracy and justice the legislative and pudicial problems of women students."

On April 20, a letter was sent to members of the Board of Trustees, and to certain faculty members and alumni to clarify the March 19 action of the WRC concerning the apartment rule. In this letter it was stated:

"The Women's Residence Council possesses the sole authority to formulate the social rules governing women students."

The two statements mean that the WRC has the sole power to legislate all rules for women students which are enforced through the student judicial system.

However, the members of the WRC and other student government leaders recognize the fact that the administration could make and enforce its own rules for student conduct, if it should wish to do so.

In this respect the administration has full and final authority.

MANN AND METER—Pictured is UNC Professor of geology Virgil I. Mann and a gravimeter. With the aid of the gravimeter, Prof. Mann measured the pull of gravity at selected points throughout the state, and with the results of his measurements, he composed the first gravitational map ever made of North Carolina. Prof. Mann's studies indicate the kinds of rock underlying the earth's crust here in the state. (See story on page 3.)

Opera Buffs Get Treat On WUNC

If you like opera, turn on WUNC (91.5 FM) today at 9 a.m. for a full day's broadcast. Five complete opears by Puccini will be presented from 9 to 9 together with the lively commentary of Norman Cordon, former Metropolitan Opera star.

The Puccini operas and the approximate starting times are:

9:00 a.m. — Manon Lescaut — Bjoerling, Albanese, and Merrill (singers); Roman Opera House Orchestra and Chorus, conducted by Perlea.

11:35 a.m. — La Boheme — De Los Angeles, Bjoerling, Merrill; NBC Orchestra and Chorus, conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham.

1:45 p.m. — La Tosca — Maria Callas, Giuseppi DiStefano, and Tito Gobbi; Orchestra and Chorus of La Scala, Milan, conducted by Victor deStabata.

4:00 p.m. — Madame Butterfly—Leontyne Price, Richard Tucker; Italiana Opera Orchestra and Chorus, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

6:35 p.m. — Turandot — Inge Borkh, Mario Del Monaco, and Renata Tebaldi; Santa St. Cecilia Orchestra and Chorus, Alberto Erede, conductor.

9:05 — Schedule close.

Produced by Don Upham, this opera spectacular is the first 12-hour program on WUNC Radio this year.

At 10:15 p.m. following the operas, WUNC will carry the music of Stan Kenton and his Orchestra live from the campus of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Blacksburg, Virginia. The Big-Band Jazz Broadcast will come direct from the Annual VPI Ring Dance.

ZBT Starts New House

Peter Jason, president of Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity, confirmed today that work has begun on the new house for his fraternity on 240 Finley Golf Course Road. The site in New Fraternity Court has been cleared and foundations are being poured this week.

The new fraternity house, expected to cost over $200,000, will be completed by early October of this year.

The house will contain over 12,000 square feet of living, dining, entertaining, study and recreational accommodations for the fraternity. Most of the bedrooms are designed for two occupants and each will have complete facilities for sleeping and study.

The first floor will contain a three room housemother's apartment, storage and utility rooms, kitchen, a 100 seat dining area and a formal sunken living room with a large brick fireplace.

The new house is being built by the chapter's alumni group and the Zeta Beta Tau national.

Joan Baez To Sing At NCC Wednesday

Joan Baez, dark-tressed folk singer who has captured the fancy of audiences from coast to coast, will give a benefit concert at North Carolina College in Durham Wednesday, May 15, in the college's B.N. Duke auditorium at 8 p.m.

Admission will be $1. Tickets may be purchased here at the "Y."

The concert is sponsored by the Baptist Student Union and the United Campus Ministry at NCC and proceeds will go to University College in Basutoland, South Africa, the only high-ranking desegregated college in the country.

Miss Baez's concert of songs ranging from the satirical to spirituals will be recorded on the spot by Vanguard Records, Inc., of New York.

Report Said Incomplete By Solon

RALEIGH—UNC does not plan to revive the Dixie Classic basketball tournament, according to a report made to the State House of Representatives yesterday, but at least one representative said that the report "was not complete" and he would ask for another.

In a statement read for them in the House yesterday, CU President William Friday and State College Chancellor John Caldwell, said they did not entertain the thought that any policy is perfect, but "responding to the request made of us, it is our judgment that our present position, including the discontinuance of the Dixie Classic, is a sound and defensible one among the solutions that are possible.

The joint statement came one month after the House had asked Friday and Caldwell to "restudy and give serious consideration of the feasibility and desirability of reinstating" the Christmas holiday tournament held in Raleigh.

The basketball tournament was discontinued on May 22, 1961.

Rep. Sam Whitehurst of Craven "served notice" yesterday that the report "was not complete" and he would ask for another report.

"All they have done is give a defense," he said. "I do not think the report is complete and I regret it was reported this way."

The statement said the University had to take certain action, "including discontinuance of the Dixie Classic, to stem the deterioration that had befallen the sport and to announce its resolve to keep a sensible perspective on the place of intercollegiate athletics in education."

Friday and Caldwell elaborated on past instances of bribery, recruiting irregularities, and other misdoings which led to the corrective measures.

Previous Violations

"In May, 1954, N. C. State College was placed on probation by the NCAA for violating regulations concerning recruitment of players and was denied the privilege of participattion in the NCAA championship play for one year.

"In November, 1956, State College was again penalized by the NCAA for irregularities connected with the recruitment of a player. The penalty was probationary status for a period of four years.

"In January, 1961, the NCAA placed the University at Chapel Hill on probation for one year in basketball for violating regulations governing the entertainment of prospective students athletes.

"In the spring of 1961, it was found that several players at State College and the University at Chapel Hill had been involved in bribery. In March, one student was permitted to withdraw from the University at Chapel Hill for participation in bribery. In May, another student at the University was suspended for initial misstatement and subsequent concealment' of facts relevant to bribery attempts.

In May, 1961, two basketball players at State College, who were temporarily not in residence, were informed that they would not be permitted to re-enter the College because of participation in bribery. At the same time, another State College player was dismissed for the same offense.

"During the five years between 1956 and 1961, the Atlantic Coast Conference found it necessary on three occasions to impose a fine or take other disciplinary measures affecting one of our teams.

"The foregoing events were recited to the Trustees at the time the University took its corrective measures, including discontinuance of the Dixie Classic. . . . A problem of disportionate emphasis had become an issue of moral value."

The statement said there could be but one response to the House request: "We must declare in unmistakable terms that the University of North Carolina would not buck endlessly the humilation of being repeatedly called to account and repeatedly disciplined by outside regulative agencies for infractions which the University

About Those Averages

The recently-released averages for the fall semester provide some interesting comparisons. Contrary to widespread belief, the overall fraternity average, including activities and pledges, is 2.172, as compared with the overall dorm figure of 2.118, and the all-university average of 2.249. If the average is computed for active fraternity members (excluding pledges), the all-fraternity average is 2.387.

Among freshmen, fraternity pledges had an overall average of 1.925. This small statistical difference can be accounted for by the averages of two pledge classes —1.517 and 1.038, respectively— which considerably lowered the overall freshman pledge average.

In response to these figures, Dean of Men William G. Long said, "it is obvious that fraternity pledges are not doing as well as the overall freshman class." He went on to say that " it is important for fraternities to take steps to improve the scholarship record of their pledges."

All this, as Dean Long said, is rather obvious.

The question would seem to be, "Are Carolina fraternities doing anything of substance along this line?"

A check reveals that they are.

Some houses make use of the "big brother" system. Under this plan,each pledge is assigned to an active member who functions as his counselor and liaison with the members of the active chapter.

This is, in effect, as if each pledge had a full-time orientation counselor for the entire first semester and approximately half of the second. A responsibility of the "big brother" is that of keeping track of the pledge's academic progress, or lack of it. The "big brother" is expected to encourage the pledge to study and to report his academic situation to other active members.

Another system of pledge training is the use of a "study hall" for pledges. This involves the organized supervision of pledge study sessions. Study halls usually last from 7 until 11, Monday through Thursday. The pledge is expected to study, and is not permitted to do otherwise. In some cases, means are devised whereby those pledges who have demonstrated superior academic ability may be excused from the study hall requirement.

A third system is that of the scholarsip incentive. At one Carolina fraternity, each active and pledge contributes a small sum to a "kitty." At the end of the semester, the 3 actives and/or pledges who have shown the greatest improvement in their grades from those of the previous semester, or (in the case of first-semester freshmen) those who have attained the highest grade averages, are rewarded with a sizeable sum of money.

Some houses provide lists of the active members who are particularly expert on certain subjects. The pledge is encouraged to ask the active for help should he need it.

There are other systems in use among fraternities at Carolina, but these suffice to show that an effort is being made. We would question that a comparable effort is being made in the dormitories, the obvious differences notwithstanding.

Craige and Ehringhaus, which by their location and construction should be quite conducive to study, actually have the lowest grade averages of any Carolina dorm. Craige residents have an overall average of 1.981, while Ehringhaus compiled 1.941. Grimes also fell below a C average with a 1.983.

There is no doubt that fraternity averages should be higher. Nor, likewise, is there a doubt that the dorm figures should be higher also.

But it hardly seems fair to damn the fraternities alone for their low grades. At least they are making some effort toward improvement. We would suggest that someone take the initiative in seeing that dormitories do likewise.

Though fraternities are vulnerable on many points, it would seem from these averages that scholarship is not one of them.

Medical Needs Of Travelers

NEW YORK (UPI) — A recent outbreak of typhoid fever at a Swiss Alpine resort should underscore for Americans the wisdom of taking proper health precautions before going abroad.

While immunization against typhoid is not required by the U. S. government of Americans heading overseas, it is recommended. Tetanus shots and immunization against polio also are generally recommended for the traveler.

The American planning a trip abroad can obtain information concerning health requirements in various countries from the U. S. Public Health Service, passport agency and other government offices, travel agents and air and sea transportation companies.

The U. S. Public Health Service issues four leaflets listing required and recommended vaccinations for travel in Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa, and Asia, Australia and New Zealand. The leaflets also include other health protection hints.

Copies may be obtained for five cents each by writing to the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

The United States, and many other countries, require vaccination against small pox of all travelers. Proof of such immunity is necessary if you want to avoid delays and other complications in entering other countries or returning to the United States.

Start the necessary and recommended vaccinations well in advance of departure date. Some require only one inoculation, others as many as three spread over as much as six weeks. Some become effective in a few days, other require months.

A physical and dental checkup also is a good idea. Take along an extra supply of medications, or a prescription, if under treatment for a specific ailment.

U. S. Youth Is In State Of Moral Decay

By CHUCK NEELY

A number of vandals, presumably Carolina students, recently left a trail of damage across the campus, testifying to the wanton stupidity of some students at this University. A small number of students by their obnoxious behavior succeeded in partially dampening the holiday spirits of the audience at the Four Preps Concert.

The Dean of Men's Office has announced that a majority of the freshman class failed to make a 2.0 last semester.

Multiply these incidents by a hundred thousand, add a good measure of cynicism, indifference and apathy, mix well and bake in the oven of a college atmosphere, and you have the typical American college student.

Something is greatly amiss with the generation now passing through the Ivied Halls of our bastions of learning.

The trouble is not with the faculties and administrations that try to pass on accumulated knowledge to their charges. They can only lead the pupils to the material, they can't force students to learn.

Students—we hesitate to use the term—complain that their instructors are too wrapped up in writing and publishing and their own warped psyches to give them individual attention. A more fallacious statement has never been uttered. A professor cannot be expected to beg his students to come in for individual attention, but most will gladly welcome any overtures on the part of those students who seriously want to learn.

Where then does the problem lie?

The trouble stems to a degree from the home of the college student. But to a greater extent, the problem is a societal one. We believe that the sickness is one which has taken hold of our whole overstuffed, over - fed, materialistic, "what's in it for me" society.

As a nation, we have more of material goods and less of spiritual values than any other country in history. We have more to be grateful for, and are less grateful than ever before. The values of patriotism, hard work, thrift, enthusiasm, and yes, vigor, have dropped by the wayside somewhere along the road to the welfare state.

As children most of us are given everything we want, whenever we want it. Most of us do not know, and will never know, the meaning of the word struggle. We know nothing of the ideals which made this country great. Our sole concern in college and afterward is getting by with a minimum of effort even if it means taking crip courses, and organizing massive cheating rings on Arch 85 exams.

We tramp on with our weejun clad feet, waving the multi-colored Madras banner and chanting "we want panties, we want panties!", caring not that the restless hordes of the world, hungry and poverty-stricken are beginning to stir.

The barbarians are forming ranks and will soon be upon us, not because of any physical assault, but because of the rotten moral decay which grasps us.

True, there are those who continue to picket to eradicate human injustice. There are those who would halt the tide sweeping us all toward welfare-statism. There are those who apply themselves to their studies and do gain a broad education in the hope of providing a better world tomorrow than the one we have today.

But these are no more than voices in the wilderness. They had their counterparts in Greece and Rome and Tsarist Russia and all the other great empires which have fallen. Then, as now, they were ignored.

We may comfort ourselves with the hope that we will not fall yet, and somehow stagger on for another century or two.

We share that hope. But if the present state of American youth is an indication of our state of decay, our collapse is imminent.

COED CLASSES

Next fall the class program of freshman girls at George Washington University will be worked out so they will fall between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. This arrangement is to facilitate transportation from the residence halls to classes. Formerly the girls payed their own commuting expenses.

Letters To The Daily Tar Heel

A Time To Negotiate And A Time To Demonstrate

To the Editors:

The letters written by Wayne R. Hardy and Bill and Barbara Perkins were interesting and tend to provoke some thought. Hardy, who wishes there was some other way to end discrimination than picketing, takes a quote from Braybrook which states: "For were men really equal, there would be no reason to devise artificial means to make them so."

However, it seems to me the quote would be more realistic if it read: 'For were men really unequal, there would be no reason to devise artificial means to make them so." History traces an effort by men to remove artificial barriers such as slavery, inheritance of high status in society by birth and noble parentage, and caste systems—all of which prevented men from realizing their potential as humans.

I would like to ask Mr. Hardy where are the artificial means? Are they in the picketing of a restaurant as he implies or are they in putting Negro children in one school system and white in another, or the establishment of one set of standards for Negro employment and advancement and another set for whites and refusal to the Negro of such minor right as buying a cup of coffee in a white restaurant in certain areas of the South, and the jailing of Negroes for demanding civil rights?

Bill and Barbara Perkins seem to feel that the Negro leaders have a just cause but are employng the wrong tactics. In American history, the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, the attempt of labor to establish decent wages and working conditions, and the women suffrage movement all demonstrate that there is a time to negotiate and a time to demonstrate your willingness to fight for your cause. When in Birmingham, Negroes are attacked by police dogs, blasted down by fire hoses and thousands jailed in the South for demonstrating for civil rights, I would ask Bill and Barbara who in their words has "over stepped the line which separates a righteous struggle from a dangerous battle," and who in their words is being pushed "into the void of hate"? Are the Negroes holding the fire hoses? Are the Negroes using vicious dogs? Are the Negroes putting white people in jail?

Maybe I saw different newspaper pictures from the one Bill and Barbara saw, or perhaps I read the wrong American constitution which speaks of the right of people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Phelps Is All Wet

To the Editors:
An Open Letter to Mr. Larry Phelps:

Your recent letter showed that you have apparently spent some time studying the historical valor and "civic and moral consciousness" of the American Negro. Perhaps if you were to spend a comparable amount of time in studying capitalism, which you define as "that rotten economic system which feeds on racism, exploitation, militarism, unemployment and other forms of human misery," you might note that capitalism did not produce slavery, human misery, and racism but inherited it from an agricultural economy centuries old. You might also deduce from your study that had capitalism not risen, the obliteration of slavery would hardly have been possible by a handful of escaped slaves. If you were to pursue your studies a little more you might note that the militarism of which you speak is not an economic product of capitalism, but is the result of the moral obligation of men to protect themselves against a tyranny which looms over half the world and which brazenly threatens to destroy us one way or another.

You make the claim that capitalism feeds on unemployment. Are you blind or do you just refuse to see? How could an economy as large and affluent as ours thrive on unemployment? Anwer that, Mr. Phelps. You also make the assertation that capitalism feeds on other forms of human misery. You must be blind. Because of capitalism, men no longer have to pick the ground with a stick; the 18 hour weekday was cut to 12, then to 8 hours; art, music, and literature were released from the subservience of patronage; for the first time in human history, men could live by their minds, not their muscle. Are you not aware that what is left of dirt and human misery in this country is the remnant of capitalism's inheritance from those countless ages of poverty? Do you not even see that those who are miserable in this country are comparatively well-off as opposed to the majority of people, say in Russia, China, or East Germany? And if you were to throw away your book, Denunciation of Capitalism for All Occasions you might that the degree to which human misery has been alleviated, has been the degree to which capitalism and freedom prevailed in a society.

Finally Mr. Phelps, I urge you not to advocate peace if your ideal system is one which uses force and coercion against individual men. Do not speak out for freedom if you would impose your society by the suppression of dissenters, as was done in that country to whose political philosophy you subscribe. The contradictions are rampant, and it only deceives those who do not think.

American People Slowly Losing Respect For UN

By CLYDE WILSON

Slowly the American people are losing their respect for the institution they once regarded as the last best hope of mankind. (Europeans, less idealistic, expressed misgivings some time ago.)

The American people are realizing that the United Nations means one thing to them, another thing to the slave masters of the Communist world and something else again to the semi-civilized strutters who control the backward "uncommitted" portions of the globe.

It is not clear to them what moral imperatives or what considerations of peace and freedom dictate that the UN make a war of conquest upon Katanga, one of the few civilized and orderly states in black Africa, in the name of unifying a country whose people have never expressed any desire for or understanding of unification.

Especially when it is done for the benefit of leaders who demand control over boundaries created by the colonialists they profess to hate.

The considerations are not of peace and freedom. They are considerations of politics and power among the leaders of the newly-created nations and pseudo-nations. The UN is making war on Katanga simply because men like Nehru, Nasser, Nkrumah and Ben-Bella want it under the control of their fellows.

American love for the UN has meant that America's prime foreign policy objective was to please the leaders who were supposed to represent some ethical force known as world opinion. (They actually represent nothing but their own selfish interests).

At the same time Russia's chief objective was to have the right military force in the right place at the right time.

But Americans are beginning to lose respect for a world opinion that condones savage murderers in Angola while it quietly drops Hungary from the docket and votes to admit the rapers of Tibet.

Not much longer will they believe in a world opinion whose chief prophet, Nehru, is unable to grasp such a gigantic historical fact as Communist imperialism even when the hordes hover on his borders.

The west is beginning to feel like Rome, an outpost of sanity surrounded by barbarians and semi-barbarians who have the capacity to use the materials of civilization without the ability to create or sustain it, who can grasp only enough of a painfully developed morality to manipulate the conscience of its possessors.

The United Nations will exist for some time. It may even retain usefulness. But more and more it will become a comic opera palladium where Castros and Khrushchevs, Menons and Nassers strut and bang shoes and shout gigantic lies.

America should continue to help, where it can, the backward peoples of the world. But what is more important is that America no longer bind herself with false guilt by giving their barbarian chieftains credit for a wisdom and morality they do not really possess.

Rome should set the standards and not the barbarians.

A strong free West headed by a strong free America is and always has been the last best hope of mankind.

Meat Is Heavier At Elon

By NANCY VON LAZAR

Are you granite-bound? Do some of you North Carolinians have your homes built on top of a mass of volcanic slate, on fine-layered sedimentary rock, or in the cup of a dead volcano?

Maybe you aren't aware of it, but chances are your abode is built upon one of these materials.

North Carolina has just acquired its first gravitational map which indicates the composition of the rocks underlying the earth's surface in this state. The map has been prepared after many years of research conducted by UNC Professor of geology Virgil I. Mann and financed by grants from the National Science Foundation.

To the unknowing observer, the gravitational map is no more than a black and white outline of the state with numerous curvy, thread-like lines, circle, and numbers. These deceptive curves and numbers are most informative, however, and give the measurement of the earth's gravitational pull at selected points and indicate the patterns in which the rocks underneath the earth's crust are laid out.

Prof. Mann took his measurements with a gravimeter which indicates the presence and thickness of the underground rock. Actually, the gravitational study is based on a standard of density.

Measurements of high density indicate rocks underlying the earth's crust that are metamorphosed or igneous rocks, such as granite. Measurements of low density indicate rocks that are sedimentary in nature such as sandstone, shale, or limestone.

Once the rock types under the earth's crust are known, the geologists will then be able to determine whether a particular area is suited for drilling for metallic mineral deposits or for non-metallic mineral deposits such as oil.

Meats Weigh More At Elon College

What did Prof. Mann find out about North Carolina's rock structure?

For one thing, he found the the greatest pull of gravity in the state is at Elon College, so watch out — your meats will weigh more on the butcher's spring scales at Elon College than they will in other parts of the state, although this difference in weight is so little that it would not even register at the ounce level.

The spot of the least pull of gravity in the state is located in Wilkes County near Traphill and Joynes.

Another finding is that North Carolina's Piedmont section is underlain by granite — a discovery Prof. Mann had not expected to find. The gravity field clearly outlines the granites in the Piedmont .These granites are a valuable source for industry — particularly for North Carolina's crushed rock industry.

Running Northeasterly through the middle of the State is an underlying volcanic slate belt. The gravimeter turned up measurements which seem to be related to the warping of one of the subcrystal layers of rock in the earth. This area could be the locale of former mountain ranges.

This volcanic slate belt zone extends northward through Virginia and southward through South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama into Mississippi.

There seem to be major breaks which run north to south through the western part of the state. These breaks seem to be related to deep structural features — some 20 to 40 miles below the surface — meaning that there has apparently been significant movement of the outer crust at one time or another — movement either from side to side or up and down. Since there apparently has been such movement in the underground rock, this movement could continue.

Earthquakes

It is likely that that area in the western part of the state will experience earthquakes, but these quakes will be minor — not major.

Inhabitants living in these areas have experienced earth tremors, although they are often not always aware that these are earth tremors, according to Prof. Mann. The Department of Geology has a seismograph instrument which measures earth tremors and quakes. However, the seismograph — a very delicate instrument — in some cases may not record a very minor tremor.

Knowing that these areas in the western part of the state are quake-prone, the Department of Geology has postcards prepared which it gives to local postmasters in the quake areas. If the postmaster overhears anyone talking about a tremor, he gives the postcard to that person to be filled out as to the time and location of the tremor.

These postcards often turn up humorous results. One writer of a card, received during past years, in effect said that he had noticed a disturbance on that particular afternoon. "The house shook and the dishes fell out of the cupboards," he wrote, "but I thought it was just my wife falling out of bed again."

Oil

In the far eastern part of the state the gravimeter turned up measurements which might possibly be the result of sediments—sediments which could contain oil, according to Prof. Mann. Oil is found mostly in sedimentary rocks.

Concord and its environs might possibly have been 5,000 feet higher ages ago. Ben Morgan, a UNC graduate student who was assisting Prof. Mann with the gravitational measurements, studied a ring dyke in Concord.

The ring dyke is composed of crystalline rock which is exposed in a circular pattern. Evidently, in this volcanic zone, some of the volcanic lava did not escape from the mouth of a volcano and became frozen in place.

The ground in the area has eroded away with the years and leaves this telltale trace of what happened many eras ago.

Such discoveries are just a sampling of the many facts gleaned by Prof. Mann in his study. He put his information together and has published it in an Information Circular of the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development.

The circular is numbered 18 and is entitled "The Force of Gravity at Selected Localities in North Carolina." Mann has sent some 100 copies of his gravitational map of the state out to other universities and to those persons who have been beseeching him for his findings — including geologists in industry and government agencies.

The University of Wisconsin is now in the process of preparing a map of the gravitational field of the entire United States. Prof. Mann's map will be useful for this project.

"The University stopped short of suspending or discontinuing intercollegiate competition in basketball. It stopped short of eliminating the practice of subsidizing players through athletic grants-in-aid. It instituted moderate changes aimed at restoring balance in the conduct of a sport which was getting out of hand.

Is Tropic Star for you?

College girls seem to know what they want. We get a lot of ideas about ring styling from American campuses. If there is such a thing as a consensus, it would sound like this: conservative styling, with a difference.

That's what we've designed into Tropic Star...the newest of the beautiful Artcarved diamond engagement rings. Like all Artcarved rings, it's styled for lasting beauty...guaranteed in writing for permanent value. Is Artcarved's beautiful new Tropic Star for you? See for yourself. ®TRADEMARK

Sokol, Stoneman Meet In Finals Today

Dook's Mike Curtis Lets Go With Top Javelin Heave Photo by Les Howell

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina clinched its fifth straight Atlantic Coast Conference Tennis Championship here yesterday and George Sokol earned the right to try for his second straight ACC singles trophy.

The Tar Heels, who had accumulated 28 points by late yesterday afternoon, are far ahead of the rest of the pack with only one day of action remaining.

Thus Clemson, in second place with 11 points to its credit, and Maryland, one marker behind the Tigers, have no chance of overtaking the defending champs.

The big news of the day concerned not total points, but the outcome of the singles warfare.

Sokol defeated teammate Charlie Shaffer and will play another UNC netter, Keith Stoneman, for top honors in the singles.

A crowd estimated at 1,000 packed the Varsity Court stands to watch Shaffer put on a tremendous display of tennis before bowing 6-2, 2-6, 6-4 to the number one seeded player. While these two were battling on the first court, Stoneman was upsetting Jim Busick of Maryland, 6-3, 6-1, at the second post.

Fans in this area have seldom seen a better tennis exhibition than the Sokol-Shaffer match.

Sokol, who played right beside Shaffer many times for UNC during the season, jumped to a quick 4-1 lead in the first set. The Bryn Mawr, Pa. junior began with his steady and consistent game, and a match victory appeared within easy reach.

But Shaffer, after losing the first set, refused to quit.

He suddenly turned into a tennis terror. He charged balls that Sokol lofted over his head, and used powerful strokes that had the crowd moaning.

Shaffer captured the second set, 6-2 and that evened the count. For the next eight games the two Tar Heels each won their service.

Then, at 4-4, Sokol broke Shaffer's service and managed to hold on to win, 6-4.

Sokol and Shaffer were paired together when Shaffer defeated Duke's Richard Predmore, 6-3, 6-3, and Sokol turned back Mallory Evans of Clemson, 6-3, 6-1.

When Sokol and Shaffer finished their first set, Stoneman, the darkhorse of the tournament, ran off the court with his great triumph over Busick. Stoneman received a loud ovation and Coach Don Skakle embraced his netter.

Earlier in the day Stoneman smashed Bruce Farrell of Virginia, 6-1, 6-3. UNC's O. H. Parrish lost to Busick, 6-4, 6-4, and that placed Stoneman and Busick together.

Stoneman, not seeded in the top eight, had good reason to be elated with his day's work, he played nearly perfect tennis, and his determination pulled the upset of the day.

Results of doubles activities were not available at presstime.

Frosh Netmen Sweep Finals

DURHAM — North Carolina's freshman netters swept both the singles and doubles finals in the ACC Freshman Tennis Tourney here yesterday.

Carl Evans won the singles crown by outlasting teammate Kenny Oettinger in three hard-fought sets, 8-6, 2-6, 6-4.

The doubles trophy went to the Tar Baby duo of Andy Goddard and Evans, who beat down Duke's Doug Jones and Glenn Gould in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2.

The matches were played on the Duke University courts.

Tigers, Terps Shine

By FRED HOBSON

Impressive showings by Maryland and Clemson and two new meet records were opening-day features as the Tenth Annual ACC Track Championships got under way at Fetzer Field yesterday.

Duke's Dick Gesswein heaved the shot 56-6 and broke his old record of 55-5 as he overpowered the field in shot put competition.

Clemson's Cater Leland broke a longstanding meet mark as he surpassed Joel Shankle's 23-8 broad jump set in 1955. Leland leaped 24-5, and his runner-up, Mike Cole of Maryland, equaled Shankle's ancient gem.

Maryland's powerful Terps looked especially strong in the dash events, as they sped to qualifying wins in the 440, 100, 880, 120 highs, and 330 intermediate hurdles.

Ace Chris Stauffer swept to wins in the 440 (time—48-8) and the 330 intermediates as he qualified for both events in today's final competition.

Teammate Bill Grey qualified for both the 100 and 220 dashes. Other standout Marylanders were Don Van Reenan, Bob Vermillon, Dick Smith and Doug Tucker, all of whom finished first in their qualifying heats.

However, the Terps were pushed with a strong overall performance from Clemson. The Tigers qualified four speedsters in the 100 (all of whom finished second—in most of the heats, the top two qualified), three in the 220 and one winner in the 440. Clemson also placed well in weight events, and should be a definite threat for team honors tomorrow.

Duke and Carolina pushed for third place in the competition.

For the Devils, Gesswein also took the discus with a prodigious 156-6 sail. Mike Curtis, soph football sensation took the javelin heats with a 213-2 throw. David Wheeler won the hop-step-jump with a 46-5 triple leap.

The standout Tar Heel was hurdler Jim Brown as he swept to heat victories in the 120's and 330's.

Other Carolina winners were Ronnie Jackson in the 100 (time—9.8), Jerry Stuver in the 880 (time—155.2), and Bob Hart in the 440 (time—49.8).

Also qualifying for today's action were Nick Street in the javelin, Joe Huffman in the hop-step-jump and Tommy Henley in the discus.

Events not having qualifying trials, but which will be run today are the high jump, pole vault, distance runs and relay events.

Carolina's chances in these events are good. Tommy Clark and Joe Huffman in the high jump figure to take all comers, and Heath Whittle will battle Maryland's John Belitza in the pole vault. Prospects for a 16-foot vault are bright.

Action gets under way today with the pole vault at 1:30, followed shortly by the high jump and javelin. Running events begin at 2:15.

Tar Heels Thrash Gamecocks By 4-1

By LARRY TARLETON

North Carolina kept its slim hopes for the ACC baseball championship alive yesterday by taking a 4-1 victory from the Gamecocks of South Carolina.

Sophomore right-handers Joe White and Bill Dannemann scattered 10 hits while the Tar Heels pushed across four runs on the nine hits they got off South Carolina right-hander Rick Grich.

The Gamecocks took an early lead in the first inning. Second baseman Hoke Greiner led off with a single off White. After stealing second, Greiner scored on an opposite field single by Dick Moseley.

The Gamecocks' lead was short-lived, however, as Carolina came back with two runs in their half of the first. After Dickie Prindle grounded out, Buddy Tilden rapped a double to deep center. He advanced to third on a ground-out and then scored when Jim Speight laced a double down the third base line.

Bill Brown followed with a grounder to short but the throw was wide of first and Speight hustled in from second while the South Carolina first-baseman was arguing with the umpire.

The Tar Heels added another run in the third on successive singles by Heyward Hull, Speight and Brown.

UNC rallied for its last run in the fifth when co-captain Tilden led off with a single to left. Hull forced Tilden at second, then went to second when Speight collected his third hit of the day, a single to left. Brown forced Speight at second, Hull going to third. Hull walked across with Carolina's fourth run when plate umpire Lou Bello called a balk on Grich.

White evened his record at 1-1 although he had to have relief help from Danneman in the seventh. The chunky righthander repeatedly pitched himself out of jams in the 6 1/3 innings he pitched. He and Dannemann left 10 Gamecock runners stranded.

"Big Daddy" Found Dead In Baltimore

BALTIMORE, (UPI) — Professional football player Eugene "Big Daddy" Lipscomb was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital here yesterday.

A preliminary autopsy on the body of the 31-year-old Pittsburgh Steelers tackle produced a report Friday that the sudden death "was caused by an overdose of narcotics."

The six-foot, six-inch Lipscomb, whose playing weight was 283 pounds, achieved all-pro distinction in the NFL without ever having played college football.

H signed with the Los Angeles Rams in 1953, but was traded to the Baltimore Colts in 1956. He was a key factor behind the Colts' championship drives in 1958 and 1959.

He later was traded to the Steelers, and in his last professional game, the Playoff Bowl in Miami last January, "Big Daddy" played one of his finest games, against the Detroit Lions.

Arnold Fires 70; Leads ACC Golf

By ETADIN MOLADNU

HOT SPRINGS, Va. — Tommy Arnold of UNC has taken a two stroke lead at the half-way point in the ACC golf championships.

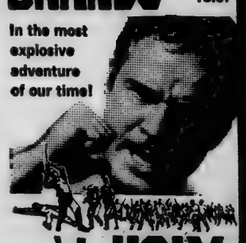
The hot-shooting sophomore trimmed two strokes off par en route to his 70. Two strokes off the pace was tournament co-favorite Jay Siegel of Wake Forest with a 72.

Maryland and Wake Forest were tied at the half-way mark with a total of 299 strokes. The top four players on each day count toward the team championship. Duke finished with 306 and UNC with 307, both well within reach of the leaders. Virginia led the second division with 315, trailed by N.C. State with 317, Clemson at 318 and South Carolina with 327.

Scores soared despite perfect weather. The Cascades Inn course, one of the toughest in the South, only allowed five of the 64 entries to break 75. Ron Scales and Vern Novak of Maryland and Jimmy Thompson of Wake Forest fired 74s, and Eddie Honeycutt of Wake Forest carded a 75. Ken Folkes of Wake Forest, co-favorite with Siegel, had a 78.

UNC golfers, with the exception of Arnold, run into trouble with the testing Cascades course. Abe Andes, Les Fleisher and Harvie Hill carded 79s to join Arnold in the team score. Other Carolina scores were Mike Dore at 84, Skip Tucker at 85 and George Reams at 88.

Arnold, a native of Asheville, was rarely in trouble on the tight mountain course. His drives were perfect all day, and except for a few bad breaks could easily have had a 65.



The tournament winds up today, with trophies to go to both the individual and team winners.

Military Units Present 21 Awards In Joint Ceremony

The UNC Air Force and Naval ROTC units presented 21 awards to their top members in joint ceremonies Thursday and honored a coed from Raleigh as "Little General" of the year.

Twenty of the awards were for individual achievement. One, the Scabbard and Blade Award, was given jointly by the Naval and Air Force ROTC to two members of the Scabbard and Blade, ROTC honorary society.

Recipients of the Scabbard and Blade Awards, in recognition of their contributions to the organization, were Cadet Maj. Charles E. Brown and Midshipman Lt. Walter M. Bullard Jr.

The award especially recognized their leadership abilities in planning and organizing the Joint Military Ball.

Honored as "Little General" of the year was Miss Nancy Tillman. It represents the highest national award to a member of Angel Flight, the ROTC auxiliary.

Following is a list of awards made to AFROTC cadets:

Chicago Tribune Gold Medal Award, presented to the junior cadet displaying the same qualities, Cadet M/Sgt. Walter M. Crumpler.

Chicago Tribune Silver Award, presented to the sophomore cadet displaying the same qualities, Cadet A/1C Charles M. Tate.

Reserve Officers Association Membership Award, presented to the senior cadet possessing outstanding leadership characteristics, Cadet Maj. William D. Croom.

Reserve Officers Medal and Membership Award, presented to the junior cadet displaying outstanding leadership and scholastic abilities, Cadet M/Sgt. David W. Howe.

Reserve Officers Certificate, presented to the freshman cadet displaying outstanding leadership ability, Cadet A/B Charles R. Payet.

General Dynamics Air Force ROTC Cadet Award, presented to the sophomore cadet displaying leadership abilities and outstanding personal characteristics, Cade A/1C Frank A. Hall.

Sons of the American Revolution Medal, presented to the freshman cadet displaying outstanding interest in the AFROTC program and in duty as an Air Force officer, Cadet A/3C Alexander Loudon.

The awards and recipients in the Naval ROTC program were:

Sons of the American Revolution Minute Men Medal, presented to the midshipman who has demonstrated outstanding qualities of leadership and excellence, Midshipman Lt. Walter M. Bullard Jr.

American Legion NROTC Award, presented to the midshipman who has displayed outstanding qualities of military efficiency and leadership, Midshipman Capt L. Gordon Chadwick III.

Charges Filed Against Pair After Sit-In Arrest Grows From Incident At Patio

By TOM GRUEHN

Warrants against two UNC students were sworn out yesterday by the manager of a local tavrn when he "had to close early to avoid trouble" at a Senior Class party Thursday night.

Senior history major George LaMonte and senior journalism major Lester Carson, a Negro, were charged with trespassing after they refused to lave a class party at the Patio after being told that it was not an integrated establishment and that they would not be allowed to stay.

LaMonte was arrested about 6 p.m. last night and was released on $50 bond. The warrant for Carson's arrest had not been served at press time.

Henry Andrews, manager of the Patio, said that LaMonte had come into the bar and bought two beers, taking one of them to Carson who was waiting outside.

"LaMonte then brought Carson inside about 10:15 p.m. and both sat down at the bar," Andrews said. "I told them that we weren't integrated, and I asked them to leave. LaMonte said he wasn't going anywhere."

"Then I called the Deputy Sheriff," he continued, "and when he got there he asked them both to leave. They still wouldn't leave, so the sheriff told me to swear out a warrant against them in the morning."

Andrews added that "The colored boy (Carson) just sat there at the bar and didn't say anything. LaMonte did all the talking."

"We closed at about 11:00 because we were expecting trouble," Andrews said.

Lester Carson, one of the accused students, said that he had gone inside with LaMonte and both of them had been served at the bar.

"Later the manager came over," he said, "and told us the place wasn't integrated and for us to leave."

"Then the Sheriff came and told us we would have to leave or be arrested for trespassing. I said, 'I guess you'll just have to arrest me then'," Carson continued.

Carson said the Sheriff then left without arresting them and that he and LaMonte left when the place closed.

According to the Deputy Sheriff, Frank Maddry, he asked Carson if he would come outside and Carson said, "No, we can talk in here."

Maddry said he saw no disorderly conduct and no violation, so he left. He added that although there had been "a lot of noise," there is no anti-noise act in the county.

Jeff Guller, Senior Class treasurer, said, "we're sorry the incident occurred. If we had known The Patio was segregated, we would not have planned the class party there."

Sokol Retains Crown As Singles Champion

Stoneman Extends Match To 3 Sets

BY CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Stocky George Sokol, rallying from behind with a magnificent display of durability and poise, successfully defended his Atlantic Coast Conference singles crown here yesterday with a 4-6, 6-2, 6-0 win over teammate Keith Stoneman.

Sokol, a junior from Bryn Mawr, Pa., got into trouble early yesterday, and a sweltering packed house watched in amazement as the 5-9 blond fell behind 1-4 in the first set.

His opponent, Stoneman, unseeded and unheralded when this net festival began Thursday, boomed his big serve and rushed the net with tenacious regularity in the early going as he broke the favorite's service in the fourth game.

But big Keith, who upset three seeded players to reach this final, saw his lead deteriorate to nothing as Sokol fought back to tie 4-al with some fine passing shots.

Stoneman, however, still was having success with his big game and forcing play, and took the next two games to win the set. He held service Game-15 and then came from a 30-40 deficit to break Sokol's serve again for the 6-4 win.

The first game of the second group saw Stoneman continue to overpower his oponent with the big serve, but it was not to last for long.

The champion, beginning finally to get his bearings, chucked his conservative baseline style and ran off three straight games with some fine net play of his own. He beat Stoneman Game-15, took Keith's service when the big guy double faulted, and then held on a love game when Stoneman made some telling errors.

Leading 3-1, Sokol looked like a sure bet to break again in the fifth game when he took a 40-0 lead. But Stoneman, scrambling beautifully, caught up and pulled it out.

Elated at the feat, he rushed to a 30-0 lead on Sokol's serve, but the Pennsylvanian came back himself and edged the tiring Stoneman in a brilliantly-played many-deuced game.

It was 4-2 and, for all practical purposes, all over.

The powerful champ, getting stronger as Stoneman wilted, broke service Game-15 on some volley errors by Keith, and then held on a love game to take the set, 6-2.

Stoneman made one last gasp in the first game of the finale, but Sokol outlasted him in the longest game of the match. The two went to something like eight deuce games before George settled a perfect drop shot out of any possible reach to take another service break.

Sokol now began to force his opponent into numerous errors. He smashed, he lobbed, he dropped and just wore Stoneman out under the hot sun.

Keith's big serve, his early meal ticket, began to falter, and Sokol took some extreme advantage.

George Sokol, Stoneman In Doubles Win

George Sokol and Keith Stoneman, who earlier had fought each other for the singles crown, teamed up on the same side of the net late yesterday and upset teammates and defending champions Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison, 7-5, 3-6, 10-8 for the ACC doubles title.

Sokol, a three-set winner over his partner in the singles finale, and Stoneman had reached the feature doubles match by defeating Bruce Farrell and Rich Moorman of Viaginia, 6-3, 6-0 in the semifinals.

Hoehn and Harrison, who won this doubles trophy as sophomores last year at Raleigh, earned the right for another shot at the title with a 6-2, 6-4 win over another UNC team, Charlie Shaffer and O. H. Parrish.

The two semifinals wins and, subsequently, the finals win in the doubles gave Coach Don Skakle's team a final total of 26 points which easily amounted to a fifth straight John Kenfield team trophy.

Clemson, Maryland and Duke also scored in double figures in the point standings, but were far behind the Tar Heels.

Clemson finished with 11 points while Maryland and Duke garnered 10 apiece. Virginia got 9, Wake Forest 6, N.C. State 2, and South Carolina failed to score.

The hot sun had gone down, and the stifling heat had subsided to cool breezes when Sokol-Stoneman and Hoehn-Harrison went to work.

Police End Riots By Yale Men

Hundreds of students from Brown and Yale universities chose a warm May night for demonstrations that turned into riots early Friday before nightstick-wielding police forced them to disperse. No serious injuries were reported.

Providence, R. I., police, who used trained dogs to quell the disturbance, estimated more than 1,000 were in the demonstration which started at 9 p.m. Thursday when police broke up an interfraternity baseball game because windows were broken.

Hundreds of students rushed from the campus to girls' dormitories at Pembroke and Bryant colleges and left triumphantly, only after flimsy panties had been tossed from windows.

In New Haven, Conn., 17 Yale students were arrested before police drove milling youths back to their rooms. One policeman was reported hit by a beer bottle; one student required hospital treatment.

A group of 2,500 students at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., engaged in a brief march toward girls' dormitories but were quickly dissuaded when police cruisers appeared on the scene.

Six Brown students pleaded guilty in court later at Providence to disorderly conduct and were fined $20 each and costs. Nine other youths pleaded innocent and were held in $50 bond each for trial.

Some students listed a threefold reason for the demonstrations: a sultry spring day, pressure of preexam studies, and an earlier riot at Princeton University.

Five of the Providence police corps of K-9 dogs were used during the night. Two persons were reported bitten.

Rusk And Dobrynin Discuss Deadlock

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin discussed the disarmament deadlock Saturday against a background of increasing official gloom here over future East-West relations.

During a 20-minute call on Rusk, Dobrynin left what a State Department spokesman described as an "informal memorandum on the general problems of disarmament." The spokesman, Robert J. McClosky, added that a nuclear test ban was not covered in the paper.

The Soviet ambassador was even less communicative. He told reporters only that he had come to see Rusk on "some aspects of disarmament."

Russia in recent weeks has intensified pressure for a non-aggression treaty between the Communist Warsaw Pact countries and the Western NATO alliance. There was some speculation in diplomatic quarters that Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev might be offering concessions on some aspects of the general disarmament problem as an inducement to the West to sign the proposed non-aggression pact.

Neutralists Armed

VIENTIANE (UPI) — American weapons are being supplied to Laotian neutralist troops in the Communist-surrounded Plain of Jars region at the request of Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma, autnoritative sources said Saturday.

The sources said the American weapons would replace the Russian arms and equipment mainly used by Gen. Kong Le's neutralist forces when they were attacked in recent weeks by pro-Communist troops of the Pathet Lao.

The reported American arms deliveries would be the first to Kong Le since Aug., 1960, when he staged a coup de 'etat and took over Vientiane as a captain at the head of a paratroop division.

Shot On Schedule

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — Project Mercury officials held a three-hour meeting with astronaut L. Gordon Cooper Jr. Saturday and later announced everything was proceeding on schedule for his planned 22 orbit space flight Tuesday.

Exchange Plan Readied With Mexico

The School of Education is awaiting State Department confirmation of plans for an exchange of students and professors with a Mexican college.

The exchange would involve a group of 10 students and 2 faculty members who would spend three weeks in Mexico visiting classes and seminars at the Escuela Normal Superior in Mexico City and other schools in the area.

The program would be the culmination of UNC's efforts to join actively in the Inter-American Exchange, according to Dr. Arnold Perry, Dean of the School of Education. The Inter-American Exchange is the oldest exchange program of its kind—now involving 3000 people annually and 26 countries.

UNC has exchanged educational materials with the Escuela Normal Superior in the past, and has sent a student-made Spanish language film, 1200 copies of a special issue of the DTH in Spanish, a taped radio program, an exhibit of children's paintings, textbooks, magazines and letters from the faculty and student body.

Escuela Normal Superior, which enrolls about 900 students, has sent similar materials to UNC.

This year a group of students and faculty from Mexico made a visit to the UNC campus and other campuses in the U.S. It is hoped that the group from UNC will be able to make a similar trip to Mexico this summer, from July 22 to August 14.

The Advisory Committee of the project has decided to go ahead with tentative plans and make selections for the program.

Raleigh Troubles Reach Stalemale

By MARGARET ANN RHYMES

RALEIGH—Developments in the racial situation reached a stalemate here Saturday as Negro leaders decided to continue anti-segregation demonstrations and the leader of a 100-man study committee refused to negotiate until demonstrations ceased.

"How long the demonstrations will continue depends on the city of Raleigh," said Dr. Charles Lyons, chairman of the local Negro coordinating committee. Friday more than 1000 singing, chanting Negroes marched to the executive mansion during a symphony performance, climaxing three days of demonstrations for desegregation of downtown theatres and restaurants.

A group of Negroes took another "freedom march" Saturday afternoon, winding their way through downtown Raleigh, singing and chanting. It was another orderly demonstration and there were no arrests.

G. Akers Moore Jr., chairman of the 100-man committee named by Mayor W. G. Enloe, told Lyons that his committee was willing to negotiate with the Negroes as soon as demonstrations were called off. "I am sure that I could not get a representative group of businessmen to meet with demonstrations going on," he said.

Charles Earl, president of the Shaw University student body—principal participants in the demonstrations—has said that Gov. Sanford would be contacted Monday to arrange a meeting with Negro student leaders.

Meanwhile, Episcopal Bishop Coadjutor Thomas Fraser and his immediate superior—Bishop Richard Baker of the Diocese of North Carolina—issued a statement to be read in all Raleigh Episcopal churches this morning.

The communication asked "all people to support the merchants and institutions serving the people of this city when they strive to provide all men equality and dignity. We implore all in positions of authority to act quickly and wisely in achieving a resolution of this tension."

Also, petitions will be distributed in Raleigh churches today by the Raleigh Ministerial Association urging "the immediate removal of the color bar in all places and institutions to which the public has access."

The petition said that its signers "will patronize and support those businesses which abolish the practice of segregation."

Earlier Bishop Fraser and Catholic Bishop Vincent Waters sent a telegram to Mayor Enloe

Committee Seeking Different Approach

By BILL HICKS

The use of different and more direct tactics to end segregation it the College Cafe and other restaurants in the Chapel Hill area was the main topic of discussion at the second meeting of the Committee For Open Business Friday night.

The Rev. Charles Jones, pastor of the Community Church, brought the topic up when he pointed out that "the leadership of the white community has to be made to see that (the Negro) means business.

"We must find the heart and the conscience of the people who are hurt if we are to succeed," Jones continued.

After Sam Bromfield, a graduate student at the University, declared that the Negro community needed an issue to rally behind, another member took the floor.

"Perhaps what we need is a demonstration," he commented "Something along the lines of what the Negroes are doing in Birmingham, but on a smaller scale, might be appropriate," he continued.

Lester Carson, a UNC senior, then suggested a sit-in.

When discussion was concluded, the Executive Committe was directed to decide on new tactics by the next meeting.

A recent editorial in the Chapel Hill Weekly also provoked comment at the two-hour meeting.

The Rev. Clarence Parker, retired Episcopal minister, pointed out that the editorial had taken a statement by Al Higgins completely out of context and had thus distorted the tenor and aims of the Committee.

"Mr. Higgins' statement was obviously a literary one," Parker said. "This group stands opposed to violence and it was foolish for the Weekly to take literally a statement intended only in a literary and figurative sense."

CFOB also elected nine more members to the Executive Committee:

Bob Brown, editor-publisher of Reflections: Eugene Leak, a student at NCC; Lester Carson; Tom Davis, secretary of the UNC YMCA: Anne Queen secretary of the UNC YWCA: Jim Clotfelter, former editor of the DTH: James Gardner, a member of the UNC English Department; David Cheek; and James Foushee. Previously elected were Harold Foster, the Rev. Clarence Parker, the Rev. W. R. Foushee, Hilliard Caldwell, and Lou Calhoun.

Negroes May Use Jailing As Weapon

By JOEL BULKLEY

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Negro leader James Bevel yesterday urged that 15,000 Negro students consider going to jail here this summer in an effort to force President Kennedy to outlaw segregation everywhere in the U.S. as unconstitutional.

Rev. Bevel, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), told 1,000 students gathered at a mass meeting in a local church that should 15,000 students be awilling to spend their three-month summer vacation in jail, then he felt sure that President Kennedy would intervene and bar segregation forever in the U.S.

He said that if the arrest of 2200 students could arouse the sentiments of people throughout the world, then imagine the tremendous effect the arrest of 15,000 school children would have.

Bevel and other leaders in the "Birmingham Movement" Saturday began mapping plans for students to assist in the effort to double the numbers of Negroes registered to vote.

Student volunteers announced that they would begin a door-to-door survey throughout the entire city to locate the names and addresses of those Negroes not yet registered.

Throughout the past week Negro leaders Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, and Dr. Ralph Abernathy, have stressed the importance of getting every eligible Negro voter to the polls in future elections to insure a city government which will fully represent the Negroes.

City officials have scoffed at a biracial committee agreement on proposals to end the racial conflict which began here April 3. The agreement, which the city's Senior Citizens Committee said was necessary to prevent an "imminent explosion," drew praise from Washington and resentment from some people here.

A Ku Klux Klan meeting was scheduled for Saturday night in nearby Bessemer, to discuss the agreement.

One Negro leader reported yesterday that he wished negotiations hadn't been completed until after the Klan had left town.

"We don't feel that we are through yet," said Wyatt Tee Walker, information officer for the movement.

Dr. King in announcing the integration agreement Friday said he felt sure "the city could look foward to continued progress."

The agreement provided for:

1—The desegregation of lunch counters, rest rooms, fitting rooms, and drinking fountains in planned stages (which were not annouced) within the next 90 days.

2—The upgrading and hiring of Negroes on a non-discriminatory basis throughout the industrial community of Birmingham, including the hiring of Negroes as clerks and salesmen within the next 60 days.

3—The release of all persons on bond or their personal recognizance bond or their personal recognizance.

4—Communications between Negro and white will be publicly re-established within the next two weeks.

In Washington yesterday administration officials said they were heartened by the role a new hard core of Southern moderates had played in the agreement.

While acknowledging the threat of future business losses was a major factor in the decision by the whites, the government sources added that "there also was basic recognition by a lot of people down there that the Negroes were demanding something that wasn't so unreasonable."

However, the pact drew angry blasts from Police Commissioner Eugene "Bull" Connor and Mayor Art Hanes, both of whom are serving in a semi lame-duck capacity.

Both said they would not be bound by the agreement.

The city voted this spring to change its form of government from the three-commissioner form, in which Hanes and Connor were a part, to the mayor-council form. The commissioners have refused to give up their offices, contending that their terms do not expire until October. The matter is now before the Alabama Supreme Court.

Oh No—Another Honorary

We are sorry to note that the Yackety-Yack has succumbed to the same disease that afflicts the campus's too-numerous honorary societies: Bestowing "honors" upon people already loaded with them, people who—from their records and qualifications — we expect more from anyway.

This is not to say that the four students selected for the inaugural Frank Graham awards are not worthy of such distinction. This is, rather, to take issue with the principles involved in awarding such an honor.

First of all, we question the right of the Yack editor—who cannot claim to represent the campus, inasmuch as he is not elected—to create such an award and then to arbitrarily designate, by appointing the selections committee, who shall receive it.

Although Mr. Legum's motives were undoubtedly the highest, and Dr. Graham deserves all possible honor, we feel that Mr. Legum has overstepped the bounds of his editorial discretion.

We urge the incoming Yack editors to think long and hard before continuing the practice begun this year by Mr. Legum.

Second, and far more important, we question the whole notion of student honoraries in selecting people for "recognition." Frankly, the whole selection process—as presently practiced—smacks of a closed-corporation mentality. That some honoraries use a point system in determining who is worthy of being honored helps a little, but not much.

Almost without exception, those tapped for this or that are essentially the same type of people. They belong to this or that number of clubs; they have "served" in this or that capacity.

But what down-to-earth, actual contribution have they made to the betterment of the campus, their fellow students—even to themselves?

And, in general, aren't these the people of whom we should expect a fair amount anyway, given the fact that they usually have a pretty good educational background going for them, and often they are either here on scholarship or are having their way paid for them?

Furthermore, are they doing anything really difficult or disagreeable, which takes real effort and self-discipline, or are they simply doing what they enjoy doing?

Certainly these "campus leader" types deserve recognition. The point is, they get it—often to the point of absurdity.

But what about all those students who work several hours a week just to stay in school? What about those students who have a poor educational background or an IQ less than 120, but who assiduously apply themselves anyway and come out with C's and B's?

Do these students deserve recognition? Obviously, yes. Do they get it? Obviously, no. Why not?

We submit that the main reason is because it takes time and effort to determine which of the unsung many are performing what amounts to herculean labors by comparison with their better-equipped classmates. Also, they don't usually know, or have any friends among, the students who decide whom to tap and whom not to tap.

We think it's about time the campus' many honoraries stopped and asked themselves if they are really serving the purpose for which they were originally designed, or if they have not become shallow snob societies, thus cheapening the "honors" they annually bestow.

Not that we dislike the idea behind honoraries. We just think the heirs of the idea are failing to apply it correctly.

How, after all, can we expect to encourage real achievement until we begin recognizing it and refusing to accept look-alike substitutes?

Coed Challenge

A day or two ago, as we were walking past the College Cafe, we were rather astonished to see one of Carolina's outstanding coeds marching on the picket line.

Perhaps this should not have been so surprising, but, having been here for several years without noticing too many women students getting up the courage to step out of the typical Carolina coed's safe (but often innocuous) little shell, we felt quite gratified.

The fact that this girl was a member of a sorority and the fact that she was also a member of the "highest" women's honorary (which has not always had a reputation for choosing girls who publicly stand up for their personal beliefs) may indicate a new direction for the coed to pursue.

As Beth Walker said the other night in her "parting shot" at the university, it would be a good thing for the women students to step out and begin to challenge some issues a little more basic in their lives than the latest dance steps or who got pinned to whom.

The actions of that coed we mentioned above are proof enough that some of the women here do believe in some of these basic things.

We only hope that more coeds will have the courage to stand apart from the great lethargic groups to which they often belong and let their acts match their convictions.

And by this we don't mean picketing Lenoir Hall to advertise a watermelon feast.

Davis At His Best & Worst

Record Review: As Long As She Needs Me, Reprise Records featuring Sammy Davis, Jr.

By FRED SEELY

So long as Sammy Davis, Jr., sings songs as they were written, he is one of the top men in show business. When he gets tricky, he falls to the bottom.

His latest LP, "As Long As She Needs Me," features Davis at his best, and, unfortunately, at his worst. But the good songs far outweigh the bad ones, and the package is well worth the price.

The highlight is "Out of this World," a fast, driving tune that sets the pace for the whole show. But it does not stand alone.

The title song was selected from "Oliver!", a hit Broadway show. It was the best song in the play, and Davis does a good job with it.

Others worthy of praise are "Climb Ev'ry Mountain," "We Kiss in a Shadow," "There is Nothing Like a Dame," "Falling in Love With Love" and "Step Out of That Dream," a fast number with a Latin beat.

But then the going gets rough. Davis' musical acrobats leave much to be desired, as somewhere along the line he has been told that he is a great "song stylist." He isn't.

"Bye Bye Blackbird" and "Back in Your Own Backyard" are far out of place in this album. Davis seems to force himself in these selections, and their total effect is nil. "There Was a Tavern in the Town" is not much better. The worst is "Tender Trap," a clever tune that is poorly arranged and poorly sung. Again, if Davis would stick to the normal method of singing, he would achieve far more success.

'Why Must We Act As A Declining Rather Than A Coming Nation?'

By JIM RESTON

The reversal of the American attitude toward the rest of the world has been so complete and so dramatic since the second World War that anyone who remarks upon it these days risks being thought a crude bore. How often have we heard the tear-jerking story of our transformation from isolation to involvement: how through a gratuitous process of self-denial we consented to take up the staff as defender of freedom, and savior of human dignity, and all this against those who would subordinate, eventually kill, human freedom and spontaneity in the interest of the "state". We recognized our unique and perhaps unpleasant duty, and acted upon it, even though our heart ached for the by-gone days of splendid detachment.

This image of our moral place in world affairs has been accepted so completely that it is no longer questioned, and in this total acceptance lies the makings of an ironic tragedy which we are already beginning to experience. With our traditional propensity for oversimplification, we Americans have come to equate Communism with unrivaled evil, and opposition to it, a necessary virtue, which must be defended at any cost.

On the international scene, we say to countries of the world, "Make a show of anti-Communism, and we thankfully welcome you, and throw open our pocketbook, and our arsenal. You have fulfilled the sole necessary requirement for privilege."

On the national scene, we say, "Think and act as you please just so long as you don't display leftist tendencies. Freedom for one and all (who are ensconced on the rightist two thirds of the political continuum)."

This development is a very grave one for the future of our own nation and her standing in the world. The core of the difficulty is that we have lost sight of what we are fighting for: Freedom and human dignity. We have replaced these values with non-Communism, and of what we are fighting against: authoritarian brutality, and suppression, and replaced them with communism.

The irony is that through this crude distortion, we have begun to justify our own use of brutal and suppressive means in the interest of "freedom and liberty", i.e. non-Communism, and actively uphold others guilty of crimes against human welfare.

The tragedy is that America is cheapening herself and her ideals, and by doing so assures a struggle in the future, not between the idea of liberty in its true and moral sense, and its adversaries, but between soldiers in jungles, all capable of any method of war, however brutal, designed best to gain the disputed territory.

In this battle, we can not win, and who wants to? Who could have pride or respect for a country, including his own, which used means so completely foreign to the philosophy it professes? Such a policy risks the charge of hypocrisy on top of brutality.

And who could tell what the course of domestic life would take in a country whose government was willing to act abroad in a way so inconsistent with her country's ideals? The future could only portend an irreparable adulteration of those fundamental ideals, a process which renders them empty and meaningless.

Is there evidence for this happening in the U. S. There is indeed: on the international scene, in Vietnam: and on the domestic scene, in our obsessive anti-communism.

In Vietnam, we have committed ourselves totally to the maintenance of a brutal and feudal dictatorship, which has lost the loyalty of its people. There has not been the slightest gesture of reform in the interest of the people as a whole. The dictator, Diem, has been able to sustain himself and his favorites in power through brutal suppression with the weapons given him by the U. S.

Time magazine said over two and a half years ago: "Diem has ruled with rigged elections, a muzzled press, and political re-education camps that now hold 30,000." He knows full well that in its present state, America prefers him to anyone else, because he willingly admits an open allegiance to us. He knows we would not withdraw and allow his people to gain control with the Communists as their natural leaders.

The U. S. is responsible for the direction of the entire military effort in South Vietnam. Contrary to the popular myth, it was reported by Richard Hughes in an article in the London Sunday Times that "probably half of all bombing and strafing missions by the South Vietnam Air Force are undertaken by Americans serving as pilots and co-pilots."

Furthermore, in some of the bombings, "napalm bombs have been used — bombs which do not simply kill, but also burn and torture. Although the U. S. has opposed their use and has prevented American fliers from participating in any operation connected with them, she still retains responsibility for their use in the eyes of the world.

Can involvement of this sort be in our interest in any way? What meaning could liberty and dignity have for innocent peasants, whose homes are destroyed, and families killed by napalm bombings? Or what meaning could these terms have for any peasant anywhere who know that the U. S., professed defender of human values, had been associated with such atrocities?

But in domestic affairs, the situation is far more serious because we have allowed the most basic of our rights to be curtailed through our irrational fear of Communism. There is no doubt that the threat is great, but it is external, not internal. The United States has the most stable and just government in the world. Its evolvement is probably the greatest success story in the history of modern government. If Americans did not even flirt with Communism in 1929, when the situation was the blackest it has ever been, what is to make us think that they will in 1963, when economic conditions are brighter than ever? W should have a little more faith in 187 years of steady development, than to think a few nuts like Gus Hall or Larry Phelps present a grave danger to the democratic way of life.

Our obsessive fear of Communism far from being justified, has forced a restriction of freedom of speech, and movement rights more fundamental than which can not be found. And what does this achieve us: In this country, only an atmosphere of suspicion, witch-hunting, political smearing, and more fear; in Europe, ridicule at our gullibility; in Russia, a feeling of pride that they are taken so seriously; in toto, infinite harm to what we stand for.

But why must we be so defensive? Why must we act as a declining rather than a coming nation, confident of the right of its system, and anxious to preserve the sanctity of our ideals? There is no reason why not.

Thus, let us accept the involvement, which has been thrust upon us, confidently, without remorseful nostalgia for by-gone days. But let us be clear about the purpose of this involvement, about what we are defending and what we are fighting. Let us discover the truth that Dr. Fever stated in this past weekend's Human Relations seminar: "No bad means can achieve a good end."

Book Review

The Slave Trade Today, by Sean O'Callaghan (Crown $3.95): Trading in human beings has never stopped and today it "flows along established routes from Central Africa through the Sudan and Ethiopia into the Arab countries," according to this shocking account. O'Callaghan has visited slave traders and attended an auction of slaves. He estimates that in Saudi Arabia alone the slave population is 450,000. In Africa south of the Sahara, slavery takes another form — the selling of girls as brides to husbands they have never seen before. And in India there is much traffic in slaves for prostitution. O'Callaghan's personal observations are supplemented by a short history of the modern trade in slaves.

Dick Gregory Is White Man's 'Court Jester'

By MICHAEL C. LYDON
Yale Daily News

Listening to Dick Gregory speak, for a white, is a painful experience. He reminds us of a tradition not only of cruelty and hypocrisy but also of absurdity. If we have grown used to attacks on the first, on the third still hurts.

And it should. Not only are we cruel and blind and destructive and murderous, we are ridiculous, foolish, and laughably insane. Nor is it enough to say it and go on as before. The momentary sting of the accusation becomes merely masochistic titillation if we do not learn.

But, despite the rightness of the accusation and the need of pain to start us to action, as a sustained form of argument, his ironic invective is destructive — both to the Negro cause and to himself.

Mr. Gregory's method is detrimental to the development of true integration because it precludes the possibility of white Americans working with the Negro on an equal basis. As his jokes indicate, there is no escape for the white from the irony of his situation. No matter what he does he is still absurd. Just like the Negro, he can be caught in the hopeless middle-ground between assimilationist and supremacist. The white running from his absurdity is as funny to Mr. Gregory as the white who remains defiantly absurd. The daughter who marries a Negro can be just as laughable as the father who asks the infamous question.

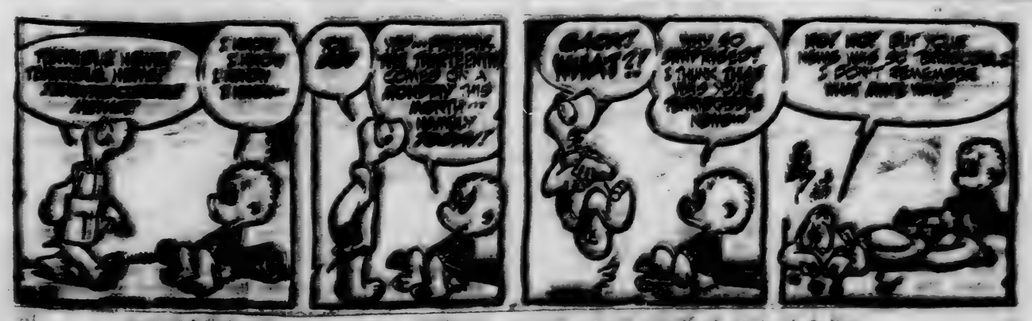
Reverse Roles

Thus the traditional American comic roles are reversed, and Mr. Gregory is amused by the hilarious sight of the white man trying to please the Negro, rolling his eyes in fear of what the Negro will think of his motives.

This reversal (seen at its extreme in the "white face" actors in Genet's The Blacks) has great appeal to whites and Negroes alike —to the Negro, because now at long last it is his turn to laugh, and to the white because it assuages his guilt.

The end effect is that relationship with a Negro becomes a delicate task of trying to say the right thing, which the Negro can negate and make foolish by exposing our struggles and by reminding us of our guilt. A white who comprises of the situation is told that his desire that the Negro forget the centuries of oppression and become friends right away is wanting both the eating and the cake.

If, however, the shaking of hands is to be more than symbolic and if honest two-way dialogue is to be begun, our guilt must be laid aside. Rehabilitation of a criminal is impossible if the reformer maintains that the criminal is in a lower position because of his crime, that his ideas are tainted, or that he can not criticize the reformer himself. In effect the Negro will have to bear our criticism, exactly as we bear his criticism, in the process of helping us right our wrongs.



Failure in Understanding

This may seem too much to ask and, indeed, judged by Western history, it sounds like a wild dream. Actually, it is what is happening in the mainstream of the movement for Negro equality. Negroes have been willing to work with whites, listen to their advice, and accept their tardy and often hesitant help.

That Mr. Gregory fails to understand this shows that he is outside the constructive part of the movement.

It is further illustrated by the ambiguity of his position as a speaker for the Negro. He is a celebrity because he is a comedian who makes a living by telling whites jokes that they want to hear. He is, in effect, a court jester, who, in spite of and even because of his degraded position, was the only one allowed to make fun of the king. This may not be the Uncle Tom of yesteryear but the similarity is obvious.

Oh No—Another Honorary

We are sorry to note that the Yackety-Yack has succumbed to the same disease that afflicts the campus's too-numerous honorary societies: Bestowing "honors" upon people already loaded with them, people who—from their records and qualifications — we expect more from anyway.

This is not to say that the four students selected for the inaugural Frank Graham awards are not worthy of such distinction. This is, rather, to take issue with the principles involved in awarding such an honor.

First of all, we question the right of the Yack editor—who cannot claim to represent the campus, inasmuch as he is not elected—to create such an award and then to arbitrarily designate, by appointing the selections committee, who shall receive it.

Although Mr. Legum's motives were undoubtedly the highest, and Dr. Graham deserves all possible honor, we feel that Mr. Legum has overstepped the bounds of his editorial discretion.

We urge the incoming Yack editors to think long and hard before continuing the practice begun this year by Mr. Legum.

Second, and far more important, we question the whole notion of student honoraries in selecting people for "recognition." Frankly, the whole selection process—as presently practiced—smacks of a closed-corporation mentality. That some honoraries use a point system in determining who is worthy of being honored helps a little, but not much.

Almost without exception, those tapped for this or that are essentially the same type of people. They belong to this or that number of clubs; they have "served" in this or that capacity.

But what down-to-earth, actual contribution have they made to the betterment of the campus, their fellow students—even to themselves?

And, in general, aren't these the people of whom we should expect a fair amount anyway, given the fact that they usually have a pretty good educational background going for them, and often they are either here on scholarship or are having their way paid for them?

Furthermore, are they doing anything really difficult or disagreeable, which takes real effort and self-discipline, or are they simply doing what they enjoy doing?

Certainly these "campus leader" types deserve recognition. The point is, they get it—often to the point of absurdity.

But what about all those students who work several hours a week just to stay in school? What about those students who have a poor educational background or an IQ less than 120, but who assiduously apply themselves anyway and come out with C's and B's?

Do these students deserve recognition? Obviously, yes. Do they get it? Obviously, no. Why not?

We submit that the main reason is because it takes time and effort to determine which of the unsung many are performing what amounts to herculean labors by comparison with their better-equipped classmates. Also, they don't usually know, or have any friends among, the students who decide whom to tap and whom not to tap.

We think it's about time the campus' many honoraries stopped and asked themselves if they are really serving the purpose for which they were originally designed, or if they have not become shallow snob societies, thus cheapening the "honors" they annually bestow.

Not that we dislike the idea behind honoraries. We just think the heirs of the idea are failing to apply it correctly.

How, after all, can we expect to encourage real achievement until we begin recognizing it and refusing to accept look-alike substitutes?

Coed Challenge

A day or two ago, as we were walking past the College Cafe, we were rather astonished to see one of Carolina's outstanding coeds marching on the picket line.

Perhaps this should not have been so surprising, but, having been here for several years without noticing too many women students getting up the courage to step out of the typical Carolina coed's safe (but often innocuous) little shell, we felt quite gratified.

The fact that this girl was a member of a sorority and the fact that she was also a member of the "highest" women's honorary (which has not always had a reputation for choosing girls who publicly stand up for their personal beliefs) may indicate a new direction for the coed to pursue.

As Beth Walker said the other night in her "parting shot" at the university, it would be a good thing for the women students to step out and begin to challenge some issues a little more basic in their lives than the latest dance steps or who got pinned to whom.

The actions of that coed we mentioned above are proof enough that some of the women here do believe in some of these basic things.

We only hope that more coeds will have the courage to stand apart from the great lethargic groups to which they often belong and let their acts match their convictions.

And by this we don't mean picketing Lenoir Hall to advertise a watermelon feast.

Davis At His Best & Worst

Record Reviw: As Long As She Needs Me, Reprise Records featuring Sammy Davis, Jr.

By FRED SEELY

So long as Sammy Davis, Jr., sings songs as they were written, he is one of the top men in show business. When he gets tricky, he falls to the bottom.

His latest LP, "As Long As She Needs Me," features Davis at his best, and, unfortunately, at his worst. But the good songs far outweigh the bad ones, and the package is well worth the price.

The highlight is "Out of this World," a fast, driving tune that sets the pace for the whole show. But it does not stand alone.

The title song was selected from "Oliver!", a hit Broadway show. It was the best song in the play, and Davis does a good job with it.

Others worthy of praise are "Climb Ev'ry Mountain," "We Kiss in a Shadow," "There is Nothing Like a Dame," "Falling in Love With Love" and "Step Out of That Dream," a fast number with a Latin beat.

But then the going gets rough. Davis' musical acrobats leave much to be desired, as somewhere along the line he has been told that he is a great "song stylist." He isn't.

"Bye Bye Blackbird" and "Back in Your Own Backyard" are far out of place in this album. Davis seems to force himself in these selections, and their total effect is nil. "There Was a Tavern in the Town" is not much better. The worst is "Tender Trap," a clever tune that is poorly arranged and poorly sung. Again, if Davis would stick to the normal method of singing, he would achieve far more success.

'Why Must We Act As A Declining Rather Than A Coming Nation?'

By JIM RESTON

The reversal of the American attitude toward the rest of the world has been so complete and so dramatic since the second World War that anyone who remarks upon it these days risks being thought a crude bore. How often have we heard the tear-jerking story of our transformation from isolation to involvement; how through a gratuitous process of self-denial we consented to take up the staff as defender of freedom, and savior of human dignity, and all this against those who would subordinate, eventually kill, human freedom and spontaneity in the interest of the "state". We recognized our unique and perhaps unpleasant duty, and acted upon it, even though our heart ached for the by-gone days of splendid detachment.

This image of our moral place in world affairs has been accepted so completely that it is no longer questioned, and in this total acceptance lies the makings of an ironic tragedy which we are already beginning to experience. With our traditional propensity for over-simplification, we Americans have come to equate Communism with unrivaled evil, and opposition to it, a necessary virtue, which must be defended at any cost.

On the international scene, we say to countries of the world, "Make a show of anti-Communism, and we thankfully welcome you, and throw open our pocketbook, and our arsenal. You have fulfilled the sole necessary requirement for privilege."

On the national scene, we say, "Think and act as you please just so long as you don't display leftist tendencies. Freedom for one and all (who are ensconced on the rightist two thirds of the political continuum)."

This development is a very grave one for the future of our own nation and her standing in the world. The core of the difficulty is that we have lost sight of what we are fighting for: Freedom and human dignity. We have replaced these values with non-Communism, and of what we are fighting against: authoritarian brutality, and suppression, and replaced them with communism.

The irony is that through this crude distortion, we have begun to justify our own use of brutal and suppressive means in the interest of "freedom and liberty", i.e. non-Communism, and actively uphold others guilty of crimes against human welfare.

The tragedy is that America is cheapening herself and her ideals, and by doing so assures a struggle in the future, not between the idea of liberty in its true and moral sense, and its adversaries, but between soldiers in jungles, all capable of any method of war, however brutal, designed best to gain the disputed territory.

In this battle, we can not win, and who wants to? Who could have pride or respect for a country, including his own, which used means so completely foreign to the philosophy it professes? Such a policy risks the charge of hypocrisy on top of brutality.

And who could tell what the course of domestic life would take in a country whose government was willing to act abroad in a way so inconsistent with her country's ideals? The future could only portend an irreparable adulteration of those fundamental ideals, a process which renders them empty and meaningless.

Is there evidence for this happening in the U. S. There is indeed; on the international scene, in Vietnam; and on the domestic scene, in our obsessive anti-communism.

In Vietnam, we have committed ourselves totally to the maintenence of a brutal and feudal dictatorship, which has lost the loyalty of its people. There has not been the slightest gesture of reform in the interest of the people as a whole. The dictator, Diem, has been able to sustain himself and his favorites in power through brutal suppression with the weapons given him by the U. S.

Time magazine said over two and a half years ago: "Diem has ruled with rigged elections, a muzzled press, and political re-education camps that now hold 30,000." He knows full well that in its present state, America prefers him to anyone else, because he willingly admits an open allegiance to us. He knows we would not withdraw and allow his people to gain control with the Communists as their natural leaders.

The U. S. is responsible for the direction of the entire military effort in South Vietnam. Contrary to the popular myth, it was reported by Richard Hughes in an article in the London Sunday Times that "probably half of all bombing and strafing missions by the South Vietnam Air Force are undertaken by Americans serving as pilots and co-pilots."

Furthermore, in some of the bombings, napalm bombs have been used — bombs which do not simply kill, but also burn and torture. Although the U. S. has opposed their use and has prevented American fliers from participating in any operation connected with them, she still retains responsibility for their use in the eyes of the world.

Can involvement of this sort be in our interest in any way? What meaning could liberty and dignity have for innocent peasants whose homes are destroyed, and families killed by napalm bombings? Or what meaning could these terms have for any peasant anywhere who know that the U. S., professed defender of human values, had been associated with such atrocities?

But in domestic affairs, the situation is far more serious because we have allowed the most basic of our rights to be curtailed through our irrational fear of Communism. There is no doubt that the threat is great, but it is external, not internal. The United States has the most stable and just government in the world. Its evolvement is probably the greatest success tory in the history of modern government. If Americans did not even flirt with Communism in 1929, when the situation was the blackest it has ever been, what is to make us think that they will in 1963, when economic conditions are brighter than ever? W should have a little more faith in 187 years of steady development, than to think a few nuts like Gus Hall or Larry Phelps present a grave danger to the democratic way of life.

Our obsessive fear of Communism far from being justified, has forced a restriction of freedom of speech, and movement rights more fundamental than which can not be found. And what does this achieve us: In this country, only an atmosphere of suspicion, witch-hunting, political smearing, and more fear; in Europe, ridicule at our guillibility; in Russia, a feeling of pride that they are taken so seriously; in toto, infinite harm to what we stand for.

But why must we be so defensive? Why must we act as a declining rather than a coming nation, confident of the right of its system, and anxious to preserve the sanctity of our ideals? There is no reason why not.

Thus, let us accept the involvement, which has been thrust upon us, confidently, without remorseful nostalgia for by-gone days. But let us be clear about the purpose of this involvement, about what we are defending and what we are fighting. Let us discover the truth that Dr. Fever stated in this past weekend's Human Relations seminar: "No bad means can achieve a good end."

Book Review

The Slave Trade Today, by Sean O'Callaghan (Crown $3.95): Trading in human beings has never stopped and today it "flows along established routes from Central Africa through the Sudan and Ethiopia into the Arab countries," according to this shocking account. O'Callaghan has visited slave traders and attended an auction of slaves. He estimates that in Saudi Arabia alone the slave population is 450,000. In Africa south of the Sahara, slavery takes another form — the selling of girls as brides to husbands they have never seen before. And in India there is much traffic in slaves for prostitution. O'Callaghan's personal observations are supplemented by a short history of the modern trade in slaves.

Dick Gregory Is White Man's 'Court Jester'

By MICHAEL C. LYDON
Yale Daily News

Listening to Dick Gregory speak, for a white, is a painful experience. He reminds us of a tradition not only of cruelty and hypocrisy but also of absurdity. If we have grown used to attacks on the first two, the third still hurts.

And it should. Not only are we cruel and blind and destructive and murderous, we are ridiculous, foolish, and laughably insane. Nor is it enough to say it and go on as before. The momentary sting of the accusation becomes merely masochistic titillation if we do not learn.

But, despite the rightness of the accusation and the need of pain to start us to action, as a sustained form of argument, his ironic invective is destructive — both to the Negro cause and to himself.

Mr. Gregory's method is detrimental to the development of true integration because it precludes the possibility of white Americans working with the Negro on an equal basis. As his jokes indicate, there is no escape for the white from the irony of his situation. No matter what he does he is still absurd. Just like the Negro, he can be caught in the hopeless middle-ground between assimilationist and supremacist. The white running from his absurdity is as funny to Mr. Gregory as the white who remains defiantly absurd. The daughter who marries a Negro can be just as laughable as the father who asks the infamous question.

Reverse Roles

Thus the traditional American comic roles are reversed, and Mr. Gregory is amused by the hilarious sight of the white man trying to please the Negro, rolling his eyes in fear of what the Negro will think of his motives.

This reversal (seen at its extreme in the "white face" actors in Genet's The Blacks) has great appeal to whites and Negroes alike —to the Negro, because now at long last it is his turn to laugh, and to the white because it assuages his guilt.

The end effect is that relationship with a Negro becomes a delicate task of trying to say the right thing, which the Negro can negate and make foolish by exposing our struggles and by reminding us of our guilt. A white who complains of the situation is told that his desire that the Negro forget the centuries of oppression and become friends right away is wanting both the eating and the cake.

If, however, the shaking of hands is to be more than symbolic and if honest two-way dialogue is to be begun, our guilt must be laid aside. Rehabilitation of a criminal is impossible if the reformer maintains that the criminal is in a lower position because of his crime, that his ideas are tainted, or that he can not criticize the reformer himself. In effect the Negro will have to bear our criticism, exactly as we bear his criticism, in the process of helping us right our wrongs.

Failure in Understanding

This may seem too much to ask and, indeed, judged by Western history, it sounds like a wild dream. Actually, it is what is happening in the mainstream of the movement for Negro equality. Negroes have been willing to work with whites, listen to their advice, and accept their tardy and often hesitant help.

That Mr. Gregory fails to understand this shows that he is outside the constructive part of the movement.

It is further illustrated by the ambiguity of his position as a speaker for the Negro. He is a celebrity because he is a comedian who makes a living by telling whites jokes that they want to hear. He is, in effect, a court jester, who, in spite of and even because of his degraded position, was the only one allowed to make fun of the king. This may not be the Uncle Tom of yesteryear but the similarity is obvious. . .

Anthologies, Anthologies: Now Jarrell's In The Act

"A Sad Heart at the Supermarket," by Randall Jarrell; Atheneum; 1962.

By STEVE DENNIS

Come on. Everyone's getting into the act. Now even Randall Jarrell has done it—why, it's easy. Just collect ten or so of your essays, it isn't necessary for them to have a common theme even, and send them off to that publisher who said you need a book about now to keep your name before the public.

If you run into a snag, call up Mr. Jarrell and ask him about your problems. He may not have many answers, but he's sure to be an interesting person with whom to talk.

One hopes this is an imaginary conversation which will never take place, but Mr. Jarrell's most recent book 'A Sad Heart at the Supermarket' leads one to wonder. The essays are excellent, and there is no real reason why a volume of essays should have a unity of theme or style, but this seems little to ask of a writer who, while still alive, can decide in what context to print each of his works.

The collection begins as an analysis of a now familiar problem in contemporary literature: what is wrong with the American culture today. Dwight Macdonald has left a well-trodden path for anyone else to follow, but Jarrell has a new list of sights along the way. He thinks the story of Alexander the Great's hike to see Diogenes in his tub is no longer suited to today's corporation life, that today Diogenes would be trying to make an appointment with Alexander's secretary.

"The Taste of the Age" is a satire aimed at the modern trends toward literary condensation and simplification. It is closely allied with "The Schools of Yesteryear," which follows it. Both are concerned with the paradox of a society in which more and more people are reading more and more books which are more and more vapid or re-written.

Jarrell cringes at the thought of how delighted Queen Victoria would have been with the "Readers' Digest." This would have been a weapon against an Albert who quoted Shakespeare and an Archbishop of Canterbury who quoted the Bible. She could have forbidden them to quote anything that hadn't been run through the purification process of the "Digest."

Jarrell parodies in dramatic form the familiar arguments concerning the debasement of the modern reader as compared with the incomparable McGuffey readers. The irony is that Jarrell is on the side of what he is parodying.

In McGuffey's time there would have been a learned article by a trained Victorian with the style of a Juggernaut and the arguments of a Jesuit, but Jarrell apparently feels the process he is criticizing has gone so far that he must argue against it in its own style.

"Poets, Critics, and Readers," "On Preparing to Read Kipling," and "Stories" are all about how to read and what to read. They contain arguments on the delights of reading for fun instead of to criticise or evaluate, pleas for a re-evaluation of Kipling by people who will read for whim and pleasure, and a suggestion of some other works which will give an honest reader pleasure.

Readers who will stop after the first seven selections in this book will find it an entertaining consideration of questions which are not usually treated with the originality and penetration which Jarrell brings to them.

All of the essays have appeared in magazines before, but the last three should have been saved for another anthology which would have given them a better setting.

Reprise Going Very Strong On Jazz, Gets Top Artists

Record Review: Jazz on Reprise

By HUGH LYON

Two possibilities are presentel to the small independent producers of jazz records. On one hand, they may capitalize on the interest in experimental forms of jazz and, on the other, they can produce jazz from the mainstream. A recent group of releases from Frank Sinatra's Reprise label marks this company solidly as following the tried and true road to gaining a jazz audience. With such familiar names as Dizzy Gillespie, Duke Ellington, Sidney Bechet and Barney Kessel, Reprise has come up with a representative and listenable sample of the sort of jazz which will never lose its appeal.

"Dateline: Europe; Dizzy Gillespie in Concert" is a re-release of a group of recordings made in France in 1952. This record is a fine example of the craftsmanship and inventiveness which can usually be expected in a Gillespie performance. It also places a greater than usual emphasis on the master-trumpeter's ballad style in which a slight foreshadowing of Miles Davis can be seen. Listen for Don Byas on tenor and pianist Wade Legge as well as for the amazing vocal on "Dizzy's Blues."

Another re-release from the early fifties is entitled "The Immortal Sydney Bechet"—and this is a hard title to dispute. Here the New Orleans born soprano saxophone player who became a national personality in France before his death in 1959 is heard in concert and in studio recordings. The music Bechet plays is certainly not stylish or even modern, but simply an example of provocative and individual improvisation — again jazz straight from the mainstream. Coltrane fans especially should take notice of what a soprano sax can sound like in the hands of the man who introduced the instrument to jazz.

More in the contemporary line, Duke Ellington's "Afro-Bossa" is one of the most interesting albums he has produced in recent years. Capitalizing on both Afro-Cuban and bossa nova trends, this album is actually nothing more than a modern recapitulation of some of the things Ellington was playing twenty or thirty years ago —and with almost exactly the same orchestra. Thus the title tune, "Afro-Bossa," is "The Mooche" redone while "Purple Gazelle" borrows heavily from "The Flaming Sword," recorded in 1940. And so it goes: Why, then, is the album interesting? Partly because of the presence of Johnny Hodges, Harry Carney, Ray Nance, Jimmy Hamilton and other evergreen Ellingtonians, but mostly because the guise of "the New Thing" has allowed Ellington to re-explore the "primitive" style with which he achieved his greatest successes.

"Kessel / Jazz: contemporary latin rhythms" represents another venture into the lucrative bossa nova field. However, this album demonstrates that it takes more than Barney Kessel, Conte Candoli, Paul Horn, Victor Feldman and Stan Levy (among others) to elevate bossa nova from the commonplace. This is professional jazz; polished jazz; but not interesting jazz.

Put together Ramsey Lewis, Red Garland, Bobby Timmons, et. al. and you have "Marv Jenkins at the Rubaiyat Room." In other words, this record is undistinguished but listenable and relaxing. Similarly, "Cano Plays Mancini: the Eddie Cano Quartet" presents warmed-over Shearing tempered with a dash of Roger Williams accompanied by remnants of Ahmad Jamal's rhythm section. Only the exceptional melodies provide any interest in this album and for a sampling of them, we recommend the composer's own noteworthy arrangements.

Unfortunately, these last three records demonstrate all too conclusively the drawbacks of producing mainstream jazz. The trend is to find a theme (bossa nova, Mancini, etc.) and then find enough musicians to make an album out of it. As the recordings in question point out, only someone with the stature of Ellington or Gillespie can be sure of producing anything close to excellent jazz within this framework. In any case, Reprise is to be congratulated for giving us such a fine selection of these masters. This factor alone marks Reprise as a company to watch in the future.

Rehder's 'Young Writer': Not Great, But Not Bad

"The Young Writer at Chapel Hill," published by the UNC English Dept.

By LARRY WALZ

"The Young Writer at Chapel Hill" is a collection of short stories, sketches, and poems written by students in the Creative Writing class at the University. There is a fair amount of variety both in the poetry (although only a few poems are included — the course emphasizes the short story) and in the fiction. If there is not a great deal of inspired writing here, there is certainly no bad writing.

Two of the poems in "The Young Writer" are by John Medlin. "Cities" tells of a "fortress" built by some schoolboys during the summer. The poem develops into a nice conceit, indirectly comparing the boys' fortress with the city of Babylon. Then, in the last line, the writer jerks the seat out from under the reader; the last line does not grow out of what has preceeded it, but this fault may be forgiven for the whole world which is suddenly opened up. "Cities" is beautifully written.

Medlin's other poem, "Rising Fawn, Georgia" is less successful. It is a good mood piece, and it too shows Medlin's stylistic competence, but it lacks underlying meaning necessary for a good poem.

The fiction in "The Young Writer" is on the whole good. Too many student-written short stories are carefully styled character studies dealing with singularly uninteresting characters and ending in a Moment of Insight. Fortunately, there is not much of that here.

The best story in the collection is perhaps Kent H. Dixon's "God Crosses His Sevens". This story gives the reader a feeling of professional, rather than student, writing. It covers a wider range of experience than do any of the other stories in "The Young Writer".

The episode of the protagonist's visit to a doctor to determine whether or not he has cancer is quite good; he is tellingly characterized when he leaves the office angrily, instead of with relief, after learning that he is well. The terse ending is also well done.

"The Way the Day Begins" a sketch by Jack Neal, is the skeleton of a fine short story. It describes a small boy's different reactions to the death of the family maid. The swift characterization of the Mother, painting her fingernails, idly trying to find a euphemism for death suitable to her son's mentality, is especially good.

Mike Albright's brief "A Sorry Case" is interesting not for its characters (the hero is only Holden Caulfield's first cousin) but for its style, which is solid and reminiscent of Hemingway.

The last story, quite different from the others, is "The Glade" by John Medlin. It is about two soldiers and a little girl who innocently turns them against each other. While one of the soldiers is away, the other falls asleep, and the girl steals what little food they have left. Medlin does a good job of quickly leading up to the explosion of violence while still making it well-motivated. The ending is both moving and disturbing.

Review by Tim Tetlow

'Cybele': Power & Poetry

"SUNDAYS and CYBELLE" at the Rialto Theatre, Durham. Directed by Serge Bourguignon, starring Hardy Kruger, Nicole Courcel, Patricia Gozzi. Photography by Henri Decae, music by Maurice Jarre. Davis-Royal Release.

It seems trite to shower superlatives on yet another foreign film, but "Sundays and Cybelle" has all the qualities that make a memorable two hours at the movies. The film unfolds with delicacy and charm as an injured airman suffering from amnesia, Pierre (Hardy Kruger), slowly comes back to life as he creates a new world with Francise (Patricia Gozzi), a 12 year old girl who has been left in a convent by her father.

The scene is set in Ville d'Avray, a town near Paris. Pierre is waiting for his mistress at the station as usual, and there he meets Francoise, who is being taken to a convent by her father. She is crying and Pierre trys to console her with a gift of some brightly colored stones.

The girl cheers up, but her father brusquely refuses and hurries her off. Pierre learns that the father is not returning, so he decides to visit Francoise the next day, and the nuns agree since they believe it is Pierre who is her father.

Every Sunday therafter, Pierre and Francoise go to the park and gambol on the banks of a pond where they find solace in a world of their own. Pierre's normal meetings with Madelaine (Nicole Courcet) become disjointed when she arranges for them to join a wedding party. Pierre is unable to keep his mind off Francoise and he becomes morose and difficult.

The party takes off for a nearby amusement park, and reluctantly, Pierre gets into a bumper car with Madelaine. The electricity is turned on, the excitement mounts, Madelaine tries to kiss Pierre who becomes frantic when he sees Francoise among the crowd. He rushes madly away, overturns a car, a fight follows, and the wedding party leaves as a riot develops.

Meanwhile, Francoise has become ill and upset because Pierre has failed to come, but their friendship is renewed and they make plans to celebrate Christmas, which is a few days away. In the meantime, Madelaine has learned about Francoise and Pierre and she confides her fears to a mutual friend, Carlos, who feels that the love between Pierre and the girl is the best thing that could have happened to Pierre after his illness.

Madelaine is almost convinced, but instead of returning to Paris one Sunday, she stays and follows Francoise and Pierre through the woods. She is touched by the innocence of the affair, and it seems obvious that her fears for the safety of the child are groundless.

On Christmas Eve Pierre breaks into Carlos's studio and steals the Christmas tree to give to Francoise. They drink champagne and Francoise gives him a piece of paper on which is written her real nome, Cybelle.

As part of his agreement, Pierre runs off to town to bring her the weathercock she had wanted from the steeple, and even on top of the tower Pierre seems to have recovered from his fear of heights. All seems well, but Bernard has become alarmed by Madelaine's story and he remembers Pierre's behavior at the fairground.

Believing him to be violent, he calls the police as Madelaine tries to dissuade him; she fears the worst and he tells her that it is already too late: he has already advised the nuns to lodge a complaint against Pierre.

The police are completely unaware of everything that has gone before. They find Pierre and Cybele in the woods and believing that he is about to harm her, they shoot and kill Pierre. Cybelle is asked her name, and the grief-stricken girl replies: "I am nothing, I have no name anymore."

Society's sanctions have snuffed out, not one life, but two. The ending is sad and powerful, with a feeling of finality. The poetic reality of the film is enhanced by flawless images of sight and sound, set upon a mysterious background of trees and lakes. The time of year is late autumn and an atmosphere of foreboding pervades the setting. Mist drifts through the trees and the dull sun is filtered by the damp, dripping air.

When the lake freezes over Pierre and Cybele throw stones across the ice and they bounce with a ghostly hollow ring. Most of the film was shot in the woods and streets of the actual town of Ville d'Avrray, contributing greatly to the film's sense of presence. in addition a number of the principal interiors were designed by the famed French designer Bernard Evein who worked on "Last Year at Marienbad."

The camera work is superb yet unambitious, which might have been the opposite case in "Marienbad." There are no anticlimatic scenes that leave the moviegoer in any doubt as to which direction the film is moving. "Sundays and Cybele" is yet another foreign film that is making the Rialto the most frequented threatre in the Triangle. This one certainly deserves your attention.

OLD BOOK NEWS

Bound Volumes of Magazines

During the past six months we've saved up all the bound volumes of old magazines that came along, and this week we're bringing them all down to the feature case.

Dates range from 1828 to 1918, prices from $1.00 up—with the up side pretty shallow.

Come treasure-hunting.

HOW TO SEE EUROPE FOR ONLY $300 A DAY: NO. 3

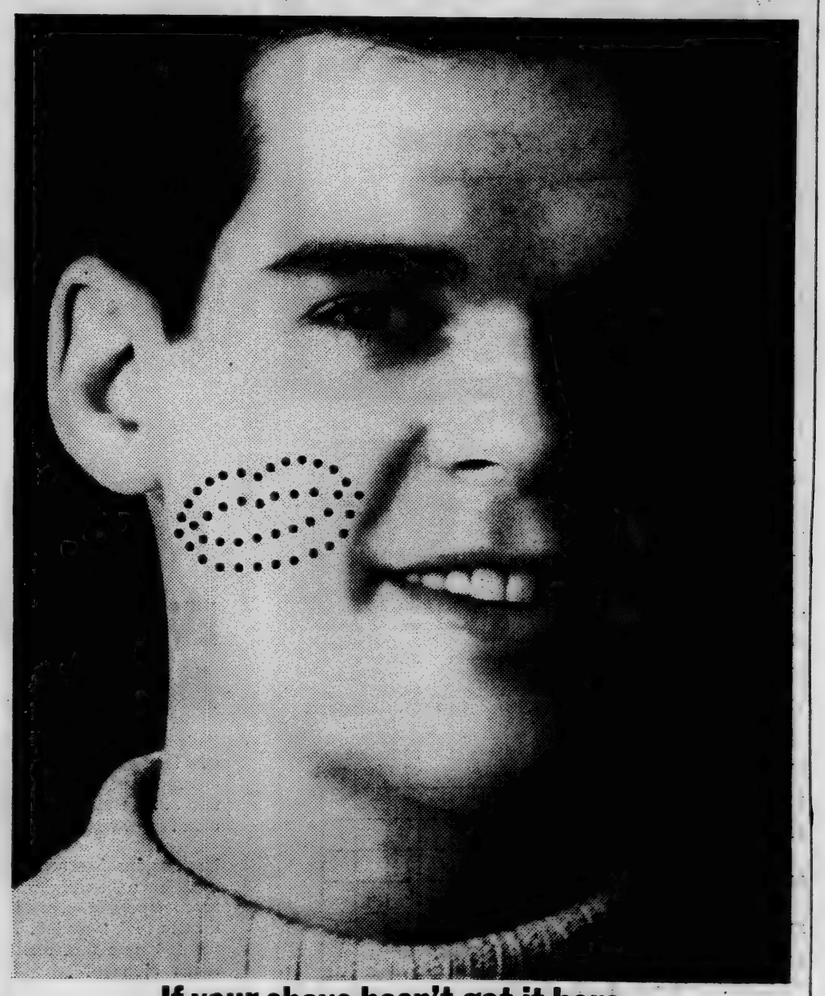
When all of you go to Europe during your summer vacation, you will certainly want to visit Spain, where the tall corn grows.

The first thing you will notice upon entering Spain is the absence of sibilants. In Spain "s" is pronounced "th" and thereby hangs a tale. Until the reign of Philip IV—or Guy Fawkes, as he was sometimes called—Spaniards said "s" just like everybody else. Philip IV, however, lisped, and Spaniards, having an ingrained sense of propriety and not wishing to embarrass their monarch, decided that everybody should lisp. This did indeed put Philip IV very much at his ease, but in the end it turned out to be a very bad thing for Spain. It wrecked the sassafras industry—Spain's principal source of revenue—and reduced the nation to a second-class power.

As a result, Spaniards were all forced to turn to bull fighting in order to keep body and soul together. Today, wherever you go in Spain—in Madrid, in Barcelona, in Toledo, in Cleveland—you will see bulls being fought. For many years the bulls have sought to arbitrate this long-standing dispute, but the Spaniards, a proud people who use nothing but Castile soap, have rejected all overtures.

It is therefore necessary for me to explain bull fighting to anyone who is going to Spain. It is also necessary for me to say a few words about Marlboro Cigarettes because they pay me for writing this column, and they are inclined to pout if I ignore their product. In truth, it is no chore for me to sing the praises of Marlboro Cigarettes, for I am one who fairly swoons with delight when I come upon a cigarette which gives you the full, rich taste of good tobaccos plus the pure white Selectrate filter, and Marlboro is the only smoke I have found that fulfills both requirements. Oh, what a piece of work is Marlboro! The flavor reaches you without stint or diminution. You, even as I, will find these statements to be happily true when once you light a Marlboro. Marlboros come to you in soft pack or Flip-Top box, and are made only by the makers of Marlboro.

But I digress. Let us return to bull fighting. Bulls are by nature bellicose creatures who will keep fighting till the cows come home. Then they like to put on pipe and slippers and listen to the "Farm and Home Hour." However, the Spaniards will not allow the bulls any surcease. They keep attacking the bull and making veronicas—a corn meal pancake filled with ground meat. Bulls, being vegetarians, reject the veronicas and then, believe you me, the fur starts to fly!



To be perfectly honest, many Spaniards have grown weary of this incessant struggle and have left their homeland. Columbus, for example, took off in three little ships—the Patti, the Maxene, and the Laverne—and discovered Ohio. Magellan later discovered Columbus. Balboa also sailed to the New World, but he was silent on a peak in Darien, so it is difficult to know what he discovered.

Well sir, I guess that's all you need to know about Spain. So now, as the setting sun casts its rosy fingers over El Greco, let us take our reluctant leave of Spain—or Perfidious Albion, as it is jocularly called. Aloha, Spain or Perfidious Albion, aloha!

Let us not, however, take our leave of smoking pleasure. Let us keep enjoying those fine Marlboro Cigarettes—rich, golden tobacco—pure white Selectrate filter—soft pack or Flip-Top box—available in all fifty States of the Union.

If your shave hasn't got it here, it hasn't got it.

If your shaver won't get close, why should she? To knock off that unromantic stubble, you need power. The kind of whisker-cutting power only the REMINGTON® 25 shaver delivers. Power to glide through the wiriest beard without slowing down.

And comfort. Exclusive Remington roller combs smooth skin down. Pop whiskers up into the man-sized shaving head. No irritation. No redness. No whiskers. Just comfort.

Will she or won't she? Your REMINGTON 25 lets you know for sure.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

Ala. Elects Liberal Editor

UNIVERSITY, Ala. (CPS) — A liberal integrationist has been elected editor of the University of Alabama "Crimson & White" in an all-campus election this week.

Scott Henry Black beat an avowed segregationist for the task of heading what may be the most crucial of all college newspapers next year. The university will be integrated by order of the federal courts next fall, and Alabama Gov. George Wallace has vowed to follow in the footstep of Mississippi's Ross Barnett, whose intransigence led to the nation's worst race riot in modern history, causing two deaths and necessitating the deployment of more than 20,000 federal troops.

Black had the backing of the current editor, Melvin Meyer, in the election. Meyer won fame earlier this year when he published an editorial during the Ole Miss crisis urging the admission of James Meredith to the school. Meyer's life was threatened repeatedly, a cross was burned on his fraternity house lawn, and the university was forced to employ two bodyguards for the young editor, a native of Mississippi.

In February, the National Executive Committee of the U.S. Student Press Assn., an organization of more than 150 university newspapers, singled out Meyer as the USSPA's "outstanding editor" of the year. USSPA president John MacGregor, of the "New Mexico Lobo," said in announcing the award that "The American press can be proud of the voice of reason that Melvin Meyer has provided almost alone in Alabama."

AAUP CENSURES ILLINOIS

SAN FRANCISCO (CPS) — The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) votel recently in its annual convention here to censure the University of Illinois for the manner in which it fired biology Prof. Leo F. Koch after he had written a letter to the student newspaper condoning pre-marital sexual relations for students on biological and psychological grounds.

The AAUP also considered, but rejected, censure proceedings against Northwestern U.

A vote of censure by the AAUP has no legal weight, but it carries considerable moral pressure. A censured institution often finds it difficult to hire top-notch faculty members, and the school loses considerable respect in the academic world.

The action against Illinois was approved overwhelmingly by the convention. Just previously, the association had voted down a motion by Prof. Wm. Wert of Indiana State College that the action be postponed for a year.

No one took the floor in San Francisco to defend Prof. Koch's position in the controversy at Illinois. The issues were only whether Koch's letter constituted grounds for dismissal and whether Koch had been granted due academic process in the dismissal.

The Koch case erupted into controversy on March 18, 1960, upon the publication of a letter to the "Daily Illini" written by the professor.

Koch's letter included this paragraph: "With modern contraceptives and medical advice readily available at the nearest drugstore, or at least a family physician, there is no valid reason why sexual intercourse should not be condoned among those sufficiently mature to engage in it without social consequences and without violating their own codes of morality and ethics."

The AAUP held that Illinois President David D. Henry was in error in firing Koch without a formal hearing on the charges against him. The Illinois administration was also criticized for failing to support the unanimous resolution of the university's Senate Committee that Koch should be reprimanded, but not dismissed.

In a statement issued over the weekend, the University of Illinois chapter of the AAUP issued a statement supporting the censure of the school.

"It represents a judgement by the national academic community that the administration of the U. of I. has not observed the normally recognized principles of academic freedom and tenure as endorsed by the AAUP and 14 other professional educational societies," the statement said.

Science 'Fun,' Chemist Says

By MAT FRIEDMAN

"Science is just plain fun. That's the only reason for doing it."

This is how Dr. Henry C. Thomas, UNC professor of chemistry, feels about his work. He is leaving today for Vienna, Austria, as one of two American scientists attending a meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Dr. Thomas, who is doing research on the behavior of radiation in soil, will address the international agriculture group on the use of isotopes and radioactivity in agriculture.

"We know, for example," he says, "that tobacco plants use a lot of potassium, and we want to know how fast it moves through the soil. Therefore, we place a little radioactive potassium in the soil and then analyze it."

Although Dr. Thomas is concerned only with the scientific angles of his work, research such as this may eventually help to develop better and safer ways to bury radio-active wastes. It has already added to the knowledge in the field as 15-20 of Dr. Thomas' published papers will attest. "We try to get better ideas on what to do with the radioactive materials," he says.

He points out that the Savannah River Plant right now has 20 million gallons of radioactive waste stored in tanks. This, he observes, is equivalent to 90 tons of pure radium, an "appalling" amount of radioactivity. "They are thinking of building a big cavern," he says, "and are hoping they can bury the waste and forget about it. There are some dangers involved in burial, but it is not appreciable."

Dr. Thomas receives samples of soil from Savannah and other areas and analyzes them in his laboratory. He has over $18,000 worth of equipment, including a gamma ray counter." Samples are placed inside this machine and the amount of radiation coming off is measured. Water is passed over the sample and absorbs some of the radiation, thereby decreasing the number of gamma rays recorded by the counter. In this way, he can determine how fast different types of radioactive materials diffuse through the soil. "It's all very simple," he adds.

Some of Dr. Thomas' samples come from as far away as the Hanford Desert in the state of Washington where, he says, some radioactive material is buried near the Columbia River. "But they solve their own problems," he says. "We receive samples here only when we request them.

"We run into all sorts of funny things. The mathematical problems get so complicated we have to use a computer. It makes it possible for us to solve problems we couldn't even think about."

Dr. Thomas points out that his work might lead to methods for clearing out radioactive spills after a nuclear attack, or, eventually, to ways of locating radioactive wastes lost in the ground.

A member of the UNC class of '31, Dr. Thomas has been working in this field since 1949, the last six at Chapel Hill.

The meeting, which is part of former President Eisenhower's Atoms for Peace program, is scheduled for May 6-9. "I will have a ten-hour stopover in Paris on Sunday," says Dr. Thomas, "and plan to take the day off and just see what I can. After the meeting, before returning to Chapel Hill, I'm going to spend a weekend in Rome."

Spearman To Chair NSA Study Group

A special commission to study student government problems of the colleges and universities in the Carolinas and Virginia has been formed here by the Carolinas-Virginia Region of the United States National Student Association.

Harry DeLung, Chairman of the Carolinas - Virginia Region, announced the creation of the commission after the meeting of the Regional Executive Committee here last Sunday.

The commission is to be called the Commission on Student Government Problems and was created in accordance with a resolution introduced by President-elect John Bynum of State College at the Spring Conference.

At the Regional Executive Committee meeting here last Sunday it was also announced that Bob Spearman, Student Body Vice-President, would be Chairman of the commission.

Spearman said that he hoped the commission would help solve the student problems on campuses in the region and that it would show the schools in te Carolinas and Virginia what NSA can do for student problems on a specific campus.

Spearman stressed that an exchange in solving campus problems would be of much value to Carolina's Student Government as it faced many similar problems here.

The Commission is to be composed of ten persons and will be completely apart from the campus NSA Committee. Spearman asked that those interested in being on the Commission contact either himself; Harry DeLung, Chairman of the Region; or Mike Chanin, Treasurer of the Region, at Student Government offices by Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

1. I'll tell you what you have to look for in a job. You have to look for fringe benefits. That's the big thing today.

Yes—the big thing.

2. You have to consider your needs. You're going to get married some day, aren't you? Then you need life and accident insurance.

Go on—go on—

3. You're going to have kids—so you'll want maternity benefits.

I'd like lots of children.

4. And what about medical bills? That's something every big family has to think about. You need a good major medical plan that covers almost everything.

5. And you're not going to want to work all your life, are you? You're going to want to take it easy—you know, travel around, live it up. So you need a retirement plan that guarantees you plenty of dough.

I can see it now.

6. That's why I say you have to look at the fringe benefits when you look for a job.

But don't you also have to look for interesting work, good income, the chance for advancement?

7. You sure do. That's why I'm going to work for Equitable. You get all those job advantages—and all the fringe benefits, too.

I admire your thinking.

WHAT'S HAPPENED TO FALCON

EVERYTHING! AND YET...

Early this year we put a 164-hp V-8 in a new kind of Falcon called the Sprint, and entered the stiffest winter road test we could find . . . the 2,500-mile Monte Carlo Rallye. We didn't know what would happen . . . but happen it did.

First, no one dreamed all the Rallye cars would have to experience the worst winter in decades. Snow, below zero temperatures, and the most demanding terrain in Europe took their toll. Two thirds of the 296 cars that started, failed to reach Monaco.

A lot of experts told us that the Falcon V-8's, untried as they were, could not hope to finish the Rallye with the best of weather. But not only did two Falcon Sprints finish, they placed first and second in their class. But there were more surprises (for everyone) in store. Against all competition, regardless of class, the lead Sprint went on to take first in the final six performance legs.

We honestly didn't know the Falcon Sprint would do this well. But it showed us a Falcon with our new 164-hp V-8 is a car that can perform with the best of them. So a lot has happened to Falcon, and yet . . .

A six-cylinder Falcon has just finished the Mobil Economy Run and finished first in its class. It had to take a lot of punishment, too . . . 2,500 miles from Los Angeles to Detroit over mountains, deserts, and long stretches of superhighways. But the nickel-nursing ways of the all-time Economy Champ took all comers in its class.

So you see something has happened to the Falcon. It can be what you want it to be . . . a V-8 that travels in the same circle as Europe's performance kings . . . or a Six that can travel cross-country on a budget. There's something to put into your compact.

TWO ELECTED

Two UNC professor were elected to top offices at the recent meeting of the Southeastern College Art Conference at the University of Alabama. Professor Joseph C. Sloane was elected president and John Schnorrenberg vice-president for 1963-64. Professor Sloane is Chairman of the Art Department and Director of the Ackland Art Center; Mr. Schnorrenberg is assistant professor in the Art Department.

The invitation to hold the April 1964 conference here was accepted. This will be the first time the meeting has been held at UNC.

Economics Club To Hear Banker

Archie Davis, Chairman of the Board of Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, will speak to the UNC Economics Club at its last meeting of the year.

The meeting, to be held in 02 Carroll Hall, will be at 7:30 p.m. Thursday. Davis will speak on "The Future of the South: An Underdeveloped Economy."

The club, in its second year, is open to all persons interested in economics, according to acting president John Barrow. It is sponsored by the Economics Department and has approximately 75 members.

with the lapse. Beside his break in the first, he broke in the third and the fifth while holding his own to take a quick 5-0 lead.

In the deciding game, George rapped a drop shot for 15-0, pushed Stoneman back and then trapped him with a net smash on the right for 30-0, fooled the big guy on a first serve which Stoneman misjudged for 40-0. Sokol then came to the net again, and when Stoneman lobbed it too wide to the left, it was all over.

Stoneman's performance in this tourney was a bit surprising in view of the fact that he played in the sixth position much of the year on this underclassmen-stocked team.

Big Keith beat Duke's Al McIntosh, Clemson's Doug Stewart, Virginia's Bruce Farrell and Maryland's Jim Busick—the latter three number one men for their respective schools—en route to this match. But Sokol was more than he could stand.

"I guess I was having a little difficulty at first," said the champion. "But I was never really worried about my play. I'm concentrating on the match all the time. I don't have time to worry about it."

Sokol did say he changed his tactics somewhat after his loss in the first set.

"Keith was lobbing a lot to my backhand, and I couldn't get it back very effectively," Sokol said. "I really never did get going until after a few games of the second set. Then, I was straightened out.

"I really don't know what I changed. But I guess I started rushing more than in the first set. I had to do something, that's for sure."

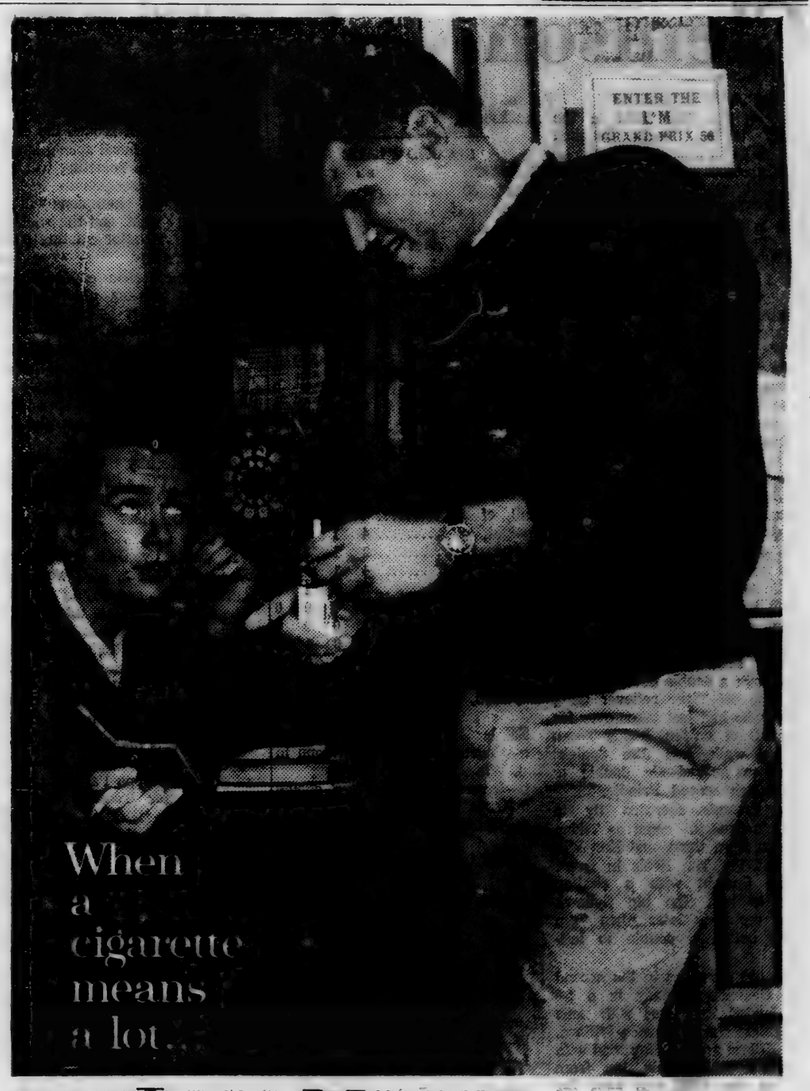
Awarded Library Money

The School of Library Science announced Friday that 16 students have been awarded Library Assistantships carrying a stipend of $2000 each for the coming year.

They will be enrolled in the Master's degree program and will be employed in various part-time positions in the University libraries.

All holders of assistantships are selected from a large group of applicants on the basis of academic performance and promise for professional librarianship.

Their widely varying interests and backgrounds include work in chemistry and other sciences, foreign languages, English, education, and the social sciences.



LOWENSTEIN TO SPEAK

Al Lownstein will deliver a short talk on the current African political scene and will autograph copies of his new book, "Brutal Mandate," Tuesday night at 8. The place will be announced in Tuesday's DTH.

Seven Meet Records Broken; Carolina's Clark, Brown Win

BY FRED HOBSON
AND MAT FRIEDMAN

Seven meet records were broken as the ACC Track Championships came to a sweltering close at Fetzer Field yesterday afternoon.

Incidentally, methodical Maryland swept to their eighth straight team championship as it piled up 100½ points.

Duke scored 46 points and Carolina 43½ to provide at least token competition for the Terps. Clemson (37) and South Carolina (13) were the only other double digit scorers in the meet.

Maryland senior Christ Stauffer was named the meet's outstanding performer and received the Robert A. Fetzer award. Stauffer won the 440 and 330 intermediate hurdles and anchored the Terps' victorious mile relay team.

The afternoon's blazing pace was set in the first event as a dazzling team from Clemson ran the 440 relay in a record-breaking 41.8.

Before the track cooled off, Stauffer had toppled the 440 mark and Dick Smith had smashed the old half-mile record. In doing so, Smith broke a 23-year Maryland school record held by Terp coach Jim Kehoe.

Other top individual performances were by Carolina's Jim Brown, Tommy Clark and Joe Huffman and Maryland's John Belitza.

Brown won the 120 high hurdles and placed a close second to Stauffer in the 330's.

Clark and his talented teammate Joe Huffman each went 6-6 (a new record) in the high jump, but Clark won because of fewer misses. The diamond duo tried for 6-8½, but narrowly missed their lofty goal.

Belitza, the temperamental Terp with the flawless form, set a new meet mark with a 15-6 perch in the pole vault. He failed in a spectacular attempt at 16-1½.

UNC Topples Clemson, 6-4

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Rallying for four runs in the seventh inning, North Carolina closed out its 1963 ACC baseball season yesterday with a sweet 6-4 conquest of Clemson—a win which assured UNC of at least a tie for second in the final conference roll call.

For the Tar Heels, it was their finest hour. After stumbling erratically through its first 22 games, the team caught fire and reeled off five straight ACC victories. Yesterday's triumph gave UNC a final record of 9-5 in the league.

Clemson, 8-5, closes out its AAC season Tuesday against South Carolina, and a win by the Tigers will tie them with the Tar Heels Both teams still have a remote chance for a first-place tie should Wake Forest lose both of its last two games, against Maryland yesterday and against N.C. State Tuesday.

The seventh inning was the ball game yesterday. Trailing 4-2, the Tar Heels tallied four times, then let Bill Haywood, who hurled eight shutout innings in relief, set down the Tigers in the enghth and ninth.

Dickie Prindle started the big frame with a double down the first base line off Tiger reliever Greg Casey, who had just taken over for starter Dave Wrenn. Buddy Tilden drew a walk, and Jim Speight blasted a ground-rule double to right which scored Prindle.

Bill Brown's sacrifice fly to center knotted the count as Tilden came in from third, and Ken Willard put the Tar Heels in front, scoring Speight with a sizzling single to left. The big flyhawk scored moments later when Tom Wright belted a double to left-center.

Haywood came on in the second when Clemson, already in a 1-0 lead, loaded the bases with none out against starter Spence Willard. Dave Ellisor greeted Haywood with a bases-clearing triple, but from then on the UNC ace kept the Tigers well-caged.

North Carolina closes its season Tuesday with a non-conference game against Virginia Tech at Blacksburg, Va.

Wake Forest Wins ACC Golf Crown

HOT SPRINGS, Va.—Wake Forest's sparkling sophomore Jay Siegel fired a two-day, 36-hole total of 145 to lead the Demon Deacons to a six-stroke win over Maryland for the 1963 ACC Golf Championship.

Siegel shot a second-round 73 to go with his opening-day 72. Teammate and co-favorite Ken Folkes shot an even-par 71 yesterday to tie him with Duke's John Abernathy for second place honors at 149.

The aggregate score of the four low scorers for Wake Forest was 603. Maryland had a 610 and last year's champion, Duke, had a 610, good for third.

North Carolina's Tommy Arnold, who shot a 70 on Friday to lead the field, turned from a king to a jack. The soph went to pieces on the second round, firing an 82, which dropped him into a tie for seventh in the final individual standings. His two-day total was 152, still the best among the Tar Heel golfers.

UNC finished fifth in the team standings with a 626, 23 strokes behind Wake Forest. As a whole, the Tar Heels found the tough, mountainous Cascades Course here rather puzzling.

Abe Andes had a two-day 155 and shot the best second round for the Tar Heels, a 76. Les Fleisher had a 157, and Harvey Hill rounded out the "low four" with a 162. Other scores were: Skip Tucker, 167, Mike Dore, 169, and George Reams, 171.

There was a three-way tie for fourth place honors between Maryland's Terry Campbell, Duke's Rick Bassett and Virginia's Clark MacKenzie. Each had a 150 total.

The Terrapins' Vern Novak tied Arnold for seventh, and Maryland's Ron Scales and Wake's Ed Honeycutt rounded out the "top ten" with 153s.

ACC BASEBALL

Wake Forest's Demon Deacons clinched the 1963 ACC baseball crown yesterday with a 6-3 win over Maryland at College Park, Md.

Mural Action In Last Week

By STUART BALL

With exams just around the corner, UNC's Intramural spring sports are in process of selecting winners in four events. Horseshoes, Tennis, softball and golf champions will be decided next week and the winners could very well alter existing point system standings.

Last week Ruffin captured the All-Campus bowling championship by defeating Stacy by 124 pins. The final score was 2010 to 1886.

Ruffin got to the championships by upsettting previously undefeated Delta Sig, 2003 to 1954. Stacy also pulled a mild upset by edging Chi Psi by 6 pins to get to the finals.

The fraternity blue softball champions will be decided Tuesday at 5 p.m. when Phi Delta Theta meets ATO. Last Thursday Phi Delta beat DKE 15-7 with the aid of 18 walks by DKE pitchers to gain a finals berth. ATO won over Sigma Nu the same day by default.

The Teague Animals take on the Avery AB's Monday at 5 p.m. in the dormitory softball championship game. In the semi-finals Teague edged another Avery team, the Anthropoids, 5-4 and The AB'S wallopped Old East 17-6.

Two slugfests highlighted the fraternity white division semifinals. As DKE and Kappa Psi gained finals berths for Tuesday's championship game. DKE edged Kappa Alpha 23-22 and Kappa Psi topped Kapa Sigma 24-17.

In the Grad division, semi-final contests pitting the Dental School Frosh against the Law Shysters, and Dental School-3 against the Law Less will decide the two finalists to meet in the championship game.

In Fraternity Blue tennis action Chi Psi will meet Phi Delt and DKE will take on KA Monday at 4 p.m. to decide the two finalists.

World News In Brief

Flight Of Astronaut Cooper Threatened By Cloud Layer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper and his Mercury space capsule were described as "completely go" Monday but a sudden layer of clouds put his scheduled liftoff Tuesday on a 22 orbit flight around the world in jeopardy.

"Everything is in readiness for the planned launch time of 9 a.m. EDT," a federal space agency official said. But he added, "cloudiness at Cape Canaveral continues to be the major concern."

The progress report came at a 6 p.m. EDT weather briefing. Another status report was due at 2 a.m. EDT, a few hours before the 36-year-old astronaut is scheduled to leave the seclusion of Hangar S and make the short trip to the waiting Atlas rocket and the bell-shaped capsule in which he will ride.

Would Land Wednesday

If all goes well, Cooper is scheduled to remain aloft for 34 hours and splash down Wednesday in the Pacific near Midway Island.

During the mission scientists hope to compile further information on the state of weightlessness and to perform visual experiments that will help in future space flight programs designed to bring two or more separate space capsules in orbit.

The big problem of weather was centered over this launch center. Recovery areas in the Pacific and Atlantic, which would be used if Cooper ended his mission sooner than scheduled, were reported in generally good condition for the ships and planes that would make the pickup.

Partly cloudy weather was anticipated for the Cape Canaveral area shortly before launch time and scientists would be reluctant to go ahead with the shot if long-range tracking cameras were unable to record the liftoff.

A NASA meteorologist said earlier in the day conditions were "marginal" for the Cape Canaveral area.

Later, a NASA spokesman said there had been no significant change in the morning forecast except that fresh winds and moderate seas were not anticipated in the Atlantic.

Walter C. Williams, director of operations for the space flight, said that Cooper spent the day reviewing the mission with NASA officials and astronaut Alan Shepard Jr., the backup pilot for the mission.

Cooper was to eat dinner at 7 p.m.t EDT and then planned to catch a nap, awake at 3 a.m. EDT, eat breakfast and don the silvery spacesuit he will wear on the flight.

Americans Banned

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet government Monday banned from the country four Americans and seven Britons on charges they were implicated in Russia's most sensational spy case since the U2 affair three years ago.

Notes to the U. S. and British embassies charged those involved had used their official positions to help Oleg Penkovsky, a former Soviet scientific official, and Greville Wynne, a British businessman, "in carrying out their espionage work."

Wynne and Penkovsky were convicted Saturday by the military collegium of the Soviet Supreme Court. Penkovsky was sentenced to death and is expected to be shot by a firing squad within the next few days. Wynne received eight years imprisonment.

Ala. Probe Asked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An Alabama congressman asked Senate and House committees Monday to investigate "whether any Communist hand is at work" in the Birmingham, Ala., racial demonstrations.

Rep. George Huddleston Jr., D-Ala., whose district includes Birmingham, made the request in letters to Sen. James O. Eastland, chairman of the Senate internal securities subcommittee, and Rep. Francis E. Walter, D-Pa., chairman of the House Committee on un-American Activities.

Huddleston also sent a telegrom to President Kennedy protesting the dispatch of federal troops to the Birmingham area. He said the action "would serve to heighten tension."

Sen. Lister Hill, D-Ala., said he has called on the President and "insisted" that the troops be removed from Alabama.

'Retreat' Charged

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States charged Monday the Soviet Union is preparing a new "grand retreat" in nuclear test ban negotiations by reneging on its acceptance of on-site inspections to police any such ban.

U. S. Ambassador Charles G. Stelle told the 17-nation disarmament conference such a Soviet retreat would "further disrupt" negotiations here "and cast a grave reflection on the seriousness of the Soviet Union towards our efforts to reach agreement."

Faculty Gets WRC Measure For Study

The Women's Residence Council's proposed substitute measure for the controversial apartment rule, and the formation of a committee to study a new rule will be topics for discussion at this afternoon's meeting of student, faculty and administration leaders.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson, in announcing the agenda for the meeting, said Professor James Caldwell had asked him to call another meeting of this group when a satisfactory statement regarding the University's position of authority was published by the WRC.

The WRC announced Friday that it had passed a resolution favoring a temporary substitute for the apartment rule. The Council voted to accept a slightly modified ruling that a coed could enter a man's apartment only is accompanied by at least one other woman. The original rule struck down by the WRC and subsequently re-instated by direct action of Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael stipulated the presence of two couples in an apartment.

WRC chairman Nancy Culler has said the new proposal would be put in effect by the Council only if the administration agreed to reconsider the issue at a future meeting.

Student government officials last week issued a statement clarifying that the administration has full and final authority in matters of student conduct if it wished to "make and enforce its own rules."

Student representatives at today's meeting will be Student Body President Mike Lawler; Men's Council chairman Whitney Durand; former WRC chairman Dianne Blanton; Women's Council chairman Carolyn Pinion; former Women's Council chairman Bev Haynes; student body vice-president Bob Spearman and Miss Culler.

Six Endowed Fellowships Given To Professors Here

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Six UNC faculty members have been appointed to endowed fellowships, Chancellor William B. Aycock announced yesterday.

Two were named Alumni Distinguished Professors and four others, Kenan Professors. The appointments have been approved by the President and Board of Trustees.

The Alumni Distinguished Professors are Ernest W. Talbert of the English Department and Joseph C. Sloane, Chairman of the Department of Art and Director of the Ackland Art Center.

The new Kenan Professors are Guy B. Johnson, sociology; Harold McCurdy, psychology; Charles Reilley, chemistry; and Nathan A. Womack, Chairman of the Department of Surgery in the School of Medicine.

The professorships carry with them supplementary grants in addition to the professors' regular salaries.

There are now a total of 10 Alumni Distinguished Professors and 29 Kenan Professors in the University.

Talbert, a member of the UNC faculty since 1949, is a specialist on Shakespeare and author of "The Problem of Order" published here in 1962.

Sloane, a former president of the College Art Association, came to Chapel Hill from Bryn Mawr College in 1959. He received his Ph.D. in Art from Princeton.

Johnson, a faculty member since 1924, is an acknowledged authority on race relations in the U. S. and Africa. He is a staff member of the Institute for Research in Social Sciences and Editor of "Social Forces."

McCurdy is author of a widely-known study entitled "The Childhood Pattern of Genius" and a book on psychology, "The Personal World: An Introduction to the Study of Personality." He has taught at UNC since 1948.

Reilley, Chairman of the Analytical Division of the American Chemical Society, is editor of two major international chemistry publications, "The Journal of Electroanalytical Chemistry", and "Advances in Analytical Chemistry and Instrumentation." He has been a faculty member since 1952 and is one of the youngest Kenan Professors ever appointed.

Dr. Womack, Chairman of the UNC Department of Surgery since 1951, is President of the American Board of Medical Examiners. He has made important contributions to studies of diseases of the thyroid gland, gall bladder, and liver and the surgery of tumors. He has also served as editor of "Annals of Surgery."

The Alumni Distinguished Professorships began in 1961 with a $20,000 grant to the Alumni Annual Giving. They have helped the University to strengthen the faculty and the quality of teaching. The fund is made possible by contributions from Carolina alumni.

The Kenan Professorship Fund was established in 1917 by Mrs. Lily Kenan Flager Bingham "in the interest of the education of the youth of North Carolina." The four new appointments will bring the distinguished list to 68.

Chilean Says Alliance Is Threatened

"Bureaucracy" in the administration of Alliance For Progress programs for Chile threatens the overall success of the Alliance in that country, according to Dr. Jaime Tormo, former head of Chile's anti-Communist Radical Party, who visited UNC yesterday.

Dr. Tormo, one of three Chilean solons visiting UNC, said that the United States-based Alliance for Progress is requesting additional development programs for Chile. "These additional programs are unrealistic," he said.

Chile's economic Ten-Year Plan, prepared by the country Development Corporation, has been accepted by the Alliance For Progress as a means for achieving development in Chile, according to Dr. Tormo.

He said that the Alliance should concentrate on assuring the success of this Ten-Year Plan, administered by Chile, rather than adding surplus programs which "would serve only to further bureaucratic inefficiency."

Dr. Tormo said he feels sure that problems of bureaucracy in the administration of the Alliance For Progress in Chile will be improved with time.

Positive Alliance contributions to Chile, cited by Dr. Tormo, include: the reconstruction and re-building of earthquake-torn Southern Chile; increases in Chile's production of mineral products such as nitrate, iron, and oil; and increases in production of agricultural products.

"This year's Chilean public investment budget for such necessities as roads and schools is going to be financed in a very important percentage by foreign aid through the Alliance, which is promoting needed development in these areas," said Dr. Tormo.

Dr. Tormo is accompanied on his United States visit by Dr. Hugo Miranda, Radical Party member and Head of the Chilean Chamber of Deputies, and by Dr. Joaquin Morales, Radical Party representative and secretary-general of the party.

These leaders are visiting the United States to meet with academic, governmental, and foundation representatives, and to discuss the Alliance for Progress as it is affecting Cuba. Their U. S. visit is being sponsored by the New York City-based International Development Foundation. Edward Cohen, policy advisor of the foundation, is accompanying the Chileans in their U. S. tour.

Lowenstein Speaks On South Africa

Al Lowenstein, frequent visitor at UNC as a specialist in international affairs, will speak tonight at 8:30 in Gerrard Hall. His topic is "Point of No Return in South Africa."

A reception honoring Lowenstein and his recent book, "Brutal Mandate," will preceed the speech. It will be held in the main lounge of Graham Memorial from 7 until 8:15 p.m., and will be open to the public.

Sponsors of the reception and autograph party are: Mr. and Mrs. Mike Lawler, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Spearman, Miss Anne Queen, The Rev. Charles Jones, Mr. Roger Smith, and Mr. Harry DeLung.

The speech will up-date the accounts of racial opprtssion and violence in southern Africa given in "Brutal Mandate." Lowenstein recently gave a talk on this subject at the American Society of African Culture in Washington. He has just returned from conferences on Africa with personnel in the United Nations and the U. S. State Department.

Copies of the book will be available at the reception and at the speech for $3.75. This is marked down from the regular $5, and .25 from every sale will be donated to the 1964 Carolina Symposium.

Dick Hesse, newly appointed chairman of the Symposium, will introduce Lowenstein. The author is a graduate of UNC and of the Yale Law School. His senior year here, he received the John J. Parker Jr. Award for student leadership.

The book was written after Lowenstein traveled widely in Africa. The New York Times said, "As an account of the plight of the natives in South West Africa, it is horrifying and . . . it is eloquent."

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt called the book "a remarkable piece of work." She added, "I urge every American concerned with the development of freedom in the world to read it."

Worked For UN

Lowenstein worked with Mrs. Roosevelt in promoting the American Association for the United Nations. He was a legislative assistant to Sen. Frank Porter Graham, past-president of the University.

He was also a member of Chief Albert Lithuli's staff at Oslo, Norway when Lithuli won the Nobel Peace Price. He served as administrative assistant to Sen. Hubert Humphrey, and is now an assistant professor of social studies at N. C. State.

The book has been favorably reviewed in the Raleigh "News and Observer," the University of Virginia "Law Review," the "New Republic," and numerous other magazines and newspapers. It is Reviewed in today's DTH, Page 3.

Carson Served With Warrant

The second of two warrants charging trespass against two UNC students was served on Lester Carson, a Negro, about 1 p.m. Sunday by Chapel Hill police.

Carson was released shortly thereafter on $50 bond.

Both he and senior history major George LaMonte are to appear on the charges in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court a week from today.

King Expects 5,000 For Summer School

Some 5,000 students are expected to attend UNC's first term of its Summer Session, June 10-July 19, it was announced yesterday by Dr. A. K. King, Summer Session director.

The first term of the Summer Session will be drawing the largest number of summer registrants in the University's history. Last year, 4,646 were enrolled in the first session.

The second session, July 22-August 30, will have an enrollment of some 3,900. The enrollment for this term ran 3,527 last year.

Dr. King said that the University is better equipped for this year's Summer Session than ever before. Last summer's housing problems have been met by the opening of the University's two new seven-story men's dormitories, Craige and Ehringhaus, during the past year. Ehringhaus Dorm with its cafeteria will be fully used by Summer Session participants.

Dr. King reports that at this date, the University has now admitted 25 percent more visiting students than it had at this time last year. Visiting students are those not regularly enrolled during the University's September-June academic year.

Many of the University's regular academic year faculty members plus about 35 visiting faculty members will be teaching summer school courses during both terms.

The Extension Division will be handling arrangements for some 51 special short coursts, conferences, institutes, and workshops offered during both terms, bringing some 5,000 other people to the campus for study for periods of several days to 3 to 4 weeks.

Rochester U Will Honor Hotelling

Harold Hotelling, Kenan Professor of Statistics, will join former President Dwight D. Eisenhower and five distinguished professors in receiving honorary degrees at the inauguration of W. Allen Wallis as sixth president of the University of Rochester on May 17.

Dr. Hotelling is a former professor of economics at Columbia University. He is a member of a number of professional societies and has served as the president of the following societies: Econometric Society, Indian Statistics Congress, and the Institute of Mathematical Statistics.

Others to receive honorary degrees at the inauguration ceremonies are: George W. Beadle, president of the University of Chicago, geneticist, co-winner in 1958 of the Nobel Prize in medicine for his research on the Chemistry of genes.

Arthur F. Burns, prof. of economics at Columbia University and president of the National Bureau of Economic Research, former chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Small Business, the President's Council of Economics Advisers, and Advisory Board on Economic Growth and Stability.

Frank H. Knight, Professor Emeritus of Social Sciences and Philosophy at the University of Chicago, former president of the American Economics Association.

Leonard J. Savage, professor of mathematics at the University of Michigan ,former professor and chairman of the department of statistics at the University of Chicago and former president of the Institute of Mathematical Statistics.

Warren Weaver, vice president of the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, former chairman of the department of mathematics at University of Wisconsin.

Negroes Continue Demonstrations In Raleigh

By CHARLES COOPER

Negro students in Raleigh continued demonstrations througout the weekend protesting racial segregation in downtown business establishments.

There were two demonstrations Saturday and one mass march downtown Sunday plus an attempt to attend several Raleigh churches.

Charles Earle, a Jamaican student at Shaw, said, "We are going to keep Raleigh on their toes until they do something."

The first demonstration Saturday occurred about 1:30 p.m. when approximately 200 Negro students from Shaw left the campus and marched downtown singing and carrying signs calling for "equal rights."

The second and larger of the two demonstrations Saturday occurred about 7:15 when four to five hundred students from both Shaw and St. Augustine College downtown. The mass march came after a thirty minute meeting in Greenleaf Auditorium on the Shaw campus where members of the nine-member planning committee, which organizes the demonstrations, spoke to the assembled students.

Targets for the night were four downtown establishments which practice racial segregation, the Coffee Shop at the Hotel Sir Walter, Gino's Restaurant and the State and Ambassador theaters.

Carrying signs and marching in orderly fashion, the students converged on the establishments and sought entrance.

At the Sir Walter, the group approached the main entrance from a side street so that the management could not see them coming down the street directly in front of the hotel.

When they reached the door about twenty students quickly entered the coffee shop and sat quietly awaiting service. The door was locked after they entered and opened only for white patrons wishing to come in or for those leaving.

Outside the hotel, the group set up a picket line and a large number of students stood and sang "freedom songs" while clapping their hands.

The group reaching Gino's restaurant found the door already locked though white patrons were being admitted at a side entrance.

At the State theater a rope blocked half the entranceway, and a line of white men blocked the other half. While pickets walked carrying signs and two separate groups of students stood singing, others filed by in couples asking for permission to enter the theater.

No Negroes were admitted, although several white patrons were allowed to pass during the demonstration.

At the Ambasador theater, students gathered in front of the doorway and feinted toward it as if to enter every time it was opened while a picket line was operated and a large number of students sang and clapped hands.

About seven thirty-five, police officers arrived at the Sir Walter and the students were asked to leave the Coffee Shop. They filed out, but ouside they joined the others and continued to sing and picket for about an hour.

About 8:15, police officers asked the students in front of the door way at the Ambassador theater to move and they complied.

At 8:45 the groups began to march toward the Wake County Court House in a carefully-timed and well-executed maneuver. They massed at the court house at 9 p.m.

There they sang and clapped hands for about fifteen minutes and then returned to the Shaw campus.

One arrest was made during the whole demonstration, a white man for public drunkenness. A great deal of heckling went on at various times.

Immediately after the singing started at the Sir Walter, traffic picked and stayed heavy until about 9:30. At times cars would blow their horns in an attempt to drown out the singing of the students. Several times, the police officers present who were directing traffic would call for quiet.

Back at Shaw that night, leader Erle said that the next day they would attend church. He called for "twenty strong young men" to attend the Calvary church which is almost on the Shaw west campus.

Spokesmen for the students said that they had intended that no arrests would be made. During the entire march, students meticulously obeyed traffic signals and picket ordinances.

Capt. H. T. Bailey of the Raleigh Police Department said, "We neither encourage or discourage arrests, that decision is up to the owner of the establishment. If he complains to us and the students fail to comply, it constitutes a violation of the respass law and we have to make arrests."

Tri Delts, W. Cobb Lead Coed Averages

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

West Cobb dormitory and Delta Delta Delta Sorority placed first in scholarship honors for the fall semester, according to figures released by the Dean of Women's Office.

In the dormitory division, West Cobb paved the way with a 2.834 average. The averages are for the entire dormitory including sorority pledges

McIver dorm was second in the standings with a 2.645 and East Cobb placed third with 2.455.

In fourth place among women's dorms was the Nurses' dorm with 2.414. Alderman was fifth with 2.410.

Whitehead dorm was sixth with 2.390 and Spencer was seventh with 2.207.

The average for all women's dorms was 2.479.

For the third semester in a row, Delta Delta Delta had the highest scholastic average among the seven sororities. The Tri-Delts' 62 members had a 2.628 average. They were followed closely by Pi Beta Phi with 2.606.

Chi Omega held third spot with 2.557. Alpha Delta Pi was fourth with 2.516. Fifth place was won by Kappa Delta with a 2.508.

Kappa Kappa Gamma with 2.462 was sixth and Alpha Gamma Delta was last with 2.428.

The overall sorority average for the fall semester was 2.529. The average for last fall was 2.503.

Chi Omega had the highest pledge class average with 2.510.

The Tri Delts were second and AD Pi was third in pledge averages.

Pi Beta Phi, Kappa Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Alpha Gamma Delta followed.

Men's grades for the fall semester were released last week. The fraternity average including actives and pledges was 2.172. The dormitory average which does not include fraternity pledges was 2.118.

The Mother's Day Riot

"The Mother's Day Riot."

In all likelihood, that is how historians will refer to the recent racial violence in Alabama.

Somehow the term is very fitting.

In a way that no wordsmith or statesman could have, coincidence has capsuled the entire racial dilemma for us.

On the one hand, Mother's Day, given at least theoretically to extolling that which we hold dearest and without which we are brutalized—mother love. Or, as the theologians call it, agape. Unselfish, undemanding, unsolicited love for another, given without thought of reciprocation. The type of love Christ personified.

And on the other hand, riot. Men at each other's throats; senseless mobs lusting for an outlet, any outlet, for their quiet desperation, their inarticulate hostility, barely able to tell by the glow from a neon-sign or a street light or a car's headlights which is friend and which is foe, and then only by the hue of skin color illuminated by the light.

"The Mother's Day Riot."

This is one of our legacies from the past, a past in which we have given as much attention—conscious and unconscious — to honoring mothers, black and white, as we have to breeding hate among their offspring, black and white.

To think it has taken several thousand years for us to come this far, and then to see where we are.

But, the hopeful cry, at least the problem is now out in the open—out where we can come to grips with it.

But is it?

Look about you and see for yourself. And while you are at it, while you look and simultaneously worry about the niceties of property rights and natural inferiority and so forth, also look out, for the problem that we are refusing to come to grips with will not wait.

Like an enormous, other-worldly monster, it is coming to grips with us. And we, remember, are half of that problem, no matter what our color.

History repeats itself . . . justice is blind. . . . No great social change ever comes peacefully. . . .

We, the most wealthy and enlightened nation the earth has ever seen, cannot learn from experience.

Little Rock, Oxford an now Birmingham have all proved that—and, note, each more violent than its predecessor.

But what, you ask, about Clemson?

Yes, what about Clemson?

Clemson is in South Carolina, where just last week State Rep. Joe Rogers said in support of a bill that would grant tuition fees to parents who wish to send their children to private, segregated schools:

"Some say it (integration) is inevitable. But surrender is so far from my mind that I would resign my seat in the House today, never to return, if I believed South Carolina had any thought of surrender."

Clemson was a battle in the war, and the war is far from over. And Clemson was allowed to fall that the war might continue.

The tragic thing is that the war need not continue, for there is no actual enemy, and if there were, still, as with all wars, there could be no victor.

So let us leave Clemson out of this, and stop clutching at straws of hope so blindly.

Otherwise all we do is delay a resolution of the problem, the problem that is coming to grips with us because we have allowed it to assume the offensive and thus lost to it—to blind, heedless circumstances—the choice of weapons, and time, and place, and the element of surprise.

For ourselves we have gained only the awful anxiety of wondering where it — the problem, the "enemy"—will strike next.

Yes, the problem is out in the open, but by refusing to come to grips with it we have allowed it to recede into that twilight of tension where dark forces work their will unfettered by rationality.

Is there hope?

Yes, there is hope. But while hoping, look out for Columbia, Detroit, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Durham, Cincinatti, Montgomery, Chicago . . . and a thousand other places, north and south, east and west.

Their turn is coming, and ours—as individuals—with it, unless we come-to quickly and hurry to awaken those of our countrymen who still slumber blissfully.

The question is not 'Is there hope?" but rather 'Is there time?'

It is a question that only we, through positive, intelligent acts, can answer.

An Example

The Greensboro Record

Students at Chapel Hill staged an orderly demonstration this week, protesting a proposed increase in dormitory rents. The Student Government encouraged the event, in which students bore signs calling on the Legislature not to raise dormitory charges.

There had been some concern that the demonstration might turn into a spring riot, such as disgraced Princeton this week, but it did not. A student protest against higher education costs seems an eminently useful spring romp, and who knows, the marching and demonstrating might even do some good in Raleigh.

Perhaps someone can suggest a similarly useful spring outlet to students of Princeton.

Re: Race At NCMH Rx: Get The Facts

To the Editors:

In view of recent picketing, published letters and circulation of petitions by certain "enlightened" students and townspeople concerning "discriminatory practices" at North Carolina Memorial Hospital, I feel compelled to clarify what is, in my opinion, the present situation at NCMH. Such elucidation seems necessary for there exist certain individuals, who on hearing of such protests, readily imagine a distorted picture of bigotry and Jim Crow medical practices. These protesting groups have failed to clarify the issues which they are protesting, many participants joining their league without knowing what goes on inside NCMH.

The restroom facilities inside the hospital are not segregated, nor are lobbies, waiting rooms, cafeterias, snack bars or other such areas. Integration of such facilities was taken years ago, an early and laudable measure of the administration's sympathy for racial equality.

There is not, as I can see, any discrimination in hiring practices at NCMH. I can foresee highly trained laboratory personnel in the hospital when they become available. There are already a few in various laboratories and technical areas, notably the Blood Bank, clotting labs, operating suite, and other places. White and Negro nurses administer their services to both white and Negro patients.

Adult staff and private patients are maintained on separate wards or regional areas of the hospital with equal facilities and accommodations. Such a practice does not reflect, as I am able to ascertain, a discriminatory attitude on the part of the administration. Regardless of what the administration might feel, the basic consideration is to the feeling state of the patient with regard to his disease process and his therapeutic environment. Such an existing arrangement of facilities seems at present less problematic than any other imaginable. The medical education today stresses the holistic approach to the patient, a consideration of him "in toto," psychological as well as physiological. The effective feeling state of an ardent segregationist is an integrated environment might have an important influence on his prognosis. Or he might choose not to come here at all, but rather go to some more private hospital within the state. It appears to me, then, that an appeal to the administration is not what is called for, but rather an appeal to the intellect of the population at large, as is now being carried out throughout the southern states. That the administration's actions are in the right direction is reflected in the existing total integration of the pediatric ward of NCMH, an age group which does not require a consideration of the social problems discussed above.

In short, I feel that there is no ground for attacking the actions of the NCMH administration, but rather it should be applauded for the rapidity with which it has considered and solved former problems and for the examples which it has set for similar institutions. Further changes will surely come, but they should logically parallel the developments throughout the South in the realm of racial problems.

Otelia Speaks On Apt. Rule

Dear Sir:

There has been much in the student press advocating the doing away with all rules restricting visiting of coeds to men's apartments. Chapel Hill is not the only place where the students want to do away with all authority and every student do as he pleases.

The students ask me what I think of the apartment rule. Well, everybody should know by now that I am a strong stickler for standards — of manners, of morals, of character. The answer that the rules can't be enforced, that they will be disregarded, is no more valid than saying that the Ten Commandments should be deleted from the Bible because they are constantly violated. There are people who continue to cheat and steal, but that doesn't mean that we should condone these acts, and these people know that if they are caught they will be punished, which would not be the case if there were no laws.

Students might as well realize that they will be under some kind of discipline all their lives, and like it or not, the college years are no exception.

Students, these days, cherish the illusion that they can teach the faculty, that the faculty members are old fogies and outmoded. No doubt they can learn from each other — in conference, and in a give and take atmosphere. But President Theodore M. Hesburgh, Notre Dame University, gave the final answer, as far as school administrations are concerned, in a recent letter to the 6,700 students, who wanted to get rid of him, because they wanted freer rules — students who know it all "should go out and found their own universities and then take lessons from their students."

Of course, the students think this advice is a blow below the belt. It is the last thing in the world they want, but they ought to know that they can't have it both ways.

"It's A Pleasure To Work At Your Side — Can You Move Over A Bit More?"

Can The Fine Arts Forum Be Revived At Carolina?

By MARGARET FEWELL

What happened to the annual Fine Arts Forum which enjoyed such success at Carolina between the years 1942 and 1944?

In the fall of 1941, a group of students headed by the now nationally known Broadway producer Richard Adler, began meeting with a group of faculty members in the campus office of Pulitzer Prize-winner Paul Green. The result of these meetings was the Carolina Workshop which was first held April 27-May 1 of the following spring.

"Exit the Longhair," read the headline of a Daily Tar Heel editorial stating the purpose of the five-day forum. "Public support and encouragement have always been stymied by the prejudicial factor of resentment and a 'hands-off' relation due to a lack of knowledge and a misunderstanding of the creative person's function in the world." The editor stated that writers and artists sometimes help to perpetuate this idea by closing themselves up in an "ivory tower" of their own.

However, the agents behind the forum believed that the "typical long-hair" had undergone a change on the Carolina campus. Instead of the introverted, dungaree-type creator, he had become outwardly concerned and, figuratively as well as literally, a member of the crew-cut crowd.

The Carolina Workshop Council, headed by Adler, felt this change should be recognized on campus. Therefore, it took the student artist as its object of emphasis.

The Council felt two things were necessary in order to carry out its purpose. First it felt it must integrate the six fields of creative activity on campus—music, drama, creative writing, modern dance, and painting — and organize them into a presentable whole. Second, it was necessary to project the work of these creative students to the student body as a whole. The Council hoped that by carrying out this program it would cause a modification of campus opinion toward campus artists and a new appreciation of the talent at the University.

These goals were accomplished by varied round-the-clock programs during the five-day festival. In the mornings and afternoons, regular classes in each of the arts departments were open to interested students. These classes included such specialized and generally little-understood subjects as playwriting, musical composition, and painting.

The evening sessions were highlighted by the opening night panel composed of Pulitzer-prize winner Paul Green, world-famous pianist Clarence Adler, New York state designer Lee Simonson, artist Clare Leighton and novelist James Boyd, who discussed the timely subject, "The Artist in Wartime."

The other night sessions were devoted to original student works including student written and presented plays, musical compositions, radio scripts and modern dances. Art and photographic exhibits of student works were held in Person Hall throughout the week.

At the final session on Friday night, these original works were reviewed by a group of students from Walter Spearman's reviewing class in the School of Journalism.

Golden keys were presented by Chairman Adler to the person in each field who had contributed most to his department during his years at the University.

Was the Workshop a success? The events brought such Tar Heel comments as "Playing to a packed house, the Carolina Playmakers' bill of CWC Spring Festival experimentals brought one sweeping, generalized comment — 'Huge Success!' "

Each arts performance brought a full house and in some cases part of the audience stood. Paul Green said, "Never before in this section have people gathered in this way to talk about art. The fact that it is war time makes it even more remarkable."

The first presentation of the Carolina Workshop was so successful that it was decided the Workshop Council should become a permanent committee in order to assure a festival each year. Campus-wide voting elected Adler its chairman for a second term, and planning began immediately to expand and perfect the program. Two major changes were made for 1943. First, the Committee adopted a year-round slate of speakers, and brought to UNC such well-known artists as Robert Frost.

Second, the spring festival became "The First All North Carolina Spring Festival," presenting as panelists such prominent North Carolina residents as James Boyd, architect Josef Albers, author Struthers Burt and artist Howard Thomas. The remainder of the festival was patterned after the previous one.

The Third Annual Carolina Workshop became an all-campus affair. The panel was composed of prominent town residents and faculty members: Clare Leighton, local artist; John Toms, of the music department; and William Meade Prince and Clemens Sommer of the art department.

Adler, the guiding light of the program, graduated in 1943 and World War II continued to grow in fact and in demands. The men of the campus — both faculty members and students — began to leave for the services. Yet the demand for the Workshop was strong enough for the Council, headed by Tar Heel editor Kat Hill, to organize the festival in 1944.

What happened after that?

The Carolina Workshop literally disappeared from the campus. No one knows exactly why. Most of the people directly concerned with the event have died, left the region — or do not remember. So the mystery continues. Perhaps a quote from the Tar Heel in April, 1943 comes closest to the truth: "Soon these young artists will also be in the service ranks. Before they go, let's all turn out and see what they have to offer." The ranks seem to have been drained of many of the previous enthusiasts. For very little but a war could have dimmed the enthusiasm which was evident in the first reviews of the Carolina Workshop.

Can it be revived?

SG Should Look In

By DAVE MORGAN

In order for men to progress there must exist some goal or standard by which they can check themselves. They must be able to view their present and future stations in some sort of perspective, or else they are little better off than ants running around an orange.

This is precisely the question I put to student government. What is it that student government is really trping to accomplish? What is it striving for? What are its long range goals, or does it have any? Perhaps it doesn't, not really. And even if it doesn't, does this matter? At least it is a question that should be asked and is one for which the answer should not be blindly assumed.

I see in student government a foundation — a foundation of historical existence and acceptance — but a foundation upon which there is very little actual construction. The bricks are there, but each year they are merely shuffled around in a new arrangement with littlle or no thought to a master plan. The "architects" change and with them the design. Everyone has a better idea than his predecessors and is one that may cause him to be remembered, so why not try it out. Why not?

There is also, I believe, in student government (and it is not alone) a strong ego-focused attention. The emphasis is on Being rather than on Doing, and everyone feels that he should be heard. With this heavy emphasis on Being in a position, the need and desire to act is often rejected or merely forgotten. "Look what I am now!" echoes proudly the new official, until he suddenly realizes that Being a bleating shadow isn't really worth much after all. But then he has learned something.

Again, in order to carry out diligently some of the functions student government outwardly assumes is no little matter. The fact is is that most of them would require full time attention. But just where in the hell is this time supposed to come from? This is one subject that is always left out of discussion, but it is a vital one.

It is a blood and guts issue.

All members of student government are first of all students, just as are fraternity members, athletes, or what have you, and being a student takes time — lots of it. Although I know of no 80% rule for student government, I do know that there just isn't enough time to do what should be done the way it should be.

To Do what should be Done as a member of the publications board, as a member of the honor council or other councils, as an editor or reporter, as a member of the finance committee or anything else undoubtedly would take more time than any student could afford to offer. To inculcate a true sense of honor and truth into 10,000 students is a gigantic task, and would be a project itself, requiring the full and earnest attention of all of student government for three or four years at best. The most stringent efforts of just a few is not enough.

Finally, when decisions are made, how much thought goes into considering all their ramifications and possible future effects? But who should be blamed for this? It takes time to think.

What good then is student government? Its strength in many ways lies in its weaknesses, providing it recognizes them and does not deceive itself. It provides a member with a sense of belonging and with an arena where he can voice his opinions. It provides a laboratory in which the reality of the democratic process becomes "self-evident." It provides a training ground for leadership. It is an education.

Howefer, an education can be

OLD BOOK CHATTER

Those of you who keep a sharp eye on the books in our Old Book Corner will have noticed, over the past week or so, that large chunks of books have suddenly vanished from our shelves — particularly the 97c shelf and the 72c shelf.

We thought you might like to know why.

At this season of the year, old book dealers from the North tend to take their vacations in Florida, and as they drive back home, stop off at shops like ours, looking for books priced low enough that they can resell them at a profit.

We think it speaks well of our pricing policy that we sell so many books to these professionals. We're happy to have the books you chaps passed up move on to greener fields.

Most especially we're happy to have space to show the fresh supply of dusty treasure that comes tumbling in as the school year ends.

Come treasure-hunting, chum. If a dealer can afford to buy, there's bound to be prizes for you, somewhere in the gushing stream of old books that flows across our shelves.

Apartheid Existence Is Brutal

Editor's note: Al Lowenstein, author of the book reviewed below, will speak at 8:30 tonight in Gerrard Hall. An autograph party will precede the speech at 7:15 in GM's Main Lounge.

By ROBERT PACE

BRUTAL MANDATE: A Journey to South West Africa, by Allard K. Lowenstein, The Macmillan Co., 1962, 257 pp., $5.

WHY? This is the word that remains foremost as one reads "Brutal Mandate." Why does a nation follow a policy of brutal suppression of a majority of its people, a policy that completely denies their rights as human beings, a policy that can lead only to catastrophy?

As one reads this well written story of "apartheid" in action, one consciously becomes identified with Chief Lituli, Father Michael Scott, Bishop Ambrose Reeve, Chief Kutako — with all those who are suffering under this policy that violates reason and intelligence.

WHY? Why does the United Nations permit the rights of a people in a mandated territory to be so flagrantly violated? Where is the conscience of the free world? Where is the conscience of America? Where is my conscience? What can I do?

"Brutal Mandate" is not the "tear jerking" work of a professional "do gooder" or champion of the "under dog." It is a human story written by a person of genuine feeling and concern for others. It points out the fallacy of a policy called "apartheid" with concern not only for the oppressed but for the oppressor.

It is written as this reviewer feels only Al Lowenstein could write it. "Brutal Mandate" should find wide interest in Chapel Hill.

The author is well known among us since his student days here. One of the heroes of the book, Bishop Reeves, was an honored visitor here where he so movingly pleaded the cause of human dignity. He is now exiled from his land and people — by "apartheid."

This reviewer cannot too highly recommend "Brutal Mandate." It deserves to be read.

"Buck Fever" is not for '63 . . .

Ever go deer (spell that deer, please) hunting? "Buck fever" is deer-hunters' jitters. Seniors of '63 are not nervous. a costly and wasteful undertaking if its standards are of low quality or if it competes with higher purposes.

Those in Student Government must be careful to make sure they do not get cheated—cheated by working on tasks that contribute little to themselves or to others but take much time; cheated by receiving and giving recognition for shallow activity and fostering a false sense of integrity; cheated by urging the acceptance of belief in praise, recognition, and membership as sacred values in themselves.

TWENTY-FIVE MEN from Avery Dorm treated a Nurses' Dorm to a serenade in a peaceful demonstration of goodwill last Sunday night.

The group sang "mostly love songs" according to Larry Coleman, a leader of the group. His report was that the group was "well-received."

After the half-hour serenade, the singers were invited into the dorm, where a bowl of punch and cookies awaited the moonlight wanderers.

Coleman said that one of the girls brought down a guitar and several stayed around for an impromptu song-fest.

Chris Sillman, a resident of Avery, and his singing group, "The Confederates," also entertained the gathering.

Cy Lynn, president of Avery, and Coleman were the guiding lights behind the candlelight serenade. Coleman said yesterday he hopes the "Avery Dorm Sings" will be a regular thing next year.

Russian Program Available In Summer

The UNC Russian Studies Program is offering two full-year programs of Russian language instruction during the two 1963 Summer Sessions, it was announced Monday by Dr. Walter W. Arndt, Associate Professor of Russian.

The inclusion of these courses of study in the previous offerings of the summer program is in keeping with the continuing expansion of the University's offerings in the field of Russian and other Slavic languages and literatures.

The courses offered for the first time this summer will be Russian 1 and Russian 3 during the first Summer Session, and Russian 2 and 4 during the second Session. Thus, said Dr. Arndt, "Students who take Russian 1 or 3 in the first session will be able to continue with Russian 2 or 4, respectively, in the second session, and thus complete a full year's work in one summer."

The four courses are the initial ones of the undergraduate major program in Russian Language and Literature. "This Program is especially suited for prospective teachers of Russian or for those who may want to add Russian to their teaching qualifications," Arndt added.

The first University Summer Session is from June 10 to July 19; the second from July 22 to August 30.

Cosmopolitan Club Elects Officers

The Cosmopolitan Club recently elected cabinet officers for the coming year.

Terence T. T. Yen was elected president; Haroutune K. Dekirmtnjian, vice-president; Fay H. Coker, secretary; Larry N. Stern, treasurer; Jane A. Anderson, social chaiman; and C. David Johnston III, cultural chairman.

President Yen announced that he would also appoint a press secretary in the near future.

He said the purpose of the club is to promote "people to people" contact among foreign students, and between foreign American students.

THE ACC TENNIS Championships are over for another year and, as is becoming the custom, UNC has walked off with all the honors. This domination of the championships coupled with the domination of the regular season matches has probably caused many people to ask, "How good is Carolina nationally?"

At best, Carolina could only be second nationally. The University of Miami has beaten UNC's netmen two years running and both times decisively. Therefore, any national ranking will find Miami ahead of Carolina. But the Hurricanes are not much better than UNC.

Although Miami beat Coach Don Skakle's charges 9-0 at Sunshine U. earlier this year, it did so with all the elements distinctively in its favor. Also, several of the matches were extremely close and could have gone either way. This is not, however, an attempt to depreciate a fine Miami team which now has a winning streak of about 120 straight.

Even though it has the nation's best streak, Miami is not the best team in the nation. This distinction falls to the University of Southern California.

Southern Cal is led by Rafael Osuna, the Mexican Davis Cup player who almost singlehandedly beat the U. S. in that competition last year. In addition, Osuna is the world's eighth-ranked amateur.

Playing number two for the Trojans is Dennis Ralston, who teamed with Osuna several years ago when the pair won the Wimbledon doubles title. Behind Ralston is Bill Bond, this country's 11th ranking amateur. As if this were not enough, USC also has Ramsey Ernhart, 26th best amateur in the nation. Contrast this to Carolina which has only one ranking player on the team — George Sokol, number 42.

Pasarell Leads UCLA To Second

THIS NOW BRINGS us to the second best team in the country, UCLA. The Ulcans are led by Charlie Pasarell who is rated number 10 in the country. Larry Nagler, who upset Osuna in the Athletic Association of Western Universities Championships, holds down the second position and the nation's number 16 ranking.

Arthur Ashe, former national interscholastic champion and seeded 18th in the country, plays third man. Ashe recently became the first Negro ever to be appointed to the U. S. Davis Cup team. Also on the UCLA squad is Thorwold Moe, a member of the Norwegian Davis Cup Squad.

Trinity College of San Antonio, Texas is another of the nation's powerhouses. Trinity's first man is Chuck McKinley, our country's best amateur. Cliff Buchholtz, brother of professional star Butch Buchholtz, holds down the second post for Trinity and a national ranking of 25th. Trinity's other stars are Butch Newman, 50th-nationally, and Rod Susman. Susman is the husband of Karen Hantze Susman, the nation's second best woman player.

Another southwestern team which must be considered in any ranking is Lamar Tech. Tech's first man is Cliff Drydale, a member of South Africa's Davis Cup team. In addition to Drysdale, there are four other South African's (shades of Miami) and one Mexican on the team.

Tech is blessed with strength and depth. To show you what I mean, in last year's Lone Star Conference Championships the last four singles players were all from Tech as were both of the doubles teams in the finals.

Rounding out the list of the nation's top teams are two of the Ivy League Schools, Princeton and Yale.

Princeton won the title last year and had such an array of talent that Miami coach Dale Lewis called it "the best in singles we faced all year." (UNC had the best doubles according to Lewis.) Drayton Nabers, undefeated in Ivy Conference play for two years, is Princeton's top dog. Following Nabers are Herb Fitzgibbon, New York men's champion, and Hugh Lynch.

Froehling Is Yale's Top Dog

FRANK FROEHLING, who transferred from Trinity, leads the Yale team. Froehling is presently number two nationally and a member of the Davis Cup squad. Mike Neely, 15th nationally, and Ralph Howe, intercollegiate squash champion, give the Bulldogs a well-balanced team.

Other teams which give the Carolina netmen a good fight for national honors include Rice, Pan-American College and Arizona.

Nationally, the collegiate teams would probably look like this:

1. Southern California
2. UCLA
3. Trinity
4. Miami
5. Yale
6. Lamar Tech
7. Princeton
8. UNC
9. Rice
10. Pan-American or Arizona

Thus, Carolina would be in the top ten of the nation. This is in spite of the fact that we have no direct scholarships, (the first four schools do), we can't play year-round (everyone else except Princeton and Yale can), and we don't have any imported tennis players.

While we're on the subject of tennis, let's take our hats off to Coach Skakle — one of the best coaches (and nicest) in the country. Also the only coach at UNC with a team ranked in the top ten of the country.

Deacons' Scripture Headlines All-ACC

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Wake Forest's Billy Scripture leads a glittering galaxy of Atlantic Coast Conference baseball players who have been named to the DTH's 1963 All-Conference Team.

The stocky centerfielder, who has shattered four league batting records in leading the Deacons to their second straight ACC title is joined on the dream team by two other teammates — catcher Wayne Martin and pitcher Lou Howard.

Clemson tied the Deacs for first-team honors, also placing three players on the squad. The Tiger terrors are shortstop Elmo Lam, third baseman Dave Ellisor and outfielder Johnny Jones.

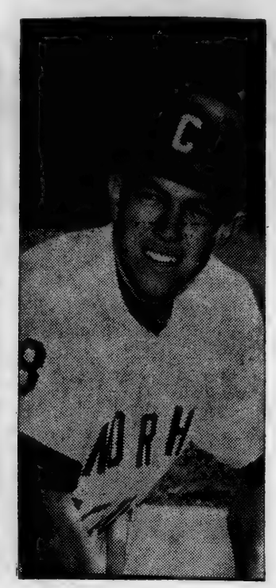
North Carolina, runner-up to Wake Forest, is represented by second sacker Dickie Prindle, one of two sophs on the team, and pitcher Bill Haywood. Duke also filled two spots, with outfielder Biff Bracey, the other sophomore, and pitcher Stan Crisson.

Rounding out the first team, which includes eight regulars and three pitchers, is first baseman Don Montgomery of N. C. State. Chosen by members of the DTH sports staff after consultation with players, coaches and sports publicists, the team also includes an honorable mention list of 23 players. The Tar Heels are well represented here with five choices —shortstop Jim Speight, third sacker Tom Wright, outfielders Heyward Hull and Buddy Tilden and pitcher Spence Willard.

Scripture has already smacked 11 homers to better the old mark of 10, set by Clemson's Doug Kingsmore back in 1954. His 45 RBI's surpass Roger Coon's 39 (Wake, 1962) and his 42 runs scored eclipses the record of 37, set by Luther McKeel for Wake in 1955. Scripture, hitting .374, has also broken his own doubles mark, belting 12 two-baggers. He set the old record last year with 11.

Martin also carries a big stick. Currently hitting .362,, the able backstop has nine HR's and 39 RBI's. Jones of Clemson is hitting at a .337 clip, and teammate Ellisor leads the ACC in triples with four. Shortstop Lam is a sure-handed fielder and a good clutch-hitter.

Prindle carries a .288 batting average, but it was his hot work with the glove that gave him the edge on Wake's Dave Miller, who is hitting .365 and has 14 stolen bases. Prindle has swiped nine.



Bracey is rolling along with a .385 average, accompanied by seven homers and 27 RBI's. Montgomery, a hard hitter and an adequate fielder, is the pick of a fairly lean crop of first sackers.

The three hurlers are indeed superlative. Haywood has a 6-4 record, has pitched in 16 games for 71 innings, has fanned 62 and has an earned run average of 1.65.

Howard, a southpaw, leads the league with an 8-2 record, and carries a 2.81 E.R.A. with 68 strikeouts. Crisson, 6-2, has a sparkling 1.13 E.R.A. and 64 strikeouts.

Teague's Animals Win Dorm Crown

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Teague's Animals put the scalpel to the Avery Afterbirths here yesterday and won the Dormitory softball championship, 12-11.

The Animals, who got two hits apiece from Junior Edge, Cole Kortner, Bill Galantai, Vernon Pittman and Rich Zarro, roared to a 9-0 lead in the first inning, but had to withstand a furious rally by Avery to pull it out.

The Afterbirths drilled six runs across in their bottom half of the second on four straight singles, an error and a grand slam home run to deep left center by catcher Jim Girardi.

Down by three, Avery again rallied in the fourth to tie the count at 9-all. Singles by Girardi, Yogi Poteet and Tom Lee—the latter hit getting by centerfielder Tommy Ward enabled Lee to come home — produced the Afterbirth markers.

Teague came back in the fifth and went ahead to stay on RBI singles by Galantai and Kortner.

Avery's Girardi, who went three for four with six RBIs, blasted a run-scoring double in the bottom of the fifth, but Zarro's second hit—a booming home run which got over Billy Cunningham's head in center—gave Teague an insurmountable 12-10 lead in the sixth.

ATO Battles Phi Delt For Softball Title

By STUART BALL

Winners in Fraternity Blue and White point system divisions may be decided in intramural softball play this afternoon when ATO takes on Phi Delt for the Blue championship and DKE meets Kappa Psi for the White crown.

DKE and Phi Delt have turned the Blue and White point races into a two team affair with the final result in both being determined by how the two teams do in the finals of horseshoes, tennis and softball.

In White division softball the pressure is squarely on the DKE's shoulders. Should they beat Kappa Psi for the championship they automatically clinch the point system award. Should they lose, however, the Phi Delts will claim it.

The Blue division race is more complicated and depends largely on how the two teams do in the semi-final contests.

Records mean little this far along in the races, since no team that has lost more than one game is still in competition. In the White contest DKE has a 4-1 record and Kappa Psi is undefeated in six contests.

ATO sports a 6-0 record in Blue league play while Phi Delt's mark is marred only by a loss to Kappa Sig earlier in the season.

The Fraternity Blue and White tennis finals will also be played today on the Avery courts beginning at 4 p.m.

Tonight at 7:30 Kappa Psi meets Beta in a Fraternity Blue horseshoes semi-final match. DKE has already claimed the White horseshoes championship.

Heels Take On Tech In Season's Finale

North Carolina closes out its 1963 baseball season this afternoon in the hills of western Virginia. The Tar Heels, who finished second in the ACC, take on Virginia Tech in a non-conference skirmish at Blacksburg, Va.

Bobby Cox will start on the mound against the Gobblers, who are second in the Southern Conference with a 9-1 record and a 13-6 mark overall. In an earlier meeting this year at Chapel Hill, Spence Willard shut out the Techmen on three hits, 1-0.

Joe White and Jerry Davis may also be used against VPI, in relief of Cox. Coach Walt Rabb plans to use Bill Haywood against Wake Forest when the two teams meet in an exhibition game at Asheboro Wednesday night.

The Tar Heels are 18-9 overall and are currently riding a five game winning streak. They finished up their ACC schedule on Saturday with a 6-4 win over Clemson.

Legislature Discusses Budget Cuts

Expenses For NSA Delegates Debated

By JOEL BULKLEY

The slashing of budget requests for three campus organizations highlighted Monday night's special session of Student Legislature.

Legislature re-convened last night to continue discussion of the proposed $163,583 Student Government budget for next year. Final action is expected at Thursday's session.

Appropriation requests cut so far include the Student Body President's $50 Miscellaneous Fund; the Attorney General's Staff request for $295 for 100 copies of the 1963-64 Codification and $200 from the Carolina Forum request of $2500.

A mild debate ensued concerning the National Student Association's request for expense accounts for its delegates and coordinator at this year's Summer Congress.

Legislative Speaker Bob Spearman cast the deciding vote to break a 19-19 tie and appropriate $25 for breakfasts for the five delegates to the 10-day Congress. A $21 request for banquet fees was deleted.

A motion to include breakfast money for the coordinator was defeated by a vote of 27-11, leaving the total NSA request at $1226.

SL approved Student Body President Mike Lawler's appointments of Dick Ellis as Presidential Assistant and the members of 16 executive committees.

Ellis, a junior from Fuquay Springs, N. C. was also named to the Graham Memorial Board of Directors.

Panamanian Exchange Bill

A bill, introduced by Don Carson (UP) for IDC president Jerry Good, requesting $289.50 for the Panamanian Exchange Program was among the last-minute appropriation requests introduced Monday night.

Also introduced were bills appropriating $50 to the Campus Affairs Committee for the re-establishment of the Frank Porter Graham Student Government library (Phil Baddour, SP, for Don Curtis); $107.80 to the Communications Committee for payment of linen allegedly lost by the National Merit Scholars during their stay here this winter (Bob Jones, UP,); and a bill establishing an Entertainment and Co-ordination Committee (Sam Himes, UP, for Don Curtis).

Representatives absent included Charles Downton (SP, DM 5); David Henry (UP, TM 2); Bill Davis (UP, TM 4) and Bambi Ainsley (SP, DW 4).

2 More Yack Days

Over 2,000 Yacks are still remaining to be picked up. This schedule is the final opportunity to obtain them: today, Thursday, 2-5 p.m.; Sunday, 2-4 p.m., for practice teachers, nurses, etc., who are unable to accommodate the regular schedule. Please bring $.35 for a special protective cover, as well as an ID card, behind GM at these times.

Five Students Named

Board For Drafting New Rule Named

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

A committee of student, faculty and administration leaders was appointed yesterday to devise a new Apartment Rule. The five student members are Nancy Culler, chairman of the Women's Residence Council; Carolyn Pinion, chairman of the Women's Council; Diane Blanton, past chairman of the WRC, Bev Haynes, past chairman of the Women's Council and Bob Spearman, vice president of the student body.

Administration representatives are Dean of Men William Long and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael. Long will serve as chairman of the committee.

The two faculty representatives will be announced today by Dr. J. R. Caldwell, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

This committee will seek to end the Apartment Rule controversy which has existed for several weeks. Last week, the WRC said that at least one other coed had to be present when a couple visited an apartment. Women's Council Chairman Carolyn Pinion said yesterday that "since the WRC legislated this rule, the Women's Council will enforce it."

This latest rule will last only until the committee appointed yesterday comes up with a compromise solution.

According to a mutual agreement among all present at yesterday's meeting, the committee will have to agree unanimously on the rule. Each faction will vote as a unit and unless all three units agree on the rule that is proposed at the time, then more discussion will be held until another possible rule is discussed and then it too will be voted on. Here again unanimous approval is required.

When this committee makes its recommendations, it will then be presented before the WRC and they will vote whether to accpet or reject it.

The first meeting of the committee is undecided, but it is expected to be soon, since many of those involved want the problem to be resolved by June 1 if at all possible.

Dean Henderson said at the beginning of the meeting that the latest rule by the WRC "is acceptable to the Administration while an interium rule is worked out." Dr. Caldwell said it was agreeable to the faculty.

Graduation Plans Are Now Complete

The 169th Commencement Program will be held June 1, 2, and 3.

The Carolina Inn will serve as alumni headquarters. Graduating classes holding class reunions date all the way back to the class of 1913. The Old Students Club, composed of UNC graduates who have been graduated for 50 years or more, will hold its traditional festivities.

Samuel H. Miller, dean of the faculty of divinity at Harvard University, will give the Baccalaureate Sermon at 11 a.m. Sunday morning, June 2, in Memorial Hall. That afternoon, the University Band will present a concert on the Davie Poplar Lawn and at 8:30 p.m., the Chapel Hill Choral Club and UNC Symphony Orchestra will present Handel's "Solomon" in a concert at Hill Music Hall.

Activities of June 3 include a morning reception given by the University for all commencement guests on the Davie Poplar Lawn and an alumni luncheon at 12:30 p.m. at Lenoir Hall.

Commencement exercises for the graduating class in medicine will be held at Hill Music Hall at 2:30. Exercises for the graduating class in the School of Nursing will be held at 2:30 p.m. at Carroll Hall.

The Carolina Playmakers will present two new plays at 3 p.m. at the Playmakers Theatre. The performances will be open to all guests of seniors and to visitors.

At 3 p.m. the awarding of Air Force and Navy ROTC Commissions will be held in the Forest Theatre.

The Law School will hold its exercises at 4 p.m. in the Knapp Building with U. S. Senator Sam Ervin speaking.

The School of Pharmacy will hold its convocation exercises at 4 p.m. in Beard Hall.

Customarily, formal Commencement Exercises are held at Kenan Stadium. This year, while Kenan Stadium undergoes a face-lifting, the graduation exercises will be held at Fetzer Field. The traditional band concert will begin at 6:30 p.m. and the graduation exercises will begin at 7 p.m. August Heckscher, President Kennedy's special consultant on the arts, will give the commencement address.

'CHARGE IT'

The Board of trustees of Kent State University unanimously adopted a resolution to crack down on unauthorized calls charged to the University. Officials recently tracked down a dormitory coed who had been calling her boyfriend at Harvard, charging the calls to the University. One month she ran up a phone bill of $38.

Committee Appointments Get Student Legislature Approval

Committee members appointed were:

Student Audit Board — Lanny Shuff (2 yrs.); Dave Williams (1 yr.); Peter Jason (1 yr.) and William Kirkland (2 yrs.).

Budget Committee — Gerald Thornton, John Johnson, Arthur Burgess, George Clapp, William Robinson and Lester Wicker.

Campus Affairs — Don Curtis, Marshall Bellovin, Missy Westmore and John P. Turner, Sharon Howell, George R. Fitzgerald, Bob Smith, Dick Sayre, Martin Van Lear II, Terry Heatherington, John W. Bailey, Frank Shavender, William Simons, Jr., Ronnie Orr, Reed Johnston, Jr., Larry M. Ford, Evelyn M. Long and Richard J. Long.

National Merit — Allison Webb, Bill Graham, John Hamilton, James Feilding Smith, Sherry Rottman and Spencer Wyatt McCallie.

Co-op Committee — Bob Jones, Betsy Mead, James C. Riley, Lloyd Coley, Jr., John Shively and Raymond C. Burns.

State Affairs Committee — John McMillan, Jim Clotfelter, Bruce Griffith, Gordon Coley, Wayne King, Gerry G. Cox, Jimmy Lynn Johnson, Carolyn Bond, Harold Lancaster, Tommy Jarrett, Pug Waddell, Bill McCallister and Dick Ellis.

Elections Board — Arthur Hays, Bill Aycock, William G. Schmidt, John Ingram, Robert W. Ross III, Michael Doctor, Alvin Tyndall, Louis Rosethal, Nancy Pruitt, Jean Groce, Eugene Brickleyer, Jr., Gary Grosboll, and Lynn Turner.

Honor System Commission — Jeane Yeager, Richard Barrett, George Bensch, Bernard E. Williams, Jr., Betsy Mallington, Howard Butner, Jr., Richard McGovern, Sanford Grossbuit and Bruce Hunter.

Carolina Forum — John Uffelder, Martin Wilson, Whitmel Joyner, David Lester, George Nicholson III, Carol Council, Marshall Lichtenstein, Hubert Wooton, Pieter Voorhees and William Schwartz.

Academic Affairs Committee — Randy Burge, Connie Burroughs, Jane Slater, Bill Straughn, Harold Cook, Dennis Organ, Franklin Adkinson, Jr., Bill Bowerman, Norman Christopher, Marilyn England, Sam Hines, Jr., Sharon Edwards, John Kiser, and Jerry Hancock.

Orientation Reform — Borden Parker, Dennis Myers, Roger A. Davis Anne Eskridge and Steve Dennis.

University Abroad — Pete Range, Al Fairchild, Willam G. von Glahn, John Quintus and Emily Klyce.

NSA Committee — Hugo Spechar, Anne Lupton, Vickie King, Betty Liverman, Howard Godwin, Carolyn Eubanks, Lynda Colvard, Ivars Lama, Kenneth Shepsle, Jo Lee Loveland, Edward Belmont, James D. Little and George Ingram IV.

'Honored' Aycock Gives Address

Phi Beta Kappa Inducts 45

Forty-five UNC students were initiated into Phi Beta Kappa, national scholarship fraternity, at initiation ceremonies held last night, it was announced by Ernest L. Mackie, professor of mathematics and faculty advisor to the fraternity.

Following the annual initiation banquet, Chancellor William B. Aycock, who was made an honorary member, addressed the group.

New initiates are:

Marie Stiart. Austin, Raleigh; Donna Bess Bailey, Coffeeville, Miss.; Robert Beale Bennett, Chevy Chase, Md.; Willard Alan Case, Asheville; Bobby Forrester Caviness, Asheboro;

Robert Leo Cherry, Charlotte; Nelda Olivia Clodfelter, Asheville; Rebecca Ann Cook, High Point; Christopher Joseph Daly, Hyattsville, Md.; Nina Elizabeth Davis, Williston.

Also, Henry Emanuel Mayer, Takoma Park, Md.; James Norwill McLamb, Wilmington; James Gorrell McMichael Jr., Winston-Salem; Bryan Douglas McSweeney, Hewlett, N. Y.; Margaret Mackay Millender, Mebane; Joseph Donald Peeler, Shelby; Robert Nelson Peery Jr., Newton;

Also, Hannelore Simon Rogers, Durham; Stanley Rosen, Raleigh; John Layne Scott, Brown Summit; Robert Sidney Shue, Haw River; Becky Ann Sigmon, Conover; John Wilder Southard, Bethesda, Md.; Ann Curtis Spencer, Chapel Hill; Margaret Tarasa Stephenson, Winston-Salem;

Roy Archibald Swaringer Jr., Winston-Salem; Jerry Lynn Townsend, Elizabethtown; Thomas Clarkson Worth Jr., Raleigh; William Brantley Aycock, Chapel Hill (Honorary).

Idaho Educator Says School Not Intended For All

A noted educator this week lashed out at the mediocrity of higher education in this country and exploded two popular myths about higher education in a speech delivered at the final current affairs forum of the year at the College of Idaho.

Dr. Tom E. Shearer, president of the C of I, in discussing "Current Problems of Higher Education" refuted the idea that "it is the God given right of every high school graduate to attend college. It simply isn't true," he declared. "We've got too many of the wrong students in colleges."

The national drop-out figure in colleges is 60 per cent, he stated. "We're either boring them to death or they shouldn't have been here in the first place. Students who are in colleges without the ability or the desire to do the work are taking space that ought to be filled by someone else," he continued.

He deplored the fact that many new colleges and universities are now being built to accommodate the anticipated influx of college students.

"It's perfect nonsense that we should double our college enrollments by 1970, as everyone tells us is going to happen, until we have filled our present facilities with capable students. If we routed out from all our colleges and universities those students who are wasting their own time, energy and money and those of faculty members, we would probably have penty of space to take care of this increasing crop of students.

"One of the major problems is the complete watering down of the whole character of higher education," he said. He alluded to the state of California's plans for new colleges and universities and gigantic enrollments in the next decade.

"If this trend continues," he declared, "you can be sure your bachelor's degree will be worth very little insofar as that degree signifies the mark of an educated person. Too few students are emerging from our colleges as well as educated persons.

I can see no hope for a world moving at our present furious pace unless we have a truly hard core of educated men and women in every community and in substantial numbers. Instead I see an increasingly larger number of college graduates being turned out each year who not only don't read one serious book a year but who probably can't."

Referring again to the high percentage of drop-out students he asserted that, "Either the service is poor or the customers are poorly selected. Any business that lost customers that fast would fail. It seems to me high time that some higher educational institutions failed.

"We're going to have to do a better job of selection. There are thousands, probably tens of thousands of young people in colleges and universities today who should be out working," he contended.

"We need to take a cold hard look at teaching methods and faculty evaluation techniques. In a small college we can and do, with some intelligence, continually try to improve our teaching methods. But in the large universities with 25,000 students and a faculty of 2,500 persons this just can't be done.

"Too often poor students go

UNC Junior To Be Tried In Alabama

By MIKE PUTZEL

A UNC student goes on trial today in Birmingham, Alabama, charged with loitering and refusing to follow an officer's orders.

John Dunne, a Junior Morehead scholar from Cleveland, Ohio, said he was arrested helping parents find their children who were being released from jail over the weekend.

A policeman came up and asked for his identification, Dunne said, and then told him to leave the area. When Dunne told the officer he would not leave without a reason, the officer placed him under arrest for loitering after being warned to leave.

Dunn said he was taken to jail and booked as a Negro, then placed in an all white cell, where a man attempted to strangle him.

He said that after he had been locked up, he was told that another charge had been filed against him. The second charge was refusal to obey the lawful command of an officer.

He was placed under $600 bond on Saturday, which was paid Sunday morning by the "Birmingham Movement."

Student Rights Violations To Be Dealt With By AAUP

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has formed a new committee to deal with the problem of violations of student rights, it was revealed last week at the association's National Conference.

Dr. Daniel Pollitt, UNC Professor of Law, is one of the five members of the committee, chaired by Professor Moneypenny of the University of Illinois.

Prof. Pollitt said yesterday that the committee has prepared a tentative report that will be submitted to the Council of the AAUP soon for approval. The approval of the Council is necessary before final action on the committee's proposals can be taken by the Convention.

The report will set forth standards to be adopted by the AAUP concerning what grounds students can properly be punished in matters involving academic freedom and what procedures should be followed for punishment in such cases.

According to Dr. Pollitt, the committee was formed to set up minimum standards of student rights and freedom "on and off campus, on student newspapers and radio stations, and in other student organizations."

The question of student academic freedom is of vital concern to professors, he said.

Dr. Pollitt said that the concern of the AAUP about violations of student rights grew out of the sit-in movements in 1961, when many students were being expelled for participating in demonstrations. The National Convention adopted a resolution condemning the discharge of students for such reasons in 1961, he continued.

"When the peace marchers and the ban-the-bomb movements began, there were more cases of students being discharged brought to the attention of the AAUP," he said. "There were many letters asking what the official position of the AAUP was, so they decided the AAUP ought to have a more detailed position."

The committee has met three times since its formation, according to Dr. Pollitt. At the last meeting a month ago, the work of drafting final proposals was divided among three subcommittees after the general outlines of the committee's recommendations were laid out.

Dr. Pollitt said yesterday that the subcommittees' proposals were being compiled and would be given to the Council shortly. Following Council approval the committee report will be submitted to the next National Convention of the AAUP for ratification.

The policies of the AAUP carry considerable weight because of the large number of American professors that belong to the organization.

Institutions that do not conform to AAUP standards often find it difficult to hire top-notch faculty members.

Dr. David Fellman, Professor of Political Science at the University of Wisconsin and chairman of the AAUP committee on violations of academic freedom and tenure, said at the National Convention last week that he made the motion to form the special committee because, "I found my own committee just didn't have the time to deal with all the incidents which arose."

Fellman noted with concern a rise in radical right wing pressures on faculties across the country. "There isn't a great buildup yet, but I think we are just at the beginning of developments," he said.

Thailand Is Bright Spot Of Southeast Asia

(NOTE: This is the fourth in a series of reports on the Southeast Asia Conference held at the U.S. Naval Academy.)

By BRICK OETTINGER and STUART EIZENSTAT

Thailand is a bright spot in the area. The only Southeast Asian nation never to have been under colonial domination, it is not susceptible to the colonial and roast line the Commies effectively employ elsewhere in the region. They are not introspective and provincial as are the Burmese but want to be a great nation. Her food problem is not bad except in the poverty stricken Northeast region, which lacks sufficient water. Though the typical Thai knows nothing of the ideological struggle between East and West, her government, lead by tough and able Sarit Thanarat, has joined SEATO. Her Mehong Revez is one of the ten great rivers in the world; its lower basis affects Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, and Viet Nam; the river has great potential to supply power, irrigation, and support a much greater industrial and agricultural complex and population. A Mehong River Committee is made up of one representative from the four nations affected, is hard at work in achieving the ends desired. Thailand encourages private enterprise and is a true friend of the United States.

Though no representative of their embassy addressed the round table, one of the round table's members was a Thai, who was attending California; his wit, intelligence, and energy were appreciated by all.

The Resolutions for Thailand are:

THAILAND

We consider Thailand to be the staunchest and most valuable ally of the United States in Southeast Asia. Every effort should be made to maintain the stability of Thailand, thereby retaining a strong anti-Communist state in Southeast Asia. In order to implement these aims, we propose:

1. To continue our present program of economic aid to Thailand, while increasing military aid in response to the heightened Communist threat in the Northeastern region.

2. To concentrate our economic and technical aid in bilateral agreements for the purpose of creating a genuine feeling of partnership between the United States and Thailand.

3. To support the autocratic government of Marshall Sarit Thanarat while encouraging him to develop democratic institutions on the local and national levels.

4. To increase the educational activities of the U.S.I.A., A.I.D., and the Peace Corps in Thailand.

5. To encourage a continuation and expansion of Thai participation in regional economic organizations (e.g. A.S.A.), and regional development projects such as the Mehong River Valley project, with the ultimate aim of Thai leadership in the formation of a Southeast Asian Common Market.

In discussing Malaya, we talked of the soon-to-be established Federation of Maylasia, which will include Malaya, Singapore, Sarawak and oil rich Bruner (British Colonial) and North Borneo (British protectorate).

Malaya has the most viable economy in Southeast Asia, having great resources of tin and rubber. Though quite friendly to the West, she is not a member of SEATO and makes it a point of stating its neutrality. The leader of Malaya, and of Malapin, when it comes into being August 31st of this year, is capable Abdul Rahman. Malaya has a racial problem as 41 per cent of its population is Malay, and 38 per cent Chinese; the Chinese element is by far the more industrious, occupying businesses and commercial positions, while the Malays are the farmers, fishermen and civil servants of the country.

The Patio Incident

Much confusion surrounds the incident at The Patio last Thursday during UNC's Senior Class Party.

As reported in the Tar Heel, two members of the class—one of them colored—have been arrested on trespass warrants sworn out by Henry Andrews, manager of the tavern, because they allegedly refused to leave when told to.

The Tar Heel inadvertedly contributed to the confusion which exists by mistakenly headlining the story "Charges Filed Against Pair After Sit-In."

It was not a sit-in. It was a case of mistaken expectations.

As class treasurer Jeff Guller's ensuing statement said, "We're sorry the incident occurred. If we had known The Patio was segregated, we would not have planned the Class Party there."

He spoke for the large majority of the class who simply weren't aware that the tavern is one of the few remaining blots upon Chapel Hill's reputation for enlightenment and tolerance.

For the few students who knew The Patio normally operates on a segregated basis, there was good reason to believe that the Jim Crow rule had been temporarily suspended inasmuch as the Class had reserved the tavern.

However, it has since been made clear that the class did not reserve the Patio outright, thus giving seniors exclusive attendance privileges. The class only got permission to have the party there.

"There was no contract signed and no money paid—or if there was I haven's seen it yet," Andrews said yesterday.

The point is, this was no planned move to desegregate The Patio. It was not a sit-in. It was a case of mistaken expectations.

Perhaps the main lesson to be learned from the incident is that you can't take integrated facilities for granted when planning any off-campus function.

In this case, however, the Senior Class planners should have known they were going into a segregated situation.

In an editorial in the May 2 issue of the Tar Heel, The Patio is listed as one of the 14 local establishments which practice discrimination.

That the planners somehow overlooked this information has resulted in much unnecessary harm being done.

We are anxious to see what the Class intends to do to make amends.

We suggest as a starter that they ask The Patio manager to consider dropping the charges.

Discrimination — Croak

We have long felt that we here in Chapel Hill are being discriminated against by the powers that be in the state. Another instance of this discrimination is about to be perpetrated against us.

We notice in a news story in the Raleigh News and Observer that Governor Sanford has named Wade Lucas, public information officer in the Department of Conservation and Development, to line up bull frogs for a jumping contest this week in Raleigh. The best frogs will be flown to California for the Calaveras County Jumping Frog Jubilee.

All of this is fine so far, and doesn't smack of discrimination, but the hundreds of weak legged frogs that will never get to see the Pacific will be distributed to Duke and State College, and none to us.

With this proposed distribution we can only assume that the rejected frogs will become students at Duke and State.

If this is the case we feel the distribution is fair and intelligent, having long thought the student bodies at those institutions were made up of hoppy-toed, weak-legged rejects.

But if these frogs are going to the labs at these other schools, then we want our fair share.

If we can't get a student union, or new dorms that aren't 100% self liquidating, or some of the other niceties that Duke and State have, then we should at least be entitled to free bull frogs.

Legislatures

It is encouraging to see a student legislature function intelligently and without wasting time. If only the state legislature would do the same.

* * *

Speaking of the state legislature, we notice that they met at Western Carolina College yesterday. They didn't do much at Wilington, they can't seem to do much at Raleigh and they probably didn't do much at Cullowhee.

If they keep this up, they too will be abolished by the Di-Phi.

Segregation: Here Are The Legal Facts

By WARREN OGDEN

Chapel Hill has become embroiled in the turmoil of civil right. Almost any night, in almost any dorm, bar or fraternity house, you can find highly vocal opinions on said subject. A lot of these students and teachers have decible ratings in inverse proportion to the amount they know about the subject. For the most part, they are speaking on the Theory of Relativity without even a vague understanding of college algebra.

There are two major forms of anti - segregation demonstration which we shall consider here. The first is the sit-in and the second is the mass protest. Let us consider the latter of these first.

The right of peaceful mass demonstration was upheld in the Supreme Court in Edwards vs. South Carolina in Oct., 1962. In this case, 187 demonstrators were convicted of common breach of the peace. They were arrested while walking two abreast in groups of about 15 from the Zion Baptist Church to the state capitol in Columbia. The conviction was upheld by the State Supreme Court and reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The exact rights of the sit-in demonstrators will be decided by the Supreme Court in the case Avent v. North Carolina. This case came up before the Court last November after having been decided in the North Carolina Supreme Court in January of 1961 against the Negroes. Two white and five Negro students were convicted under the state's trespass statute for refusing to abide by a store manager's request that they leave the store's "white" lunch counter. The counsel for the students, NAACP attorney Jack Greenburg of New York, has argued the case on the narrow issue of whether a state's use of police power to enforce segregation that stems from a community (Durham) custom "generated" by a "complex network of state laws" violates the 14th Amendment's "equal protection" clause. The counsel for the state, Ralph Moody, argued that the trespass laws are strictly neutral and are not used as a weapon in the integration question.

When the decision is handed down, it will provide significant basis for future litigation. In light of this, it is difficult to see how the Court can decide totally against the state because this would make enforcement of any trespass law difficult. On the other hand, it would seem likely that the Court would favor the students. It therefore seems likely that the result will be a tie with the Court deciding in favor of Avent on the basis of a Durham city statute which enforces segregation. The opinion will probably consider this as state action rather than the owner's free choice to discriminate.

What then are the present limits? In 1960, (Boynton v. Virginia) the integration of all inter and intrastate common carriers was decided. This set the precedent for cases which decided the rights of Negroes in all bus terminals, train station, air ports, etc., to all facilities.

Without mentioning cases, it has been held that cities do not have the right to district housing on racial lines, to enforce restrictive covenants in real estate contracts, or to enforce segregation in city buses, city libraries, public auditoriums, athletic events, swimming pools, beaches, golf courses, public housing, the sale of liquor, the sale of groceries, and the sale of food in a courthouse cafe.

Let us now consider the next likely step that will be taken in the courts. The next big question (although it is not yet on the Supreme Court docket) will probably be whether state licensure of a concern or person is a legitimate basis for prohibiting segregation. This has been decided in a Maryland lower court. The case was De Angelis v. Board of Liquor License Commissioners in 1955. This declared it unconstitutional for the Baltimore Board of Liquor Commissioners to grant licenses for colored or white patronage only. When this question comes before the Supreme Court, it will provide the next milestone to expand the limits of civil rights.

Letters To The Daily Tar Heel

Three-Man Rooms Bad For Academics AND Health

To the Editors:

I do not only dispute the proposed three man room system on academic grounds. I protest it on the basis of health requirements.

I take my dormitary room as an example. It is 17' 9" long, 11' 4" wide, and 9' 10" high. There are two protruding closets, each 2' x 3' x 9' 10".

Compare the statistics for my room with those given to me by the City Planning and Architectural Associates. For comparison I have included figures as they would be if three men were housed in this room.

A. My room (Two men):
201.12 total sq. ft.
—12.00 sq. ft. closet space
189.12 sq. ft., or 94.56 sq. ft. per man.

B. Proposed three-man room:
189.12 sq. ft., (same as above), or 63.04 sq. ft. per man.

C. Bare minimum from City Planning:
Square foot per man as quoted by the City planning and Architectural Associates is 85.00 sq. ft. per man!!

But square footage is only one-half of the argument. Consider:

A. My room:
1976.89 total cubic footage
—117.96 closet volume
1858.93 cubic feet or 929.465 cubic feet per man.

B. Proposed three-man rooms:
Same basic cubic footage, but 619..643 cubic feet per man.

C. Bare minimum quoted by City Planners:
807.5 cubic feet per man.

On both counts, present conditions in my room are totally inadequate for three residents.

Birmingham Background

To the Editors:

A friend has sent me your editorial on our tragic racial situation, and I hope you will allow me to give you a little background which you haven't heard on the networks or read from national newsmen far from the scene.

On April 2nd the voters of Birmingham elected a new mayor and nine councimen to replace our old form of a three-man commission. The new men were to be installed on April 15th under the law, but the three incumbents refused to leave until the end of their terms in 1965. Both sides appealed and the hearing is to come up before the Alabama Supreme Court on May 16th, or soon thereafter. In the meantime Birmingham has been like a ship wallowing on a turbulent sea without a captain.

The new mayor had promised to "resolve our difficulties" upon installation. Local Negroes could have waited until the new city government could act; however, Martin Luther King knew now was the time to strike for a sensational build-up of funds for his organization. Therefore, the day after the election he and his cohorts moved and and began to incite hatred and lawlessness. What has happened since is well known.

The reports of "brutality" sent out never mention that it is the police and firemen who have been spat on and pelted with rocks, bricks and bottles and some hospitalized. One picture showed a Life photographer nursing an ankle that had been hit by a chunk of concrete thrown by a Negro in the mob. I said it couldn't have happened to a more deserving fellow and that was one picture that would never make Life. One demonstration was called off by a Negro preacher because he saw at least 25 Negroes with guns.

The restraint of the whites has been gratifying Our newspapers have commended the police on their patience and our leading Negro businessman, standing in his office beyond the park where the demonstrations formed, said "The restraint of the police is remarkable. It could be nasty." I got to town at the tail end of the big downtown spectacle when Negroes pushed whites from sidewalks and overran even the French Room of our leading department store. I don't believe their most ardent admirers could have failed to note the "wild man of Borneo" aspects of the exhibition.

Outsiders went to the schools and recruited students who were glad to have excitement. There were reports of intimidation of those who didn't want to march. Many of the children sent to the Juvenile Home fared better than at home and many parents weren't eager to get them out. One girl who had been sick and sent to the doctor finally had to be taken home by a deputy, as her parents twice refused to come get her.

Many of us haven't agreed with the handling of the race problem in our state and city, but others should know that this last outburst would not have occurred if local people had been allowed to solve our problems when the new city government came in. Birmingham has been used by outsiders to garner large sums for their gain.

The roadside murder was deplorable and we hate it, but the hordes of others who say they will come down will further inflame the situation and should be stopped up North.

Sincerely yours,
Irma Flinn
Birmingham, Ala.

Spearman Commends

To the Editors:

I should like to commend the intelligence, the ability and the devotion to the University displayed by the seven members of this year's Senior Class who delivered their "Parting Shots" on Tuesday evening at Memorial Hall.

In my 28 years of teaching at the University I have not heard a more stimulating, perceptive and challenging program than the short but frank talks made by Miss Beth Walker, Walter Dellinger, Wayne King, Henry Mayer, Bill Imes, Mack Armstrong and Joe Craver. They have recognized many of the problems of the University and have spoken out clearly concerning those problems. One proof of the excellence of the University is that it could have produced seniors of this high quality who love their university well enough to criticize it.

Students and faculty members who were unable or unwilling to attend the program should by all means be given an opportunity to read the remarks of the speakers. I hope they will be printed and distributed.

A Look At The Federal Gov't.'s Ugly Duckling

Forge of Democracy—the House of Representatives. By Neil MacNeil. David McKay Publishers. 455 pp. $6.75

By JIM CLOTFELTER

President Kennedy's troubles with Congress in the past two years has focused renewed attention on the ugly duckling of the Federal government, the House of Representatives.

When the President's calls for legislation in the areas of medical care for the aged, foreign aid, tariffs, civil rights, education and others, are met consistently with stubborn refusal by a conservative House, that body becomes an important subject of study. One such study is Neil MacNeil's Forge of Democracy.

MacNeil studies the House from two directions — history, how it arrived where it is; and political science, where is it? The book follows the House from its birth, as the sole democratic organ within the Federal government — to its present state, where in refusing to rubber-stamp the New Frontier program the House "in essence reclaimed its ancient rights to represent the American people, to set itself as a check on the power of the Senate and the President".

When Andrew Jackson popularized the view that the President is the representative of all the people, the House's sole claim to the mantle of democracy was undercut. The introduction of the spoils system — over which the House had no control — also relatively weakened the representatives.

Wilson presented the House with a full legislative program to be acted upon, thus putting Congress on the defensive, to pass or defeat his bills. Under Franklin Roosevelt, the Speaker of the House and Senate majority leader were chosen with the president's agreement — they became subordinate to him.

The Senate, MacNeil says, has "surrendered most its influence over legislation by its agreement, in substance, with what the President requested." This has been particularly true in the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations. Kennedy has inherited an "informal Presidential alliance wth the Senate."

* * *

What differs most radically from the past in the House's present function, is that the President is now the Chief Legislator. The President has the all-important initiative in legislation.

But different Presidents encounter different problems with the House. Eisenhower effectively used the veto as a lever to ensure favorable modifications in House bills. Kennedy has "added new dimensions to the growing intimacy of the President with the House". The emphasis put on legislation by the two presidents is different — Eisenhower was willing to have no legislation if it did not suit his desires; Kennedy more prefers compromise.

The New Frontier attitude toward the House was expressed by Kennedy's congressional liason, Lawrence O'Brien: "The Congress represents the people, and it's far better for the President and us to deal with Congress" than "go over their heads" to the people.

* * *

Forge of Democracy is a timely book, but perhaps unnecessarily weighted down with detailed history and obscure quotations. Mr. MacNeil must have felt that a 435-man legislative body, with a 170-year-old tradition, deserved 480 pages.

Fellowships Awarded To 2 Undergrads

Two UNC undergraduates have been awarded fellowships for the 1963-64 academic year in UNC's Undergraduate Honors and Master's Degree Program which comprises the last two years of undergraduate work and the first year of graduate work.

The fellowship recipients are Nathan Wesley Dean of Johnson City, Tenn., and Carl Douglas Rhodes Jr. of Leaksville. Dean is a senior studying physics, Rhodes is a junior studying zoology.

The purpose of the program is to enable undergraduates intending to enter graduate school to begin advanced work early in their academic careers and to facilitate their progress toward the master's degree.

Students who are enrolled or who are eligible to enroll in an undergraduate Honors Program in the College of Arts and Sciences are eligible to study under this program.

Under the program, students desiring to pursue graduate work may complete some of their graduate requirements before entering graduate school. The program is designed to urge students to complete requirements for their master's degree by the end of one year of graduate school.

The program is financed by a Ford Foundation grant to the University. The grant of $123,000 was awarded in 1961 for a period of five years.

George S. Welsh, UNC professor of psychology, is the coordinator of the program.

Student Party Officers Are To Be Named

The Student Party will elect its officers for next year tonight at 8 in Roland Parker rooms of GM.

Women's Council Tries 2 Students

One student was given an official reprimand and another was excused in two Campus Code cases tried by the Women's Council last week. Both trials were close.

In the first case a student pleaded and was found guilty of failing to return to her residence on the date of return noted on her sign-out slip. It was the student's second Women's Council offense, and she was given an official reprimand.

In the second case a student was charged with having returned to her residence one and a half hours late after spring vacation. She was excused due to unavoidable circumstances surrounding her lateness.

through a boring routine of giving back to a professor what he said in class, getting good grades and never once getting a glimpse of what education is really about," he continued. "All of this is said, not because I don't believe in higher education but because I believe in it so much," he added.

"I am unalterably opposed to a further extension of federal aid to education until we have established some solid guide lines. I fully realize there are thousands of capable young men and women who may miss a college education.

But I say before we expand further let's prove that we can do the job with the capable ones, the determined ones already in college. I don't believe we can afford to give every youngster a college education, and I firmly assert that even if we could, that we ought not to."

"I don't see the appropriation of any more federal monies for adding to mediocrity. Yet I suggest that it will probably happen and that it will serve to exaggerate mdiocrity in our institutions of higher learning."

Birmingham Racial Situation Said 'Improving'

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Federal observers said Tuesday Birmingham's racial atmosphere is "improving," but that troops will remain because there still is the chance of "trouble developing quickly."

The only incident Tuesday involved a lone picket who turned up outside the building where the Army has set up a command post near the Negro section.

Police arrested the demonstrator, identified as Jerry Dutton, a member of the National States Rights party, and charged him with parading without a permit.

He carried a sign which read: "Invade Cuba, not Mississippi," and "JFK Uses Troops to Capture Black Vote in '64."

President Kennedy ordered 3,000 troops trained in riot tactics into the vicinity of Birmingham Sunnay night following a pre-dawn riot that resulted in 22 injuries and saw almost an entire city block burned.

The riot was touched off by two racial bombings that came shortly after an unofficial committee representing the city's business men had worked out an integration agreement with Negroes. City officials, who took no part in the negotiations, have said repeatedly they are not bound by the agreement.

Both sides have pledged that despite the violence they will honor the agreement, which provides for the integration of facilities at downtown variety and department stores, an upgrading of job opportunities for Negroes and establishment of "communications" between whites and Negroes.

A 60-90 day deadline was set on most points, and businessmen apparently were waiting for a further easing of tensions before attempting to implement any of the changes. No start in that direction has yet been made.

Burke Marshall, the Justice Department's top expert in the civil rights field, returned to Washington earlier in the day to give Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy a first hand report of the situation here.

HUAC Won't Review Case

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Committee on Unamerican Activities Tuesday rejected a request by Alabama congressmen for an immediate investigation of possible Communist influence in Birmingham racial disturbances.

Acting Chairman Edwin E. Willis, D-La., said, however, that the committee would look into the Birmingham situation if current investigations by local, state and federal authorities disclosed the possibility of subversive influences.

Willis, in identical letters to the eight members of the Alabama House delegation, said that he discussed the matter with Chairman Francis E. Walter, D-Pa., currently hospitalized with a respiratory ailment.

Rep. Kenneth Roberts, one of those who requested the investigation after it was suggested by Alabama Gov. George Wallace, disclosed the contents of Willis' letter.

Students Riot

VIENNA (UPI) — Czech youths beat up African and Middle Eastern students and slashed the tires of an African diplomat's car in a series of incidents in Prague last Saturday, according to reliable reports reaching Vienna Tuesday.

The reports said a mob of about 300 Czechs ganged up on two students from Africa and the Middle East around mid-day in Prague's downtown Wenceslas Square near the Hotel Ambassador.

The students were beaten for 15 minutes, the report said. Czech police did not intervene. The reason for the incident was not known.

Cooper To Try Again Today

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper climbed into his space capsule Tuesday for a five-hour, 51-minute trip to nowhere. "Well," he said afterward with a smile that came hard, "we'll try again tomorrow."

His head and face drenched with perspiration, Cooper crawled back out, shrugged, and raised his hands toward the sky in a gesture of frustration.

He managed a smile for sympathetic engineers, but he looked tired and disappointed that a faulty radar unit had spoiled it all—only 12 minutes before he was to have blasted into orbit for America's longest space mission yet.

"I was just getting to the real fun part," said Cooper.

"The fun part" was the moment the Air Force major had spent the last five years of his 36-year-life working and waiting for, the moment he was scheduled to roar aloft for a 22-orbit, 34-hour whirl around the earth.

His day of triumph may come Wednesday, if all goes well.

Cooper isn't the first of America's six space travelers who has undergone the ordeal of waiting, only to find the prize snatched from his grasp.

Virgil I. Grissom holds the record for suspense and frustration. He waited six hours and 19 minutes in his capsule on July 19, 1962 before his flight was scrubbed 10 minutes before launching. Grissom made it two days later.

Phi Delts Turn Back ATO For Frat Blue Crown, 9-5

By STUART BALL

Phi Delta Theta scored early and spent the rest of the game protecting its lead and claimed the Fraternity Blue softball crown with a 9-5 win over ATO.

The Phi Delts cashed in on four walks by ATO pitcher Jim Eason and an error by third baseman Johnny Yokley to score six runs in the first inning.

In the second they added two more. Mac Boxley singled to left to start the inning and took second on an error.

Buck Wainright moved Boxley to third on a ground out to second baseman Ray Hassell. Tom Cummings then drew a walk from Eason. Boxley scored and Cummings went to second on a past ball by catcher Lanny Bridgers.

Catcher Doc Dickinson greeted Eason with a run scoring single and the Phi Delts had a 8-0 lead.

Phi Delt pitcher Charlie Battle was quietly nursing a no-hitter along through the first four innings while his teammates were giving him a big lead.

ATO scored a run on two Phi Delt errors in the second inning, but it wasn't until a blazing fourth inning single by Earl Johnson that the ATO's collected their first hit.

After Johnson's single the roof temporarily fell in on Battle.

Both pitchers held opposing batters scoreless for the remaining two innings.

Semifinals Today

By STUART BALL

The fast-fading 1963 intramural season moves a step closer to completion today as semifinalists in softball and tennis meet to determine who the All-Campus finalists will be in those events.

In softball competition fraternity winners in the white and blue divisions (decided yesterday) meet today at 5 p.m. to determine the alll-fraternity champion.

At the same time on another field the Teague Animals meet the Grad School champs. The winner here takes on the all-fraternity champion tomorrow at 5 o'clock in the All-Campus Final.

In Monday's games Dental School made the finals a family affair by eliminating two Law School teams in the semi-finals.

Dental School-3 jumped off to a nine run lead in the first three innings of their game with the Law Less and made it stick. Law scored three runs in the first inning but their attack fizzled and the final score ended 9-5.

Two five run innings highlighted the Dental School Frosh-Law Shyster contest. The Dentists, leading 5-0, put their bats to work in the top of the fifth to hike their lead to 10-0.

The undaunted Shysters came back in their half with five runs and added another in the bottom of the sixth. This was not enough, however, as the final score read 10-6.

Tennis competition today will also determine the finalists in the All-Campus match to be held tomorrow at 4 p.m. The Fraternity White champs meet the Fraternity Blue winners at the same time the Dorm and Grad champs are squaring off.

Monday Chi Psi and DKE advanced to the finals by posting shutouts over Phi Delt and KA respectively.

Navy assured itself of over 1,000 points in the dormitory point race by blanking Winston 3-0 yesterday in the Dorm final.

Dick Newcomb defeated Larry Somers 6-1, 6-0 and Gene Corpening topped Kent Eidson 6-3, 8-6 in the singles matches while Bill Poteat and Norm Christopher skunked Jim Siceloff and Harrison Smith in the doubles 6-0, 6-0.

Steve Painter, playing number one for Chi Psi, fell behind Phi Delt's Mike Michaels in the first set but came back to take it 9-7. In the second set he had a somewhat easier time of it in winning 6-0.

In the doubles Fred Seely and John Angel, defeated Butch Winstead and Nelson Irving 6-1, 6-4. Bill Yelverton and Don Craven tied in games and sets at the number two singles spot.

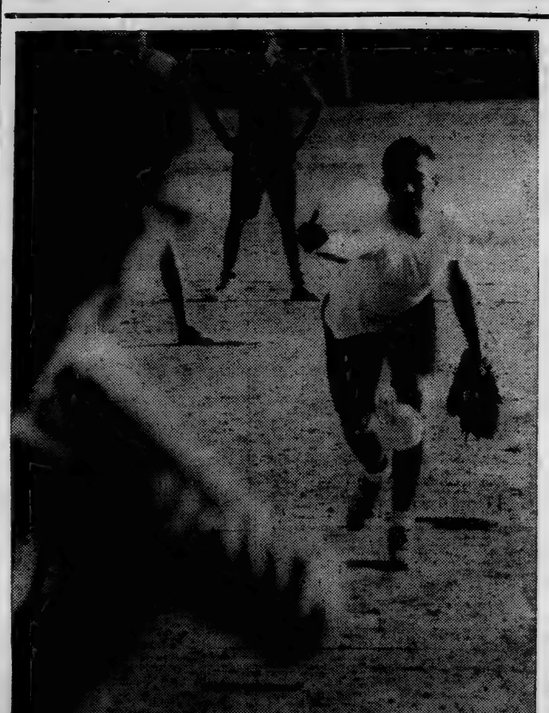
DKE whipped KA 3-0 in a one-sided contest to gain the other finals position. Ed Murrey and Gray Lyons swept the singles matches 6-0, 6-1 and 6-1, 6-1 respectively, and John Edgerton and Ben Willis captured the doubles match 6-3, 6-1.

Law School-C took a 2-1 win over Chemistry for the Grad division title. Marshall Harper at number one singles and Jim Carson and Al Warren in the doubles for the Lawyers won their matches.

Stefan Young prevented a shutout for the Chem team as he won at the number two singles position.

In other Monday activity Ruffin and Law School-B claimed the dormitory and grad school horseshoes championships with wins over Everett and Law-A respectively.

In a Fraternity Blue semifinal match DKE advanced to the finals with a 2-1 win over KA.



In all-campus water polo Sigma Nu and DU topped Beta and DKE respectively and will meet in the finals Thursday night at 6:15.

Sonny Not Blue; He's Ready

LAS VEGAS (UPI)—A fit and eager Charles (Sonny) Liston will begin daily public workouts at the Dunes Hotel on June 20 for his world heavyweight championship title defense against Floyd Patterson, advisor Jack Nilon announced Tuesday.

The twice-postponed bout will be held at the Las Vegas Convention Hall on July 22 and Nilon said that no further delays were anticipated.

"Liston's knee has come around without surgery being necessary," Nilon disclosed. "We are certain that he will be in top shape for the bout.

"The knee responded to treatment and the doctors have given him a clean bill of health," said Nilon, adding that Liston has proved beyond doubt that he is completely recovered.

The bout, after the Miami Beach postponement, was scheduled for Las Vegas in June. But it had to be set back again when Patterson injured a hand in training.

Heels, Deacs In Exhibition

It's just an exhibition game and the results will not count in any standings, but just the same North Carolina will be "up" for Wake Forest when the two teams clash in a Shrine Benefit Game tonight in Asheboro.

Coach Walt Rabb plans to send his ace righthander Bill Haywood to the mound against the Deacons, who have captured the ACC championship for the second straight year.

In their two regular meetings this season, the two teams split. In Winston-Salem on April 9, Wake walloped UNC, 13-1, but one month later in Chapel Hill it was a different story. The Tar Heels won this one, 11-8, and set the stage for tonight's "deciding game," scheduled for eight o'clock.

Senior outfielders Buddy Tilden and Heyward Hull will be starting their last game for the Tar Heels. Tilden hit .321 this season and Hull batted .312.

6 UNC Men On All-ACC

Six members of North Carolina's powerful tennis team were named yesterday to the DTH 1963 All-ACC tennis team.

Conference singles champion George Sokol, senior singles runner-up Keith Stoneman, junior standouts Ted Hoehn, Bitsy Harrison and Charlie Shafer and sophomore O. H. Parrish captured all six singles spots on the first team.

The dream group, chosen by members of the DTH sports staff after consultation with players, coaches, writers, publicists and Dave Morgan, has Sokol-Stoneman, Hoehn-Harrison and Shaffer-Parrish as its number one, two and three doubles teams.

The "smart set" led Coach Don Skaklе's team to an 18-1 season record this past spring which included seven ACC wins without a loss. The netters are now 40-2 over two years, have won six straight ACC championships and five straight league tournament titles.

Stoneman, who made his last season his best with a stirring performance in the ACC tourney, deadlocked the 6-7 Harrison for the best singles record of the six. The two had identical 15-1 singles marks and 12-2 doubles records.

Parrish was 15-2 and 12-2; Sokol 14-3 and 10-2; Shaffer 12-3 and 12-2; and Hoehn 9-5 and 9-2.

Pete Meyers, the able sophomore who stepped in for Hoehn when the latter was sidelined earlier in the season, contributed a 10-1 record in singles play.

Meyers, Sam Applegate, and Carolina's fabulous doubles duo of Kirby Jones and Stan Cocke all were undefeated in doubles play.

Honorable mention on the DTH team went to Jim Busick of Maryland and Dave Morgan.

Tar Heels Finish With 19-9 Record

BLACKSBURG, Va. — Tom Wright carved turkey with a Louisville Slugger yesterday, slicing four hits in five times at bat as North Carolina ate up VPI's Gobblers, 8-3.

The victory was the sixth straight for the Tar Heels and it came in the final game of what turned out to be a very successful season for UNC. The team finished with an 19-9 record overall and took second place in the ACC with a 9-5 mark.

Third baseman Wright, the leading Tar Heel hitter going into the game (.353), was the batting star, pounding out four safeties against Tech hurler Jim Vance, who was the victim of EIGHT unearned runs in absorbing his first defeat of the year.

Righthander Bobby Cox, starting his first game since March 29 when he beat Colgate, went the full nine, yielding only two hits after the second inning. The win was his second of the season.

The Tar Heels enjoyed a three-run feast in the second and came back for a second-helping of four runs in the fourth. A one-run dessert in the seventh completed the meal.

Bill Brown picked up his first of two singles to lead off the second. Ken Willard waited out Vance for a walk and then both runners advanced on a double steal. Bernie Isgett struck out, but both runners came in when catcher Larry Lawson let the ball skip past him. Isgett wound up on third and scored on Cox's squeeze bunt.

In the fourth Isgett drilled a double to right and Cox followed with a single, moving Isgett to third. Courtesy runner Bill Taylor went to second, but Isgett held third when shortstop Dee Dalrymple fumbled Buddy Tilden's grounder to load the bases.

Dickie Prindle popped to short left for the second out, and Merle Kruer was sent in as a courtesy runner for Isgett. Wright then singled, scoring Kruer and Taylor. Jim Speight's single brought Tilden across and Brown completed the uprising with a single which plated Wright.

The lone tally in the seventh came on a double by Ken Willard, which scored Brown who had reached first on De Moss Price's error.

The Gobblers roughed up Cox a bit in the first two frames, scoring three runs, two of them unearned.

14 New Faculty Members Named

Fourteen new faculty members have been appointed to the staff here it was announced today by UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock with the approval of President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

The new faculty members and the departments in which they will serve are: Dewitt Clinton Dearborn, professor, School of Business Administration, formerly of Carnegie Institute of Technology; Girard E. Lenski, professor, Department of Sociology-Anthropology formerly of the University of Michigan; John W. Dixon Jr., associate professor, Department of Religion, formerly of Florida Presbyterian College; Ernest Linwood Folk III, associate professor, School of Law, formerly of the University of South Carolina.

Also, Richard Warren Lieban, associate professor, Department of Sociology-Anthropology, formerly of Woman's College; William Joseph De Sua, assistant professor, Department of Romance Languages, formerly of Tufts University; Karel Joseph Kansky, assistant professor, Department of Geography, formerly a teacher at the State Gymnasium, Litomerice, Czechoslovakia.

Also, Donald W. Misch, assistant professor, Department of Zoology, previously on a postdoctoral research and tutorial program at Harvard University; Robert Gilbert Faust, assistant professor, School of Medicine, previously a research fellow, Harvard Medical School; Albert Warren King, assistant professor, School of Social Work, previously a lecturer at UNC.

Also, James Warrell Pruett, assistant professor, Department of Music, previously on UNC Library and Music staffs; Donald Joseph Reeb, assistant professor, Department of City and Regional Planning and School of Business Administration, previously a graduate teaching assistant as Syracuse University; Frederick Wright Vogler, assistant professor, Department of Romance Langunages, previously of the State University of Iowa; and James Herbert Taylor, professor, Department of Botany, previously of Columbia University.

Creativity Inspected By Panel

This is the first of a series of four articles on the recent Response Conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Fine Arts" at Princeton University.

By STEPHEN DENNIS

The panel of the Princeton Response Conference on "The Distribution of the Performing Arts" was held in McCarter Theatre. The participants were S. L. Weaver, Chairman of the Board of McCann-Erickson; Newton Minow, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission; August Heckscher, Special Consultant on the Arts to the White House; and Robert Whitehead, Director of the Lincoln Center Repertory Theatre.

The panel opened its consideration of problems facing creativity and excellence in arts today with a consideration of the statement by Edward Albee the night before that the audience deserves what it gets. Albee had further said that today there is not a dictatorship of the top, as in the Soviet Union, but a dictatorship of the bottom in the arts in America.

Mr. Heckscher agreed that we are living in an unusual era with regard to the arts that people are now beginning to enjoy the arts as they never have before. He attributed this to our present prosperity and to a new sense of purpose. To him, government has responsibility in the area of the arts, just as it has in any other field affecting the happiness of its people.

Mr. Weaver believes we are now capable, because of the advances of technology, of having an all-people elite. Mr. Minow disagreed, citing H. L. Mencken's statement that "No one ever went broke underestimating the intelligence of the American people." He said this dictum has been taken too liberally by American producers.

Weaver sees problems of communication for today's artist, particularly for the composer and playwright. Painting does not require someone to go between the artist and his public, he noted, as a symphony does. Before it can be heard, it must be performed by an orchestra; the composer cannot present it to the public without their help.

As an example of the awkward situations which the present system of television patronage can produce Minor cited the instances of a GE sponsorship of Kipling's "The Light That Failed," when GE insisted in having the title changed and a Ford program which had the Chrysler building deleted from the New York skyline.

Weaver argued for a magazine concept of television, with separate departments for almost all areas of consideration in viewing tastes. He stressed the necessity of hucksterism to sell certain programs, such as ballet, to a large American audience, adding that he wants to bring the same audience through its nouveau-riche period as quickly as possible.

Whitehead said that the death word in culture is to set up something because it is "cultural." Culture should be 'fun, agonizing, vigorous.' 'I even hate the word "theatre" sometimes.'

Grant Given To RTVMP Department

The UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures (RTVMP) is the recipient of a $2,500 grant from the Music Corporation of America (MCA) with headquarters in New York City.

The grant will be used by the RTVMP Department to establish The MCA Scholarship of Graduate Fellowship in Creative Writing. The grant will be awarded to a student, chosen by a selection committee, who has shown exceptional talent in the field of creative writing for the performing arts.

A faculty committee composed of Associate Professor John S. Clayton, and Instructor Ralph Dennis of the RTVMP Department and Harry Davis, professor and chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, will select the recipient of the first award. The scholarship or fellowship will be given for the scholastic year, 1963-64.

It is expected that the recipient of the scholarship or fellowship will be enrolled for two semesters of the 1963-64 year in television, motion picture or stage playwriting courses at the advanced level. MCA has offered to act, if requested, in a professional advisory capacity. Writing completed during the term of the award may be submitted to MCA for criticism.

Young Republican Officers Chosen

Charles Hooks, rising Junior from Goldsboro, was elected president of the UNC Young Republican Club at the annual election meeting last night.

In accepting the office Hooks praised outgoing president Bud Broome for his work during the past year and pledged himself to continuing the development of the YRC on campus.

Ehringhaus Men Throw Water Bombs

Police Called When Cab Drivers Hit

By FRED SEELY

Campus police were called to Ehringhaus dormitory last night after three cab drivers were attacked with a barrage of water bombs thrown from balconies of the dorms.

A. J. Beaumont, chief of the Campus Police, was called in after cabs from the Tar Heel and Carolina Cab Companies were pelted with water.

"The noise started about ten o'clock and continued up until about 11," he said. "It started again about 12:30 and we didn't receive a call from anyone, including the dorm advisors and the dorm headmaster.

"(The water bombing) has been going on all year, but not with the intensity we have seen lately," commented Beaumont. "It's getting to be a real game now, with the students setting up traps for the cabbies.

"It's not a question of just one fellow sneaking out. Whole balconies are full of students, jeering, yelling, asking what harm a little water will do.

"I told them, 'You don't seem to know what the Honor System is. You allow these things to go on and you just laugh at the fellows who do it, instead of turning them in to the IDC or the Honor Council'."

"I think that it's happening because this is a freshman dorm, with very few upperclassmen around," he added. "I hope that we can get more cooperation in the future from the residents, as the situation can get very serious."

"I would hate to have one of my own men hit with a pop bottle some night, and one of these days one of the cab drivers is going to get real mad and then no telling what will happen."

New Books To Be Used

Freshman English Courses Changed

By GINGER WHITE

Next year's freshmen will be introduced to a new type of English course, according to James Gaskin, Director of Freshman and Sophomore English.

The course will continue to be essentially a composition course, but the subject matter from which themes and term papers come will be changed.

The freshman will at first use the "Harbrace College Handbook." After a brief period of orientation a new book, "Writing Prose," will be used for further instruction in rhetoric.

"We are going to put less emphasis on teacing te mecaichsnhi phasis on teaching the mechanics of writing next year," stated Dr. Gaskin. "This is based on the fact that every year the College Board scores for incoming freshmen are higher. Freshmen should be able to handle more writing with less instruction in the basic fundamentals of grammar."

During the first semester, a book called "The Story at Work, by Jessie Rehder of the UNC English Department, will also be used. The semester will end with Edith Wharton's "Ethan Frome."

English 2 will discard the familiar "The Age of Anxiety" booklet and replace it with a study of what Dr. Gaskin considers a more entertaining, comprehensive group of literary works. Students will study "The Great Gatsby," "Huck Finn," "The Importance of Being Earnest," "Othello," the play "J. B." and an anthology of poems.

In connection with the study of "J. B." the Playmakers will produce the play in March of next year.

"We believe these changes will make the freshman course more interesting to students and teachers alike," said Dr. Gaskin. "The changes will be effective as of the first semester of this summer school."

Legislature Takes Final Action On Budget Tonight

By JOEL BULKLEY

Final action on the proposed $163,583 Student Government budget for next year is expected at tonight's session of Student Legislature. SL yesterday continued to slash away budget requests submitted by campus organizations in an effort to salvage some money for an unappropriated balance. The balance stood at $85.30 at the close of yesterday's afternoon meeting.

Legislature chopped $113 off the Carolina Women's Council request, leaving its total at $505. Items deleted included an $80 orientation breakfast; a $25 bridge tournament; and an $8 appropriation for the CWC's part in the campus guide service.

A motion, introduced by Bill Straughn, (SP) to bar student government from appropriating any money to the Carolina Quarterly literary magazine was overwhelmingly defeated.

SL, however, cut the Quarterly's request of $200 for publicity and travel, and then added $50 to the miscellaneous category (now $100).

Legislature re-convened last night to consider budget proposals for the Daily Tar Heel, the Yackety-Yack, the Senior Class, the athletic councils and the 1964 Symposiums.

* * *

Legislature reversed an earlier precedent and considered proposed appropriation increases, amounting to $895 for four campus organizations, at a special session Tuesday night. SL voted Monday to delete requests totaling $545 from three others.

Legislature added $220 to the State Affairs Committee request—$175 for public relations and $45 for transportation — making the total request $450.

SL voted 16-15 to defeat a proposal to add $200 to the Interdormitory Council budget for projects, but then voted 23-8 favoring a $400 increase.

The Women's Residence Council received a $25 increase for its freshman counselor program while a request for a $250 semi-formal dance for the Carolina Woman's Council was also granted.

The appropriation for the Summer School Contingency Fund was reduced from $100 to $75, while a request for $75 for communications for the finance committee of Student Legislature was eliminated.

Symphony Home For 2-Day Stand

Dr. Benjamin F. Swalin brings the 65-member North Carolina Symphony Orchestra "home" for a performance tonight in Memorial Hll. The parents Symphony Society maintains its year-round headquarters on the UNC campus.

The concert for adult and student members of the Symphony Society, and UNC students, will present the young virtuoso American pianist, William Alton, now a member of the faculty at Woman's College.

Mr. Alton, a student of Edward Kilenyi and Ernst von Dohnanyi at Florida State University where he received both his bachelor's and master's degrees in music, was the 1961 winner of the National Federation of Music Club's biennial Young Artist competitions.

He will play the Bela Bartok piano concerto No. 3, written the year of the composer's death in 1945. The last eighteen measures of the orchestral score, in fact, were completed by a close friend of the composer, Tibor Serly.

Also programmed are the Brahms Fourth Symphony, the "Overture to the Opera 'Masquerade'" by Carl August Nielsen, and two dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel DeFalla.

In addition, the Edward Benjamin Commission for 1963 — for "quiet and restful music"— will provide the hearing of Dr. Swalin's new composition, "Sunday in Chapel Hill."

The performance here is one of several planned during the last few weeks of the present spring tour of the Symphony — its 18th tour since 1946 of the major urban cities of North Carolina and many of the smaller rural communities.

The North Carolina Symphony was the first professional orchestra to receive a portion of its annual maintenance from State subsidies. Since 1944, the orchestra has been partially supported through a biennial appropriation of the General Assembly. The remainder of its financial support is through memberships in the local chapters of the Symphony throughout the State.

WUNC-FM To Have Jazz Hour Tonight

Tonight is jazz night in WUNC-FM radio.

Jazz music will be the feature of the station's final musical spectacular which will be presented this evening on "Hillside Jazz."

The special program, hosted by newly appointed station manager Frost Branon, will begin at 10:15 following the news program.

The 40-minute, weekly program "Hillside Jazz" has had its format extended for this special "jazz marathon."

IFC Gives Approval To Affiliate Ruling

The IFC has approved a measure concerning the status of "social affiliates."

Starting next fall, anyone affiliated with a fraternity, whether or not they are members, must have a "C" average in order to eat, room or take part in social functions with that fraternity.

"This was done to make fraternity rules more uniform," commented IFC President Charlie Battle. "In addition, it will make our scholarship rules more meaningful."

The vote on the measure was 21-3.

To Retire After 36 Years Here

Dr. Harland: Joker, Artist, Scholar

By R. LEE FERRELL

"I may have to get a job operating an elevator when I'm retired just so I'll be near people. Yes sir, I'm going to miss all these students," Dr. J. Penrose Harland says.

"Mr. Chips," professor of archaeology in the Classics Department, will be retired in June after 3 years of teaching at UNC.

Dr. Harland's students have numbered in the thousands. Many of them like Governor Terry Sanford, Andy Griffith, Gordon and Bowman Gray, Robert Ruark are now famous.

"One year alone I had over 1,000 students," Dr. Harland recalls, his cherubic face lighting up with a smile.

His courses are as much "Harland" as classical archaeology.

"From the very first 'Chick' Harland had large classes of the very best students," said Robert B. House, Chancellor Emeritus of UNC. "Chick taught them well and was unfailing in his fellowship. In fact his whole career has been a diligent fellowship with students.

"He is a splendid illustration of learning and culture carried with an easy grace. But he's more. Without question he's one of Chapel Hill's greatest characters, live and creative as anyone we read about."

Miss Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women, has cause to remember a trip she made to Manila.

"I had boarded the ship and had begun to unpack my trunks, when the purser knocked on my cabin door. He extended an invitation from the chief musician for me to perform on the tuba that evening.

"I told him I had never touched a tuba in my life, much less played one. But he wouldn't take no for an answer, and it was a long time before he would believe me," she went on.

"What had happened was Dr. Harland had wired the ship's chief musician that I was a famous tuba player, but was very bashful and would need lots of encouragement.

"Once Mrs. Harland tried and tried to get him to rake the leaves in the front yard," Miss Carmichael continued. "Then one afternoon she had a tea. Did Dr. Harland rake the leaves? No, he simply put up a sign saying, 'Leaves Artistically Arranged by J.P.H.'"

Dr. Harland has lectured in many parts of the country on his archaeological findings. His audiences have ranged from archaeological to medical societies, from college groups to civic and church clubs.

Dr. B. L. Ullman, professor Emeritus of Classics at UNC, says Harland makes an unusual auditor, too.

"I gave a program at Duke University on some findings, one of which was a chap buried in a lead coffin," Dr. Ullman said.

"A couple of days later I received a letter from a 'J. P. Hootle.' It was written as though by a man without much sense. Hootle said his Uncle Jethro was in the lead business, and if I needed any more lead for my coffins, he would be glad to sell me some.

"Well, Hootle turned out to be J. P. Harland's pen name."

Cooper In Smoothest Orbit Of Earth Ever, Heading For 22 Trips

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — Calmly cat-napping between scientific experiments, L. Gordon Cooper Wednesday broke the distance record for American astronauts and went into his critical 7th orbit of the earth with everything working smoothly.

The 36-year-old Air Force major was apparently headed for a full 22 orbits on a flight billed by Project Mercury officials as the smoothest in the history of the U. S. space program.

Traveling at 17,546 miles an hour, in a well-nigh perfect pattern, Cooper's Faith 7 spacecraft entered its 7th orbit at 6 p.m., EDT while 900 miles southeast of Japan.

At 6:01 p.m. EDT Mercury control center reported that "all our indications so far tell us everything is operating A-O.K. aboard the Faith 7."

The longest previous American space flight, by astronaut Walter M. Schirra, went six orbits last October.

Seventh Orbit Critical

The 7th orbit was billed in advance as a "critical" one during which Project Mercury officials would decide whether to bring Cooper down or let him go for at least 17 of the planned 22 orbits.

But as the "go, no-go" decision approached, there was little doubt in Mercury control headquarters here that "Gordo" Cooper would go the whole 22-orbit route.

Cooper rose into the sky atop an Atlas rocket at 9:04 EDT. His spacecraft hit the "keyhole in the sky" with such incredible precision that Mercury control computers calculated the orbit would theoretically allow for 92 swings around the earth. There was no question of keeping Cooper aloft that long, however, since the spacecraft does not have life support systems for so long a flight.

Christopher Kraft, Mercury project flight director, said "I don't think we have ever seen a smoother flight. . . . We have no problems with any system."

Uses Less Fuel 7

Cooper was using less fuel than his flight plan called for, and using up so little of his oxygen that a doctor kiddingly told him that he could begin breathing "any time."

Dr. Charles Berry the astronaut's physician, said Cooper was "relaxed very, very well" and telemetry signals of his pulse, blood pressure and temperature showed "no physical abnormalities." Testing the effects of prolonged space flight on the astronaut's body is one of the main purposes of this flight.

Dr. Berry said Cooper, notorious for his ability to doze off at any time, was relaxed "about to the point of sleeping" during the countdown when he was perched atop a steaming Atlas rocket.

Once safely in orbit, Berry said, Cooper reported that "he had a little cat nap and it felt good." That was over California on his second orbit.

Cooper Not Fatigued

He said there were no signs of fatigue or restlessness, and that all of the astronaut's bodily mechanisms and senses were working well.

"He sounds exceptionally alert and ready to go on," Berry said.

Kraft said Cooper was "taking pictures as he sees fit" to make a photographic record of the flight.

Mercury officials summed it all up by saying that the confident spaceman from Shawnee, Okla., was "very much on top of his mission."

If Cooper goes the whole route as expected, he will splash down in the Pacific Ocean about 7:20 p.m., EDT Thursday after a trip of 573,000 miles and the rare experience of seeing 22 sunsets in less than two days.

Carolina's first book-burning in many years was held by approximately 15 graduate students last night in Y-Court.

Protesting lack of grad coverage in the Yackety-Yack, the students held a bonfire, attracting a large crowd until campus police arrived on the scene. Seven yearbooks went up in flames.

The burning was held in response to a sign on the seventh floor of the stacks saying, "Come to the Yack Burning, 7 p.m., May 14, Y-Court." The sign had been on display for a week.

According to Herb Guerry, a participant in the demonstration, a group of students gathered in Y-Court at 7 and waited for someone to lead the book-burning.

"By about 7:15 no one had come, so one boy said, 'If no one else is going to do something, I will.' He started ripping the pages from his yearbook and the rest of us joined in," said Guerry. "After about five minutes we had a pile of pages three feet high and six feet across. Then we lit it."

No charges were filed by campus police following the burning, though Chief A. J. Beaumont collected several ID cards.

No Fine Due

Today will be "Free Book Return Day" at Wilson Library.

Library officials said yesterday that there will be no charge on books returned today, regardless of when they were due. They urged students to return any books they are not using.

High School Science Session Slated Here

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Fifty-six outstanding science-oriented high school students, most from North Carolina, will get a taste of UNC college life here this summer at the "Special Science and Mathematics Program for Rising High School Seniors."

The students will take a math and science course, live in Ehringhaus Dorm, and even spend a Saturday evening at Woman's College.

"The program gives the student insight into what college life is like at Carolina," says Dr. Samuel B. Knight of Chemistry, director of the third annual program. "It helps them decide what their interests really are, and definitely helps bring some of the top science students to Chapel Hill."

Because of limited enrollment, almost 500 applicants had to be turned down, and there were many disappointments Dr. Knight explains that size must be limited both to keep the program effective and because the sponsoring National Science Foundation, gave them a flat grant of $22,580 for this summer. Average expense for the six weeks is $165, but those who cannot afford it are given financial aid.

"We try to send letters to those we turn down telling them that they are good and that we would like to have them," says Dr. Knight, "but we can't take over fifty."

There will be 42 students from North Carolina, 6 from Virginia, three from South Carolina, and one each from West Virginia, Tennessee, New Jersey and Ohio. Each will take a math course and either chemistry or biology. They are given regular final examinations and receive grades, but would not automatically receive advanced placement should they come to college here.

All will room in Ehringhaus under the guidance of two counselors who are lab instructors in zoology and chemistry. Two members of the Mathematics deportment and one each from chemistry and biology will teach the courses. In addition, there will be special lectures from other faculty members.

The students were selected on the basis of high school record, any special tests they may have had, recommendations, and unusual interests and hobbies. Applications were received from all over the nation. "We try to hold to this area," says Dr. Knight, "because schools in other areas have their own programs, but we want two or three from 'way out'."

Those interested in certain areas of science are given tours, such as through the physics and botany departments, the medical school, or the School of Health Affairs. Some are taken to the planetarium "But they don't see a show," says Dr. Knight "We want someone to explain how the machine works."

The students day will be a busy one. He will spend two and one-half hours a morning in class, plus afternoons in labs or organized discussion groups. Swimming and other recreational activities will be a daily part of the program.

Carolina Quarterly

Apparently all legislatures have at least one thing in common, fools. This is unfortunately true for the student legislature here at Caro- an excellent example of the short- a nexcellent example of the short-sighted stupidity of some of them at yesterday afternoon's special session.

We refer specifically to the ludicrous antics of Bill Straughn (SP) DM6 and Brick Oettinger (UP) TM3.

During the debate on the Carolina Quarterly budget Straughn made a motion to abolish the Quarterly's budget, and as he put it, "Let the editors print it on their own hook and maybe give them a better understanding of our free enterprise system." Brick Oettinger seconded the motion.

We would like to remind these legislators that one of the major responsibilities of student government is to education. Not athletics, not CWC Bridge Tournaments, not even self-glorification, but education. And this is what the Carolina Quarterly helps provide. A University of this size would look naked without a literary magazine of good quality.

The Quarterly needs little defense. It consistently prints works of literary excellence in a community where there is a great need for excellence in the field of arts and letters. The Quarterly provides an outlet for aspiring young writers at Carolina, and allows all students a passing acquaintance with good fiction for very little money.

There were also suggestions in the legislature that the Quarterly might be a better magazine if it aimed at the taste of the imaginary audience called the student body instead of the taste of the literary connoisseurs. This, of course, could only lead to the degeneration of the magazine. You don't get a quality product by pitching it to a low level of taste, and we can all go to Jeff's with Straughn and Oettinger to supplement our reading pleasures.

Student Government, and particularly the legislature, has enough problems without the friction caused by the squeaking of these self-appointed wheels, and the only things we can suggest is that they go grease themselves.

Elbow To Elbow

It may be a little early for suggestions for the University to present to the 1965 Legislature, but we think there is one matter that should be considered now.

That is, a solution to the crowded conditions that prevail on the second and third floors of South Building.

We entered the Admissions Office recently and nearly fell over three chairs, two secretaries and a host of visiting high school and transfer students.

Down the hall, in the Office of Arts and Sciences, it was almost as bad.

The secretaries seemed to be in a state of shock from having to put up with such cramped, crowded quarters. And the make-shift waiting room area outside the door was enough to make you scream with desperation.

Students lucky enough to get inside after only a brief wait found themselves in an office that isn't adequate for one advisor being shared by two of them.

So it goes throughout the top two floors of South Building.

We suggest the Chancellor in his capital improvements request ask for a new building to house the Admissions Office, the General College and Arts and Sciences Office, the Registration Office and the Advisors' offices.

Besides saving much needless wear and tear on everyone involved, such a building would simplify operations greatly. Presently a hired runner trots back and forth between Hanes Hall and South Building, toting records.

And, as most students know, during registration the number of trips made between South Building and Hanes Hall justify receiving credit for one semester of Physical Education.

If, however, the Records and Advisors' offices were in the same building, then much of the confusion and running around could be at least partially eliminated.

We suggest two alternatives. Either convert the Y-building into a new home for these offices, or replace it with a new building.

This fits into the present building scheme, as the new student union will house the Book Exchange and the Snack Bar, both of which are presently in the Y-building.

And if the alternative selected is to replace the Y-building with a new one, it could be built similar to Steele Hall across the mall, thus blending well architecturally with the other buildings fronting on the mall.

In addition, the new building could be named after someone who has contributed much of time and energy to the University and the State . . . like Graham Hall, for example.

But new building or not, something needs to be done about the horrid shape the top two floors of South Building are presently in.

Incidentally, just to be sure the appropriation to renovate or replace the Y-building passes, we could invite the General Assembly to hold a special session there. That is, if they have any time left open on their traveling schedule.

Diplomacy Or Agitation

To the Editor
The Raleigh News and Observer
Raleigh, N. C.
(copy to Daily Tar Heel)
Dear Sir:

I am a subscriber and regular reader of the News and Observer because I look upon it as reliable in reporting the news. With your editorials I often find myself in agreement but not always. May I express some thoughts contrary to yours in the editorial on May 2nd entitled "DIPLOMACY AND AGITATION" on the refusal of service by the S & W Cafeteria and the Sir Walter Hotel to the Ambassador to the United Nations from Liberia.

You write, "Before this incident becomes an international issue it should be recognized this was no mere discourtesy to a diplomat." If by this you mean that Miss Brooks' attendance at Shaw in some way diminishes her status as an ambassador and makes her for all practical purposes half-American or disqualifies her from courtesy accorded other delegates, I disagree.

Miss Brooks' attendance at Shaw and familiarity thereby with the pattern of segregation in Raleigh should in no way bar her from receiving the courtesies accorded visiting diplomats. She WAS a student at Shaw, she IS NOW a representative to the United Nations from Liberia. It was reasonable for her to assume that even though as a visiting student from Liberia she was segregated, but by reason of her status as an ambassador to the United Nations from Liberia she would now receive courteous treatment.

I agree with you this should be recognized as "no mere discourtesy to a diplomat," but in a different sense from the way you seem to indicate. It was a discourtesy to every Negro in Raleigh and elsewhere. Isn't it wishful thinking to conclude that giving special favors to Negro diplomats from foreign countries impresses anyone at all? The Negro diplomats may be too diplomatic to say so, but to give privileges to outsiders that we deny our own citizens is evidence of little save hypocrisy. Furthermore, it seems to me we can only alienate and increase the bitterness in our own Negro citizens by requiring a Negro be a foreign diplomat before he be treated with courtesy. This was indeed "no mere discourtesy to a diplomat." It was a discourtesy to every Negro in Raleigh and elsewhere.

Your use of terms "domestic American agitation" and "local fracas" in your editorial carry both emotional and practical meanings that seem unwarranted as regards this incident or in preceding efforts of students and others to desegregate facilities in Raleigh. It may well be that those involved in this incident were not sure of being served and hoped that whatever the result, it would in some way improve the Raleigh situation. But this is a far cry from "agitating" or being a "fracas." Had service been offered this incident may have hardly been noted. Whatever elements of "fracas" there may be in it was caused by the management.

I wonder if we are going to force Negro and white citizens to break down segregation by continued piece-meal and painful assaults. Is there not enough sensitivity among citizens and leaders in North Carolina to the injustice involved so that someone could take the lead in getting Negro and white leaders in business, church and public information services together to work out an across-the-board offering of public services to all citizens without discrimination because of race?

In areas where we have been able to desegregate facilities the fears of trouble have been proved unwarranted. It is my opinion that businessmen often over-estimate the damage that would be done them if they cease discriminating because of race, but it is understandable that they do so. Some such effort by leaders to get across-the-board integration would keep any single business from taking this kind of risk.

If we fail to do something like this then it is inevitable that continued boycott, picketing, and maybe legal action will have to do the job.

"I Was Doing A Little Slicing——"

Uganda, Green Land Of The Lakes

By EMILEE HINES

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series on Africa by Emilee Hines. In 1960-61 Miss Hines was a graduate student at UNC in European History and Political Science, and is presently one of the "Teachers for East Africa," a program sponsored jointly by the American and Kenya Governments.

Kenya is to have elections in May, and to enter the period of internal self-government prior to complete self-government. There are dire predictions of the future by Europeans, overly optimistic statements by African political leaders, and some very contradictory reports by observers who make a two-week trip to Africa and give their findings to the United Nations. Let us take a look at Kenya's two sister countries, Tanganyika and Uganda, who received their independence in 1961 and 1962, respectively. How well are they faring as free nations?

Tanganyika has a real feeling of unity, but the country is in a desperate situation financially. Uganda is more fortunate financially, for she has ample water and electrical power, the best developed transportation system of East Africa, and can grow several basic agricultural products. Uganda, however, does not have Tanganyika's unity.

Throughout her history, before and after the British came, Uganda has been controlled by the powerful Burganda tribe. The most populous and wealthiest of the tribes, they already had a functioning monarchy in 1960. They are favorably situated for control: on Lake Victoria, terminus of water, rail, road and air communication and transportation.

Educationally, too, the Buganda are in control of things. Makerere, the University of East Africa, is situated in Kampala, and receives substantial aid from outside sources such as the Rockefeller Foundation. The largest proportion of students at Makerere are Buganda, who usually have one of two aims: either to get further scholarships overseas and become "perpetual students", or to go into politics. Like their brothers all over Africa, they see politics as the road to fame and fortune. Few of them want to become doctors, engineers, agricultural experts, or teachers. They have little desire to help their own people; they are interested in power and influence, not work.

To a visitor, Uganda looks lush and prosperous, her people look well-fed, they walk proudly, laughing as they carry loads on their heads; or they ride on their bicycles, motorcycles or often in big new cars. One sees rolling acres of sugar cane all around the lake, hillside green with well-trimmed tea plants, and farther west are millions of banana plants. All over Uganda, every little shamba (garden) has bananas, coffee trees, papaya trees, cassava, pineapple. Truly, a land of plenty. But coffee, tea and fruit do not make a balanced diet. The few cows one sees are gaunt, and give very little milk. The only pigs and sheep are on the Makerere agricultural experiment farm. The chickens are old and skinny, and among certain groups there are taboos against the eating of chicken.

In spite of certain lush crops, the soil of Uganda lacks the minerals necessary for animals. Clover, maize and hay grow poorly or not at all. Most of the grass is the coarse, tough Elephant Grass, very low in nutrient value. In addition, there is tsetse fly in many regions of Uganda. For all its meat and dairy products, Uganda is dependent on its neighbor, Kenya.

What can Uganda offer in exchange for meat and dairy products? It has cotton, and a textile-producing plant at Jinja. It has Kilembe Mines, which extract copper and cobalt from Ruwenzori Mountains and send it across the length of Uganda to be smelted at Jinja. It has coffee, tea, sugar and rubber. Most important of all, it has Owen Falls Dam which has harnessed the power of the Nile and furnishes electricity not only for Uganda but for most of Kenya. Overall, Uganda is the most prosperous of the East African countries.

Uganda has another advantage not economic: it has never had a large number of European settlers as Kenya has, because of Uganda's unfavorable climate. Therefore, it has none of the bitterness of race against race that exisits in Kenya. In Kampala there is a definite relaxed feeling among the races. Even so, several Europeans have been asked to leave the country for alleged criticism of the government.

With all its advantages, however, it is not at peace. The Buganda are determined to make their Kabaka (king) the leading figure in all of Uganda. Other tribes, which have their own hereditary chiefs, are equally determined that the Buganda shall not succeed. They are deeply suspicious of the Buganda. There is frequent disturbance in Toro, for example, whose people the Bunyoro are racially different from the Buganda. The Bunyoro, who live in and around the Ruwenzori Mountains, on the Congo border, are akin to the eastern Congo tribes. The Bunyoro also has a long history of independent monarchy.

One of Uganda's problems is its dependence on its neighbors, should Kenya become unfriendly. Uganda is a land-locked country. To the 19th Century explorers it was the "jewel of Africa": it had ivory, it controlled the source of the Nile, it had an advanced civilization. To open up Uganda, a railroad was built across Kenya, whose worth was not even recognized at that time. It is this railroad that makes Uganda dependent on Kenya, for Uganda's imports must come in through Kenya, and its exports must pass out through Kenya's Kilindini harbor at Mombasa. Uganda recently planned an economic boycott of Kenya products in an attempt to force the British Government to grant immediate independence to Kenya. It was quickly realized, however, that it was Uganda herself who would suffer most from such a boycott.

Understandably, Uganda is very much in favor of an East African Federation, with transportation, communication, currency and postal facilities in charge of a single organization for all of East Africa.

YANKEES

Two vacationers from New York were fishing in a small boat off the coast of South Carolina when a fast-moving line-squall caught them off guard. Seeking shelter from the wind and rain, they were huddled in the botton of the boat when a Coast Guard cutter drew alongside and took them aboard.

They were shaken and highly embarrassed at having to be plucked from the water like a pair of half-drowned rabbits, but the tension was broken as they heard the radio operator reporting to the shore station: ". . . nobody hurt, sir. Just a couple of damp Yankees."

Art Of The Far East

By ALICE WELSH

The largest collection of Oriental works of art ever to be exhibited in North Carolina is currently on display in the Ackland Art Center of the University.

This exhibition of Asian arts and artifacts is on loan from the Asian Cultural Exchange Foundation of Washington, D. C., a non-profit organization established to promote interest in the peoples of Asia through the arts and crafts. The purpose of the Foundation is to establish Asian art Collections in secondary schools, colleges and libraries by means of subscriptions from its members.

All the works of art in this exhibit were selected by Professor J. C. Sloane, Director of the Ackland Art Center and Simon Kriger, president of the Foundation. This collection aims to introduce North Carolina to the peculiar and unusual beauty of oriental art. The artist of the Far East does not look at nature objectively as Western artists do, but rather attempts to unite "objects and spirit" through intuitive enlightenment from within.

A wide variety of art media and styles from China, India, Korea, Thailand, Tibet, Viet-Nam and Japan are represented. The media include Bronze, human bone, lacquer, ceramic, ivory and jade dating back to prehistoric eras.

China has the oldest continuous culture of any people in the world. Archeological excavations reveal an artistic and technical development which probably extends to the pre-metal age. In this exhibit is a mammoth tusk carving depicting mountain scenery which is an amazing adaptation of natural material partially deteriorated by thousands of years underground.

The art of bronze casting as developed in northern China during the second millenium B. C. has never been surpassed. A bronze "ku," or ceremonial vase, from the Shang Dynasty, 1766-1122 B.C., decorated in geometric designs that are typical of the period is on display. There are also bronze horse trappings, mirrors, dagger-axes, and various domestic items.

There is evidence that oriental paintings go back as far as the Bronze Age and imperial tombs decorated with wall paintings have been discovered. The earliest actual painting on silk known is one from a tomb of the Chou Dynasty, 1122-256 B.C. The earliest form of movable painting seems to have been the hand scroll which is unrolled from right to left for contemplation. Japanese and Chinese scrolls have always emphasized an intimate relationship between painting and calligraphy — even the tools and materials were alike. In China "painting has always demanded the highest technical perfection because not only are corrections and alterations impossible, but the quality of the work will depend on the fluidity, sureness, and vigour of the individual brush-strokes." It is not plagiarism when a Chinese executes a painting exactly like an old master's — even to signing the master's name.

Among the several scroll painting in the exhibit is one 18th century scroll depicting "The Feast of Victory at the Purple Light Hall" painted by the Jesuit missionary Giuseppe Castiglione under the pseudonym of Lang Shih-ning that is 24 feet in length. "Landscape with Country House," a Chinese scroll painted on silk during the Ming Dynasty, 1358-1644 was loaned to the museum by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ringwalt of Chapel Hill.

According to Chinese tradition an age of jade preceded the metal ages. Large quantities of worked jade showing a highly developed technique and extending back into the Shang Dynasty have been uncovered recently. A set of archaic

New Wine Combines Religion And Arts

"New Wine," Volume 1, Number 2, Westminster Fellowship.

By LARRY WALZ

"Religious Dimensions in the Arts" is the subject of the second issue of "New Wine: a Christian Journal of Opinion." In the preface to the magazine, Editor John L. Currie explains this theme. Both religion and art, he says, are concerned with the ultimate problems of man, and therefore it is possible to consider art from a religious (in the broadest sense of the word) point of view.

This point of view will enable us to see what the artist is really saying about man's spiritual situation. The writers in this issue of "New Wine" try to see, and on the whole they are quite successful.

The first half of the magazine is given to the arts in general. Among other things, there are two essays on the modern theatre (one by Eugene Ionesco), a discussion of cummunication through painting, and a defense of Henry Miller. There is some good, careful thinking here.

The second part of "New Wine" is devoted to studies of specific works of the "popular arts," and a number of student writers are included. Dr. John Clayton of the RTVMP Department defends the television Westerns on semi- philosophical grounds. Two essays on the TV lawyers are interesting, but they do not fit in with the theme of the magazine.

There is a very nice eight-page study of the undercurrent of meaning in the "Peanuts" comic strip, and a four-page analysis of the false faith of "Mr. Magoo". The editor of "New Wine" is to be commended for the inclusion of these unusual essays.

An excellent feature of this issue of "New Wine" is a series of four essays by UNC students on recent foreign films. There are two different views of Fellini's "La Dolce Vita" by Richard King and Neil Clark, a study of Bergman's later films by Tom Crais, and a review of Antonioni's "La Notte" by John Dunne.

Richard King's view of Fellini's masterpiece is rather superficial, but Neil Clark looks beneath the surface and is quite perceptive. His review, incidentally, contains some fine writing.

Tom Crais voices a negative opinion, with which I disagree, of Bergman's more serious films. He charges Bergman with fuzzy thinking which passes for profundity. I wish the author had elaborated on some of his ideas, for example, that Bergman's work is too "static". John Dunne writes acceptably about "La Notte", a film which has an unusual amount to say about modern man's spiritual condition.

There is one book review, a meager four-paragraph study of "Lord of the Flies" which has nothing new to say. I wish that this issue of "New Wine" had not placed so much emphasis on the public arts. A few of the weaker essays could have made way for studies (perhaps from other magazines) of novels and plays, which also speak to our age. Variety might be lost, but depth would be gained.

Nevertheless, this issue of "New Wine" is a success. There is much to think about and discuss here. "New Wine", by only its second issue, has reached a fine intellectual level.

Modern Affluence Vs. Youth Problems

CHAPEL HILL — Affluence in modern societies around the world is giving youth better privileges but it is also creating problems which youth has to solve rapidly to keep up with all the advancements.

Dr. Miso D. Jezernik of the Institute of Sociology at the University of Ljublijana, Yugoslavia, will speak on the problems of youth at the University of North Carolina, Sunday, May 18, at 8 p.m. in Murphey Hall Auditorium. His address is open to the public.

Dr. Jezernik looks at youth in the United States, the USSR, Great Britain, Yugoslavia, and comes up with the result that today's youth is taxed with common complex problems which have been produced by affluent societies.

Former generations did not have the problems of today's affluent societies where the problems youth must face are not confined to a minority but are shared by the majority.

For example, in former generations the student with a car belonged to a minority group. Today, the student with a car is commonplace. But the possession of a car presents the youth with responsibilities of ownership. The youth must also solve any problems arising from possession of a car; he must tend for the car and see to its maintenance; he must quickly solve these problems relating to his car because there are many other objects continually vying for his attention.

Dr. Jezernik has studied the problems of youth since he fought as a partisan against the Nazis after he had completed his secondarp education. He is a specialist for the Yugoslav government on problems of productivity and psychological problems which arise through industrialization. He has been active in political and scientific circles in Yugoslavia.

Currently, Dr. Jezernik is spending a year in the United States doing research under the auspices of the Fort Foundation. He has been at the University of California, the University of Chicago, the University of Michigan, and will be at Harvard University this summer before returning to Yugoslavia. He has lectured throughout the United States on his studies about the youth of the world.

'Equal Protection Under the Laws'

N. C. Takes A Paradoxical Position

"Equal Protection of Laws in North Carolina," Report of the North Carolina Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, 1959-1962.

By JON VAN TIL

This report indicates the paradoxical position of this state regarding legal protection of the civil rights of her citizens. That these reports were the only state reports deemed to merit separate publication, because of their "extraordinary range and quality," indicates the great talent and dedication of the many North Carolinians who strive each day to make this state live up to the promise of democracy. That they must paint so generally bleak a picture is a commentary on the magnitude of the problems this states must strive to surmount.

The values motivating the Committee are seen as shared by most citizens: "civil rights carry civil responsibilities," and, "the state cannot realize its true potential unless the talents of all of its citizens are utilized." This report is primarily social analysis, but action programs are frequently suggested.

Students of race relations will note that the theoretical structure the Committee finds most useful is built from the works of C. Vann Woodward and Gunnar Myrdal.

North Carolina followed the pattern of development Woodward found to characterize the South. Jim Crow laws and rigid segregation nor arriving until the late 1880's. Myrdal's conception of a cyclical process by which the factors that result from racial inequality then proceed to intensify further inequality is found to characterize the present situation in the state.

The educational program, level of political participation and protection, housing, employment, and medical care of Negroes are found by the Committee to be of lower quality than the comparable standing of whites.

North Carolina is a "public school" state, with a lower percentage of private school students than any other state. And yet only 17% of the white high schools and 20% of the Negro high schools are accredited. Again, the Negro schools rank higher on this score than the white schools when compared with the relative position of the races in the other Southern states.

The Committee reports that "Even where there are no restrictive covenants, whether enforceable in the courts or not, there are social pressures of custom and conflicting economic fears which continue to restrict nonwhites, on account of their race and regardless of their talents or decorum, in their choice of housing."

The Committee notes that one of their most interesting discoveries "has been the extent to which public officials in one area of inquiry would explain differences in treatment of whites and nonwhites in that area because of conditions over which the particular officials had no control."

The Committee finds a gradual increase in openmindedness among state officials toward merit employment, although such changes are slow indeed. Segregated medical facilities exist and perpetuate racial inequality. Only thirty percent of the eligible Negroes are registered to vote, compared to ninety percent of the eligible whites.

Hence a combination of formal discrimination, custom, and Negro failure to take advantage of openings, particularly in voting and state employment, is found to perpetuate unequal protection of the laws in North Carolina.

This report should be of great interest to every citizen of North Carolina who will be able to read it, especially to those who hope to effect the needed reforms in this area. Social scientists will find this volume a sophisticated and important piece of research.

Undergraduate and graduate students of political science, sociology, and economics, especially, will find fascinating paper and thesis topics suggested in an Afterword outlining some of the work yet to be done, and may want to present relevant papers to the Committee.

Wives Win P. H. T. Degrees While Husbands Get PHD's

By DONA FAGG

Who is it that scrapes the pot, stretches the meals, sooths the brows, types the theses, washes the Volks, greets the folks, drags the clothes to the laundromat and the kids to school, unstops sinks and noses and complains little about the midnight oil their student husbands burn? The answer is student wives.

Five Chem Fems have recently been awarded P.H.T. degrees (Putting Husband Through). These student wives who have put their husbands through their doctoral study at the University are Mrs. Carole Hentz, Mrs. Susan Shepard, Mrs. Linda Dudley, Mrs. Carol Kepler and Mrs. Mary Grace Counts.

Mrs. Susan Shepard, one of the recipients, admitted that she had not actually put her husband through but that she had "offered moral encouragement although that doesn't help like money."

During her residence in Chapel Hill she stated that she had been occupied with all the "thousand of little wifely things." She is the mother of two children; Roger 7, and Cynthia, 5. In her spare time she enjoys golf with her husband Kenneth.

"I guess the hardest thing has been not complaining about my husband working 7 days a week and managing the household — handling everything from doing all the shopping to washing the car and typing my husband's thesis," was Mrs. Dudley's comment on her recently won degree.

Mrs. Dudley is a secretary at the University's Radiation Safety Center. Her husband, receiving his PhD. in organic chemistry, plans post-doctral work on a National Science Foundation grant at the University of Basel, Switzerland.

Another of the student wives is also a student. Mrs. Kepler is working on her PhD in zoology while her husband received his doctorate in chemistry.

Teaching in Durham has been Mrs. Counts' method of adding more beans to the pot while her husband was concerned with what was in the becker as well as what was on the stove.

Janet Rice, president of the Chem Fems, although not receiving her degree is a forthcoming candidate. She is a secretary in the Office of Development and also a mother of a 17-month-old son, William Yates Rice III.

Two Junior Coeds Travel To Luxembourg for Summer

By SUE SMITH

"Earn, learn and travel in Europe," advertises the ASIS prospectus.

Marie Avery and Stephanie Highsmith, UNC juniors, will be in Luxembourg this summer doing just that.

The ASIS (American Student Information Service) is a non-profit employment agency in Luxembourg which job hunts for stateside students with summer wanderlust.

Marie and Stephanie will leave June 19 from New York via Air France for Paris. For three days they will visit Europe's First City, its gardens, museums, sidewalk cafes, cathedrals and department stores.

Then to Luxembourg and the Hotel Dauphin where both girls will work until mid-August.

Besides a job in one of ten European countries, the ASIS provides a round trip jet flight valid for one year for the student who wants to stay longer than a summer on the continent, a student pass allowing special discounts throughout Europe, and 80-day health and accident coverage.

The two coeds will work between 48-55 hours a week and receive free room and board plus $40-$55 a month. The rest of the time will be their own to visit the footpaths and castles or the industrial complexes of Luxembourg or to visit nearby Germany, France, Scandinavia or England.

Marie plans to visit a girl from Denmark who spent a year with her as an exchange student in her hometown, Statesville, N. C.

The objectives of the ASIS are emphasized with its initials — Acquire a major foreign language; See and 'Live' Europe with Europeans; Increase cultural knowledge; and Save countless dollars.

A Ladies' Man Writes: Wear What We Want

Women's fashions are a cornucopia of confusion for the likes of us. Do they exist merely to please us, or merely to punish us for the sins of our childhood?

The essence of the male's philosophy concerning fashions is that they should exhibit the wearer's willingness to please the opposite sex. A little hint, a flirtation, nothing more.

This should be the foremost criterion in choosing one's wardrobe.

Some might argue that they must wear what fashion leaders dictate. This is questionable. If women did not wear their fashions, the fashion leaders would soon be out of work.

There have been times when the reaction of men to women's fashions clearly showed that a Mandate of Heaven commanded that a fashion leader be dethroned.

Yesterday's Answer

Coeds Were Taboo As Rah-rah Girls

By VIRGINIA CARNES

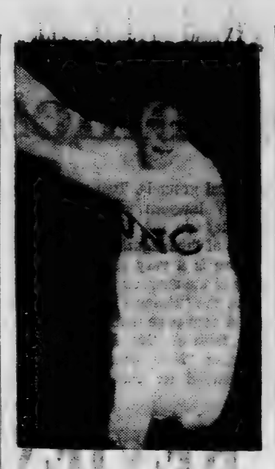
"I guess the really great cheerleaders of UNC are sort of born. When you elect one you aren't sure he will be a great one. He has to have the natural knack to lead, the enthusiasm to inspire."

Thus Lenard Victor (Vic) Huggins, owner of Chapel Hill's Huggin's Hardware and UNC's head cheerleader in 1924-1925 described the "spirit makers" of Carolina.

"We always had some form of cheerleading at Carolina," reflected Mr. Huggins. UNC had always been noted for its sportsmanship and fair play, but before 1914 many students showed their spirit by "booing" the members of other teams.

At this time cheerleading had not been organized, and what cheers existed consisted of individual shouts and words of encouragement to the players.

In 1914 Frank Graham, then studying law at UNC, decided to organize cheerleading. He told the TAR HEEL in 1932, "It was by accident that I became a cheerleader . . . I was trying out for the basketball team, but I didn't make the regular squad. Just being a substitute, I got in the habit of leading the cheering, when I wasn't needed. The next thing I knew, I was a cheerleader."



In the fall of 1918, Thomas Wolfe wrote an editorial in his TAR HEEL: "Nine thousand people saw Carolina win. They saw the student body which, though delirious with the joy of winning, exemplified by its rooting, never forgot the courtesy that was due the defeated team."

"I'll never forget the really great cheerleaders", said Mr. Huggins. "There are a lot of good ones, but these men were the greats of the past. There was Earle "Scrubby" Reeves, head leader in 1917. He injected his exuberant personality into his cheering. Then there was Kaye Kyser, the originator of the famous Cheerios in 1927. In the '40s Norm Spear perfected the card stunts at Carolina."

In 1925 Vic Huggins, after designating a special section in the stands for cheering, decided to incorporate girls into the section. "There were only about 100 girls at the time and they lived in rooming houses. One night we asked Harry Woodburn Chase, a dignified, scholarly gentleman and then President of the University, about incorporating girls into the cheering section. He agreed and we all went to a pep rally at the girls' rooming house to teach them the yells and songs.

"I got a 'hot letter' from an Asheville alumnus criticising me for allowing girls to cheer and ruin the UNC non-coeducational tradition."

Mr. Huggins beamed with pride, "I introduced Rameses I. Back in 1924 we had no mascot. State had a wolf and Georgia had a bulldog. Jack Merritt, who is now sergeant of the police force, was on the football team then, and he was known as the 'battering ram'. We decided our mascot had to be a ram.

"We held pep rallies in Memorial Hall," he recalled, "and I'll tell you they were "Rambunktious". There were only about 2500 students, and everybody came."

He laughed as he remembered the Basketball season of 1925. "Some spirit we had that year. The team, called then the 'White Phantoms', had won the Southern Conference Basketball Championship in Atlanta. In 1925 this was comparable to winning a national championship today. The school was in a frenzy. We hadn't lost a game.

"The night the news came in by telegram, a huge spontaneous pep rally was formed at around 1 a.m. in front of Dr. Chase's home. He came out and made a speech praising us for the great enthusiasm of the student body and the victory in Atlanta.

"Somebody suggested we march on Durham. I got on somebody's shoulders and asked how many would stick it out for 12 miles. Every hand went up; and, in slippers, shorts, and pajamas, we marched — four abreast in a line 200-300 yards long to Durham. We serenaded the homes of two of our players — Spratt Cobb and Cart Carmichael — at 4 a.m., had a pep rally in front of the Court House; raided every cafe in town, and hitch-hiked home in time for classes. I tell you we had spirit."

Vic Huggins chuckled, "Lonnie Sides, the band director at the time, and I had another scheme. We talked to Charles Woolen, athletic manager, and decided to hire a bus to take the band and cheerleaders to the Virginia game in 1924.

The last events of the year fall this week before exams.

The Seniors sat at the head tables for these farewell fetes:

A Convention tea Monday at the Kappas'; local alumnae were invited.

A Senior Farewell picnic Tuesday at the home of Pi Phi alumna Mrs. Joseph Phillips. The outstanding Senior award went to Jean Battle, the chapter service award to Betty McDonald, and silver rosebud vases to each upcoming graduate with the Greek letters Pi Beta Phi engraved on them.

A Founders' Day tea yesterday at the ADPi house honoring patronesses and alumnae.

Monday of next week is the Senior picnic in the Forest Theatre sponsored by East and West Cobb.

Intramurals Finals Today

By STUART BALL

All-Campus winners in tennis and softball will be decided today at 4 p.m. and 5 p.m. in play on the Avery Tennis Courts and Intramural field 6.

In Tuesday's softball action Dental School-3 captured the Grad Division title by drubbing the Dental Frosh 22-7. A nine run first inning turned the trick for the winners, but they weren't content to stop there. They proceeded to score in every one of the remaining innings.

The new Fraternity white champs are the Dekes but they had to fight a determined comeback by Kappa Psi to secure the crown.

Down 11-4 in the bottom of the fifth, Kappa Psi scored four runs to close the gap. In the last inning of the seven inning affair a three run outburst by the PSIs knotted the score at 11 apiece.

The Dekes put their bats to work in the top of the eighth and came back to score three runs for the final margin of 14-11.

Kappa Psi faired somewhat better in horseshoes competition than they did in softball as they defeated Beta 3-0 and moved to the Fraternity Blue finals, played last night.

Jim Baity defeated Punk Reid 22-9 and 21-18 in the singles competition. Tom Lynch and Luck Welch, and John Kennedy and Bill Fuller swept both doubles contests for the winners by topping Gene Gudger and Paul Jensen, and Bob Rascoe and Tony Miller.

AK Psi, Chi Phi, Dental School 3-A, and the Town Rats met yesterday in a four team contest to decide the All-Campus Golf Champion. It was decided that low score among the four ttams would decide the winner thereby avoiding the necessity of a semi-final and final round.

The Dekes swept the tennis championships in both the Blue and White divisions. The Blue netters nipped Chi Psi, 2-1, as the Deke doubles duo of Ben Willis and John Edgerton outlasted Fred Seely and Bill Yelverton, 6-2, 0-6, 7-5.

oldest courses in art, religion and archaeology.

He came to the University in 1922 as an assistant professor of classics. One year later he joined the faculty at the University of Cincinnati, taught for three years and returned to UNC—this time to stay.

His career at Cincinnati was successful, especially because of an attractive young lady he met. Her name was Miss Agnes Westerlund, who became Mrs. Harland.

"I first met Harland in 1927," Robert B. House said. "He was well trained in his work at Princeton and later studied in Germany, Greece and the Holy Land. When we met he had just returned from Greece where he directed excavation of a site at Nemea."

While at Princeton, Harland was a three-letter man in track, excelling in the 100 and 200 yard dash.

"He's quite proud of his track record," Dr. Ullman said, "and very active in University athletics. Years ago, before UNC had a large athletic department, Dr. Harland helped officiate the track meets."

House remembered the faculty baseball games.

"Chick was always the star, and when the game was over, he always went straight to bed with arthritis," House recalled.

After he is retired Dr. Harland will do more writing—his work has appeared in publications of all sorts, from religious to political science. He will also teach in the night school of the University Extension Division.

Dr. Harland calls his greatest accomplishment ". . . the friendships made, so far as satisfaction is concerned. . . ."

Mrs. Harland died in 1959. Her invalid mother now lives with Dr. Harland.

"J. P. Harland is one of these people who are becoming scarcer and scarcer," Dr. Ullman said.

"He has contributed a great deal to the University, and he's going to be missed."

-Art Of Far East-

jade fish pendants of very fine execution are in the show as well as a jade chocolate pot carved from "waxlike nephrite"—the most common variety of jade. Also on display is a brown and green disc with a hole in the middle called a "pi"; this was the symbol of heaven worshipped by the nobility in the Chou Dynasty, 1122-256 B.C.

The Chinese believe jade embodies "charity, modesty, courage, justice and wisdom" and it was widely used as an art medium. It was carved into religious pieces full of symbolism and funerary significance. Often jade was carved into ornamental jars with intricately carved dragons and lions as the beautiful ones loaned for the exhibition by Mrs. Lyman Cotten of Chapel Hill.

Oriental sculpture is almost as old as civilization itself; examples dating to the third and fourth centuries B.C.have been excavated. As Buddhism spread into China from India and became an integral part of the culture, the style of the Buddhist images became more an integral part of the culture, the style of the Buddhist images became more and more Chinese and less Indian. These statues were never meant to "function biologically" but as icons for devotion and as symbols of deities "above the ambitions and dust of the world." Among the sculpture in the exhibit is a bronze Thai Buddha in a seated position — calmness and spiritual tranquility with almond-shaped eyes, archaic smile and a head ornamented with tiny snail-curls only remotely suggesting a living being.

The gallery is open Tuesday through Friday from 2 to 5 p.m. and 8-10 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m. Closed Monday.

A Stormy Past, A Bright Future

Larry Brown: A Career In Review

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

THE FINAL TWO weeks in May are, more often than not, reserved for thinking. Thinking about math, physics, English, the foreign languages and other nice things. Larry Brown thinks about these things this week. But he also thinks about other things, a little more interesting, a lot more important. Larry Brown thinks about his future, for the futue is rapidly moving up on him, and he is not yet sure of how to meet it.

To understand the story of Larry Brown, you must understand that he is a basketball player. He is also a first vice-president, a nice guy and a fashion plate. But above everything else, he is a basketball player. This is no Oscar Robertson, but neither is it a Don Hennon. In ability, as in size, Brown is somewhere between the two, and in ability, at least, he is far, far closer to the former than to the latter.

The thin line that separates the excellent from the great is, in this case, measured in inches. About five of them.

This is a guy who could start on any college team in the country. This is not opinion, it is fact. You take Egan of Loyola. I'll take Brown. You take Shingleton of Cincinniti. I'll take Brown.

If the guy was six-four, you'd never have heard of Jerry Harkness, of Rod Thorn, of Barry Kramer. You'd have heard of Larry Brown. And you'd have heard of him not only in Chapel Hill, N. C. but in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Uncompahgre Peak. Colo.—if he was six-four.

But Larry Brown is not six-four. Neither is he six-two. In fact, he isn't even six foot. He is five feet, ten inches tall in a land where only coaches, referees and water buckets are five feet, ten inches tall.

But Brown wasn't always five feet, ten inches tall. He was once five feet, two inches tall. And that was in the ninth grade when he tried out for the Long Beach High School basketball team in New York.

Up to that time, he hadn't concentrated too much on basketball. Born in Brooklyn 22 years ago but having lived most of his life in Long Beach, Larry Brown looks back on those days with pride if not nostalgia.

Basketball Was Not First Love

"I went to camp every summer, but always played as many sports as I could when I was young," Larry says today. "I first started concentrating on basketball after I hurt both knees playing midget football. I was all-american midget football—you had to weigh at least 80 pounds."

Brown played three years with the Long Beach varsity, never winning any championships but gaining may individual awards and atrracting upwards of 50 college offers.

He held off the bird dogs and went to Hargrave Prep in Chatham, Va. after graduation. There, he had to decide about the coming year.

"Ironically, the first man to ever contact me about college was a guy from Duke," says Brown. "I talked with him at the end of my sophomore year in high school. But I'd always wanted to go to Kentucky, and didn't know what to do. I first heard about Carolina from my high school coach, Bobby Gersten (Gersten attended UNC in the early forties and was president of the Monogram Club here). But I still was undecided.

"I finally narrowed it down to five schools—Penn, Cornell, Cincinnati, Kentucky and Carolina. I guess you'd have to say I came here because of Frank McGuire and Dean Smith. They're the greatest."

A great many things have come to pass between then and now. Larry Brown has been involved in a lot of them. There have been probations, fights, suspensions, scandals, eliminations and cut schedules. Some have been warranted. Most have been ridiculous.

But Larry Brown is not one to let the glitter of the game he loves wear off because of them. He has remained optimistic. He has remained Larry Brown.

In the final game of the final Dixie Classic, Brown went in as a sophomore substitute against Duke and scored 15 points to help UNC take the title, 76-71. It was Brown's biggest thrill up until this year.

Disappointment, Then Kentucky Thrill

Two weeks later, the thrill was gone. In the next shattering couple of months, Carolina was put on NCAA probation for one year; Brown was suspended for the rest of the season for participating in a fight with Art Heyman; Doug Moe was thrown out of school for lying to the chancellor; the betting scandal broke; the Classic was abolished; UNC's schedule was cut to 16 games; recruiting was limited to two out-of-state boys a year.

Looking back, it seems a bit incredible all this happened in so short a space of time. But it did. And it hurt.

"It was a real big disappointment for me to have to end the first season prematurely like that," says Brown. "That was the only fight I've ever had on a basketball court. I still can't understand the grounds for the action that was taken."

The team in Brown's junior year, by UNC standards, was poor. "What can you do in a short schedule (16 games) like that?" Brown asks. "We lost some guys before the season even began that would have really helped us." This also had to be another disappointment to this strikingly handsome young man.

But the guy never got down on anybody. This past season, though the name Billy Cunningham rang the bell in all telling of UNC tales, Larry Brown had his finest hour.

"A lot of people were so happy with us this year and said we did so well and everything," says Brown. "But they don't realize just how good we were. We were capable of beating anybody on the schedule. We only lost to three teams all year. How many people realize that?

"If we just had the one big man to go along with Cunningham, we could have beaten anybody around—anybody. The kid had to do so much by himself. He's amazing."

The kid Brown is a little amazing himself. I doubt if he ever played worse than on the afternoon of December 15, 1962 at Bloomington, Ind. I doubt if he ever played better than two days and two nights later—December 17 at Lexington, Ky.

"I will never forget that game as long as I live," says Brown. "That has got to be my greatest thrill in sports."

The reason it is his greatest thrill is not because Brown scored 19 points and almost personally killed the clock in the final three minutes enabling UNC to beat Kentucky, 8-66. It is because the thing was, as Larry puts it, "the greatest team victory I've ever seen."

"No game I've played in matched our Kentucky win," says Brown. "With that victory, we proved to everybody we were good. What is more important, we proved it to ourselves."

Larry Brown proved himself to himself a long, long time ago. But now the future is staring him in the eye. And now, strangely, he is not so sure.

A Challenge And A Hard Decision

He was contacted at the end of the season by four professional teams—the Philadelphia Warriors, the Detroit Pistons, the New York Knickerbockers and the NBA's Chicago (switching to Baltimore next year) franchise. The latter team drafted him two and a half weeks ago.

This is the best—the highest you can go in this business of throwing a big rubber ball through a hoop. And Larry Brown has always wanted the best.

But there it is again. The fact that he is five feet, ten inches tall. It can not be overlooked. So Brown does not try to overlook it.

"If I was six feet even, I'd definitely go for it. But I just don't know. Vinnie Ernst (of Providence) and I were the only ones drafted under six feet. It will be a gamble if I try now."

Brown does not want to gamble just yet. He wants security. And security goes here by the name of Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio.

"If I do decide to try the pros and then get cut," says Larry, "I would be ineligible to play Industrial League ball. The Goodyear thing is a tremendous corporation. I have talked with them and I like the setup.

"As I said, I want security but I also want to keep playing. Textile sales appeals to me. At Goodyear, they have a training program I could take while I'm working and playing ball. It is 99-1 I will do that instead of trying out in Baltimore."

Another aspect of Goodyear and the National Industrial Basketball League (NIBL) that Brown likes is the prospect of the Olympics. At the end of the NIBL season, the teams play at Denver, Colo. in the AAU tourney. The winner there automatically places six men on next year's Olympic team. Players from losing teams also have a chance to be chosen to go to Tokyo. This is something worth working for.

So you come right down to it. The Goodyear job is a lucrative, secure position with great opportunities ahead. But professional ball is a challenge—a very great challenge, and you just know the guy wants to try it so badly it gnaws at him.

Brown also has always had in the back of his mind the idea of some day coaching. In pro ball, he could get valuable experience and valuable contacts. So the conflict continues.

And it will continue through the summer when Larry goes back to Camp Keeyumah in Pennsylvania to teach kids baseball, football and of course basketball.

There, as always, he will get help on the problem in the person of Miss Gayle Venters, a former Miss Modern Venus, a future Mrs. Larry Brown. The two plan to get married, probably sometime next winter.

Pro or AAU, Baltimore or Goodyear, Larry Brown will probably be successful. You wonder, though, what would have been if there was no basketball. Larry tells you.

"I came here because of Mr. McGuire and basketball," he says. "But you take away basketball, and I would still love Carolina."

The guy is sincere. This University has meant a lot to him. And Brown, more than anybody will ever realize, has meant a lot to this University. No matter what went before, he has come out a great credit, a fine good-will man, a wonderful person. UNC will sorely miss Larry Brown.

Teague, Phi Delt Win Semis; Play Today For Mural Title

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK and STUART BALL

Teague's Animals and Phi Delta Theta won as expected here yesterday and will meet this afternoon at 5 for the All-Campus softball championship.

Teague, all-campus dorm champions, pounded out 14 hits in a 21-13 rout of grad champion Dental School 3 yesterday to earn the berth in the final today.

The Animals, who got three hits from Junior Edge and two apiece from Tommy Ward, Pete Kirvan, Vernon Pittman and Rich Zarro, trailed 2-1 after the first inning, but came up with 10 runs in the second to put it away early.

Edge and Zarro hit two-run singles in the big frame.

The Dentists whittled away at the lead for the next four innings and were down by three at 15-12 when the Animals again struck in the sixth.

Teague scored six times on a single hit and six walks by Dental pitcher Truitt Lineberger.

The Dentists collected eight hits off Charlie Price and Zarro with Deane Hundley and Wally Honeycutt getting two each. Edge had five RBIs for the Animals while Zarro batted in four runs.

In the skirmish for the Fraternity crown, Phi Delt's Blue champions received only token opposition from DKE's White team in rolling up a resounding 16-3 victory.

The contest pitted the Blue champs against the White winners to decide one of the finalists in the All-Campus contest to be played this afternoon.

Phi Delt jumped off to a 10-run lead in the first three innings and was never really challenged.

Charlie Battle turned in another fine pitching performance for Phi Delt allowing DKE but four hits.

Max Chapman, DKE's pitcher, collected two of the four hits and scored one of the three runs but couldn't silence the potent Phi Delt bats.

FROSH END SEASON

UNC's freshman baseball team closed out its season Tuesday afternoon, splitting a twin bill with N. C. State's frosh.

The Tar Babies, who had a 10-10 record this spring, took the opener 3-2 behind Bill Sessoms' fourhit pitching, but dropped the second game, 7-5.

Linescores:

(First game)
N. C. State .... 000 002 0—2 4 1
UNC ..... 002 000 1—3 8 1
Hicks and Kelly; Sessoms and Davis.

(Second game)

Merit Scholars Here Increasing

By GINGER WHITE

Next year UNC will have a substantial increase in the enrollment of National Merit Scholarship winners. 16 new Merit Scholars have been accepted for admission in the fall. This is compared to the total of 13 Merit winners now enrolled in the University.

Director of Admissions Charles Bernard believes that much of the credit for this increase goes to the work of a committee headed by Robin Brit which sponsored a special National Merit Scholarship weekend last February. The committee invited finalists and semi-finalists to the campus for a round of conferences, sitting in on classes, parties and informal discussions with professors.

The committee was set up as the result of a bill introduced in the Student Legislature by Bob Spearman. This is the first year that the special weekend has been offered to Merit students.

"We wanted to show them just what we had to offer," said Spearman. "From the number who have decided to come, it seems as if the program was successful."

All of the new winners are from North Carolina. All are boys except for one girl who will be going into Pharmacy.

The National Merit Scholarship Program was stablished in 1955. Funds are provided by business corporations, private foundations and similar organizations. The program is based on an annual nation wide campetition. Scholarships are awarded without regard to financial need. However after picking the winners the stipends are then computed according to the individual's financial need. The stipends range from $100 to $1,500 a year.

Of the total of 2,018 Merit Scholars who have been graduated since 1956, 65% have won academic honors such as election to Phi Beta Kappa or other individual honor societies. Two out of every three grads have indicated plans for further study.

Among state universities in 1962-63, UNC ranked 12th in the number of Merit Scholars enrolled with 13.

Plans are continuing to offer the special Merit Scholarship weekend again next year.

Brakhage Has Individuality In His Films

This is the second of a series of four articles on the recent Response Conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Fine Arts" at Princeton University.

By STEPHEN DENNIS

Stanley Brakhage is only thirty, yet he has been making movies for twelve years. At the Princeton "Reponse" Conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Creative Arts," I had the opportunity to hear Mr. Brakhage and to see several of the films he has made.

Brakhage's work is extremely difficult to characterize, for he is what he calls himself — an experimental film producer and director. He moves in realms of the avant-garde cinema movement which make the works of Ingmar Bergman seem like familiar celluloid productions of Hollywood.

Brakhage has a unique aesthetic philosophy with regard to film. To him, the film should become more and more material for the reactions of the individual sensibilities of the viewers in an audience. He edits his films with a sense of complementary colors.

Part of the experience of watching one of his films is thus in the individual eye of the viewer and not on the screen or on the film which is running through the projector. A viewer's optic nerve "makes" part of what the brain registers as having been seen.

If this sounds like a strange professional ethic, Brakhage emphasized that all films are really twenty-four separate images being imposed upon a viewer's retina each second. All movies are thus shadow plays and not forms of reality. Consequently, any viewer is already creating part of his viewing experience, the illusion of motion, when he watches any film. Brakhage does not wont his genre to become a magic show where the secrets of the tricks are to remain hidden.

Before the first film was shown, Brakhage advised his audience how to watch his creations. He advised them to forget anything related to their previous movie experience and to adopt a relaxed attitude, lest the rapidity of images cause a headache. He emphasized that his images are not meant to be fully comprehended as are those of Hollywood, but are meant to flow into each other and create moods on the screen.

It is primarily a rapid succession of whirling colors, lines, and shapes which seem to explode, resolve, and then reappear again. If a film does not have to represent a form of reality, there is no necessity for it to have any aspects of drama.

Is the work of Brakhage art? This is an important question, and one that is hard to answer. Some of the movies had a lyric quality to them, but before judging them, one would need to view them at least twice, so that a very natural feeling of strangeness in this new genre could wear off.

Brakhage compared seeing a film of his once to watching an extremely difficult poem by Ezra Pound flash once around the Times Square Building.

Student Aid Work Change Considered

The Office of Student Aid is currently considering a plan to centralize the apportionment of student part-time jobs under a special student self-help agency.

The hiring of all students in non-technical and non-teaching part-time jobs in the University will have to have the approval of the Office of Student Aid as to the student's financial need and satisfactory academic standing, according to Dr. Julian Mason, Director of Student Aid.

Those sections of the University which hire students in part-time jobs will work with the Student Aid Office and inform the Office of openings. These employers are currently being asked to submit the number of job openings that will be available during the summer sessions to the Student Aid Office.

The system will go into effect beginning this summer, and will be under the direction of Mrs. Betty Caldwell, Assistant Director of Student Aid, Dr. Mason said yesterday.

Young Democrats Set Up Committees

The UNC YDC Executive Committee met Thursday to set up working committees and draft plans for making the club one of the most active in the country during the 1963-64 term, according to Lane Brown, president.

The club plans to conduct membership drives during orientation, between Thanksgiving and Christmas and during second semester. Programs featuring leading political speakes will be held once a month during the term.

Brown named Don Curtis, Bill Whichard and Dave Kitzmiller to the membership committee; Whit Joyner and Tom Bolch to the publicity committee; Ken Bode, Bud Abbott and Ron Semone to the College Federation committee; Jim Craven and Johnny McConnell to the program committee and the entire executive committee to the committee on constitutional reform.

Yack Editor Says Grads Didn't Pay

Legum Criticizes Book's Burners

By HUGH STEVENS

Louis Legum, editor of the 1963 Yackety-Yack, said yesterday that graduate students were not included in the yearbook because they do not pay for the privilege.

He spoke in reference to an incident in which a group of graduate students burned copies of the Yack in Y-Court Tuesday night. The students were protesting the lack of graduate coverage in the Yack.

Two graduate students stated yesterday in a letter to the Tar Heel that no one should be forced to buy a Yack if he neither wants or needs one.

"The cashier's office informs me that graduate students pay an activity fee of only $7.28 per semester, compared to $9 for undergraduates," Legum said. "This is done because it would be unfair to charge graduate students as much when they do not participate in as many activities."

"We do not include their pictures in the Yack because there is less income from them and because a large number of them have had their pictures included during four years anyway."

It is true, said Legum, that certain groups are organized and pay for pictures in the Yack. These include the Medical School, Law School, and Dental School students.

"If all graduate students had a similar organization and could pay a fee of about a dollar each for pictures, then the Yack would happily accommodate them," he said. "Until they supply us with the money to support the pictures, they will never be included in the Yack."

Legum said that the Yack's budget is in the process of being cut right now, and it cannot afford to include non-paying groups.

"It seems to me," Legum concluded, "that students interested enough to burn books should be interested enough to seek out a solution to the problem. Burning books is certainly an immature act not in keeping with the position of graduate students."

Two graduate students yesterday said, in a letter to the Tar Heel, that "nobody, be he an undergraduate, grad student or janitor, should be forced to buy a book he neither wants nor needs. Library fees, and other fees necessary to the maintenance of the University, we willingly pay. The Yack and the athletic program, among other things, cannot be justified on these grounds. Sell books and tickets to those who want them, but please don't force us to buy."

The students, A. Newman and Jeff Churchill, went on to say, "We do resent having paid, for ourselves and our wives, well over $100 in our few years at UNC for yearbooks; why would we want two copies, when we won't even have room to carry away one for each year."

GYM NOTICE

All students who use the gym and have baskets there are asked to remove all personal equipment (shoes, etc.) and turn in basket I.D. cards before leaving school. All baskets will be cleaned out at the end of summer school. New baskets will be assigned for fall semester.

Bulls-Eye Landing In Pacific

Cooper Completes Perfect Flight

BULLETIN

ABOARD USS KEARSARGE, (UPI)—Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper's space capsule was pulled out of the Pacific Ocean Thursday and placed on the ship's deck at 8:01 p.m. EDT.

ABOARD USS KEARSAGE, (UPI) — Astronaut L. Gordon Cooper came down "right on the money" beside the aircraft carrier USS Kearsage Thursday after a 22.9-orbit space flight that ended in breath-taking tenseness because of an equipment failure.

Cooper was forced to fire his re-entry rockets by hand when the automatic attitude control system of the Faith 7 spacecraft failed during his 20th orbit of the earth.

But he brought it off perfectly, landing only about 7,000 yards from the carrier, closer than astronaut Walter Shirra's mark after six orbits last October.

Cooper was jovial and joking when he landed and said he was "feeling fine." He was taken aboard the carrier to the accompaniment of shouts of joy from the 1,600 sailors aboard.

He apologized for missing landing on the number three elevator of the ship, the usual way of coming aboard a carrier at dock.

The capsule was pulled close to the Kearsarge by hand to avoid tipping it and available helicopters were not used because the landing had been so close and there was less danger this way.

After the capsule was hoisted to the deck of the carrier, two doctors talked to Cooper while he was still inside the capsule. The hatch cover was blown off minutes later and Cooper stepped out onto the flight deck.

Also talking to Cooper while he was in the capsule was John Graham of the NASA recovery team on the Kearsarge.

Cooper emerged from the space capsule wearing a big smile and appearing in excellent condition.

He immediately went below decks for a lengthy medical examination and debriefing. He walked by himself to the sick bay with his instruments still attached to his space suit.

The space flight went around the world 22.9 times and until the 20th orbit was functioning with textbook precision.

It was then that the automatic attitude control system on the Faith 7 spacecraft failed. With less than five hours to go, Cooper was given instructions in manually firing the rockets by Lt. Col. John Glenn, who said Cooper's firing was "right on the money."

Cooper came down from his historic flight, by far the longest ever made by an American, swaying gently beneath his peppermint-candy colored parachute less than five miles off the port bow of the Kearsarge. Sixteen hundred sailors on the five-acre flight deck let out a yell as their ship duplicated the feat of recovering astronaut Walter Shirra within visual distance last October.

The spectacular flight took 34 hours, 20 minutes and 30 seconds from the time Cooper was blasted off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., at 8:10 a.m. Wednesday until his landing in the Pacific according to a preliminary official estimate made by Mercury control in Washington.

World News Briefs

Reds Lose Contact With Mars Vehicle

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet scientists have lost radio contact with their "Mars 1" space proble although it is continuing its flight, the official Tass news agency said Thursday.

Tass reported the last radio contact with the space capsule took place March 21, when it was 66 million miles from earth.

Since then, it added, analysis of telemetric information showed that "troubles had appeared in the orientation system of the 'Mars 1' station, as a result of which the direction of the station's antennas toward the earth was upset."

"This prevented radio contact with it during subsequent sessions," Tass said.

"Attempts are being continued at present to restore radio communication with the interplanetary station."

Jadotville Threat

JADOTVILLE, Katanga, The Congo (UPI) — The entire European community of this mining town 80 miles northwest of Elizabethville threatened to burn it to the ground Thursday and return to Europe.

The 4,000 Europeans are in revolt following the murder Wednesday night of a Belgian worker at the Union Miniere mining complex. Daniel Dendieval was kidnapped near the center of the town Wednesday afternoon, driven to the national Congolese army camp 20 miles away and beaten to death with rifle butts by 12 soldiers.

The troops concerned have not been arrested and their motive for the murder was unknown.

More than 500 furious Europeans met at Jadotville's Union Miniere mine club Thursday and issued an ultimatum to the Congolese authorities: either the Congolese troops are withdrawn from Jadotsville or all white women and children will be evacuated immediately to Europe and "we will carry out a scorched earth policy."

Wheeler, Ott Given Posts With Dean

Grant Wheeler and Matthew Ott have been appointed to the positions of Assistants to the Dean of Men, Dean William Long announced yesterday.

Ott will replace Dallas Cameron, who will return to the UNC Law School to complete his third year next fall.

Wheeler will replace Bill Harriss, who will be entering Duke University Law School in the fall.

Ott is currently a second-year student in the University Law School. He will temporarily interrupt his studies while acting as an Assistant to the Dean of Men.

Ott, a native of Massachusetts, is a graduate of Brown University. He has served on active duty in the Marine Corps before entering the University and is currently a Captain in the Marine Corps Reserve.

Wheeler, also a native of Massachusetts, is a graduate of Deerfield Academy. He will receive his B.A. in English from the University in July.

Wheeler is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity, and is a past chairman and vice-chairman of the Men's Council. He has also served on the Campus Chest and the Attorney General's staff. In addition, he has been elected to membership in the Order of the Old Well, the Order of the Grail, the Order of the Golden Fleece, and the Amphoterothen Society.

Wheeler is married to the former Nancy Longstreet. They have one child, age 6 months.

Dunne Sentenced To Year In Jail

By JOEL BULKLEY

A UNC student charged with loitering and failing to obey a police officer was sentenced to a year in jail and fined $200 Wednesday in City Recorder's Court in Birmingham, Ala.

John Dunne, a 20-year-old junior from Brecksville, Ohio, was arrested Saturday outside the Birmingham City Jail while helping Negro parents locate their children, who were being released from jail. He was charged with loitering after being warned to leave. Later another charge, refusal to obey the lawful command of an officer, was added.

He was released Sunday on $600 bond put up by the "Birmingham Movement."

Dunne was convicted Wednesday on both charges and sentenced to 180 days in jail and fined $100 on each count. He has five days to appeal the decision but has not done so yet.

Money for an appeal bond is being raised by the "Birmingham Movement," Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson said Thursday.

Henderson commented, "The University is interested in Dunne's getting fair treatment and returning to school as soon as possible."

Henderson declined comment on what, if anything, the University is doing to assist Dunne.

A spokesman for the legal department of the "Birmingham Movement" told the DTH that the group's attorney, Arthur Shores and Anzel Billingsly, were trying to get convicted persons out on bond as soon as possible, but were falling behind because of the large number of convictions.

King Claims Whites Made Some Errors

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said Thursday there was a "misunderstanding" on just what desegregation was promised to Negro leaders to end Birmingham's protest campaign.

King told a news conference he felt there were "three or four errors" in a statement released by white negotiators listing what concessions were granted, and that he was dissatisfied with their statement.

Sidney W. Smyer, a white businessman who headed a committee which met with Negro leaders, said earlier that the agreement called for one downtown department store to hire one clerk and there would be some job upgrading.

King said, however, "We went away with the idea that this meant all the stores would hire Negro clerks. We expect clerks and upgrading in all stores."

Local Negro leader Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth interjected "We would not feel justified that 3,000 Negroes went to jail here just for one clerk to be hired."

King was asked if this meant the demonstrations would resume if the controversy was not resolved. He said "We are going to solve that through conferences with white leaders and not through the press."

He said, however, "We stand prepared to back up our demands with everything that is necessary.

Have Faith

"We want to reiterate that we have faith in the people with whom we are negotiating and we feel the agreements will go through at the time set," King said.

King also said "we understood the agreement was that the lunch counters would be integrated 90 days after the halt of demonstrations," not 90 days after it is decided which form of government the city will have.

The question as to the form of government was argued before the state supreme court Thursday. Birmingham citizens voted this spring to change from a three commissioner form to a mayor-council form, but the three commissioners have refused to leave office on grounds their terms have not expired.

Smith Named SP Vice Chairman

A three-way fight for vice-chairman highlighted Student Party elections Wednesday night.

Bob Smith edged Haynes McFadden and Dennis Myers in a hotly-contested election that saw voting go to a second ballot. Smith and McFadden tied on the first ballot, with nine votes each, while Myers trailed with five. On the second vote, Smith won by a 12-10 margin.

As expected, Neal Jackson, former vice-chairman, was unopposed for the top spot in the party.

Other new officers are Diane Hile, secretary; Jeff Davis, treasurer; Vance Barron, sergeant-at-arms.

Fine Arts Program Response Very Good

By JIM CARR

Response to the fine arts program instituted for freshmen women to begin next fall has been excellent, according to Margaret Folger, director of women's admissions for the University.

Under the program 24 women will be admitted as freshmen whose field of study will be in music, art or dramatics.. So far, about 30 applications have been received.

The plan callls for 10 to be admitted in the music program, six in art and six in dramatic art. Probably two more will be accepted, but it has not been decided in what field.

At present, nine have been accepted in music, four in dramatics, and one in art. "These are only the ones who have remitted their entrance fees," Mrs. Folger said. "Others have been accepted, but we have not heard from them. At least two others have been accepted in dramatic art and one in music.

"We probably would have had a greater response if the program had been announced earlier," she said. "As it is, many girls probably have not heard about it, unless they read about it in the newspapers." The program, established as a result of action by the Board of Trustees of the University, was announced on Feb. 3.

"The caliber of the applicants has been extremely high," she said. "All of them had very high college board scores and good high school records. In addition, they all seemed genuinely interested in the program."

The applicants have all been screened by the department in which they wish to study. Those accepted must be passed by the screening boards as well as meet the entrance requirements of the University.

"The program was instituted on an experimental basis," Mrs. Folger said. "Judging from the high quality of the students accepted thus far, it should be a great success."

The girls will begin training in the fine arts during their freshman year, in addition to following the regular General College curriculum. While in the General College they will take their electives from their major field. Although in a special program, they will be working for a regular Bachelor of Arts degree.

They will be housed in Spencer Dorm, along with all the other freshmen women living on campus. "We do not plan to isolate them," Mrs. Folger said. "This is merely in line with the regulations of the office of Dean of Women. After their freshman year, they will be eligible to live anywhere on campus, just like any other women students.

"I'm sure we will have a great many more applications next year," Mrs. Folger said. "I can't say whether or not more will be accepted then. That's up to the Board of Trustees."

'Black Monday' Has Become Term Of Contempt

9 Years Later, Ruling Still Not In Effect

Nine years ago today, at 12 noon, the University of North Carolina Press released Harry Ashmore's book, "The Negro And The Schools," describing the pathetic state of Negroes in the Southern school systems, and pleading for some kind of reform.

Fifty-two minutes later in Washington, amid "an awesome quiet," Chief Justice Earl Warren began reading the decision that was to reform, if not the school systems, what the South considered its "way of life." Separation of the public schools by race, Justice Warren concluded at 1:20 p.m., is "inherently unequal." At 2:00 p.m., Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia called for nullification.

A few years earlier, in Gaines vs. Missouri, the Federal courts had indicated that "separate but equal" was a poor approach to education, thus few Southern politicians, including Talmadge, were totally surprised on Monday afternoon. Missouri had argued that money had been provided to send Gaines to any "Northern" law school of his choice. The arrangement should be to Gaines' advantage, the state's attorney said, since most Northern law schools were superior to the one at the University of Missouri.

But Gaines was a resident of Missouri, the Court disagreed, and as such was entitled to an education in Missouri. Either build him a law school "equal in all respects" to the one attended by whites, the Court ordered, or admit him to the University. Missouri chose the cheaper method, but in neighboring Mississippi a politician commented, "If that nigger had lived here, he'd have hisself a brand new law school."

Building Gaines his personal law school, it soon became obvious, would not have made for equality. The "either-or" precedent therein established was shortlived, and the Mississippian's comment was meaningless. Of a total 11,173 segregated school districts, only five were immediately affected by the decision: Delaware, South Carolina, Virginia, the District of Columbia, and Kansas. School officials accepted the Court's ruling with misleading calm. As a prophetic preface to the "massive resistance" doctrine that was to come, Virginia's Governor Stanley called a "conference" to determine how the ruling was to be implemented.

The Supreme Court itself was uncertain how the decision should be carried out, and the resulting hesitation, it is now generally agreed, destroyed the effectiveness of Court-ordered desegregation. The phrase, "with all deliberate speed," virtually reinstated the "separate but equal" doctrine.

Some states, particularly in the Deep South, began a massive school contruction program. They were not trying to prove that separate schols could actually be equal; th strategy was to make integration undesirable to Negroes. Other states resorted to pupil placement options, and some even considered private schools at public expense an effective alternative to desegregation. A few border states permitted token integration to the few Negroes that sought it. In most cases, however, schools remained rigidly segregated, and civil rights groups looked about for opportunities to force the issue.

Clinton, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark., were selected. Civic leaders in Clinton had spoken out for moderation, and Arkansas already had integrated in some public schools and in the university. With comparatively little violence integration at Clinton was successful. Arkansas, however, has a governor with high political ambitions. When 9 Negro children appeared on the steps of Central High School, over 5,000 Federal troops were ordered in to open the door.

Since 1957 public education has proceeded peacefully in Little Rock. Elsewhere, desegregation has been a failure. A handful of school districts have so far as can be determined voluntarily, integrated their schools. In all but three Southern states some measure of integration exists in public schools. One of these three has been ordered to desegregate.

The 1954 decision has had some effects, but school integration was not one of them. North Carolina, one of the more progressive states, in 1960 had only 77 Negroes in previously all-white schools out of 1,116,700 total enrollment, or 1/50 of one percent. To date, no North Carolina school has been voluntarily integrated except the Chapel Hill district, and even there "tokenism" is the rule. But the state's pupil placement law was questioned in a 1962 decision involving schools in Durham. No substitute has yet been devised.

Attempts to implement the 1954 decision have been disappointing. The NAACP, rather than contest all the intricate tactics Southern legislatures have spawned, now seeks a ruling that would force the school district to take the initiative in school desegregation. Without such a ruling, Hodding Carter's 1954 prediction, that actual integration is "a long way off," appears the case. "Black Monday," a term once used only by segregationists, has become the Negro's term of contempt for Brown vs. Board of Topeka.

Welcome, Guerillas

Many people see in the slogan, "Power For Peace," a cruel contradiction in terms, and perhaps it is, representing as it does a compromise between idealism and reality.

But the fact remains that the existence of unparalleled atomic and nuclear power since the end of World War II has had the effect of limiting the scope and frequency of international violence.

Even many so-called pacifists admit this. What they question is how good, how durable, a solution this is to the problem of doing away with war. Thus their efforts are directed at working out some other solution to keeping the peace than the threat of mutual annihilation.

Meantime, however, violence continues throughout the world. To be sure, its pattern has changed. The existence of vast nuclear arsenals by the U.S. and Russia, and the resulting difficulty involved in keeping "limited war" from escalating into major holocausts, plus the end of colonialism and numerous other factors have resulted in the emergence of a new form of violence—wars of internal subversion, guerilla wars.

These are the hot sparks that daily, someplace or other, illuminate the edges and expanse of the Cold War.

These guerilla wars are confined to the so-called under-developed countries, which are struggling to emerge while trying to keep from being torn apart.

In this dual task, the military are playing key roles.

As engineers, they are nation-builders, working at the gigantic task of modernizing their homelands.

As professionals in the management of violence, they are struggling to beat back the forces of internal subversion which would have these countries develop along Communist lines.

This, being a fireman and a builder, is a difficult task.

In recognition of its importance and the efforts required to make it a success, the Daily Tar Heel extends a warm welcome to the ninety-seven guerilla fighters from 19 nations who are taking a day off from their intensive military training at Fort Bragg.

And we wish them luck.

Try The College Cafe

It has been brought to our attention that one of Chapel Hill's normally-segregated restaurants integrated for the first time to serve a guest of a few members of the UNC football team.

The restaurant has long held an infamous position on the discrimination lists of the local NAACP, the SPU and the Commttee for Open Business. But it let down its barriers even after one of the white customers complained. In fact, the man in charge told the griper that if he didn't like it he was welcome to leave.

We are not sure just what caused the manager to change his mind about the policy of his business establishment. But we commend him anyway.

However, we think the members of the much-criticized football team were really responsible for the decision, so we congratulate them too—and recommend that they might like to try some of Chapel Hill's other noted restaurants, like the College Cafe, for instance.

Sinking Standards

It is a pity that a few of the many freshmen in Ehringhaus have succeeded in making the whole dormitory seem like a haven for immature high-schoolers.

From the great amount of door-knocking we did there during the recent campaign we can attest that this is not the case.

Ehringhaus is full of students who are bright enough to think of some more enjoyable pastime than pegging water-bombs, fruit and bottles at people below.

However, these many are allowing the few to set the standards, and judging by the cab-splashing incidents of a few nights ago, the standards are sinking.

Yack Award

We took an editorial poke at the editor of the Yackety-Yack the other day for creating what appeared to be the makings of just another honorary.

We have since been informed that rigid precautions have been taken to make sure the newly doesn't get watered down in that way, and that the occasion never created Frank Graham Award arises when the selections are based to any extent whatsoever upon who the friends of the Yack editor are.

That being the case, we withdraw our objections and wish future Yack editors well in choosing recipients as worthy as this year's are.

Invitations Didn't Say 'White'

To the Editors:

The schedule of events sent to graduating seniors concerning the planned activities of Senior Week included an invitation to all seniors to attend a party at the Patio Thursday night. The invitation did not specify white seniors. Yet when senior history major George La Monte and senior journalism major Lester Carson attended the class party and tried to order some beer, the manager told them to leave. He would not serve Carson, a negro, in his establishment. Resultantly, the two were served with warrants charging trespass.

One can only wonder what the class officers must have had in mind, or didn't have in mind, when they chose a segregated establishment for two (one on Tuesday and one on Thursday) of the senior class social events.

Senior class Treasurer Jeff Guller said he was sorry about the incident and that the party would not have been planned there had it been known that the Patio practiced racial discrimination.

Just how much effort would it have taken to obtain that small bit of information? The DAILY TAR HEEL on at least two occasions ran a list of the segregated businesses in Chapel Hill, once in an article by the Student Peace Union and once in an editorial prior to the arrival of the Southern Conference on Human Relations.

A note or a phone call to the Patio prior to planning could have prevented the embarrassment to the University and the injustice to two members of the senior class. Another example of blundering student government shortsightedness.

Okay, Reston, But What Can I Do?

To the Editors:

Having read Jim Reston's comments on the decline of United State's influence in world politics due to its anti-communist instead of pro-democracy attitude, I came to the usual question the uninfluential voice in the crowd usually raises; "What can I do."?

I do not have the answer, but if I did I wonder whether it would make any difference. Who would notice it? Who would give it two minutes thought? Not a significant portion of the populace I am sure. But should not we at least care?

This is all I ask, but unfortunately this is too much. If people at least cared, there would be a chance that the proposals which could guide us in the right direction might be heeded.

In our present state of apathy the only place we could be directed toward is the nearest "john".

Kenya's Constitution Looks Like Ours, But... Well...

By EMILEE HINES

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a series on Africa by Miss Hines. She was formerly a graduate student in European History and Political Science at UNC, and is currently one of the 150 Americans called "Teachers for East Africa".)

Kenya's constitution was published and distributed April 19, a 247 page document which it will be almost impossible to alter. The EAST AFRICAN STANDARD calls it ". . . the most complicated constitution ever devised."

It is the result of conferences in London and Nairobi, constitutional experts called in from as far away as Switzerland, over a year's dispute between the two major political parties, numerous walk-outs by delegates to the conference, and eventual compromises made by both parties.

Kenya African National Union (KANU) the largely Kiluyu party, wanted a strong unitary government, but other tribes fear domination by the Kikuyu. Kenya African Democratic Union (KADU), wanted strong regional governments with a very weak central government. The resulting compromise has been to divide Kenya into seven regions plus Nairobi.

Each of these regions will have authority over certain local matters like education and agriculture, while the central government will have authority over such matters as taxation and security. The central government will have two houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives.

So far it looks like the US model, but here the similarity ends. For the internal self-government period, the Governor will appoint the Prime Minister, but once self-government is achieved, the Prime Minister will be chosen by the members of the winning party, following the English Parliamentary system.

As in the American system, the House of Representatives will have power over the raising and spending of money, but unlike the American, the Kenya Senate will have almost no powers. It is chiefly to function as a brake on the House of Representatives. The Senate may not originate any bill, and they may not veto any bill permanently. If the Senate fails to act on a bill within thirty days after it is passed by the House, it becomes law. If the Senate vetoes a bill, the House may pass it again the following year and make it law without consent of the Senate.

It is primarily in blocking constitutional changes that the Senate has power. A change affecting anything of special importance, such as the regional system, representation, type of government, etc., requires a seventy-five per cent vote in the House and ninty per cent in the Senate.

In the matter of representation, too, the Kenya system differs from the American. Rather than having one House based on population and one on units, both in Kenya are based on units. In the House there will be 117 members elected from the constituencies and 12 specifically elected members who may be from any constituency; in the Senate there will be one from each district (41 districts in the 7 regions, plus 1 from Nairobi.)

The central government has power to declare emergencies and to punish unruly regions. There are already signs that it may need such power. Originally there were to be only 6 regions, but the northern areas caused so much disturbance about their wish to join Somalia that they were given a separate region, and this is at best only a stopgap. They still want to secede, and may find it easier to do so, being a separate region.

Some tribes have already indicated their distrust of living in the same region with other tribes, and some of the tribes and regions feel that they were not given enough area, or a suitable town to have as administrative headquarters, or that not enough money has been spent on them.

Problems are almost sure to arise also over regional control of agriculture which will affect the whole country. At present, control of production and marketing of basic crops (coffee, tea, corn) is in the hands of the central government, and even so there is overpopulation. Kenya has had a warning from the World Coffee Board that she is producing a glut on the coffee market. With controls going to the localities, each region plans to increase the amount of coffee grown in its region. To refuse would mean losing votes from one's region.

Why is the Kenya Constitution so long and complicated while other constitutions, such as American, are so short? In a meeting to discuss the constitution, the author asked the speaker, Keith Kyle, BBC newscaster, the same question. His answer: "The Americans had tried confederation and seen that it didn't work. They were willing to trust the central government and give up some of their local authority. Kenyans are not."

This distrust is especially true of the Somali region. The Somalis simply do not want to be part of Kenya.

During the "scramble for Africa" of the late Nineteenth and early Twentieth Century, the area that makes the northeastern part of the colony was given to Kenya. Its population is 85 per cent Somali, it's resources scant. Robert Ruark has called it, "The land that nature forgot." It is barren desert, with only gray-green thorn trees growing on it. There are occasional patches of coarse grass, which camels and goats tug at. It is certainly no place to live. There are few schools, no hospitals, only dirt tracks for roads. The area is administered by a few scattered police and district officers and commissioners. This area would be a liability for any country, but Kenya is loath to let it secede, for it has twice formed the buffer area against invasion from the north.

Somalia is equally determined that it shall secede and join the rest of the Somali peoples.

In the past two months, there have been repeated riots in Wajir and Isiolo, the two administrative centers of the Somali area. The District Commissioner has twice been attacked, chiefs have resigned, a number of people have been killed, both Somali and their enemies, the Turkana and the Rendille. A curfew was imposed, riot squads sent in, and temporary peace restored. The British flag was torn down and the consulate in Somalia closed. In turn, the Somali consulate in Nairobi was closed. There have been many Somali demonstrations in Nairobi.

The chief effect of the disturbance so far has been closer harmony between Kanu and Kadu. Ironically enough, at the very time when they are working for their own independence, they are denying it to another group.

Ending on a humorous note: Egypt is playing both sides. Radio Cairo has been broadcasting anti-secession messages sympathetic to Kenya in Swahili, the LINGUA FRANCA of East Africa; the Somali language broadcasts have been pro-secession.

Is UNC Caught In Grip Of Materialism?

By KAYS GARY
The Charlotte Observer

Has materialism fixed its hard, dry grip on the University of North Carolina?

We'd just as soon ask if Carl Sandburg plans to do singing soap commercials.

But the question, in essence, was asked by Charles Craven of The News and Observer, Raleigh, and answered by playwright Paul Green.

Green said the University hasn't developed in the field of letters the way that it should. He pointed out that there are business and athletic scholarships in profusion, but that not a single writer, poet or dancer has ever had a Morehead Scholarship. There is no fellowship in outdoor drama. The emphasis "is on the physical, the material."

Small comfort that Green added materialism is "everywhere" and not peculiar to UNC. Small comfort, indeed. It means that our creative heart succumbs, too, to label-itis and the call of the huckster.

Whose fault is this? How to affix blame? Moreover, what profit?

We suggest that it is alarming enough that subsidies of the arts have not come from those of the market place on whom cultural development depends.

But the greater alarm is that financially successful writers, playwrights, musicians and performing artists apparently have done little or nothing themselves in behalf of those who would follow them.

Theirs is the primary responsibility in this area. If success has brought their surrender to materialism, too, we can expect little from others.

Dixie Classic Should Not Be Reinstated

By CHUCK NEELY

The statement prepared by CU President Friday and State College Chancellor Caldwell which was read before the State House of Representatives May 10, should bring a conclusive end to the Dixie Classic controversy.

We all know, however, that it won't.

Rep. Sam Whitehurst of Craven said that he would ask for another report.

We would think that by now, even the most unenlightened legislator and citizen would fully appreciate the many valid reasons for terminating the Classic. Apparently, however, this is not so.

In spite of the soul searching we have done, we have been able to come up with only three good reasons for the continuance of the Classic:

1. The Dixie Classic brought some of the top basketball teams in the nation to North Carolina, and gave the residents of this state a tremendous show of basketball prowess.

2. In drawing the thousands who saw the Classic, Raleigh businessmen profited immensely.

3. Since Lady Fortune usually smiled on Carolina and State, our basketball reputations were greatly enhanced.

The first two reasons are relatively valid. As for the last, although we developed quite a name in basketball circles, we must remember that the purpose of the University is not only to provide enterttinmeit for her students and the people, but also to educate those who are numbered on her UNIVAC lists.

It is highly doubtful that many outstanding students were induced to come to Carolina on the basis of her basketball reputation. Indeed, it is highly likely that a number of prospective students, some of whom might well have proven welcome additions to the student body, were kept away on the basis of the scandals resulting from the bribes and point shaving, and the knowledge that the University has been placed on probation by the NCAA.

If the Dixie Classic could continue, and continue incorruptibly, then there might be sound reason in advocating its contiuance. Unfortunately, however, anything as big as the Classic inevitably attracts the shadier elements of society who make it difficult, if not impossible, for all of the team members to remain honest.

True, the corruption which the Classic engendered in the past might not arise again. But noting the furor which was caused in the past, and having knowledge of the subsequent loss of reputation to Carolina, would we not be foolish to risk our reputation merely to once again provide entertainment for a few thousand spectators and line the pockets of a few Raleigh merchants?

The University of North Carolina has a great heritage to pass on to her students, to the people of this state, and to the citizens of this nation. But her ability to pass on this heritage relies greatly on her reputation for academic excellence and moral uprightness. If our moral rectitude is questioned, our academic excellence is overshadowed. If these two qualities are besmirched, then the purpose and goals of the University are blocked.

We believe that the possible harm to the University far outweighs any possible good which could derive from the reinstatement of the Dixie Classic. We urge Rep. Whitehurst and those who support his position to reconsider their position.

A Thought

And we always thought that self-liquidation meant having a few beers.

Art Review: Graduates Select Showings

By JIM WAGNER
Art Review: Graduate Selections at Ackland Museum

The Ackland Art Museum is now exhibiting eight small groups of prints selected and annotated by UNC graduate students of art history. The students were free to explore the Museum's and the University's files of graphic art and to assemble prints which would focus attention on any particular artist, historical period or art subject. The result is eight brief lessons in art history ranging in content from 15th century religious engravings through 18th century French cartoons and to drawings by modern masters.

The exhibit may be seen at Ackland from 2-5 p.m. and 8-10 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays; 10 a.m to 5 p.m. on Saturdays, and 2-5 p.m. on Sundays.

Student John S. Cogswell chose some prints by Odilon Redon (1840-1916), who frequently depicted the fantastic and the grotesque.

Redon said he tried to put "the logic of the visible at the service of the invisible." Four of the six illustrations are based on texts taken from Gustave of the six illustrations are based on texts from Gustave Flaubert's "The Temptation of St. Anthony."

Woodcuts, engravings and etchings by Albrecht Durer (1471-1528) were selected by Janet Slonae. Durer was a master craftsman and is considered by many to be the greatest of artistic engravers. One of the most impressive prints in the exhibit is Durer's magnificent engraving, "Melencolia I."

The influence of Durer can be seen in the five works by German and Italian artists of the early 1500's picked by David Farmer. The ornate and frieze-like engravings also reveal the introduction of Italianate classical mythology into German art.

Another significant historic trend is shown in the prints assembled by Patricia Metzger. Early in the 17th century many European artists first began to turn from religion and mythology to more mundane subjects. Of the five artists featured in this group, Cornelis Visscher stands out for his romanticized engraving of a peasant family at home.

Honore Daumier (1808-1879), famous French satirist, is represented by five exquisitely detailed and humorously painted cartoons. One need not understand much French or know the historical peculiarities in order to laugh with Daumier at his targets. The cartoons were wisely selected but pretentiously annotated by Efraim M. Rosenzweig.

'Floating U' Opens Doors In October

A unique "floating university" founded in Whittier, Calif., will offer nautically-minded students a chance to sail while earning college credit.

The University of the Seven Seas, as it is officially called, will be located abroad the M. S. Seven Seas of the Europe-Canada Line. It will offer its courses aboard ship to emphasize international studies.

Each semester the University will accept 500 students, whose major study will be in political science, economics, religion, philosophy or other areas which lend themselves to international study.

Ten scholarships of $1,000 each will be awarded to undergraduate and graduate students who meet the qualifications of financial need, academic achievement and a field of interest which will benefit the country. He must also be able to represent well, but unofficially, his own country.

The University of the Seven Seas will seek to provide the most favorable environment for the study of man, his resources, his environment and his outreach. A mobile campus will apply the concept that a viewer who stands in many places sees more than a viewer who stands in only one.

While the "University" is in port, field trips will be taken. The ship will visit ports around the world each semester with academic emphasis placed on the Mediterranean, Southeast Asia and Latin America.

Classes will officially begin aboard the M. S. Seven Seas on October 22, 1963.

WC Students Picket Theater

Picketing by Woman's College students began in Greensboro yesterday in an attempt to integrate two theaters and a cafeteria.

The WC Student Legislature voted by acclamation Wednesday night to support picketing of the Cinema Theatre, the Apple House Restaurant and the Town & Country Restaurant.

All the institutions mentioned in the resolution are located near the campus in Greensboro.

Dr. Otis Singletary, Chancellor of Woman's College said on Wednesday night that he was unaware of the action by the Student Legislature and normally would not be informed until the following day or "sometimes longer than that."

He said that Student Legislature action did not mean that the college administration had given approval. "There is no question of administration approval of such a resolution," he said.

The Chess Club will meet in Roland Parker 3 at 3 p.m. Sunday.

The Student Party will meet at 4 p.m. Sunday in the Woodhouse room.

Summer's coming, get going!

If this isn't a great time to get yourself a new Chevrolet—well, we just don't know when is. Why, you'd almost have to be anti-summer not to let one of these four convertibles get to you. Or any of Chevrolet's sedans, wagons, sport coupes and sport sedans, for that matter.

And there are a lot of other buy-now reasons besides the season. Like the carefree feeling you get on a long vacation trip in a brand-new car. And it's a smart time to trade, what with your Chevrolet dealer all stocked up for a long summer. Chances are, he has just the model and color you want—be it Chevrolet, Chevy II, Corvair or Corvette—ready to go right now.

So maybe now you're all wound up? Then spring into summer at your Chevrolet dealer's.

Teague Animals Take Campus Crown, 16-12

HORSESHOES FINAL

Kappa Psi won the Fraternity Blue horseshoe crown Wednesday night with a 2-1 conquest of DKE.

Jim Baity of Kappa Psi took the singles match over Ed Murrey, 21-13, 21-4. The first doubles match went to Kappa Psi also, John Kennedy and Bill Fuller downing DKE's Ben Willis and Marshall Fall, 21-15, 11-21, 21-11. Dave Wysong and Clay Moore salvaged some honor for DKE, winning the other doubles, over Tom Lynch and Luckey Welsh, 21-2, 21-11.

Champs Get Life; Win It In Eighth

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Teague got a second life on a seventh-inning technicality here yesterday and went on to score four runs in the first extra frame for a 16-12 All-Campus championship win over Phi Delta Theta.

The Phi Delts, who had rallied for four runs in the bottom of the sixth for a 12-12 tie, had Tom Cummings on second with one out in the seventh when George Wainwright hit a sinking liner to center.

Teague outfielder Tommy Ward made a sprawling try for the catch but couldn't get it, and Cummings raced in with what looked like the winning run.

He realized he hadn't touched third and went back to tag the bag, but Wainwright, on returning to second, failed to stay within the baselines, and officials ruled him out and Cummings back to third. Ed Williams then hit a shot right at Ward in center to end the inning.

The Animals came back in the top of the eighth to put it away. After two were out, first baseman Billy Galantai singled to left. Pete Kirvan grounded to Wainwright at third, but he threw wild to first, and both runners were safe.

Battle then walked Vernon Pittman to load the bases for opposing pitcher Rich Zarro. But the Phi Delt hurler, pitching for the third straight day, passed Zarro on a 3-2 pitch as Galantai came over with the winning run.

Battle then walked Charlie Price to force in another run, and Ward doubled home the final two Teague scores.

The Phi Delts scored twice in each of the first three innings to take a 6-4 lead. Max Boxley's two-run homer in the first and RBI single in the third highlighted the scoring.

But Teague, as has been its custom through these playoffs, came up with the big inning in the fourth. The Animals put together four hits for four runs before anybody was out.

Battle walked in one, Pete Helms doubled in two more, and Junior Edge batted in another. Galantai singled across the fifth and sixth runs of the inning with a liner the shortstop's glove.

Phi Delt scored single tallies in the fourth and fifth while Teague came up with two more runs in its half of the fifth on a disputed call at first.

Helms' grounder to Williams at Short was thrown wide of first baseman Walt Ratchford. Ratchford, however, made a nice play on the ball and tagged Helms coming down the line. But the umpire ruled Helms safe at first, and Price and Ward came across.

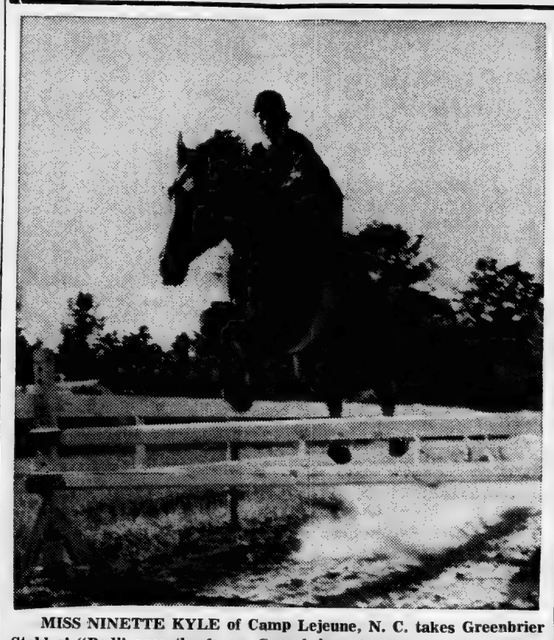
UNC's Wright Loses Chance For Bat Title

Pitcher Bill Haywood and third baseman Tom Wright, both rising seniors, have been elected UNC's baseball co-captains for the 1964 season.

The team held its annual dinner last night in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn.

By JOHN MONTAGUE



In a flurry of last minute excitement, UNC's Tom Wright lost his chances for the ACC batting title Wednesday night as North Carolina rallied for a 4-3 "non-conference" victory over Wake Forest at Asheboro.

It was decided Wednesday morning that the Shrine benefit game would count in the record book, but not the ACC standings. The junior third baseman had boosted his average to .384 with a four-for-five performance against VPI on Tuesday.

Duke's Biff Bracy, who had finished up on Saturday, led the circuit with .385. The decision to count the UNC-Wake exhibition thus gave Wright a shot at the crown.

A one-for-two or two-for-five performance or better against the Deacs would have raised Wright above Bracy in the current listings. But it was not to be. Wright went one-for-four and his average fell to .377. Bracy will now win the title unless one of three Wake players who are within range can go above the .385 mark in the NCAA play-offs in June. The three in contention are Bill Scripture, Wayne Martin and Dave Miller.

Aside from Wright's disappointment, the Asheboro contest turned out to be a gala affair for the Tar Heels, who picked up three runs in the ninth to overcome a 3-1 deficit. It was the second win for the Tar Heels in three meetings with the ACC champs.

Hillsboro Holds Horse Show

By ORLANDO CONSOLTO

A Hunter's Horse Show, sponsored by the Hillsboro PTA and featuring classes for Hunters, Jumpers and Walking horses, will take place Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Orange Speedway in Hillsboro.

Admission is one dollar for the show which will be judged by Antonio Ursano, a former member of the Italian International Equestrian team. Ursano and other area professional riders will judge and show horses during the afternoon.

The classes will feature hunters over fences up to three feet, six inches in height. The horses will be judged according to how carefully they jump and how comfortably the rideers go with them.

An Open Jumper's class where only the ability to clear a fence will be judged, and an Equitation Class with riders being judged on form, will also be held.

A walking class with the horses' form on the pleasure gait counting heavily will also be a feature of the show.

Joe Austin's Greenbrier Stables, located on the Pittsboro Highway, White Oak, and Pelham Stables of Durham, and the Horseshoe Acres of Raleigh will all have featured horses in the event.

VOLVO

Want a few $10,000 reasons for buying this $3995 car?

This $3995 car is the Volvo P1800. Like the $10,000 cars (Aston Martins, Ferraris, etc.) it gives you disc brakes, 4-speed transmission, live rear axle, independent front suspension, precise steering, European styling and coachwork.

Road & Track magazine sums it up this way: "The P1800 is a very civilized touring car for people who want to travel rapidly in style, a Gran Turismo car much in the news these days—but at a price that many people who cannot afford a Ferrari or Aston Martin would be able to pay."

One more thing. At 70 mph the P1800 uses no more gas than a Volkswagen uses at the same speed. That's a $3995 feature those $10,000 cars would like to have.

Robert Leo Cherry

Student Success -After Age Of 50

By HUGH STEVENS

Robert Leo Cherry, recently installed as the new president of the UNC chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, seems at first glance to be the typical student success story.

Cherry was born in eastern North Carolina, and graduated from a small high school in Bertie County. From the start, he desired to attend college, and his enrollment here in the fall of 1960 fulfilled a long-time ambition.

At the beginning, there was apparently little to cause anyone to separate Robert Cherry from the hundreds of similar entering fresh men. He took the same placement tests and was signed up for all the usual freshman courses. He expressed a desire to major in English, and also took a number of courses in history and French. He even attended one session of summer school.

But there was at least one area in which Robert Cherry differed from his classmates. His quality point average climbed higher and higher, until he stood at the head of his class. His labor was rewarded by his selection last week to the presidency of the oldest and most renowned collegiate honorary society. Still he seemed to be the typical small-town-fellow-who-made-good.

It may seem strange, then, that there are many students who are not well acquainted with Robert Cherry. Many of them know him in class, of course, and still others know him by reputation. But there is a reason for their failure to know him well. For at the end of the school day, when classes adjourn, Robert Cherry goes home—not to Avery or Winston or to his fraternity house, but to Glen Lennox, to be greeted by his wife and children.

Actually, we should say wife and child, because his daughter is attending school in Maryland. His son remains here and attends school in Chapel Hill.

If all this seems strange, perhaps it should be pointed out that Robert Cherry did not enter the university until he was 56 years old. Somewhere, between high school graduation and college, Mr. Cherry was detained.

"I started in the banking business at 15," he says, "and for the next forty years I held a variety of positions. I was with the Federal Reserve System in Richmond, Va. and Charlotte."

"Eventually I was a vice-president of the Richmond Federal Reserve Bank in charge of the Charlotte office," he continued.

Mr. Cherry actually graduated from high school in North Carolina, but also attended John Marshall High School in Richmond, graduating in 1918.

"I wanted to enter college," he said, "but I was unable to do so at the time. I never quite gave up the idea of eventually returning to school. I quit the banking business at 56 and spent a year abroad before coming here."

Mr. Cherry stated that he had always intended to enter Carolina, right from the time he left high school.

"There is no glorious motive attached to my coming back to school," he said. "The primary reason is personal satisfaction. I wanted to make up for the education I missed earlier."

Mr. Cherry said of his family's attitude, "I don't think they are impressed." He has a son, Jim, who is 12, and a daughter, Lilian, 15.

Mr. Cherry said of his selection to Phi Beta Kappa, "I was surprised that I was selected president. I had hoped to get my foot in the door, but it was an unexpected honor to be first."

He estimated his three-year quality point average at 3.89.

He said that he had taken a normal load of undergraduate courses, with his primary interest being English.

Mr. Cherry also offered some comments on the university, saying first that "the academic load was more difficult than I expected."

He said also that one of the greatest satisfactions has been "rubbing shoulders with the young people."

In evaluating the university today, Mr. Cherry commented that it would be impossible for him to compare today's college life to earlier days because he was not able to attend then.

"I do think," he said, "that a greater number of today's young people are taking their work more seriously than my contemporaries are giving them credit for."

Picketing Of Cafe To Halt For Exams

Picketing of the College Cafe has been stopped for the examination period, a spokesman for the Committee for Open Business said yesterday.

The picketing began April 5 and has been carried on daily through yesterday.

The picketing began April 5 and has been carried on daily through yesterday.

The Open Business group said continuing the picketing during exams would put "too great a strain" on the students who have been on the picket line. The negotiating committee of the picketers will continue talks with the cafe manager.

Noise, Rowdiness Becomes Contagious

Frat Parties Turn Into Violence

By LOUIS LEGUM

Several incidents of violence at UNC involving injury to at least one student were reported early yesterday morning.

Authorities confirmed that four specific disturbances occurred late Thursday night: an incident between the PiKA and Sigma Chi Houses in which a Sigma Chi was hit in the eye by a BB pellet; rowdiness among the fraternities in Little Court that brought Dean Long, the town police, and the campus police to the scene; a hit-and-run along Raleigh Road behind the library resulting in damage to a student's car; and a motorcycle that was abandoned after a hectic police chase across campus around midnight.

The PiKA-Sigma Chi incident started as nothing more than a couple of fraternity members shooting at bottles and windows with BB guns. An unidentified Sigma Chi was hit accidentally by a pellet and taken to Memorial Hospital where he was operated on. Reports about the condition of the student indicate that he will suffer no permanent damage to his eye. The disturbance in Big Court ended immediately after the injury.

In Little Court a Kappa Sig beer party precipitated excessive noise and rowdiness that spread to the KA and Zete Houses.

According to Patrolman Pendergrass of the Chapel Hill Police Department, "When I arrived at 11:15 p.m., the Kappa Sigs and KAs were cursing back and forth from their porches, throwing things out of their windows, including a couch, and breaking glass all over the court. All of them were drinking quite a bit.

"I was called some very bad names. A few minutes later I notified A. J. Beaumont and Assistant Dean of Men Larry Long. We were able to talk with the presidents of the houses involved and things got quiet."

Rex Teaney, president of the Kappa Sig House, and Jim Stonestreet, president of the KA House, both agreed that "the entire incident was exaggerated and blown up out of proportion. Each fraternity will take personal disciplinary action."

Dean Long also confirmed that "It was "just a minor disturbance. It will be turned over to the IFC."

The hit-and-run caused over $100 in damages to student Charles Winstead's car. Town police stated that a warrant was being served on a local resident for the accident.

Also, according to the town police, it was another resident of Chapel Hill who was driving the speeding motorcycle. It had been lent to him, however, by a Carolina student.

Cheat Bill Passed By Committee

Measure Would Hit At 'Ghostwriters'

A bill to make ghostwriting a misdemeanor was approved by the Senate Committee on Higher Education Friday in Raleigh.

The bill is aimed at individuals or companies who write term papers or theses for college students who then submit these papers as their own for academic credit.

Wake Senator John Jordan introduced the bill at the request of State College officials. They claimed there is evidence that a Raleigh man has been writing papers for some State College students.

There was no state law which would enable authorities to prosecute him.

The bill forbids even advertising or offering to assist college students who are considering such a form of cheating. Those convicted of violating the act "shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, in the discretion of the court."

A few years ago, a New York grand jury reported that several ghostwriting organizations had headquarters in that city, but did most of their business with college students from other states. These companies offered rates from $10 for undergraduate papers to $3,000 for Ph.D. dissertations.

Jordan said that he has received reports that some students in North Carolina have patronized such mail order ghostwriting organizations, but added that he has not been able to gather any solid evidence to that effect.

The bill was amended so that it does not punish students who employ ghostwriters. Jordan's original bill did penalize such students, but he amended it when college officials assured him that they can deal with the students.

Two Take Awards In Insurance

The UNC School of Business Administration has disclosed recipients for two insurance awards.

Charles B. Shelton III, Lookout Mountain, Tenn., will receive the Allstate Insurance Award, and James Lawrence Wolfe, Southport, N. C., will receive the Beaty Insurance Award.

THE NEW CHEERLEADERS for next year pose in what will be the new Kenan Stadium next fall when construction is finished on the upper deck. IFC Delays Action On TKE Status

The IFC delayed action on the proposed membership of Tau Kappa Epsilon at a recent meeting.

In a seven page petition, the TKE colony expressed its qualifications for membership in the body, citing the excellent standing of the national fraternity and the quality of probable members at UNC.

"We want to be certain of the financial stability of the colony before we approve their petition," commented IFC president Charlie Battle.

"The petition will be voted in our first meeting next fall and, if approved, the colony will be able to participate in the fal lrush with all privileges of an IFC member."

"If the qualifications are met, there seems to be little or no objection to their membership."

In other action, Battle was given the power to appoint an IFC court for the summer session. This is the first time a court will operate during the summer.

"Another factor of which w want to be sure is their size, as deferred rush begins in 1964 and houses must be able to survive a semester without pledges."

SPU Plans Protest Of Military Slogan

Two demonstrations protesting the slogan of Armed Forces Day will be sponsored today by the SPU and the Durham-Chapel Hill branch of the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom, SPU Chairman Pat Cusick said Friday.

"We and the WILPF are not marching against the men who serve or have served in the Armed Services," Cusick said. "What we are protesting is the theme of Armed Forces Day, 'Power for Peace.'"

"We feel that power can only bring destruction," he concluded.

Armed Forces Day ceremonies begin today at 8 a.m. with a flag raising ceremony by the UNC Naval ROTC at the Post Office on Franklin St.

"At this time there will be a small vigil silently protesting the Armed Forces Day theme. This protest will begin at 7:45 a.m. and end at 8:15 a.m.," Cusick said.

The second segment of today's military ceremonies will begin at 4:30 p.m. when the Air Force ROTC band and drill team will march from the Air Science buildings to the Post Office. There, retreat exercises will take place.

According to Cusick, a silent protest march will begin at 4:15 p.m. and proceed directly in front of the AFROTC to the Post Office.

"When the group reaches the Post Office, they will form a single line across the street and vigil until about 5:30," Cusick said.

Howard To Give Art Work In Support Of Magazine

Robert Howard, UNC professor of art and nationally known sculptor, announced recently that he will sell one of his works and give the proceeds to Reflections Fund set up by a committee to save the magazine "Reflections from Chapel Hill."

The work, entitled "West Wind," is a unique piece of sculpture formed out of stoneware and is on exhibit today at Paintings Upstairs Gallery. It will be sold to the highest bidder.

Paintings Upstairs has announced that persons interested may come by the gallery and place their bids in sealed envelopes which will be opened this afternoon

The gallery will also donate to the fund for "Reflections" by giving a percentage of all gallery sales for the past month. A special collection of over 400 paintings, drawings, from twelve states will be on display today.

A collection of 99 oils and watercolor landscapes has been flown to the gallery for this purpose.

The gallery will be open from 10-1 today and by appointment.

Yack Lashed For Fiscal Condition

SL Votes To Avoid Stand On Incident

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night censured the Yack staff for fiscal irresponsibility and voted not to concern itself with last week's controversial incident at the Senior Class party held at the Patio.

Legislature defeated, by a vote of 22-16, an oral resolution expressing SL's concern with the recent incident and later blocked reconsideration of the motion by a vote of 17-11.

The original motion introduced by John Ulfelder (UP) stated that SL directs the Speaker to further investigate the incident at the Patio involving two seniors and that SL recommends that the student judiciary handle the case.

Student Body President Mike Lawler said that this case concerns student conduct and should be tried by the Men's Council instead of a civil court because the student judiciary can better handle the case.

Two UNC students, George LaMonte and Lester Carson, a Negro, have been charged with trespassing and will appear in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court on May 21. Both allegedly refused to leave a senior class party at the Patio on May 9, after having been asked to do so. Both are free on $50 bond pending trial.

Rufus Edmisten (SP) opposed the motion stating that this was not a student affair and should not be handled by the students before the civil authorities.

Pointed Debate

After amending and revising numerous resolutions, SL finally voted, 14-13, to censure those responsible on this year's Yack staff for their apparent fiscal irresponsibility.

Earlier motions had urged that the Attorney General investigate the Yack finances, with particular emphasis on photography rebates, the Yack's Christmas party and this year's sale of book covers.

Legislature cleared its docket of pending bills in its five-hour session Thursday night as it approved $289.50 to the IDC for the Colombian Exchange Program; $107.80 to the National Merit Scholarship Committee for linen lost; and $25 to Campus Affairs Committee.

SL also passed, by acclamation, a resolution commending Miss Julia Staples, executive secretary of student government, for six years of faithful service. Miss Staples will retire on May 25.

Representatives absent included: Dershie Bridgeford (UP, TW); Doug Freeman (SP, DM 3); David Henry (UP, TM 3) and Hugo Spechar (SP, DM 4).

Dunne Is Released; Will Return Monday

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A UNC student, sentenced to a year in jail and fined $200 in City Recorder's Court here Wednesday, was released from jail Thursday night on an $800 appeal bond put up by the "Birmingham Movement."

John Dunne, a 20-year-old junior from Brecksville, Ohio, told the DTH last night that he will return to Chapel Hill for classes on Monday. He added that he will return to Birmingham in September when his case will be brought up again.

Dunne was arrested Saturday outside the Birmingham City Jail while helping Negro parents locate their children, who were being released from jail. He was charged with loitering after being warned to leave. Later another charge, refusal to obey the lawful command of an officer, was added.

He was released Sunday on $600 bond, put up by the "Birmingham Movement," pending trial.

On Wednesday, Dunne was convicted on both charges and sentenced to a year in jail and ordered to pay a $200 fine and $5 court costs, 180 days and $100 fine on each count. The sentences are to run consecutively.

Dunne said that Judge H. C. Brown, who had sentenced him on Wednesday, died of a heart attack on Thursday while harranging his lawyers. He noted that his lawyers were trying to get his appeal granted at the time.

GUERILLA FIGHTERS from 19 nations took leave from their training at Ft. Bragg yesterday to visit Chapel Hill and the Carolina campus. The 97 foreign officers are in the United States to learn the techniques of Guerilla fighting. Here several of them walk through the Morehead parking lot on the way to their busses.

Students Will Pay For Dorms, Union

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH—UNC's proposed new dormitory and student union will remain on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis, according to a report made public Thursday by the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee.

The announcement climaxed a long fight by University officials, led by President William Friday, who urged the state to pay for half of the 925-man dorm and half of the new student union.

To support the new dormitory, room rent will be increased $10 per semester next fall. The present rent is $86.50 per semester.

An addition to the heating plant was also placed on a completely self-liquidating basis. Thursday's recommendations mean that the union, dormitory and heating plant addition will pay for themselves.

All three of the units were authorized in the report, but no appropriation was made for them. They will be constructed without state aid if these recommendations become law.

The sub-committee has been meeting secretly since the beginning of this session discussing the University budget. They opened to the public and press Wednesday.

The sub-committee is scheduled to deliver its recommendations to the full committee Tuesday. The full committee is expected to pass the sub-committee's recommendations without major change.

Concerning John Dunne

With final exams less than a week off, can what happens in a town in Alabama—nearly 500 miles away—be important to a student here in Chapel Hill? Last week one UNC student thought so.

Acting on a firmly held conviction, John Dunne left for Birmingham, Alabama. Some of the experiences he met there have been revealed. Most have not. Amid recurrent cries of student apathy and with knowledge he could be charged with glaring exhibitionism, he went to Birmingham.

This would be merely another case of independent student action except for one complication. Dunne is a Morehead Scholar. Chosen by the Morehead Foundation to receive UNC's most prestigious scholarship, Dunne came to UNC eager to participate in campus activities.

The selections committees of the Morehead Foundation showed rare insight into the meaning of leadership when they chose John Dunne. It is seldom they get a leader among the Scholars who shows so clearly as Dunne the qualities of courage and leadership.

The leaders of our generation of "war babies" have new areas and methods of leadership. Instead of debating an issue in the Di-Phi, they act publicly on personal conviction. They believe this is the only kind of leadership which is significant today.

There is often tension and misunderstanding when members of the "older generation" fail to recognize leadership in actions they consider immature or irresponsible. This is an area where there should be more conversations.

One need not agree with Dunne in all of his beliefs to respect and admire him for the conviction and sincerity with which these beliefs are converted into active expression.

We cannot help believing that any action taken against Dunne by the Morehead Foundation for his actions in Birmingham would make a hollow mockery of all in which the Foundation professes to believe.

Mr. Phipps Has A Friend

Tomorrow's issue of the Tar Heel is the last until next fall, and since the state legislature won't be in session then, at least hopefully it won't be, we would like to take this final opportunity to say a few parting words about our good friend Representative Phipps and a few other members of that august body.

First, Mr. Phipps is angry with the House Education Committee for killing his American Legion sponsored bill to require Americanism courses in state high schools. Mr. Phipps says he will investigate methods of getting the bill out of the committee and onto the floor. Apparently Mr. Phipps refuses to take 'no' for an answer when 'no' is clearly the answer.

All we have to do is sit back and wait for the anguished cries of the American Legionnaires, those arrogant high priests of xenophobic nationalism, crying that the House Education Committee is filled with communist dupes and the like. They have been relatively quiet lately, but such obvious aiding and abetting of the insidious communist takeover should rouse them to new heights of irresponsible charge hurling. At least we certainly hope so. We've been getting a little tired of Pogo and Peanuts lately, and feel a definite need for comic relief during this pre-exam period.

While we're on the subject of people who won't take no for an answer, there is the case of another of our enlightened solons, Rep. Sam Whitehurst, of Craven, who has refused to accept the report of CU President Friday and State Chancellor Caldwell concerning the Dixie Classic. The House asked for a report on the feasibility of reinstating the Classic and they got it. Rep. Whitehurst wanted a report that the Classic reinstatement was feasible, and when he got the opposite he got angry and demanded another report. What is poor Mr. Whitehurst going to do after he gets another report?

Obviously Mr. Phipp's Americanism Bill and the Dixie Classic are better off dead and buried, and the efforts of these two exhumers could be better expended on the piles of still pending legislation.

Agenda For '63-'64: A Look At Our (Un)Accomplishments

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Progress is a word of many meanings. It denotes advance along a desired path, improvement of existing conditions, a betterment of either the individual or common lot. But the meaning of progress also should take into account how long the path is, how much farther there is to go, and how much effort it will require. We need to see progress in perspective, and not lose sight of future needs in the light of present accomplishments.

In the past year Chapel Hill has seen "progress" in several areas, concerning the University and the student, but what has been done must stand beside what has been left undone.

The University has added a Fine Arts degree this year—but there are still only 11 students majoring in Creative Art, nine in Music and 11 in Dramatic Art.

Student government has taken the initiative on the writer-in-residence program and has expanded the scope and responsibility of the student judiciary—but to most students, still, student government is a mystery, wrapped in an enigma; and to the administration, it is a bright, but somewhat ornery child.

* * *

A quick UNC overview, looking at the accomplishments of the past year, and the unfinished business of the future:

THE UNIVERSITY

Chapel Hill once was noted for its creativity, for being a small, closely-knit campus which lived and prospered on the undergraduate's search for knowledge and direction. But in recent years the University has been criticized for paying too much attention to research and to graduate specialization, and too little attention to the under-graduate and broad, liberal arts education.

The past several years have seen some improvement in the number of freshmen and sophomores whose courses are taught by graduate students instead of faculty members. In 1950 51.4 per cent of all General College courses were taught by grad students—in 1960, it was 43 per cent, at the end of the last calculable period, it was 41 per cent. The chancellor hopes to eventually reach the position where grad instructors can be hired on an educational, rather than economic, basis—and perhaps then, with more challenging instruction, the University would not lose the interest of so many bright freshmen and sophomores who drop out of school. For this situation, the answer is money for more teachers.

* * *

A more complicated situation, which has become worse, not better, is the amount of over-specialized research going on at the University—often with direction of the projects being taken out of the control of the professors and the University. Hugh Holman, dean of the graduate school, warned recently against the University "slipping into narrow and exclusive specialization." He said basic research should be of first importance, not applied research—and that danger lies in "yielding far too many of the decisions about the special work we undertake to outside agencies in order to gain support for it."

While research increases, the liberal arts have not proportionately suffered. Since the furore caused in 1961 by novelist John Ehle's "What's Wrong with Chapel Hill" attack on creative listlessness, the University has added the Fine Arts degree program, has decided to admit women students as freshmen in certain Fine Arts areas, and has supported and agreed to finance the Writer-in-Residence project, which next year will bring novelist John Knowles to Chapel Hill. We hope the next year will see the arts departments working with student government to successfully return to life the Fine Arts Forum.

* * *

Many of the problems of the University have to do with its ever-increasing enrollment—from 6,000 ten years ago, to 10,000 this year and a predicted 15,000 in 1970. Financially, we are keeping up with this growth—more is being spent on more students (God permitting a substantial portion of the University's budget requests to pass the Legislature this year.) But we are becoming a University where 1400 students have been put in dormitories twenty minutes walk from South Building, and where this trend will continue with a new 900-man dorm next year.

It doesn't seem necessary for the University to exile part of its student body to the far woods. There are wooded areas much closer to the campus—and although we hate to lose woods, we hate even more to lose students. The next year should see more intelligent architectural and goegraphical planning by the University.

The University by its unnecessarily large and distant dormitories has made the student's day-to-day life more difficult. Is it still possible in this leviathan university to have livable living units?—At reasonable costs? In the past year the Administration realized the unfortunate state of all-freshman dormitories and the social and cultural cannibalism they promulgated—and has eliminated the program. Sadly, however, this step forward was balanced by the decision to isolate the entire football team into winter quarters at Ehringhaus.

* * *

THE STUDENTS

The attention of student government has been since March concentrated on the Apartment Rule controversy. The students have based the right of the Women's Residence Council to abolish the rule on the historic precedents of "student autonomy." These are shaky precedents indeed (as in the Doug Moe case in 1961, where the chancellor suspended Moe from school after the Honor Council had found him innocent.) The past year has seen little improvement in the willingness of the administration to trust the student judiciary, but if the compromise negotiations over the apartment rule are successful, the next year could see smoother relations.

The rule controversy has brought up major positive and negative factors traditional in student government. On the one hand, student government leaders have presented their case against the rule with consistency, intelligence and patience—and with a minimum of sloganizing. The most serious objection to the Apartment Rule's elimination, on the other hand, is that student government has not seriously faced the problem of what it wants to put in place of the rule.

If students want no restrictions whatsoever on apartment-visiting privileges, then they should say so, loud and clear—no one has done that. Does student government think any rules of morality should be placed on students—if not, then say so; if so, what are they? Student government has become so preoccupied with the procedural question of who has jurisdiction over this area that the contextual issues have been forgotten. This is an historical reversed-emphasis with students, but one which should be changed.

* * *

The main part of student government's time is still spent in governing, or misgoverning, itself — and thus it cannot fulfill its function to extend the influence of student self-government to the students themselves. This can best be improved by student leaders setting for themselves a few, coherent realizable goals, and devoting full attention to these.

Within student government's demands for "student rights" must come greater concern with the rights of the Negro students on campus. Student government has passed numerous resolutions favoring desegregation, but has actually done little, relative to what could have been done with its resources.

In the past year student government has helped make possible a future increase in Negro enrollment by eliciting a commitment from the admissions office to visit any Negro high school which applies. Letters have been sent to the biggest Negro schools in the state urging them to apply.

There has been no student government assistance in the attempts to fully desegregate Memorial Hospital — and likewise, no real help in the attempt to open all Chapel Hill restaurants to all. This latter situation was brought closer to home last week when a UNC Negro senior was arrested for trespassing at the Patio at the Senior Class party. It might also be a show of guts for someone in the Morehead Scholar-dominated student government to make a public statement on the segregated status of the scholarships.

* * *

Finally, within the student judiciary, the past year has seen an active attorney general's staff still unable to divert some cases which are sent by professors, townspeople and police to the Office of Student Affairs. In general, the judiciary has proved itself more original and responsible this year than in the past.

The honor councils could better serve the system and the students if they would decide more precisely the boundaries of certain violations, however difficult this is. Such a need is shown in the current attempt by students to secure jurisdiction over morals cases, now handled by an administrative committee. The councils should state what they consider to be morals violations, and then — not waiting for administrative approval — proceed to try any cases which come to them.

Since it is now virtually impossible for the councils to make clear what is and is not an offense in borderline areas of the honor and campus codes, it would be beneficial if all trials were "opened" to the Daily Tar Heel next year. The trials would be fully reported, with the council's reasons for its decision, and the facts of the case, but no names printed. A first step toward this was accomplished in the November, 1962 constitutional amendment providing for "open" trials unless the defendant asks otherwise. The defendant has the right to withhold his name from public knowledge, but we do not agree that he equally has the right to withhold from the students the general facts of his case.

* * *

These are but a few of the areas with which the University and the students should be concerned in the next year. This is not even to touch on the architecturally-grotesque buildings which should not be built; the needed reorientation in the student's social life and what Chapel Hill must do to aid this; the progress made by the Forum and other groups in increasing political awareness, and the progress yet to be made in actual political participation.

But this is a beginning, and a sizeable Agenda for 1963 and the future.

No One Should Be Required To Purchase Yack

To The Editors:

Many graduate students feel that you missed the point entirely in your story on Tuesday's sad little book-burning. We don't need our pictures in the Yack, nor do we have anything but respect for the editor who put it out. We do resent having paid, for ourselves and our wives, well over $100 in our few years at UNC for yearbooks; why would we want the copies, when we won't even have room to carry away one for each year?

The issue, then, is simply this: We believe that nobody, be he undergraduate, grad student, or janitor, should be forced to buy a book he neither wants nor needs. Library fees, and other fees necessary to the maintenance of the University, we pay willingly. The Yack and the athletic program, among other things, cannot be justified on these grounds. Sell books and tickets to those who want them, but please don't force us to buy.

Negro Passion

By ERIC SEVAREID

An education in the facts of life and history is in store for those pained by the messy contradictions built into the Negro Passion. Those bewildered at the Negro uprising ("after all, they had made a lot of progress") may learn that this is one of the eternal lessons from past rebellions against oppression.

IT IS NOT when the oppression is most complete that these revolutions begin to revolve, but when concessions are given, hopes are born, light is glimpsed at the end of the dark tunnel. It is when an oppressed people feels close to its goal, not far off from it, that their action becomes frenetic.

Those who are cynical or upset by the moral duality in the Negro phenomenon, by the spectacle of lofty courage and self-sacrifice among the Negro leaders, side by side with the spectacle of spreading crime and moral squalor in the slum-bound masses of the Negro poor, may learn that the first is a direct reflection of the second, its natural, not its unnatural partner. Desperation, like war, ennobles some among its victims and debases others. No true people's revolution was ever neat, clean or devoid of sad anomalies.

If the Negro Passion of today is not a true people's revolution, it is as close to one as we have ever known in our land.

University Presses

University Presses of the Nation serve functions—to publish significant works not profitable to the commercial press; to publish academic books which contribute to an understanding of human affairs in the arts or the sciences; to publish results of scholarship in the region served by the university and to serve the university in many ways.

Some 75 university presses now produce nearly nine per cent of the 18,000 new books issued each year in the United States. In 1961 their sales totaled $12 million, according to the American Book Publishers Council.

Most university press publications come from 41 presses which belong to the Association of American University Presses. Among these are 11 presses at Southern universities—Duke, Florida, Georgia, John Hopkins, Kentucky, Louisiana State, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Southern Methodist and Texas.

One of the first purposes of the university press was to keep alive regional culture and regional points of view in this country.

YRC's See Session

Three UNC students representing the Young Republicans Club spoke before a legislative hearing of the Constitutional Committee in Raleigh Friday in favor of the current proposed amendment to permit 18-year-old citizens to vote.

Charles Hooks, president of the YRC, Jane Hill, secretary, and Bill Patterson each spoke for about ten minutes during the hour-long hearing.

The amendment, introduced by Rep. J. Horner Stockton of Franklin and Sen. Charles Strong of Guilford, both Republicans, has met with much controversy in the past month.

Love Poems Can Take Three Different Kinds Of Themes

This is the third of a series of four articles on the recent Response Conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Fine Arts" at Princeton University.

By STEPHEN DENNIS

The Saturday afternoon Poetry Panel of the Princeton Response Conference took place in the Princeton Gymnasium. There were plenty of seats, and members of the audience wandered in and out at will. The atmosphere was informal, and on one occasion, a member of the audience was allowed to assume the rostrum in order to read one of his poems into the session.

The four members of the panel were Jack Gilbert, Muriel Rukeyser, Richard Eberhart, and Howard Nemerov. Mr. Eberhart was the moderator, but the texture of the afternoon consisted of ten- or fifteen-minute readings by each poet of personal selections from his works.

Eberhart read "The Fury of Aerial Bombardment," "The Horse-Chestnut Tree," and "If I Could Live At the Peak of Madness."

Miss Rukeyser read "Song," "Water-Lily Fire," and 'Effort at Speech Between Two People." She is very personal in her poetry.

Gilbert read several short poems, including "The Abnormal is Not Courage," what he termed an anti-Kirk Douglas poem. This was written against all that Gilbert considers specious in American life, all that is form without substance.

Gilbert described three types of love poems: the one which say "I want you;" the one which says "Come back;" and the one which says "You're awful."

After readings, members of the audience were allowed to ask questions. One young girl wondered if Eberhart's remarks before his poems indicated that they were not capable of standing by themselves, if some explication were necessary for the reader to be able to understand and enjoy them. Eberhart parried the question nicely, saying that he considered a program where only poetry would be read too severe for an audience.

Eberhart advised another girl who asked why there is a loss of innocence to read and contrast William Blake's "Songs of Innocence" and "Songs of Experience."

A girl wanted to know if Miss Rukeyser ever experiences problems during the composition of her very intensely personal poetry in the choice between a word which has meaning for her and one which will have less meaning, but which will convey a better feeling of her meaning to readers. One young man asked the perennial question: how does a poet make a living? The answers were as varied as the means described.

Gilbert raised the question of whether "cultured" man is really cultured. He believes that we are achieving a high level of mediocrity today. He said that people can no longer see any difference between "nice" poetry and crucial poetry.

Rialto Theater Ends Segregation

The Rialto Theatre in Durham opened its doors to Negroes yesterday—two months after picket lines were withdrawn March 13 for a period of negotiations.

Ten days of picketing by the Durham chapters of the NAACP and CORE ceased March 13 while Miss Magie Dent, theatre manager and former UNC-YWCA secretary, negotiated with Charles Abercrombie, owner of the movie equipment used by the theatre.

Miss Dent will meet this Monday with Abercrombie to make arrangements to buy the equipment or sign a new lease which would delete the clause requiring that the equipment be used only in a segregated theatre.

DKE's Blues Beat Navy For Net Title

The DKE Blue captured All-Campus tennis honors yesterday, shutting out the Navy BT's, 3-0, in a match which took two days to complete.

Actually the Dekes clinched the crown Thursday afternoon by taking both of the singles matches. The doubles were played yesterday to make it official.

In singles action, Ed Murrey dropped John Newcomb, 6-1, 6-3, and Lyons Gray outlasted Gene Corpening, 6-4, 9-7.

Ben Willis and John Edgerton teamed in the doubles to stop Bill Poteat and Bill Criswell, 6-2, 6-2.

Playmakers Take Slap At Selves

By GORDON CLARK

The Carolina Playmakers will gather wigs, sharp tongues, jokes in poor taste and pent-up emotions for their annual slap at themselves in the Playmakers Theatre tonight at 8:00 p.m.

Open to the public, Capers of '63 will be a satirical review of the Playmakers theatre season, followed by the presentation of awards to a chosen few.

An annual spoof at drama department students and faculty members, Capers is independently written, staged and directed by bitter theatre students. One Capers writer referred to the show as "a more effective purgative than any laxative on the market today."

Students producing Capers have been guaranteed immunity to any reprisals by department and Playmaker heads.

Skits on the program, each one a take-off on a regular season show, are "Kais and Dolls," "Tobacco Rhoda," "Bull," "The Acid Garden" and "ZZZ-ZZZ-zzz."

Following the satirical part of the program, The Carolina Playmakers will present Mask Awards, Master Awards and the Alumnal Award. Award winners will not be announced until that time.

The program is open to the public, and there is no admission charge.

Navy, DKE, Physics Teams Win Awards

By STUART BALL

Navy, DKE and Physics took top honors in the Dorm, Fraternity and Grad division point system awards presented Thursday night by the Intramural Department.

In the Dormitory Division, Navy became only the second team since 1947 to vault over the 1,000 point mark as they amassed 1,011 total points.

Manager Bob Bolan accepted the trophy for Navy and was largely credited with improving their third place finish of last year. In addition to the overall championship the middies also took first places in track, badminton and tennis.

DKE and Phi Delta Theta turned the Fraternity Blue and White races into a two team affair with the winner not being decided until the semi-final rounds of softball and tennis were played last Tuesday.

DKE emerged the victor in both divisions with 1,105 points in the Blue league and 816 in the White. Phi Delt's second place finishes were 1,073 and 792 points.

Last year the same two fraternities fought an even closer race with the Phi Delts winning the Blue crown by 32 points and DKE taking the White title by four points.

In the Grad division the winner was never in doubt. Physics took an early lead and kept adding to it until it was mathematically impossible for anyone else to win.

The Physicists ran their total to 1,004 points. Second-place Law School was 135 points off the pace with 865.

Other awards presented were the Kay E. Lewis Memorial Award for outstanding managers, the Grail Award for outstanding individual participation and the Walter Rabb Organizational Participation Award.

Sam Shapiro of Everett, Bob Franks of Sigma Phi Epsilon and Jack Rugheimer of Physics were cited as the year's outstanding managers.

Navy's Jon Lancaster, DKE's Ed Murrey, Gene Clayton of Peacocks and Rugheimer were named by the Order of the Grail as the year's outstanding individual participants.

The Walter Rabb trophy went to Everett, DKE and Law School.

Dorm Group Meets

The Committee on Dormitory Affairs, formed to represent dorm residents and encourage participation and social activity has held its organizational meeting.

John Roney, Social Chairman of Joyner dorm, was elected president. He pledged his best effort on behalf of the dormitory and its residents.

He said, "I hope that all dormitory residents will support this organization and the principles which it represents, as this is the only way that we in the dormitories can get the consideration of our problems which we believe we deserve."

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

MANY WORDS HAVE gone down in these pages about the accomplishments of Coach Don Skakle's UNC tennis team this season. Next month, the squad will try to further its experience and awards on new and greater horizons.

Four of UNC's "big six" starters will go with Skakle to the Eastern Interscholastic Championships at Colgate University in Hamilton, N. Y. There, June 9-15, Keith Stoneman, Ted Hoehn, Bitsy Harrison and Charlie Shaffer will face players from all up and down the eastern seaboard.

George Sokol, ACC singles champion for the past two years, will pass up the Easterns to practice for the national championships at Princeton, N. J. a week later. O. H. Parrish, the sophomore who completes Carolina's fine tennis "set" is said to be staying in Chapel Hill to attend summer school.

"I feel we will be very strong in the Easterns," Skakle said earlier this week. "I don't know whether Miami will be there. They weren't up there two years ago when we went. A team picks up points from the first round in the Easterns, and this will help us considerably."

The next week, June 17-23, Sokol will join Skakle and his four teammates at Princeton for the big tournament.

The UNC coach will then have to decide whom to play where, since the NCAA allows but four men from a team in its singles competition. He will also, of course, have to leave off one man in the doubles to make the two teams allowed.

The word is that the United States' Davis Cup team boys will have to skip the nationals to go to Iran for the interzone match. If this is the case, guys like Art Ashe and Dennis Ralston from USC and Charlie Pasarell of UCLA will be missing at the Princeton tourney.

But there is another conflicting report out that Ashe, Ralston and Pasarell will not be released by their respective schools to play in the Davis Cup match. Instead, we will send Gene Scott, Don Dell and Alan Fox to play in Iran.

This will enable the California collegians to play at Princeton where UNC will have its hands full.

Skakle has said that, without the Cup men competing, his netters "would have as good a chance as anybody to win it all." But, now, it looks like there will be a tougher row to hoe.

THE CAROLINAS AAU track meet in Raleigh tonight will finally end the long, drawn-out spring sport season for UNC.

Coach Joe Hilton is sending his entire group over to the meet to compete as a club from the school. After this, any competition engaged in by individuals will be entirely on their own.

The NCAA Track and Field Championships are at the University of New Mexico June 13-15, but this appears to be too long a trek for any of the Carolina boys.

The AAU's national meet will be the following week in St. Louis, Mo., and hurdler Jim Brown, a St. Louis boy, may compete. Brown, it is reported, will definitely make it to Houston for the National Track and Field Federation meet.

Several UNC track and field men will probably compete in various meets during the summer. Ohio and New Jersey are states which usually have many AAU-sanctioned meets where guys perform through attachment to their hometown track clubs.

Greensboro holds an annual Olympic Development Meet every summer, and Hilton will probably stage several small meets at UNC also.

LARRY BROWN AND Joe Craver carried off seven awards between them as UNC closed its doors on 1963 athletics this week.

Brown got the Jeff Thomas Award (the school's outstanding athlete on the basis of ability and sportsmanship), the Mrs. Dorothy O'Sullivan Award (highest free throw percentage) and the Educational Foundation Award (as his sport's outstanding senior).

Craver took four honors: the Patterson Medal (ability, sportsmanship, morals and campus leadership), the William F. Prouty Award (all-round leader and athlete), and the ACC Senior Scholarship Award (excellence in academics and athletics) and the Educational Foundation award.

Skakle To Lose 'Pit Crew' When Jones, Cocke Leave

In an appreciative and sorrowful goodbye, tennis player Ted Hoehn writes today a memorial article on the prestigious graduating organization known as the "Pit Crew."

By TED HOEHN

Coach Don Skakle's tennis team swept everything in sight this past weekend in the ACC Championships as they amassed a new record of 37 points—bettering last season's mark by ten.

The nearest contender, Clemson, managed only 11 points.

With just one senior in the starting six, the outlook is even brighter for next spring. Keith Stoneman, the regular number six man who played so brilliantly in the ACC tournament, will graduate. The rest—Sokol, Hoehn, Shaffer, Harrison and Parrish—will be back in action next year.

But besides Stoneman, something else will be lacking when the powerful racketmen take the courts next March. There will no no longer be a "Pit."

To the casual observer, this is inconsequential. What is the "Pit?" they ask. But those close to the team shudder at the thought of not having a "Pit Crew."

Three years ago, this unique orzanization got its name when Kirby Jones was placed in the number three singles spot in order that the bottom three men would have weaker opponents. Thus, Jones was "thrown to the lions" on court three, and hence that court was known as the "Pit Court."

The following year, as an overflow of freshmen talent moved up to the varsity, the "Pit Crew" moved down to court six. Kirby, Jones, Stan Cocke, DAVE MORGAN, Garland Carlton, Sam Applegate and others took turns there fighting off the visiting team's caboose.

This year, with sophomore O. H. Parrish in the lineup, the "Pit" moved right off the court and onto a shaded area down behind the number six court. However, when the opposition wasn't too potent, Coach Skakle called on his stars of yesteryear to take court six and vanquish the poor visitors. On these days, the crowd usually ignored the first few matches and hustled down to the last court to see their "old warriors" in action.

Indeed, it's a sad thought to think of losing the likes of a Kirby Jones and a stanley Cocke. Not only will their tennis talent be missed, but their moral support as well.

"They are really great sportsmen," Coach Skakle said of these two boys. "They gave me 100 per cent on and off the court and they will be sorely missed next year."

"I cry every time I think of them leaving," said Rosemary Edgar, a Carolina co-ed who rarely missed a practice—let alone a match. "I don't know what the team will do without them."

Due to a lack of sufficient candidates, the "Pit" will be dissolved. Jones and Cocke expressed a deep concern over their inability to come up with but one solid replacement —Sam Applegate — and therefore they decided to discontinue this prestigious organization.

Later this week in a secret ceremony, the founder-president Jones, and the chairman of the board Cocke, will place a plaque on the fence adjacent to court six. The inscription will read:

"In Memory of the 'Pit.' Smoking Prohibited."

So, as you can see, Coach Skakle does have a few worries for next year. He has to find a replacement for Stoneman, and he needs a new source of moral support once so ably supplied by the renowned "Pitmen," "Little General" Jones and "Colonel" Cocke.

Rabbites Win

UNC's baseball team won the hypothetical Big Four race this season, posting a combined 5-2 record over Wake Forest, Duke and N.C. State.

After dropping the first two, to Duke and Wake, the Tar Heels rolled off five straight victories, topping State and Wake twice and Duke once.

The Blue Devils finished with a 4-2 mark in the Big Four. The Deacons, ACC champs, were 3-4 and the Wolfpack was 1-5.

The Tar Heels, who won their last seven games and 10 of their last 13, enjoyed roast beef and the pleasing sounds of Chancellor House's harmonica at their year-end dinner Thursday night at the Carolina Inn.

Senior outfielders Heyward Hull and Buddy Tilden were the recipients of awards. Hull, a pharmacy student from Shelby, received the Educational Foundation Award as the top senior on the team.

Tilden, team co-captain and a native of Wilmington, was honored with the S. H. Basnight Award as the outstanding player.

Frosh Show Good Promise

North Carolina's freshman tennis and baseball teams compiled 11-1 and 9-10 records respectively this spring, and both coaches are optimistic about the varsity chances of their Tar Baby charges.

Coach Al Hunt's netters lost only to the Duke Blue Imps and varsity mentor Don Skakle has nothing but high hopes for the boys whose job it will be to fill the shoes of Skakle's current "untouchables," most of whom graduate in 1964.

Sparking the team this season was Carl Evans, who defeated teammate Kenny Oettinger in the finals of the ACC frosh championships. Andy Goddard, Don Long and Chip Ruday were other "big rungs" in Coach Hunt's ladder.

Coach Bill Lovingood's first-year diamond crew did not fare quite so well in the won-and-lost column, but this is not to say that there are no varsity prospects.

Like their varsity counterparts, the Tar Babies were strong on the mound. Lovingood, himself a hurler (he holds the ACC earned run average record, 0.58 for Wake Forest in 1957), is high on his "big four," composed of Mike McLoughlin, Buddy Cohoon, Beattie Leonard and Robert Walker.

Footballer Jim Harrington, who did not join the team until after spring football drills, also classifies as a pitcher to watch.

The team's weakness was undoubtedly hitting the team batting average hovering just below the .200 mark. The Tar Babies suffered through one no-hitter, thrown by three pitchers for Wilmington Junior College in a 17-0 rout.

Leading the regulars were second sacker Alan McArthur, third baseman Gene Link, and outfielders Bob Hume and Bob Bonczek. The first three of these are all football players and did not join the squad until after spring practice was over.

Budget Completed; $4,200 Left Over

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Friday completed action on the 1963-64 Student Government budget, allocating $161,148.84 and leaving an unappropriated balance of $4,267.08. Last year's balance was approximately $2600.

Campus organizations will have to pay $10 more for a page in next year's Yackety-Yack, according to a motion approved by SL Thursday night. The raise in cost, to $80 a page, will net the Yack an estimated $1340 increase in income. Legislature also cut $430 from the printing cost, ordering the Yack to print 100 fewer copies next year.

Reporting staff salaries for the Daily Tar Heel were increased $200 along with estimated local advertising income ($500), while printing costs were reduced $285, giving SL a return of $585.

An appropriation of $520 for the Senior Class of 1964 was shifted around, giving $140 to the gift to the University; $280 for the Senior Day Special and $100 for Alumni Club encouragement.

An $18 request for the Student Athletic Council was deleted in its entirety, while the appropriation for the Amateur Radio Club was chopped $50.

* * *

The following are the total appropriations approved for campus organizations for next year: General Administration $5830; Academic Affairs $180; Attorney General's Staff $50; Audit Board $10; Carolina Forum $2245; Communications Committee $240;

Elections Board $200; Executive Secretary $1200; Honor System Commission $115; International Students Board $5828;

National Merit Scholarship $200; National Student Association Campus Committee $1226; Orientation Committee $1880; State Affairs $450; Student Affairs $6.75 and the Toronto Exchange $506.

Also Jim Tatum Memorial Award $17; Student Government Self-Help Scholarship $200; Summer School Contingency Fund $75; Typewriter Maintenance Fund $235; Student Legislature $285; IDC $3090; WRC $459; Men's Council $180;

Women's Council $35; CWC $505; Consolidated University Student Council $350; Publications Board $13; Carolina Handbook $3,483.50; Carolina Quarterly $1905; Daily Tar Heel $31,599; Yackety Yack $32,453; Senior Class $520; and WAA $105.

Also Victory Village Board of Alderman $600; Amateur Radio Club $146; UNC Band $1230; Carolina Symposium $3100; Cosmopolitan Club $95; Debate team $2100; Glee Club $1510; and Graham Memorial $55,138.64.

Architecture Doesn't Have A Following

This is the last of a series of four articles on the recent Response Conference on "The Pursuit of Excellence in the Fine Arts" at Princeton University.

By STEPHEN DENNIS

What is wrong with American architecture today? This was the subject of the afternoon panel on architecture at the Princeton Response Conference. The panel was held in Alexander Hall at Princeton, a building which was greeted by the members of the panel as an "old friend." Panel members Philip Johnson, Raul Rudolph, I. M. Pei, and Aline Saarinen (the widow of Eiro Saarinen) began the discussion by saying the four had agreed to attempt to simulate one of the frequent discussion which the group has together about architecture, this time with an audience.

The panel opened with a consideration of the problem of the patron in contemporary American architecture. Johnson said, "We have no patrons," meaning no patrons in the sense that the Medici were patrons in Florence. Mrs. Saarinen added that the best patrons today are anonymous.

Rudolph believes one person should be ultimately responsible for even a large complex of buildings, that we are hedging with our armies of consultants. Saarinen stated with cynical realism that all good patrons are trying to have monuments to themselves built. She added that it is the duty of an architect to try to educate his patrons so they will order good monuments.

Then the discussion shifted to the new Pam Am Building in New York. Johnson said no one really wanted it where it is, but that the architects were foiled in their hopes for a park by "scoundrels." Mrs. Saarinen said the Pan Am space was rented before the building was built by making it a prestige building designed by prestige architects.

All members of the panel regretted the decision to raze Pennsylvania Station, saying that it would be impractical in the future to build such a building again.

Rudolph said urban renewal acts do not work in the United States because they ultimately lead to speculation, generally by one firm. Mrs. Saarinen then asked what power the public has in such matters, whether there were any distinction between architecture as art and architecture which isn't. She doesn't think there is any difference.

Rudolph stated "What we need to know is how to add to existing things without ruining them and how modern architects can build next to each other."

Johnson said gleefully "there hasn't been any cultural explosion" — there has been an implosion at Princeton. He believes it has been the same problem with other great universities.

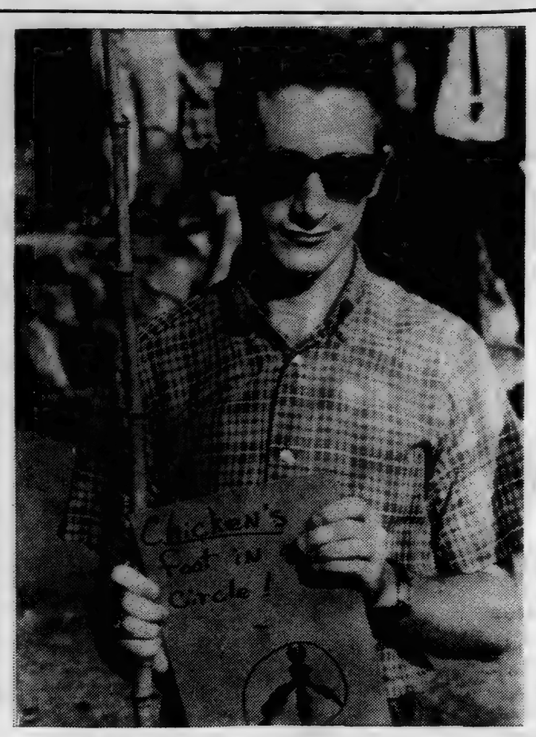
Rudolph said art appreciation is fine "if you can't think of anything else to do, but it won't help architecture." He added, "In the long run I would say that art pays." This was in answer to a question about the problem of sacrificing efficiency to art.

Pei was silent through most of the discussion, but Johnson and Rudolph made frequent comments about him and works which he has designed.

Carmichael's Assistants To Leave

Miss Nancy Adams and Mrs. J. M. Alexander, assistants to the Dean of Women, are leaving the office of the Dean of Women, Dr. Katherine Carmichael announced "with regret" yesterday.

Miss Adams plans to spend a year abroad and Mrs. Alexander plans to resume graduate studies in the area of personnel.



Miss Adams is a 1959 graduate of UNC. Before returning to Carolina, she taught for two years and was Director of Volunteer Services of the Mental Health Society of Greater Miami.

Mrs. Alexander is a 1958 graduate of Duke. She has taught in Scotland and worked in personnel in New York and Charlotte.

For the summer, Miss Ella Jean Shore, a graduate student in the department of English, will replace Mrs. Alexander. Miss Shore holds an A.B. from The College of William and Mary and the M. R. E. from Duke Divinity School.

Mrs. George Hand, who is at present teaching at Carr Junior High in Durham, will replace Miss Adams for the summer. Mrs. Hand is a graduate of the University of Missouri.

Permanent appointments will be announced later.

Ministers, Women Join Arms Protest

The UNC Air Force ROTC observed Armed Forces Day with retreat ceremonies yesterday, but they had some company.

Members of the Student Peace Union (SPU) and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (WILPF) preceded the band and drill team in protest of the Armed Forces. Included in the group were several children and two ministers.

The parade began at ROTC headquarters at 4:45 p.m. and proceeded down Raleigh St. to Franklin St. The units turned west and marched to the post office, where the flag was lowered. At least a dozen policemen were stationed at various points along the route.

Led by SPU chairman Pat Cusick, the protesters marched in front of the band, the groups separated by a motorcycle policeman. Carrying signs proclaiming "A Peaceful World is a Disarmed World" and "When Will We Ever Learn", the group formed silently across the street during the flag-lowering ceremonies.

As the procession approached the post office, a group from Ruffin dormitory, carrying anti-SPU signs, joined the march. A foreign car with a sign "SPU-RED" drove alongside.

Each group was warned by its leaders to avoid the other. Cusick told the peace marchers, "don't smoke, don't talk and don't leave the group", while the AFROTC commander, Capt. Lawrence D. Garrison, told the drill team to "just ignore them."

Although there were cries of "Communists" and "anti-American" from the spectators lining the route, there were no incidents. The crowd was estimated at approximately 1000.

Clergymen Ask Mayor To Seek Integration

Twenty of Chapel Hill's twenty-three ministers have signed a letter to Mayor Sandy McClamroch Jr., urging that he take immediate steps to end local segregation.

The letter suggests that a committee be formed to "be charged with the responsibility of without further delay removing all policies in both government and business which deny rights and services because of race."

Of the three who did not sign it, the Reverend Frank Perry of the Lutheran Church was in California, and the Reverend Clyde McCarter and Father Francis Murphy felt unable to sign it, according to Charles M. Jones, pastor of the Community Church.

Senior Award Winners Are Announced

Wayne King, Walter Dellinger, Donna Bailey, Ralph Mosely and Mack Armstrong were the recipients of awards to outstanding Seniors announced yesterday by the Office of Student Affairs.

King was chosen as the recipient of the Earnest H. Abernathy Award, which is given to "the member of the Senior Class who has made the most significant contribution in the area of student publications."

Dellinger has been chosen as the recipient of the John Johnston Parker, Jr. Award, which is a medal given annually to "that member of the graduating class who has demonstrated most clearly the highest qualities of leadership in perpetuating the spirit of honor and the process of student self-government."

Mosely and Miss Bailey were chosen as the recipients of the Algernon Sidney Sullivan Award by a special committee appointed by the chancellor. The award is given to "the one man and woman of the graduating class who have best demonstrated an unselfish interest in the welfare of their fellow man."

Dean Sitterson Agrees

New Duties For Advisors Said Academic Necessity

Orientation Reappraisal Being Urged

By BILL WUAMETT

In 1961 a faculty committee reported the University did not offer "a thoroughly desirable climate for satisfactory academic achievement," and that the ". . . need for change is more striking at the freshman level . . ."

Since that time, a number of changes have been made in the freshman program and in the General College as a whole. Among these changes has been a reduction in the ratio of students to advisors.

A report released last week by the Academic Affairs Committee, however, calls for further changes. Among the report's suggestions were:

1. A reduction in the student-advisor ratio to 40-1.

2. An expanded and better organized Undergraduate Bulletin, so that students can more intelligently select courses before they register with their advisors.

3. More faculty participation in orientation, helping students to know their advisors, and aiding in the direction of student interests toward academic pursuits.

Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson of the General College, the administrator responsible for the advisors, says he is in agreement with most of the proposals of the student committee.

"It's easier to agree with their conclusions, however, than it is to find ways to implement them," Dean Sitterson said yesterday.

The basic problem, he says, is finding men who are capable of filling the job of advisor, and who are willing to devote the time needed to counsel more than 100 students.

"The advisor's role essentially is helping the student define his problems and the solutions open to him. But this is really the role of all advisors, whether their advisees are students or adults."

Working within these limitations, a number of changes have been made in the General College which are in line with the recommendations of the Academic Affairs Committe.

Freshmen advisors, Sitterson said, now counsel about 100 students a semester, and he believes this number is not too large a ratio ideally for advisors to handle.

This reduction from a former ratio of 200-1 has been made possible by transferring first semester sophomores to advisors in their major departments.

These students are transferred in the spring of their freshman year and become acquainted more quickly with the type of work offered in these departments.

Dean Sitterson requires that each advisor meet with his freshmen advisees as a group at the first of the fall semester. After this meeting the advisor is required to see each student at least twice more

Foreign Students Like It Here--To Their Surprise

By BOB SAMSOT

There is no stereotype of the foreign student on the UNC campus.

A random sampling of students from all over the globe who are attending UNC showed differing opinions in almost everything from evaluation of the political system to the opinion of the American student.

Hassan Bahlouli, Morocco, admires the political system of this country and thinks it is the best one for this particular country's personality. He hopes "someday many of the good aspects of this country's government can be applied to my country. I admire the spirit of democracy and have felt freer here than in my own country."

Maria Elena Bravo, Spain, thinks the system is "suitable for the people of the U.S. but I don't think it would be the best for people everywhere. Of course I don't like politics anywhere, anyway," she added.

Marguerite Bou-Raad, Lebanon, thinks that we have here the best system and that our representation has proven most successful. "However," she addds, "unless the people have a good education, there is not a good democracy." She likes the American constitution because of its flexibility.

Terence Yen, China, thinks the two-party system is good beause it keeps both sides in the open, and "both praise and criticism are heard. This is the only way for a nation to improve." He thinks the American system should and could be adopted in all countries.

Abdo Bardawil, Lebanon, thinks that the American system is fair but is "dismayed to see the states have so much power that they can challenge the national government." He also thinks that the two-party system is good but that it obscures the smaller parties and factions.

Giorgio Dall'aglio, Italy, says Americans judge other countries too much on what they themselves do. He says they have the wrong ideas at times in world politics. "Their fear of communism is out of proportion," he says, "and this observes many issues from them."

Lucie Garcia, Cuba, says, of the American political system, "I admire it greatly and have great faith in it."

Economic System and Foreign Aid

Most students are agreed that foreign aid is a highly necessary thing. They think that without it there can be no development in the world to the magnitude there is today. Most are highly in favor of the Peace Corps.

Arnold Kroner, Germany, says that even if the foreign aid shows no immediate effects we should persist and keep it up. "Even if the country in question is not at once swayed by the good will, perhaps your continuing unselfishness will sway it."

Edwin Okoroma, Nigeria, the first Black African to attend UNC, admires this country's economic system and especially the social security and welfare programs. He thinks that the foreign aid program should go more for the technological training of students than the spending in raw cash. He thinks both the U. S. and other countries would benefit more by this method.

Terence Yen points out that this is the only country rich enough to give away money. He thinks that both raw money and training are equally important. Marguerite Bou-Raad agrees with him. She says that without the aid, some countries would not be able to expand and develop. She thinks Americans seem to always think about the bad points of Foreign Aid and tend to forget things such as medical aid and schools, which are of lasting value. Of the Peace Corps, "It's good even if it doesn't help anyone but the people participating in it. You can't help loving a people you work with," she said.

Hassan Bahlouli says the policy of distribution of money should be changed. "The problem is how to distribute," he said. "But the money should come as loans, not outright gifts. The American people must learn that you can't buy friends."

The Student And The University

Hassan says that there is a major difference in the students of this country and those of Morocco. "Here the students are pretty contented to get out of school and do as well as 'daddy' does. But in Morocco, we must do much better than our daddies. There the student is the elite. It is the student who will hopefully be the better leaders of years to come. They are the yeast of society." But there is one thing that Hassan was amazed at when he came here and admires very much. "The students here are not afraid to use their hands," he says. "They are not afraid to get down and work with their hands and their backs, a thing which the students of my country think they are above doing. I guess it's the pioneer spirit. I think it's good."

Most students point out that the University is different than their university at home, but because of different reasons.

Michele Wiederkehr, France says that the American student is less mature than the European student. She finds the American University

After Year As Scholar Here

Parisienne Has New Picture Of U. S.

By DIANE HILE

"It has been exciting to live through the Cuban crisis while in the United States and extremely sad to see the events of Mississippi and Alabama," said Beatrice Lang, Tours Scholar from Paris, France.

"Living in America has given me a better understanding of its motivations and I realize better the complexity of these problems which are distorted by propaganda outside of this country."

"I do not think that since my arrival in this country (in August 1962) that I have had any big shock or surprise," she said, "but I can say that my understanding of the United States has become more complex than when I first came."

Miss Lang has spent one academic year at Carolina. She has taken American novel and literature, German drama and literature, British history and is auditing several other courses. In France she is working toward a double major in English and German.

During her stay she lived in McIver Dorm and ate her meals at the different sorority houses, a different one each month. Besides attending classes, she visited many families in Chapel Hill and a great number of North Carolina communities.

"I have been surprised to discover a form of sentimentality and pseudo-puritanism in modern American society," she said. "It is certainly different from the picture we get from the Hollywood films and from the tourists.

"Americans are extremely hospitable and friendly, and for a foreigner it is a comforting feeling. In the United States you immediately feel at home. This does not imply that everyone has become your friend for life — that would be impossible.

"In the outgoingness of the average American there seems to me a great deal of artificiality, or rather superficiality," said Miss Lang. "However, when I leave this country I shall leave a few real friends — and that is a wonderful feeling.

"I have discovered that the life some students lead here is as remote from reality as it sometimes is in France. Also the studies in an American University are somewhat harder than we imagine abroad.

Students in the undergraduate level are much more specialized in France, so the estimation level are much more specialized in France, so the estimation that French students are two years ahead of American students is quite true. On the graduate level this difference disappears.

"Here there is an emphasis on assigned readings that I have had not time for outside readings. Papers are very short and not quite as theoretical as in France.

The extra-curricular activities are good. There are some inconveniences to it and in France we often have the impression that American college life consists only of extra curricular activities. Another characteristic I like is the student government. I have the greatest respect for the work it accomplishes."

During the summer Miss Lang will tour the United States and then return to France in the fall. It is her hope that the tour will complement everything she has learned about America at Carolina.

"I know that I have neglected many fields of interest," she said, "but if I had done and had seen everything at one time there would be no reason for me to ever come again to this country."

Fine Arts Festival Revival Is Planned

By JOEL BULKLEY

A revival of Carolina's Fine Arts Festival, a month-long salute to the creative arts, has been tentatively scheduled for the spring of 1965, according to Student Body Vice-President Bob Spearman.

Spearman outline the proposed program, stating that the month of April would probably be set aside to emphasize the creative arts and would include a week's program of student participation in plays, art shows, seminars and concerts.

He added that it would also include outside speakers, artists and critics and would be run on alternate years with the Carolina Symposium.

He said that the purpose of the program would be to acquaint the student body as a whole with the performing and creative arts and that this would help tie the different departments — art, drama, English, music, RTVMP, and journalism—together.

Spearman said that, "In the past few years there has been a lot of discussion and concern over the position of the fine arts at the University. It has been pointed out that in many areas we now seem to be falling behind other North Carolina institutions in the attention and the financial support given to the fine arts program."

He cited the Faculty Council's recent decision to establish a Fine Arts degree as an important step to the revitalization of the entire program here.

During the past few weeks there has been discussion about reestablishing the Fine Arts Festival which was active here in the early 1940's. The festival functioned in somewhat the same manner as the Symposium, bringing outstanding figures in music, art and literature to the campus, Spearman said.

Spearman said that two meetings of department heads (RTVMP, Drama, Art, Music, Journalism and English) and interested students have been held recently to begin mapping plans for the Festival.

The Senior President Writes Us A Letter

Senior Class President Richard Vinroot has decided to join that small, hollow-headed group of braying asses who build large and loud arguments on misunderstanding, half-truths and ignorance.

Witness Mr. Vinroot's letter appearing on this page.

Vinroot claims that the DTH is a good small town daily, vainly trying to cover national news instead of campus news about future senior class combo parties. We confess that we don't posses the acute insight that has vaulted Mr. Vinroot to the dizzying heights of Senior Class President, and we therefore missed the point that the combo party was more news worthy than the arrest of 800 Birmingham students.

Vinroot also says that we assume all students read the Tar Heel. We make no such assumption, but it does seem strange to us that a self-professed campus leader makes no effort to find out what is going on in his own back yard. Mr. Vinroot has given every indication that he has enjoyed his blissful ignorance, that is up to the time his ignorance caused embarrassment for the senior class and Mr. Vinroot.

Mr. Vinroot goes further and states that seniors got their invitations a week in advance and that the editors had ample time to point out the problem with the Patio. It does seem pointless, since neither of the editors are seniors and received no invitation.

As to the wholly unfounded charge that the Tar Heel badgered Mr. Williams into signing the warrants, let us point out that the Tar Heel called Mr. Williams twice, both times after the warrants had been drawn up. It is also interesting to note that prior to the senior class officers grave concern and talk with the Patio manager, a UNC professor called the Patio to ask if charges couldn't be dropped. He was told that the warrants were signed at the insistence of the owner and was then verbally abused for not minding his own business. Mr. Vinroot should have taken some time of his own to find out what was going on. It might have saved Messrs. Carson and Lamont, the senior class and Mr. Vinroot a great deal of trouble.

With the leadership qualities he has displayled in this situation, we question not only how he became Senior Class President, but how he ever became a senior. A man, supposed to be student leader, who can spend four years in Chapel Hill and still have not the foggiest notion of what is going on around him, distinguishes himself only for his stupidity.

Stand Up, Leader!

We were pleased to see that a large majority of Chapel Hill's ministers have seen fit to go on record against the ungodly practice of segregation and in favor of immediate steps to end same.

What we were not pleased to see was that one minister chose not to take any stand because he didn't think he should concern himself with the issue since his church was already integrated.

This type of thinking represents just the sort of closed-mindedness that we feel often applies to the other side.

It will certainly not aid in the struggle when one of the "pillars of the community" does not have the intestinal fortitude to use his position of leadership in an attempt to lead his fellow men out of the tar pit into which they have fallen.

We would like to add our support to the clergyman's request with the hope that when this paper resumes publication in the fall, we may be able to focus our attention on the town of Chapel Hill without always seeing somewhere a menacing "white only" sign or a similar unwritten policy of shame and injustice.

Otelia's New Status

Since Otelia Connor assumes the official position of Arbiter of Orientation Manners next year she becomes a member of that happy group in the administration on which the DTH can happily unload at the slightest provocation. This is to warn Otelia that as of September she becomes fair game, and to give her a slight taste of what she can expect.

She recently sent us a letter on the apartment rule in which she explained about all the evils of complete student autonomy, the student's relation to the faculty and all the other questions previously covered.

It seemed to us that we had heard her arguments before and upon checking, found them to be the same arguments expressed by the President of Notre Dame as quoted in Time.

We were hoping she would say something on her own.

Vinroot's Letter

To the Editors:

It seems quite interesting to me that the Editors of the DTH and other "interested" seniors (e.g. 206 Winston) simply assume that each and every student in the university reads "our" newspaper. Let me answer this by giving several personal views.

I have considered "our" beloved DTH nothing more than a good small town "daily", concerning itself primarily with world and National affairs — much less adequately than the Charlotte Observer, which may be purchased in Lenoir Hall or Y-court at a cost of 10c. Campus affairs don't seem to interest "our" editors, just as an announcement of the Senior Class meeting and Combo Party last Thursday was omitted in favor of the Birmingham situation (one-half page worth). This ironically was after two members of the Senior Class spent 45 minutes of their Wednesday afternoon briefing a DTH reporter on the events and importance of newspaper coverage Thursday morning.

Concerning those "interested" seniors who seem to know so much about segregated establishments in Chapel Hill: They received their invitations a full week prior to the party at the Patio. If you are so very interested (which from my knowledge is doubtful) why didn't you take the time and INTEREST to call and suggest this to one of the Senior Class officers during the seven day interim!

It is noteworthy to mention that the warrant served by the Patio's owner, Mr. Bert Williams, was signed only after he had been badgered every hour on the hour by DTH staff members for two days following the incident. That Mr. Williams' recourse was to sign the warrant was due in great part to the agitation of the DTH, who in his words . . . "irritated me thus influencing me to take this action. . . . of for no other reason than to keep them (the DTH) from phoning."

Obviously, Williams' signing gave "our" editors and "our" paper a new cause for which to crusade — perhaps this end justifies "their" means.

P.S. To Whom It May Concern: Senior Class officers pleaded with the Patio management to drop charges on the day PRIOR to "our" editors' editorial suggesting such. On the day of the editorial, Senior Class officers and the President of the Student Body discussed the situation with both Williams and the Chairman of the Mrchants Association in an effort to have charges dropped. Had "our" editors taken the time to ask what we had done — before dramatizing and further complication (sic) the event — I feel certain that we would have been successful. Much to my displeasure an dno thanks to "our" editors and other "interested" seniors, harges have not been dropped.

Close-Up On Birmingham

TO THE EDITORS:

There is a vacuum in Birmingham, Ala. The way of life has threatened to change and the world's eyes are watching. The vacuum is felt in the air like a hot moist breeze. Inside the 16th Street Baptist Church, Negroes solidify their overwhelming unity through song and prayer. Outside Bull Connor's police force stands and waits.

Both the Negroes and the police forc are confident. The former present a way of life that is strange to the typical, middle-class white southerner .This is a picture of young Negroes seeking equality that has thrown Birmingham off balance. The Negroes have changed, but the police remain the same.

The attitude of the police remains the same as that of the old southern plantation owners. "Bull" Connor typifies this attitude as he refuses to let his system of power go.

As we, myself and two friends, approached the church one day last week, a policeman stopped us and checked our identification. After he wrote down our names, he told us that when we left the church we would have to keep on walking out of the area or we would be treated like "any other nigger," though we were white.

We entered the church as Reverend Bevel was outlining planned non-violent demonstrations on a blackboard. This was followed by a prayer for God to see the Negroes through their struggle and to touch the hearts of Bull Connor and all others who opposed the Negroes.

The police want to seal Birmingham off from the rest of the world as if it were a country by itself. They seem to feel that the Negro uprising is a local thing and that will only affect Birmingham. The Negroes, on the other hand feel their movement will be universal and all American Negroes and minority groups will be affected. They are the playing board for an entire nation.

Non-violence against violence, emotion against emotion, negotiation against negotiation, continues as Birmingham sweats the sweat of an important conflict.

Oettinger Says He's Not A Fool

To the editors:

I had high hopes that the new editors would show more responsibility and accuracy in their editorials than the previous editors. Apparently I have been grossly overoptimistic in my expectations. In your editorial of May 16 entitled "Carolina Quarterly," David Ethridge accused me of being a "fool" for seconding a "ludicrous" motion by Rep. Bill Straughn to delete Student Legislature appropriations to the Carolina Quarterly from the budget.

Mr. Ethridge's accusations are far off base, and it seems to me that he showed extreme irresponsibility by presenting to the student Body such misleading and biased statements without giving the other side of the picture.

As a student legislator, I feel a responsibility to examine all facets of everything considered by the Student Legislature; the budget especially should be examined with a fine tooth comb. I further feel that every legislator should have the opportunity to air his views on anything brought before the body.

During the May 15 afternoon session Rep. Straughn, a longtime personal friend, asked me to second a motion he would make to delete the Quarterly from the budget. Rep. Straughn feared that he would have difficulty in obtaining a second since only half of the body was present at that session, yet he had facts at his disposal which he felt were very pertinent to the issue. He was of the opinion, and I concurred, that the best way to bring this to the attention of the body was to make such a motion, thereby enabling him to make his cogent points during the ensuing discussion. I seconded his motion, and was not the only one to do so, to enable him to have his say.

In light of the information brought out on the floor, which is mentioned in Rep. Straughn's May 16 letter to the editor, and which the editorial failed to include, was the motion so "ludicrous," and was I such a "fool" to second it in order to permit him to express his opinion? I think not. And others in the Legislature thought not at the time. Mr. Ethridge, who sat directly on my right during much of the session, made an obvious omission of the results of the vote on the motion. More than one voice said "aye", however, I did not vote in favor of the motion. The alert Ethridge no doubt noticed this, so why was it not mentioned in the editorial?

Finally, I would like to point out that I, and all legislators, feel a deep responsibility to the students, especially when the budget is considered, for the appropriated money comes straight out of the students' pockets. I believe that if the Student Legislature is to assume its full responsibility, those organizations which receive large appropriations should be subject to close legislative scrutiny. Using this criteria, I have not shirked my responsibilities as a legislator. Perhaps the Tar Heel editors should reassess what they consider to be their responsibilities to provide accuracy and objectivity for the UNC reading public.

Murals Coverage Not Too Good

Letter to the Editors

Congratulations John Montague! I was very pleased to read how you skillfully picked Chateaugay as the winner of the Kentucky Derby. Mr. Kirkpatrick's column was bubbling over with excitement with each paragraph bringing me just what I wanted to hear — how the DTH staff conducted a Horse Racing Pool. The prose was terrific and the humor outstanding — I only wish I was so talented.

However, there is one thought I would like to present to you. Is it asking too much to request that you donate what is left of your $9 to the DTH so that the editors we elected could pay a couple of reporters to see what is happening in the way of Intramurals, especially since all events are due to end in a week?

Several weeks have passed since "the Election" and I have found that the impossible has happened—there is even less coverage of Intramurals now than there was under the Clotfelter-Wrye Administration. This is really a shock to me since Mr. Blanchard and I talked for about 10 minutes prior to the election and he assured me that with paid reporters and his reforms Intramurals would be covered for the first time in the three years I have been at U. N.C. I don't know whether I should be more disturbed because I was gullible enough to believe him or because the only articles pertaining to Intramurals in the past week have dealt with the Big Four Sports Day, and in that time softball, tennis, horseshoes, and bowling have reached the latter stages of competition without a word in our campus newspaper.

No, Mr. Montague, I'm not blaming you for the fact (yes, fact) that the only possible source of intramural coverage, The Daily Tar Heel, has neglected to keep the several thousand participants informed of Intramural results. After all, it isn't your fault that you won the Pool and Mr. Kirkpatrick couldn't find anything better (or easier, as the case may be) to write about in his column, which took up one-fourth of the Sports Section. I am just hoping that now that you have won this Pool you will channel your joy into covering the softball play-offs, etc., so that those of us whose teams have been eliminated will know how our conquerors made out in the later rounds.

Editors Note: Several letters and verbal complaints were received by the Tar Heel concerning the cartoon depicting an Ogreish Dean Henderson diretin gthe burial of the Apartment Rule. Unfortunately the caption was dropped from the cartoon, and it was much misunderstood. With the caption, the cartoon depicted student leaders trying to bury the Apartment Rule and an ogreish Dean Henderson making them exhume it. We are sorry that space does not allow us to print these letters in our last edition, since we feel that some of them had well taken points.

Five-Minutes Of Real Thought

"Clearing the Air," Edward P. Morgan, Robert B. Luce, Inc., 1963, $4.95.

By JIM WAGNER

"I believe that the conscience, national and personal, has a valuable goading function, the more effective when it is allowed to operate in public view and is not locked in a closet . . ."

For more than eight years the conscience of newsman Edward P. Morgan, author of the above statement, has goaded the public via Morgan's nightly broadcasts on ABC Radio. Five times a week, following nine or ten minutes of straight news reporting, Morgan presents his comment on issues, events and the people who make them.

"Clearing the Air" presents a selection of 120 of these nightly comments. Each is an essay in the finest tradition of personal journalism. Their subject matter is as diverse as the news of the past eight years, their mood as varied as human emotion. Morgan calls the book "a collection of one man's wonderment about our soft lives and hard times. . . ." He writes the comments day-by-day and broadcasts them live from Washington.

Morgan's material is censored by neither the ABC network or the sponsor. He is soberly aware of the responsibility which must accompany his freedom. His attacks are sharp but not slanderous, his judgments thoughtful and balanced, and his indignation righteous.

In this volume the comments are grouped under eleven headings. The first, called "The American Scene," sets the tone for the book and can be recommended to future historians who want to know what concerned us and what we were like in the mid-twentieth century.

Tone and content of these essays range from the weightiness of the nuclear deterrent. Morgan deplores the tawdriness of public taste but maintains that quantity need not conquer quality if only the public is educated to be more discerning.

He examines the signifance of the scandals in television quiz shows and college basketball, searches for rationalism in the ranks o fthe right wing and pokes fun at the DAR.

One comment, "The American Gospel," scalds the self-deceit and self-defeat inherent in the popular Positive Thinking of Norman Vincent Peale.

The section called "People" is a series of profiles, many of them eulogies, of prominent Americans. The list includes William Faulkner, George C. Marshall, James Thurber and newsman Elmer Davis.

Morgan's comment on Joseph McCarthy, "Death of a Salesman—Of Fear," concludes: "While the flags of the capital are at half-staff for a fallen senator, who is mourning those numberless living souls whose private worlds were split and deadened by the bludgeon of McCarthyism, while we, the American people, did nothing?"

Morgan writes in the book's foreword that in selecting the comments he was surprised to see that the most persistent themes were impatience and anger. To Morgan, social injustice is a personal affront, and his mind and pen are never sharper than when he attacks prejudice or hypocrisy, complacency or hysteria.

A recurrent cause for his wrath is the speed and greed with which we are "uglifying" America the Beautiful. Warning that urbanization is chewing up a million acres each year, he urges us to plan our growth while we sltil have the opportunity.

As a reporter of 30 years experience, the winner of several national awards for his craft and the holder of high offices in press organizations, Ed Morgan is listened to by his colleagues as well as by the general public. His views on the press are therefore influential.

He urges newsmen of all media to consider the individual rather than the mass, to report the look, feel and mood of the news in addition to the hard facts, to educate and enlighten as well as to inform.

Carolina Political Panorama

SP

By DIANE HILE

"Student Party membership has always been based on an individual basis—one person, one vote—whereas the University Party membership is based on the living units, each unit receiving so many votes depending upon the total membership in the UP from that unit," said Neal Jackson, newly elected chairman of the SP. "We realize that the UP system is used by the national political conventions, but we are a campus party not a national one, and therefore we feel that the SP has all the better reason to practice the true ideals of democracy."

There are several significant characteristics about the organization of the SP. We have already mentioned the system of membership. Another is that all of our nominations for elective offices are made at party meetings or conventions with all the members present, voting. All of our regular meetings are held in open forum, an SP tradition in which anyone may speak on any topic of interest to the group. Regularity of the SP meetings is another characteristic. Speakers such as Floyd McKissick and Dean Henderson have been heard at this year's meetings. The SP considers itself an issue-oriented party which functions all year and not just at election time.

From 1926 to 1938 there was only one political party on campus, the University Party. The party was run by the fraternities. About 1938 some students decided to form a party that would open its doors to all parts of the campus. So, with the formation of the Student Party two images arose. One, that of the UP as a predominantly fraternity party, and the SP as predominantly dormitory party. These images still exist but do not follow a clear-cut line. Many fraternity and sorority members belong and are quite active in the SP, as many dorm men have sought membership in the UP.

"People have said that your party membership will be the party all your friends join," said Neal Jackson. "I disagree, as many other SP members do.

"Many students really want to know the difference between the parties and make their decision according to their personal ideals of a campus party," he said. "This year's election results, both from the fall and in the spring, show that there is no longer a "greek vote" or a "dorm vote" and that UNC students are thinking, not just marking up ballots."

The basic purpose of both parties is to select qualified candidates. They act as a sieve through which the best students are selected to run for an elective office. Constant ticket splitting in the past few years again has shown that students do not want "just any ole candidate as long as he's SP (or UP)."

YAF

By CLYDE WILSON

The 30 members of the University of North Carolina chapter of Young Americans for Freedom are affiliated with 60,000 conservative young people in 200 high schools and college chapters.

"We've made a start toward denting the Liberal conformity for which Chapel Hill has been noted," according to YAF chairman Mike Jaffe, a law student from Queens, N. Y.

"UNC is basically a conservative school. Liberalism is the work of a small self-perpetuating clique who are on the downgrade."

Since the UNC chapter was organized in March, 1962, it has sought to further conservatism on both the intellectual and active levels.

It sponsored Fulton Lewis III, a HUAC research co-ordinator, and other speakers. The members turned out en masse to hear William F. Buckley and Russell Kirk. They picketed a concert by Pete Seeger to alert the public that the proceeds were to go to a left-wing action group.

YAF members have contributed conservative comment to the editorial page of the Daily Tar Heel, making for a genuine political dialogue on the campus.

Young Americans for Freedom was organized by representatives of 44 colleges at a conference in September, 1960, at the home of William F. Buckley in Sharon, Conn.

Among its sponsors are several U. S. Senators, representatives and governors of both parties, Gen. Mark Clark and John Dos Passos. The UNC sponsor is Dr. C. E. Philbrook, Dept. of Economics.

The organization seeks membership from students ". . . who are concerned over increasing federal control of all facets of our economic and social life, who are troubled by the seeming weakness of our government before the onslaught of international communism, who are apprehensive over the growing similarities between our two political parties, and who are ready to take an active part in stimulating and mobilizing sincere Conservative political action."

UNC members receive the national publications, THE NEW GUARD, and benefit from speakers and film bureaus.

Next year YAF hopes to sponsor a regular series of speakers and work for the election of conservative political candidates in North Carolina.

The 1963-64 officers of the UNC chapter will be Clyde Wilson, Grensboro, chairman; Noel Casey, Bergen, N. J., vice-chairman; and Martin Wilson, Lake Lure, N. C., secretary-treasurer.

YRC

By MARGARET FEWELL

"The UNC Young Republicans' Club is a local adjunct of the national Republican Party," says Charles Hooks of Goldsboro, N. C., president of the club. "Our local purpose is threefold: to encourage young Republicans from North Carolina and to train leaders for later political work; to co-operate with the Orange County Republican Party in any programs where they need assistance; and to build a good name for the Republican Party on campus by diversified activities."

The local club was re-organized in 1959 after a period of latency, and is today a thriving political organization. Meetings are held every second Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall, but according to Hooks, there is some variation due to scheduling of speakers.

The YRC sponsors a well co-ordinated program of speakers, movies, campaigning and extra-curricular participation.

Some of the key programs of past years have included a speech by Robert Gavin, Republican candidate for governor in 1960, and the showing of the movie "Operation Abolition," a film on the House Un-American Activities Committee in October 1961. Speeches by well-known Socialist Mike Harrington and Conservative Fulton Lewis III accompanied the movie. Hooks said that the film was presented as an informational service on the part of the club.

"This year has been an active one for the Young Republicans," said Hooks. "We have done many things we have never done before." The club spent four weeks in October and November aiding the election campaign by distributing campaign literature, helping at the polls on election day, and canvassing two districts. These two districts were the only two in Orange County to meet their Republican quota.

Speakers this year have included several state representatives: Senator Charles Strong of Guilford County; Rep. Thomas Bennett of Carteret County; and Donald Badgely of Guilford County, who appeared at a briefing session. One of the highlights of the year was the Paul Revere Panel, composed of a group of prominent Republican Congressmen. Their purpose was to warn the nation of the dangers of the New Frontier. The panel members were: Representatives Robert Dole, Kan.; Sherman Lloyd, Utah; and John Anderson, Ill. About 150 persons attended.

"Extra-curricular activities have included a party at the American Legion Hut, the election of Miss Sandra Dalton as our Miss YRC and our 'New Frontier Roulette Game' at the Campus Chest Carnival which nobody could win," said Hooks.

Another innovation this year is the All-Campus Leadership Award which is to be given annually to the student judged to have given most to campus life.

The Progressive Labor Club represents the extreme left of the political spectrum at Carolina. The club is a part of the national Progressive Labor movement, a political group based on Marxist-Leninist principles. Larry Phelps, a UNC student from Burlington, is chairman of the club.

Its nine members form the only group of its kind within a four hundred mile radius of UNC. An Atlanta group is the only other one in the South.

"At Chapel Hill, we are a student group, and we have limitations," said Phelps. The group did not expect rapid growth, he said. They hoped for a consolidation of position and a continuing club.

"We hope to convince the members and those who join of the necessity of becoming true revolutionists," he added, "those who dedicate their lives to building a Marxist-Leninist party and the achievement of Socialism."

Phelps believes the possibilities for Progressive Labor at Carolina are good. "More and more students are beginning to feel a sense of uneasiness that something is wrong, not knowing what but feeling it," he said. "These students are beginning to doubt the American system."

The Progressive Labor movement at Carolina began last spring, when a national representative passed through Chapel Hill. He explained the movement to those who were to found the club at Carolina. (The club has a policy of not naming its members without the express permission of the member involved.)

The national movement has no central control and each club is autonomous, according to Phelps.

"Centralization would be premature and would cause difficulties. It would not take into account the local differences," he says.

The movement as a whole is 16 months old and is built around the magazine Progressive Labor. It was formed because "people felt that there was no revolutionary party existing in America," Phelps says. "Those in existence had given up their revolutionary position and separated from the American people."

"The people in and around Progressive Labor, feeling that the repression of the working class will continue, thought at the time to form a party based on Marxist-Leninist principles," he said.

"Such a party would have as its base the working class and the destruction of the existing state and the founding of a workers state."

Asked about what the groups is doing, Phelps said their activities center around education and encouraging the members to participate in other groups with which they agree.

"We have been in contact with other groups in the state, though they are few," he said.

UP

By MARY VIRGINIA WHITE

The University Party has the distinction of being Carolina's firs student political party. Since its founding in 1926 the UP has played an active role in student affairs and for many years was Carolinua's only political party.

Over the years the party has served as a training ground for student leaders and can boast of such men as North Carolina's present governor Terry Sanford, who ois his undergraduate days at UNC was a UP member and UP Party Chairman.

The party currently has a registered membership of 976 students under the leadership of Party Chairman Mike Chanin. Also serving as officers in the UP this year were: Bo Edwards, vice chairman; Wendy Cook, secretary; and Dick Jonas, treasurer.

Last year the UP won at the polls with Inman Allen for President of the student body. This year the party's vice presidential candidate Bob Spearman captured a victory in the spring elections and the UP took 24 out of a possible 50 seats in the Student Legislature elections.

Often in the past the UP has been charged with representing only the fraternity man's interests. In response to this, past party Secretary Peggy Stevenson says, "I believe the UP appeals to many factions on campus. We're making great strides towards becoming a truly all-campus party. This spring we made excellent gains in the dorms and we hope to continue this trend."

Party Chairman Chanin says, "The UP is trying to cover the whole spectrum of student affairs. We want to be attuned to everyone's interests and needs."

Many leaders of the party feel that Vice President Bob Spearman seems to epitomize what Don Curtis calls the "New UP." Former Party Chairman and campaign manager Curtis says, "I think Spearman is a capable and understanding leader. He will work to make student government a dynamic force on this campus and to insure student rights."

John Ulfelder, UP floor leader in the Student Legislature, speaks highly of Spearman's past work with the proposed Student Co-op and the National Merit Scholarship winners who will attend Carolina next year.

"Though the UP will be in the minority next year in the executive branch and in the student Legislature the party has a vital role of acting as a constructive criticizing agent," says Larry McDevitt, the party's candidate for student body President this spring "It's up to us to keep the opposition on its toes. Co-operation is necessary, but differences of opinion are good in a democratic system."

The UP looks with an optimistic eye to the future. "We'll continue to work to promote our platform," says Peggy Stevenson.

YDC

By LARRY TARLTON

The first Young Democrats Club (YDC) in North Carolina was organized in 1928 but there was no YDC organization on the YDC campus until the early 1940's

Since its organization the YDC has been active on campus, and it serves as the main body that tries to acquaint university students and the community with the workings of the senior Democratic party.

President Lane Brown, a law student, says that the main objectives and purposes of the local club are ". . . to work with the senior party on politics and to promote interest in the elections while helping Democratic candidates to be elected.

"We try to promote keener interest among students and in the hometowns of our members. We try to cooperate with the senior party as much as possible, working with other YDC organizations in the state. The state convention is the big event of the year, and we always are well represented."

This year the club has conducted two membership drives, each at the beginning of a semester. These have been instrumental in boosting the total membership to over 500. Plans are now being made to have membership drives three times next year, adding a campaign during Thanksgiving and Christmas. Don Curtis, Bill Whichard and Dave Kitzmiller make up the membership committee.

As in the past, the YDC will bring speakers to the campus. This year the club hosted the candidates for state office in the November elections, and during the spring term heard Congressmen David Henderson and Horace Kornegay. Jim Craven and Johnny McConnell will head the program committee for the coming year.

Governor Terry Sanford is a former president of the club, and Charlie Kivett served as National Committeeman while he was here.

The senior party printed tickets for the Jackson-Jefferson Day dinner in Raleigh and these tickets were distributed free to students in the local group who were interested in hearing Vice-President Lyndon Johnson speak.

Brown, who was elected last Wednesday night, succeeds George Kornegay, a law student from Garner, N. C. Brown said that he felt that the current membership was potentially one of the best, and that he looks forward to a highly successful year.

Other officers for 1964 are Bill Whichard, graduate vice-president; Jim Craven, undergraduate vice-president; Johnsye Massenburg, secretary; and Ken Bude, treasurer. The executive committee will be composed of Bob Spearman, Dick Ellis, Phil Baddour and Don Curtis.

Liberalism And The University

On this page are expressed the views of six campus organizations. Each article has been written objectively, and most were written by students with no affiliation with the group. It is hoped that any doubt as to the aims of these organizations can be resolved.

Why has Carolina been called a "liberal oasis in a conservative desert?"

If this accusation is true, is it derogatory?

These questions have been discussed for many years, and it is probable that they will be discussed long into the future. We offer no solution, only a few guesses.

The appelation is probably true. There can be no certainty as no study has been made at UNC. It is a matter of record that most student government leaders are liberal—from the President of the Student Body to the editors of this newspaper, from the chairman of the two political parties to the NSA delegates.

The students had a choice in the last campus election and overwhelmingly chose Mike Lawler, a liberal, over Larry McDevitt, a conservative, for the president of the student body. This may, or may not, be proof.

They had little choice in other elective offices—seven of the eight NSA candidates, all candidates for the DTH and, in many districts, all candidates for student legislature were liberal.

However, we must remember that Carolina has a student body from scattered geographic locations. Serving the purpose of universities the world over, UNC mixes and digests ideas profferec forth from those students that originate beyond the state line.

Within the state line, North Carolina is a confusion of unreconstructed Southerners, conservative Southerners, young Democrats and recently immigrated industrialized northerners. There is no set political code, except that of "Democratism," and even then, the western part of the state seems determined to upset the apple cart.

With this turmoil centering (geographically and educationally) around the young North Carolinian, and with his classmates, buddies and many professors screaming "progress," "equality," "autonomy" and other such words in his ear, the typical UNC student is caught up in a maelstrom of liberalism.

Whether or not the "liberal" label is derogatory is a matter of opinion. In any case, it gives liberal groups more oimpetus, as they will encounter less opposition getting started.

In itself, the statement is not derogatory. Surveys of other universities and colleges have proven (as conclusively as surveys can prove) that as one gets more education he moves to a more liberal attitude. This has been concluded in the Bennington study, described as "the benchmark for the study of political socialization in college"; the Jacob report, a survey of schools throughout the nation; and the Pace survey, which was concerned with the college graduates and their adjustment.

Yack Burning

An investigation is being conducted in connection with the burning of the Yackety-Yack by approximately 15 graduate students Wednesday night in Y-Court, according to Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs.

As of Friday afternoon there had been no indictments, charges or convictions. The decision to take action has not been made yet, he said, but it will be made soon.

The students were protesting the lack of graduate coverage in the Yack.

No charges were filed by campus police following the burning, but Chief A. J. Beaumont collected ID cards.

Louis Legum, editor of the 1963 Yack, said that the graduates did not receive more extensive coverage, becouse they do not pay as much as undergraduates for the annual.

Graduates pay only $7.26 to Student Government activities compared to $9 for undergraduates.

Student Peace Union

By BILL HICKS

Three years ago, at the University of Chicago, ten undergraduates became quite concerned about the world situation. Out of this has come a student organization with some 4,000 members at nearly 200 colleges and universities. This organization is the Student Peace Union.

Pat Cusick, a senior math major, is chairman and founder of the UNC Student Peace Union. Although he had been concerned with the state of world affairs for some time, it was the Cuban crisis of fall, 1962, which tipped the scales.

"After Kennedy's ultimatum, I was convinced that I had to do something. Certainly Kennedy's tactics in that situation worked, but I was, and am, convinced that alternatives to a situation in which one man has the power of life and death over millians of other men must be found."

It was in this spirit that the UNC-SPU was formed. SPU's statement of purpose—agreement to it is the only criterion for membership—aptly states its reason for existing:

"Without committing any member to a precise statement of policy, the SPU draws together young people for a study of alternatives to war and engages in education and action to end the present arms race. The SPU works toward a society which will ensure both peace and freedom and which will suffer no individual or group to be exploited by another. Because both East and West have pursued foreign policies which are not in the interests of their own people or the people of the world and because both bear major responsibility for the Cold War, the SPU believes that the Peace Movement must act independently of both East and West, must apply the same standard of criticism to both, and must seek new and creative means of achieving a free and peaceful society."

Each chapter of SPU is autonomous, within the framework of the Statement of Purpose, and each chapter is explicitly democratic in both structure and policy.

The UNC chapter is no exception to this rule. A good example of this is its stand on civil rights. UNC-SPU has taken the first and only direct action in civil rights. It did this because all of its members felt that if peace and freedom cannot be achieved in America, it could not be achieved on an international basis.

The Student Peace Union is a young organization. The first chapter was founded only three years ago, and UNC-SPU has been in existence only five months. With less than 50 members, SPU has been a pitifully small campus minority. Yet, in a short five months, SPU has caused perhaps a majority of the student body to at least think about issues which it had before only taken for granted. This, after all, is the real aim of SPU.

As Chuck Wrye, former co-editor of the DTH, put it, the Student Peace Union is a "remarkable organization."

TILL WE MEET AGAIN

With today's installment I complete my ninth year of writing columns in your college newspaper for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes. In view of the occasion, I hope I may be forgiven if I get a little misty.

These nine years have passed like nine minutes. In fact, I would not believe that so much time has gone by except that I have my wife nearby as a handy reference. When I started columning for Marlboros, she was a slip of a girl—supple as a reed and fair as the sunrise. Today she is gnarled, lumpy, and given to biting the postman. Still, I count myself lucky. Most of my friends who were married at the same time have wives who chase cars all day. I myself have never had this trouble and I attribute my good fortune to the fact that I have never struck my wife with my hand. I have always used a folded newspaper—even throughout the prolonged newspaper strike in New York. During this period I had the airmail edition of the Manchester Guardian flown in daily from England. I must confess, however, that it was not entirely satisfactory. The airmail edition of the Guardian is printed on paper so light and flimsy that it makes little or no impression when one slaps one's wife. Mine, in fact, thought it was some kind of game, and tore several pairs of my trousers.

It's a rare and lucky columnist

But I digress. I was saying what a pleasure it has been to write this column for the last nine years for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes—a fine group of men, as anyone who has sampled their wares would suspect. They are as mellow as the aged tobaccos they blend. They are as pure as the white cellulose filter they have devised. They are loyal, true, companionable, and constant, and I have never for an instant wavered in my belief that some day they will pay me for these last nine years.

But working for the makers of Marlboro has not been the greatest of my pleasures over the last nine years. The chief satisfaction has been writing for you—the college population of America. It is a rare and lucky columnist who can find an audience so full of intelligence and verve. I would like very much to show my appreciation by asking you all over to my house for tea and oatmeal cookies, but there is no telling how many of you my wife would bite.

For many of you this is the last year of college. This is especially true for seniors. To those I extend my heartfelt wishes that you will find the world outside a happy valley. To juniors I extend my heartfelt wishes that you will become seniors. To sophomores I extend my heartfelt wishes that you will become juniors. To freshmen I extend my heartfelt wishes that you will become sophomores. To those of you going on into graduate school I extend my heartfelt wishes that you will marry money.

To all of you let me say one thing: during the year I have been frivolous and funny during the past year—possibly less often than I have imagined—but the time has now come for some serious talk. Whatever your status, whatever your plans, I hope that success will attend your ventures.

Stay happy. Stay loose. ©1963 Max Shulman

• • •

We, the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, confess to more than a few nervous moments during the nine years we have sponsored this uninhibited and uncensored column. But in the main, we have had fun and so, we hope, have you. Let us add our good wishes to Old Max's stay happy stay loose.

John Birchers Seek Chapel Hill Toehold

By W. H. SCARBOROUGH

The John Birch Society moved quietly into Chapel Hill last week, made a subdued organizational pitch which attracted a mixed bag of young liberals and conservatives, and stole quietly out once more.

Results of the bid to establish a local chapter, primarily among University students, may well never be known, since the Society still tends to be rather close-mouthed about such things even though it has moved within the recent past to cast itself in a more public, less clandestine mold.

Society disavowals of being a secret order aside, the Chapel Hill effort displayed an unusual caution in publicizing itself. Attendance was almost exclusively by invitation, and held in one of the private dining rooms of a restaurant on the outskirts of Town. Entry was to be gained by presenting the letter announcing the meeting, then asking for the "Party" of S. H. Conger or Charles Guerry. Exceptions were made, however, and fourteen young men were treated to a relatively complete and certainly extensive presentation of the basic tenets of the organization.

The greeter at the door was a courteous, crew-cut, fashionably dressed young man who turned out to be William C. Highsmith Jr. of Greenwood, S. C., major coordinator for the Society.

The room was darkened for a showing of a four-reel movie of Society Founder Robert Welch, during the course of which he discussed the Communist peril on a global basis, defended the Society against detractors and made an impassioned pitch for Americans devoted to the ideals of the U. S. Constitution, free enterprise, laissez-faire economics and personal intervention in the war against Communism.

While changing reels, Mr. Highsmith appended incidental information on the Communist affiliations of Dominican strong man Juan Bosch ("the Number 4 Communist in Latin America") Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson (who once shared a platform with Senor Bosch) and President John F. Kennedy (who condoned the conspiracy). Mr. Highsmith also plugged the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren both during the entre-acts and later in greater detail.

Certain misconceptions about the John Birch Society are bound to persist, partially because it continues a portion of its program in a state of relative secrecy, partially because a goodly portion of the general public has come by its information about Society aims and methods second-hand. Direct confrontation does something to dispel the illusions, but very little to indicate that the Society is a dangerous menace as some liberals have described it, a bunch of harmless nuts in the eyes of others, or a hard-driving group of dedicated conservatives, as the Birchers describe themselves.

The reaction of those liberals who either knew of the meeting and were concerned about it and those who actually attended consisted largely of equal portions of alarm, derision and outrage, and was somewhat out of joint with what actually transpired. The reactions of those more sympathetic toward the Society were not readily discernible.

According to students who have observed Birchite sentiment on the University campus with a good deal of suspicion, the move to found a local chapter originated among a few students in the Law School, gained ground when these students sought formal Birch recruiting, and led to the assembly at the restaurant through a classified ad placed in the Daily Tar Heel.

The contact for the meeting, who also issued the written invitations, was Stephen H. Conger, a Weldon lumber dealer. He described himself as "volunteer area coordinator." Mr. Highsmith, who operated the movie projector and delivered the recruiting pitch, described himself as a full-time paid organizer.

The nucleus of Birch organizational meetings is Mr. Welch's filmed presentation, the showing of which took almost two hours. The audience had been warned beforehand to expect at least a 2½ hour meeting.

Mr. Welch's passionate exhortations are a beguiling blend of fact and interpretation that have a disconcerting way of melting into one another in such a fashion as to be indistinguishable.

Still, if one accepts his basic premises — that the U. S. Government, especially the executive and judicial branches, is riddled with Marxists actively working for the downfall of these institutions; that trade unionism in the U. S. — with the important and inexplicable exception of the Teamsters Union and James R. Hoffa — is socialistic hence Marxist and therefore Communist; that every nationalist movement in the Middle East and Africa represents an accomplished link in the Communist chain encircling Western Europe; and that the U. N. Charter is a paraphrase of the Communist Manifesto, his argument carries a certain logic.

It is then possible to see that not only has the Red Sea cut loose and drifted into the English Channel, but Moise Tshombe, the last friend of the West in Africa, was deliberately overthrown by the Communist hierarchy, working through their assigned agents, the United States Government in collusion with the U. N. High Command. This is a well-known pattern that first asserted itself in the United States betrayal of Poland which followed World War II. Documentation of this latter, Mr. Welch says, is set forth fully in "I Saw Poland Betrayed," by former Polish Ambassador Arthur Bliss Lane, "a liberal who saw the light and resigned to tell about it." This book, Mr. Welch asserts, has been effectively suppressed, censored from most libraries and taken out of print by the publisher. Republication of this and eleven other volumes ranging over the spectrum, is one Society activity presently being emphasized. All twelve volumes are available in a special edition under the title, "One Dozen Candles," boxed at $10 per set.

It is also simple, using the Birch cipher, to perceive that Hawaii has now been effectively surrounded and isolated by the Communist longshoremen of Harry Bridges, and that the forthcoming wheat referendum May 21 is a powerful Communist device which will effectively collectivize American agriculture, if passed. In the meantime, Communist troops are poised over the Mexican border ready to sweep into a Southwest laid prostrate by prearranged subversion and sabotage, or from the South from Cuba. President Kennedy and the Pentagon, which has already prepared a surrender plan, are directly culpable.

The action Mr. Welch recommends is direct and meaningful: join the John Birch Society, and fight; ignore Communist attacks which picture the Birchers as fanatics, anti-semites, fascists or worse.

The sole requirement is that one believe in the U. S. Constitution, Christianity and the sanctity of the individual. Hard work will be expected of each member — solitude, misunderstanding, loss of sleep will be a natural consequence of membership. The reward: re-establishment of the American Republic. Membership is voluntary, the organization open; if one disagrees with a majority of the Birch position, he may resign or be asked to resign.

Mr. Highsmith took over once the film presentation was complete. The Southern branch's pet target, Chief Justice Earl Warren, was a major concern with him. He noted that on the same day as "that infamous decision," May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court had also ruled that government officials were not subject to subpoena by the House Un-American Activities Committee or the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee. On this point Mr. Highsmith received his only challenge of the evening. It came from a law student who asserted that the right of executive privilege went back to an 1880 Supreme Court decision. "I can cite you the case." Mr. Highsmith conceded that such an order did exist.

He also recommended a current Birch movement originating in Ehrhardt, S. C., to erect billboards urging the impeachment of Justice Warren. He passed around a portfolio illustrating a number of available styles and sizes, beginning at $150.

"A fellow in Southern Pines erected one of these signs in his front yard. He wasn't leasing this property, he wasn't paying off a mortgage on it, he owned it. The sign was completely destroyed in one night, and nothing was ever done about it," Mr. Highsmith said.

"We need a million names on a petition to impeach him now. We also want to prevent a Southern senator from introducing it. We think it would be better to have a Northern or Midwestern Republican to do it."

Then Mr. Highsmith began his recruiting talk:

"If you agree with everything we've said tonight, don't take the trouble to apply for membership. We conservatives think for ourselves. Do you need proof of this? Look at the liberals. Notice how they are always in agreement.

"What does the John Birch Society attempt to do? Four things: defend against Communism; educate others to the dangers confronting this great nation; oppose Communism. These three things you can do without belonging to the Society. But the fourth thing we feel you must belong to the Society to do: take action."

The form of action to be taken is confidential. It is also the Society's greatest drawing card. Mr. Highsmith left it tantalizingly undefined, and went into organizational structure.

A local chapter is best confined to roughly fourteen members. This prevents infiltration, permits a maximum of individual initiative. There are no "chapter meetings" as such, although the chapter serves to coordinate the various projects. The membership is not secret, except in cases where highly specialized work is being undertaken. That is clearly something that requires discretion and obscurity, but it is not for the garden variety of Bircher to tamper with. A chapter library of required or recommended reading will be maintained, giving rise to the possibility of a chapter house or office. Membership applications must be made individually to national headquarters. If accepted, the member must also be prepared for dismissal without cause.

"Well, that about wraps it up. You got anything to add, Steve," (to Mr. Conger. Mr. Conger felt the presentation complete.)

Mr. Conger felt the meeting encouraging also. In private conversation during a break, he confided that the University had been a source of constant Communist activity for years, but there were encouraging signs to show the trend was being reversed. "I'm heartened," he said, smiling genially. He had not, he said, been completely on top of the situation at Chapel Hill, but thought a University Birch Chapter would definitely be formed. He did not know whether Mr. Welch regarded the University as a special project, being an alumnus. He had never heard that Mr. Welch had played marbles as an undergraduate here.

Mr. Conger had no way of knowing the makeup of his audience, but perhaps he would not have been dismayed to learn that, according to a member of the Progressive Labor Club who attended, roughly half was composed of unabashed liberals who had come as interested observers. "They were pretty stupid ones at that," the Progressive Laborite volunteered. "It wasn't worth the trip."

Twelve Pharmacy Awards Presented

Twelve students in the UNC School of Pharmacy were honored last week at the school's annual awards presentation ceremony.

Billie Mae Smyre of Newton won the Pharmacy Faculty Award, an engraved bronze mortar and pestle given annually by the faculty to the student in the graduating class making the highest average during the four years of study. Established in 1958, the award is provided by E. R. Squibb and Sons.

The Buxton Williams Hunter Medal, established in 1937, went to John Agrippa Mitchener II of Edenton. This gold medal, offered annually by Mr. D. R. Davis of Williamston, goes to the graduating student who excels in campus citizenship and scholarship.

The morta and pestle plaque given annually by the student body of the School of Pharmacy to the member of the graduating class who has demonstrated the highest qualities of character, deportment, scholarship, participation in extra-curricular activities, and promise of future distinction in the profession, was awarded to Meredith Gail Patton of Hickory.

Miss Patton also received the Kappa Epsilon Award, a silver tray given annually to a woman student who has demonstrated qualities of leadership, character, service and scholarship.

Larry Edward Denning of Coats and Daniel Guilford Bracey of Red Springs won the Merck Awards, consisting of two reference works and given annually by Merck and Co., Inc., for noteworthy achievement in pharmacy.

Jones Haynie Miller of Durham received the Bristol Award in Pharmacy, a useful reference work given annually by Bristol Laboratories, Inc., for noteworthy achievement in pharmacy. And Thomas Theophilous Lilly Jr., also of Durham, won the Rho Chi First Year Award, given annually to that student who shows the highest scholarship in the first year of the pharmacy curriculum.

A Bakersville student, Joseph Perkins, won the Rexall Award in Pharmacy Administration. Given annually by the Rexall Drug Company, this award goes to a graduating student for high achievement in the pharmacy administration courses.

Carolyn Rebecca Proffitt of Burnsville was the recipient of the M. L. Jacobs Memorial Award. This award, also given by Rho Chi national pharmaceutical society, is in honor of the memory of Dr. M. L. Jacobs, Dean of the School of Pharmacy from 1946 to 1950. It goes to a student demonstrating the greatest excellence in pharmaceutical organic chemistry.

Thomas Elijah Smart of Hamlet, outgoing student body president of the Pharmacy School, was presented with a gold key, recognizing his year of service.

Gary Martin Stamey of Asheville won the Lehn and Fink Gold Medal Award for noteworthy achievement in pharmacy. And John Hudson Myhre of Overland Park, Kansas, received the Pharmacy Senate Award, presented annually to the graduating student who has shown "the greatest loyalty and service" to the School of Pharmacy. A silver cup, the award is given annually by Mr. Floyd E. Jones of Norfolk, Va., in the name of the Pharmacy Senate.

Scared Giants In Wasteland

Village folksinger Bob Dylan walked out on a scheduled Ed Sullivan show appearance Sunday night, following CBS cancellation of his song satirizing the John Birch Society.

The song, "The Talking John Birch Society Blues," was written by the 22-year-old recording and folk concert artist last year. It is considered the strongest of several current songs lampooning the ultra-right-wing group. Dylan's decision to sing it on the Sullivan show was earlier approved by Bob Precht, the show's producer, and by Sullivan himself at a Saturday rehearsal.

On Sunday afternoon, however, the song ran into censorship trouble. A CBS program official barred it. Another CBS executive reportedly said unofficially to Dylan and his manager, "It's too editorial. CBS is scared about it, and I'm scared that they're scared."

No Subs

Dylan told The Voice on Monday, "After that, I walked out. I could have sung a substitute song—something like 'East Virginia Blues'—but I just couldn't do it after coming so close to doing the 'John Birch' talking thing. Those other John Birch songs, you can listen to the beat or the music or something. But mine, you've got to listen to the words. That's what I wanted the people to hear."

Dylan, who records for Columbia Records, a subsidiary of CBS, may still appear on the Sullivan show at a future time.

"SHE WAS ONLY THE DEAN OF MEN'S DAUGHTER"
(But oh what a record she made)

The only trouble is, it's been banned. From the radio at least. In fact, the whole darn Capitol album, "Campus Confidential" by the Four Preps, has been banned. "She Was Only the Dean of Men's Daughter" and the other numbers, like "Princess Poo-poo-ly Has Plenty Papaya," are just a little too... well, colorful for air play.

This album was recorded during a Four Preps Concert at UCLA. Their performance was wildly appreciated by the students, and we strongly suspect it will be wildly appreciated by everyone who hears it on this new Capitol release. (With the sole exception of radio station owners who want to keep their stations on the air.)

So slip into your nearest record store for "Campus Confidential" on Capitol. (In plain brown wrapper, of course.)

(PS. Look for the Four Preps in concert on your campus.)

during the semester.

"Some of our advisors don't agree with this requirement," Sitterson said, "because they feel required meetings make the students less responsive to counseling.

"Aside from this requirement, however, I let each advisor work out his own method of working with students. Some wait for the students to come to them while others go as far as inviting each student over to his house."

Although advisors meet their freshmen advisees at the first of the fall semester, both the student report and the 1961 faculty report recommended the advisors actively participate in the orientation program.

Orientation is now run jointly by the Student Affairs Office and student government. The faculty is presently involved only by invitation, although the faculty as a whole could exert pressure for more involvement if enough professors felt strongly on the matter.

One advantage of more faculty participation, Dean Sitterson said, would be a shift in the program's emphasis toward academic matters. He feels that this can be done, however, within the present orientation structure.

Last year, freshmen were required to read "Look Homeward, Angel" before orientation. Seminars were held during orientation to discuss the book and its relation to the present campus.

Dean Sitterson feels this could be expanded to required readings in science and modern civilization, with faculty members preferably advisors, leading the discussions. This would not only ease the transition from high school to college, but also allow the advisors to meet the students and direct them toward the academic areas of campus life.

Under the present advisor system, registration is often the only time the freshman comes to the advisor for help. Sitterson does not think much of the red tape of registration can be eliminated, due to the growing enrollment and the simultaneous growth of a bureaucracy to handle records.

Some of the headaches, however, could be eliminated by an Undergraduate Bulletin which adequately describes the courses offered. Sitterson said the General College is now limited by the amount of money the Student Affairs Office allots to pay for the bulletin.

He suggests the student publication of a bulletin which would not only describe but also evaluate the courses offered. Similar bulletins are printed at Harvard, Yale and other schools and Sitterson believes students would put more faith in the opinions of other students than they would put in a bulletin published by the administration.

system more restricting and much more organized. She says the teachers are much easier to approach than the European teachers and that they are friendly and helpful. The system in Europe is much more liberal and much less organized.

Maria Bravo thinks the American system is much too rigid. "You can't have any fun here," she complains. "You have to do so much by such and such a time. This causes you to worry constantly. It's terrible."

Terence Yen thinks the American student is "more mature than he has to be." He attributes this to the lack of strength in family ties. "I think it is good, though," he adds, "because it gives the individual personality a better chance to show through. This helps them to think more and get more experience while they are young."

Arnold Kroner thinks the American student is less mature than the German or European student because of the campus life. "In Europe," he explains, "A student must live entirely on his own with no restrictions at all. He must find his own place to live, to eat, and his own ways to have fun. The reason that the American student frequently gets into trouble because of pranks is that he is restricted so long that when he decides to get out from under the thumb and play a joke, he goes too far.

AMERICAN FOREIGN RELATIONS

"I've found the Americans and particularly the South a wonderful place to be," said Marguerite Bou-Raad. "The people are most willing to make friends. I think that the relations between students depend on the students. Some are outgong and some are withdrawn."

"A welcome should last only seven days," says Hassan Bahlouli, of the foreign student's position. "After that he is on his own to make friends and it is up to him, not to the people of whom he is a guest. At first I was on the defensive when I came here. But now I realize that this was because of my pride and not understaning the American people. Now I feel I am part of Americe. I like it."

Prof's Wife Killed; Unborn Baby Saved

The expectant wife of a University faculty member was killed in an automobile accident in Durham Friday night.

Mrs. Peter F. Walker died at Watts Hospital at 11:20 p.m. Friday of injuries sustained in a two-car accident at the intersection of Duke Street and University Drive. Watts Hospital doctors reportedly saved the baby.

Mrs. Walker suffered severe head injuries and other injuries in the accident, which occurred at 8:30 p.m. Her husband, an instructor of History at the University, received multiple lacerations and possible other injuries. Their three-year-old son, Franklin Walker, was thrown into the windshield of their small foreign car and suffered a fractured leg and "extremely severe" facial lacerations.

Both father and son were in "satisfactory" condition. The baby was also in "satisfactory" condition in the Hospital's premature nursery.

The Walkers' car was headed west on University Drive when it was hit by a Pontiac turning north onto Duke. The Pontiac was driven by Ronnie Louis Robinson, 17, of Durham, who was not injured.

Want a few $10,000 reasons for buying this $3995 car?

This $3995 car is the Volvo P1800. Like the $10,000 cars (Aston Martins, Ferraris, etc.) it gives you disc brakes, 4-speed transmission, live rear axle, independent front suspension, precise steering, European styling and coachwork.

Road & Track magazine sums it up this way: "The P1800 is a very civilized touring car for people who want to travel rapidly in style, a Gran Turismo car much in the news these days—but at a price that many people who cannot afford a Ferrari or Aston Martin would be able to pay."

One more thing. At 70 mph the P1800 uses no more gas than a Volkswagen uses at the same speed. That's a $3995 feature those $10,000 cars would like to have.

DUAL FILTER Tareyton

A Look At A Year Of Action

Everyone A Hero In UNC Sports

By HARRY W. LLOYD

It's third down and long yardage, and the defensive team knows that the only way the Tar Heels can go is through the air. Their linemen set themselves for a vicious rush on the passer, and the halfbacks crouch, ready to spring in any direction.

There is the snap, and a quarterback fades, faking first one way and then the other, really stalling for time while he tries to find that tall end who is cutting and weaving down the field. Finally Junior Edge flings the football and Bob Lacey leaps from amid the deterrent force to make a near-impossible catch.

This is Sports at Carolina in 1962-63.

The ball is bouncing high off the rim after some shot has gone astray. From out of the mass of hungry hands comes one, a little higher than the others, to reach the ball and pull it in. Then Billy Cunningham fires a lead pass to Larry Brown, who maneuvers the play and sets up a score at the other end of the court.

This is Sports at Carolina in 1962-63.

The lob comes in high and deep, and the little man must backtrack and concentrate all his efforts just to be able to reach it. His return just clears the net and leaves him in what appears to be a bad position but when the volley comes back, George Sokol sends a screaming backhand shot down the line and home for the winning point.

This is Sports at Carolina in 1962-63.

The players were many, and the scenes were more. They were often exciting, often sad, usually colorful, and never dull. Success came, but it did not overflow. There were stars, but just enough of them to make the ones that did exist shine all the brighter.

For those who dote on such things, here were championships. Two of them. The fact that they came in cross country and tennis rather than in football and basketball made them no less important.

Just as there were winners, there were losers. Some of them came close, and for their efforts gained not trophies, but respect. There was the baseball team, which the year before had finished in an unprecedented last place in the conference. After floundering around near the bottom for the early part of the season, it found itself and suddenly started winning. The seven game streak started too late for the top spot, but was effective enough to put the Tar Heels second in the conference.

The swimming team did not go without its honors, even though they had to come in through a side entrance. The team was defeated once in the conference during the season, and only finished second in the championships. Alo rans? No! Their prize was a one-thrid share in first place, the other parts going to Maryland and State.

There were some nightmares, if they can be recalled. The wrestling team suffered through a long and gruelling season of ten losses, and only finished fourth in the conference meet, where four teams were entered. Some of the losses were heartbreaking, and almost despiriting, but there was usually some comfort in the burly form of a Jerry Cabe to keep hopes together.

One yardstick showed the Carolina teams as the third best in the ACC. The Carmichael Cup standings, which measure performances in 12 sports (Carolina fields only 11 teams, however), placed the Tar Heels third, behind Maryland (who won five titles outright and shared in a sixth) and Duke (who took the prestigious football and basketball crowns).

For all its pomp and glamor, the year indeed had an inauspicious beginning. It was on a Saturday afternoon in September when the bell was rung on a new year in sports. The Wolfpack of State was here in an underdog's cloak for the first football game. For a half, the game was scoreless. This had not been expected. Then State took a 7-0 lead. This had been less expected. Then late in the game, Carolina teedeed itself, and instead of trying for the win, failed at an attempt for the tie. This was unheard of!

For the season, the gridders started too late and quit too fast. They almost fished out some redemption in battle with Duke, but the Devils used the kicking trick to win by 16-14 in the final minute. The three wins all came in the conference.

The Carolina soccer team, on the other hand, used a final game with Duke to finish probably its most successful season ever. The Blue and White Booters choked off the Blue Devils to win by 1-0 for a 7-2 overall mark, a 3-1 league record, and a second place finish.

In the cross country chase, everybody was behind Larry Henry, the barefoot wonder. Henry paced the field in the meet, and four other Tar Heels were in the first 11.

It was basketball that was perhaps most perplexing, and the reason for that problem was Wake Forest. The team finished third in the conference, losing twice to Duke, who also beat everybody else.

But it also lost three times to the Deacons—twice during the season and again in the tournament. Fate should have been kinder to Dean Smith's men, who had beaten Kentucky, Notre Dame, and other toughies during the season with a lineup of youngsters, the ringleader of which was a Kid named Cunningham. But Wake was the spoiler.

A one-point loss to Duke—just like in cross country—cost the UNC trackmen a second place in the outdoor track race. They were a strong second in the Indoor meet, and third in the outdoor finals.

Tommy Arnold of UNC led the field on the first day of the golf championships, but lost his poise during the final round. The Carolina team finished a weak fourth.

The lacross team battled hard and gained a lot of respect. But it was still the stepchild in the athletic backyard, and had no satus as a varsity team.

This was the year.

EVERY YEAR ABOUT this time folks around Chapel Hill begin thinking about the chances of UNC's football team finishing in the nation's top ten the next fall, of next year's basketball team repeating the performance of 1956-57, of the track team beating Maryland, of the tennis team beating Miami, of the lacrosse team gaining varsity status.

It happens every May. Carolina students look at the performances of the past year, remark how close we came to this and that, and gleefully talk about umpteen dozen returning lettermen.

Not wishing to buck tradition, I grabbed a pair of rose-colored glasses the other day and did a little crystal ball gazing myself. Now maybe I've fallen into the same "we're gonna be better" trap as everyone is, but, honestly, when one looks at what lies ahead, one can not help but speak with optimism.

Less than 30 hours after classes begin next September, UNC students will grab their flasks and head for Kenan Stadium. Right from the onset things will be different. First of all, Kenan Stadium won't look like Kenan Stadium. There won't be any seats in the end zone—instead there will be upper decks, the product of the one million dollar renovation now taking place.

After everyone has gotten used to the new surroundings (sure to be included in upper-deck orientation will be a bombardment of the residents of the lower deck), another drastic change will be noted. North Carolina State's marching band and its big bass drummer won't be there. Inu fact the whole Wolfpack will be missing, mainly because the opening opponent will be the University of Virginia.

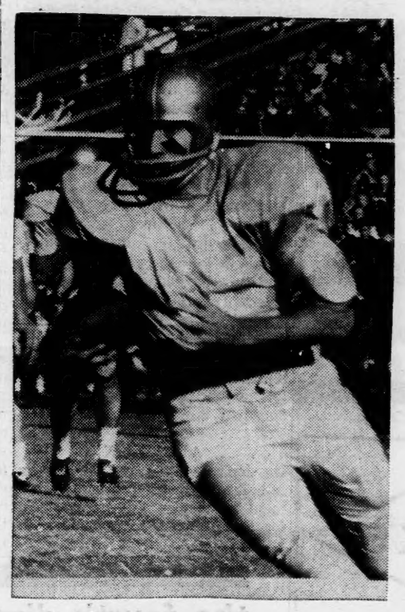
CHUCK ERICKSON, Jim Hickey and a few thousand others thought it would be a good idea if the Tar Heels opened up with a win for a change. N.C. State has been very uncooperative in the past, so the obliging Cavaliers have been asked to help UNC dedicate New Kenan.

Back for autumn action will be the Junior Edge-Bob Lacey aerial combo, which may prove unbeatable. Last year's leading ground-gainer, Ken Willard, will also be around, and should stir up a little trouble around the ACC. All in all, Coach Hickey has 29 lettemen returning, and if Chris Hanburger can make the successful switch from end to linebacker, and it is expected that he will, the Tar Heels should do well against seven ACC opponents plus Michigan State, Georgia and Miami.

Basketball hopes will be built around Billy Cunningham, and that's not a bad place to start. "The Kid" should be an All-American next season, if he isn't already, and he'll get solid support from guards Charlie Shaffer and Mike Cooke and forwards Ray Respess, Bryan McSweeney, Billy Galantai and newcomer Bob Bennett.

The roundball schedule will include eight non-conference games for a total of 22. On tap are games with Kentucky, NYP, Indiana, VPI, Notre Dame, Tulane, LSU and Georgila.

Coaches Don Skakle and Walter Rabb already have "spring fever"—for next spring. Back on the tennis courts will be George Sokol, Bitsy Harrison, Ted Hoehn, O. H. Parrish and Shaffer, to name a few. Rabb will welcome back his entire infield (Bill Brown, Dickie Prindle, Jim Speight and Tom Wright) plus the "big four" mound staff of Spence Willard, Bill Haywood,, Bill Dannenmann and Bobby Cox.



Track coach Joe Hilton is also looking forward to next spring and so is his high jumper Tom Clark, who will continue his pursuit of the seven-foot mark. Miler Charlie Little and sprinter Ronnie Jackson also return to the cinder paths, and maybe next year will be the year that UNC dethrones mighty Maryland.

Little will also do some running this fall, on the Tar Heels' cross country team. The man to watch here though will be rising junior Art Maillet, a good bet for top honors in the ACC meet. Bob Bennett should be another top threat.

UNC's soccer team will be hard pressed to top last fall's 7-2 record, led by the quartet of Charlie Battle, Pete Blake, Buddy Siegal and Georgie Beim, Coach Marvin Allen's boys just might do it.

Splashing around in Bowman Gray Pool again next winter will be Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill, two of the nation's best swimmers. Chip Smith, Thad Adams and diver Ernie Gare also return to give Coach Pat Earey's "water wonders" a good shot at the ACC crown.

Sport At UNC: Its People, Places

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

Sport can mean many things to many people. It is the halfback running 80 yards for the winning touchdown. It is the last second jump shot that settles a championship game. It is the thrilling final relay race in a close swimming meet.

To me, Sport at North Carolina, 1962-63, was not just the wins and the losses. It was people, and it was personal. And it is this that interests me.

The bad, of course, always must come with the good, and Sport this year started out badly.

Clyde (Pete) Mullis is just a name to me for I never knew the man, but his is a name that is well-known here by most people, and when Pete Mullis died, the University lost a fine friend and a devoted helper.

Other names come to mind in a review of Sport, 1962-63, and I remember them well.

I remember Marvin Bass swearing a blue streak after his South Carolina team dropped a thriller to UNC, and then telling the press "Clean it up for me boys—it's a Sunday paper."

I remember Junior Edge throwing and Ken Willard blasting and Bob Lacey—fabulous Bob Lacey—maneuvering for and then catching a pass like the All-American he is.

I remember meeting Whitey Ford in a pressbox at Clemson, S. C. and finding him as rude and surly as Roger Maris is supposed to be.

I remember little rabbit Ronnie Jackson running through Death Valley with a kickoff and almost meeting death when a big bear named Don Chuy hit him head-on. The collision still echoes through the Valley, and people will still be talking about that one when we're all long gone. Jackson must surely remember. He didn't play the rest of the year.

At home, I remember Larry Henry running barefoot over the hills and dales of Finley Golf Course to the ACC cross country championshipu. I remember Jimmy Reston putting on a one-man scoring show for the soccer team as it had one of its finest seasons ever.

And I remember special things.

Like meeting Jimmy Beatty, possibly the finest distance runner of our time, when he came home to glowing praises from the people who wanted him to stay home. This was, of coufrse, one of the greatest thrills.

But another was at Notre Dame. Maybe it was because it was just that—Notre Dame. But maybe not.

I remember walking, with Hannis Latham, under the gigantic steel structure that is Notre Dame Stadium and meeting an old and withered Irishman—the custodian of the place. It was a cold and rainy Friday evening, but the old man's eyes shone brighter than the small light in the room that was filled with trophies, souvenirs and mementos of another age—a golden age.

Billy, Larry: Two For The Show

Pictures of the Four Horsemen, of Rockne, of Leahy lined the walls. Paul Hornung was there too, and the old man talked and talked and talked. And Hannis and I were enthralled.

I remember the Duke game and Dave Braine dropping a football some said he had no business carrying in the first place. And I remember three field goals.

On into the winter season and Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill splashing to All-American for Pat Earey's swimming team. I remember the great Maryland victory as Larry Roberts, Thad Adams, Willie Bloom and Mann raced to a meet-deciding relay victory in record time. And Merrill winning three events in the ACC meet.

I remember the ACC Indoor Games too. When everybody came to see John Belitza pole vault 16 feet. He didn't, but the crowd got its thrill anyway when captain Jerry Stuver, stocky Bob Bennett, lean and graceful Art Maillett and Henry, this time with shoes, broke the two-mile relay standard.

I remember Jerry Cabe, a good wrestler on a poor team, being rooted on by his football teammates who grouped en masse to watch him.

And basketball. Oh, do I remember basketball.

Going up to Indiana and Kentucky to see if this team was as good—or as bad—as some people said. Flying into Louisville on the way up and calling Cassius Clay from the airport to get a ride around town—class. But Cassius wasn't home.

I remember in Bloomington, Ind. when this team lost a game by 14 but then found itself later that same night.

I remember walking into Lexington, Kentucky's Memorial Coliseum on a strangely-warm Sunday afternoon and thrilling to the magnificence of a tall, golden-haired kid gliding foul shots into the basket. Cotton Nash was here, but he might as well have stayed home the following night.

I remember Yogi and Mike pressing the big guy all over the court, and Billy C finishing it by ramming the ball down his throat on a five-foot jumper. I remember Cotton Nash walking away afterward thoroughly awed by Brown and the rest who won it 68-65 in the greatest basketball game I ever saw.

And I remember Smith and Rosemond and Lacey—the brain and the pain trust—walking back. But it was on air.

There were more thrills to come.

There was Notre Dame playing ilts toughest opponent all year, and Billy saved that one fabulously. There was Maryland. Inconsequential? Hardly. Larry Brown's mother was there, and that is never inconsequential. There was Charlotte where kids poured out of the stands to yell at, beat upon and almost tear down the door behind which Cunningham, the greatest thing since chocolate bars, was dressing.

And, yes, there was Wake Forest.

Wake Forest, a team which must be admired for it beat a better team three times in one season.

The first, at Winston-Salem, might have been warranted—the next two, certainly not.

I remember at home against Wake and Billy going five miles in the air to stuff in a rebound. "Ah," I thought, "it is now all over." But it wasn't, and we blew an eight-point lead.

I remember at home against Duke when we were so close. When Billy fouled out, four Blue Devils came over to shake hands. The fifth sneered and walked to the other end of the court.

And I remember the final second of the final Wake game. I remember Billy from thirty feet, just like at Notre Dame. But, not just like at Notre Dame, the ball went two-fifths of an inch too deep, hit the back of the rim, and as Billy slumped to the floor, it was all over. And it took me a while to recover.

Spring Brought Baseball, Tennis

And then came the Spring and more excitement.

I remember a big strong righthander, from Glen Burnie, Md. by way of Wilminton, N. C. An ex-Marine who started and relieved with equal effectiveness. And Bill Haywood, this year, was the best pitcher in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

I remember the quick wrists of Dickie Prindle and Heyward Hull and the amazing way they could control a bat when hitting a baseball. I remember his teammates kidding Jimmy Speight about his fielding but knowing it was his stick to which they looked in the clutch.

I remember a co-captain, who led the team in hitting the year before, being benched. But then Buddy Tilden came on when the sophomores couldn't do it, and batted his usual .300 plus.

I remember a chunky third baseman coming out of nowhere to lead the team in hitting. And Tom Wright almost led the whole league too. And I remember a gimpy-legged coach sauntering out to the mound on occasion. But only on occasion, for Walt Rabb won 20 games this season—for the third time.

I remember Tommy Clark jumping—high. I remember Ronnie Jackson coming back and running—fast. I remember a white-haired, smallish man missing from Fetzer Field. And Dale Ranson, God willing, will be back soon.

And I remember a tennis team. A tennis team that, when all of it has finally graduated, will be remembered as long as there is a UNC.

I remember a small blond, the class of the ACC, winning his second straight ACC singles championship. But George Sokol had to share the spotlight with senior teammate Keith Stoneman who battled in this year's tourney as he had never battled before.

I remember Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison and Charlie Shaffer and O. H. Parrish and Peter Myers and the "Pit Crew." And I remember the young and the elderly alike of Chapel Hill coming out to watch them.

And they beat everybody but Miami. But, next year, it may be different.

A lot of things will be different next year. There will be no Craver, no Marslender, no Brown, no Poteet. There will be no Bloom, no Stoneman, no Tilden, no Dave Pope. They will be missed, yes. But they will never be forgotten.
